(12) The method and conditions of and the procedure for the arbitration of controversies and the powers of an appeal board created by the court to entertain appeals from the arbitration tribunal are set forth in the decree.

(13) Jurisdiction is retained by the decree for the purpose of enabling any parties to apply to the court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry for any modification thereof.

The three minor defendants and their subsidiaries did not consent to the decree of November 20, 1940, presumably because of their opposition to the provisions requiring trade-showing and prohibiting block-booking of groups of more than five films. It was provided that if the plaintiff did not secure the entry of a decree against the three minor defendants before June 1, 1942, the consenting defendants were to be released from those provisions. Such a decree was in fact not entered by the specified date, and accordingly the sections of the decree regarding trade-showing and block-booking have lapsed. Nevertheless, according to the testimony, the consenting defendants have continued to comply with them.[1]

---

[1]The following are definitions of terms used in this opinion:

Block-booking—The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period.

Clearance—The period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same picture within a particular area or in specified theatres.

Exchange District—An area in which an office is maintained by a distributor for the purpose of soliciting license agreements for the exhibition of its pictures in theatres situated throughout the territory served by the exchange and for the physical distribution of such films throughout this territory.

Feature—Any motion picture, regardless of topic, the length of of the film of which is in excess of 4000 feet.

Formula Deal—A licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the rental price of a given film is measured for the circuit as a whole by a specified percentage of the picture's national gross.

Franchise—A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

Independent—A producer, distributor, or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendent in this action or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant.

Master Agreement—A licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal", covering the exhibition of films in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit.

Motion Picture Season—A one-year period beginning about September 1 of each year.

Road-show—A public exhibition of a motion picture in a limited number of theatres, in advance of its general release, at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in the areas where they are located.

Counsel for the five major defendants and their subsidiaries contend that the consent decree has, in some respects at least, the effect of a final judgment which may not be modified. But we cannot see how such a position is consistent with the language of Section XXIII (d), which permits "• • • any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of the decree for any modification thereof." That period has expired, and therefore everything relating to rights under and remedies for violation of the Sherman Act is, therefore, open for consideration, even as between consenting parties; and certainly nothing has hitherto been decided which affected the non-consenting parties. It would seem to follow that we cannot bind any parties to subject themselves to the arbitration system or the board of appeals set up in aid of it without their consent, even though we may regard it as desirable that such a system, in view of its demonstrated usefulness, should be continued in aid of the decree which we propose to direct.

The evidence has established various infractions of the Sherman Act on the part of each of the defendants which we shall proceed to discuss.

Price-fixing

The defendants who have granted moving picture licenses have fixed minimum admission prices which the exhibitor agrees to charge irrespective of whether it is to pay a flat rental or a percentage of the theatre receipts. It is said that these minimum admission prices are in general only those currently charged by the exhibitors and that they are placed in the licenses in order to assure the distributor of a minimum revenue when it licenses upon a percentage basis, and also to assure a continuation of the conditions which moved it to grant a given run to the exhibitor.[2] Whatever the reason, the various licensing defendants have agreed with their licensees to a system which determines minimum admission prices in all theatres where motion pictures licensed by them are exhibited. In this way are controlled the prices to be charged for most of the motion pictures exhibited either by the defendants, or by independents, within the United States. That the eight defendants distribute most of the features is evident from the record. For example, during the 1943-44 season the eight defendants distributed about 77.6% of all features nationally distributed except "westerns" and low cost productions, and even if the latter inferior and non-competitive pictures are included, they distributed 65.5%. See Plaintiff's Exh. 426; Record p. 2400. The control of distribution closely resembles that appearing in Goldman Theatres, Inc., v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738, 744-5 (C.C.A. 3), where the court said:

---

Runs—The successive exhibitions of a motion picture in a given area, first-run being the first exhibition in that area, second-run being the next subsequent, and so on.

Trade-showing—A private exhibition of a film prior to its release for public exhibition, as required by Section III of the consent decree.

> "Defendants control the production and distribution of more than 80% of feature pictures in this country, and no exhibitor can successfully operate without access to defendants' product."[3]

The licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors. Such combinations we hold to be forbidden by the Sherman Act.

---

[2]That the distributor-defendants have more than merely a passive interest, as they claim, in the maintenance of specified minimum prices is shown by their inclusion in the licenses of provisions for severe penalties if less than those prices are charged. Some licenses provide that if the schedule of minimum prices is violated, all existing licenses of the distributor for that theatre may be cancelled at the option of the distributor; other licenses provide that the particular license may be cancelled or that the exhibitor's clearance over subsequent runs be greatly reduced. See Plaintiff's exhs. 275-290.

[3]The defendants in the Goldman case were substantially the same as those here, except that Universal Corporation was there eliminated by agreement.

The exhibits submitted in this case contain numerous express agreements between the various distributing defendants and their licensees stating the minimum admission prices which licensees are required to maintain in showing the distributors' pictures in the areas concerned. The agreements are not only between the distributor-defendants and other defendants owning theatres, but also between the distributor-defendants and independent theatre owners. A correlation of these agreements shows that in many instances the minimum prices set forth in the license agreements by the various defendants are in substantial conformity. Indeed, it is conceded in the joint brief filed on behalf of Loew's, Paramount, Warner, RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox that the admission prices included in licenses of the various distributor-defendants are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitors. At pages 31-2 of the joint brief it is stated:

> "The testimony shows that it is the general practice of all the distributors, whether dealing with independent exhibitors or affiliated ones, to include a provision in the license agreement that the exhibitor shall not charge less than a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the particular picture or pictures licensed. * * * The minimum admission price included in the license is not one which the distributor dictates, but is the usual admission price currently charged by the exhibitor. (R. 433, 718, 968, 989, 1382-3). It is the practice of exhibitors to charge the same scale of admission prices over a period of time and not to change them according to whose pictures are being exhibited or according to any fluctuations in the type of picture."

A similar statement is made at page 18 of the brief of Columbia, and the brief of United Artists and Universal appears to argue on the same assumption at pages 24-39.

It does not seem important whether the distributor was the more controlling factor in determining the minimum admission prices. Whether it was such a factor or merely acceded to the customary prices of the exhibitors, in either event there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both distributors and exhibitors were involved. But it is plain that the distributor did more than accede to existing price schedules.[4] The licenses required them to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction, and the evidence shows that the distributors in the case of exceptional features, where not satisfied with current prices, would refuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised.[5] Moreover,

---

[4]Reagan, vice-president in charge of distribution and sales for Paramount, testified as follows:

"Q. Well, does that (the admission price) fix his right to a particular run or to clearance? A. It would have an influence upon the run and clearance, yes sir."

* * * * *

"Q. Why would you be interested in the minimum admission price of the admission price charged by the exhibitor in connection with determining what run you would negotiate for? A. Because the admission price that he charges determines the film rental that I can earn for my pictures." Record pp. 718-9.

See also testimony of Kupper in charge of distribution organization of RKO. Record p. 1084.

[5]Testimony of John J. Friedl, president of Minnesota Amusement Company—the stock of which is owned by Paramount, was as follows:

"Q. Are there occasional instances of special attractions where there is a negotiation as to a higher admission price with the distributor? A. That has come up on several occasions. In the case of the picture 'Woodrow Wilson', and several other pictures, they have been released by the distributors as road show attractions, and in those cases the distributors insisted upon road show prices, and it was the option of the purchaser, or the theatre, to buy or not to buy those pictures at those prices; but if he expected to play the picture at that time, he would have to charge such admission price.

"Q. And if he was not willing to advance his admission price to meet the distributor's terms, he had the opportunity to play this picture on regular run, is that right? A. At a later date, that is correct.

"Q. Is the provision for that minimum admission price included not only in license contracts for first-run exhibition but also for subsequent-run exhibition? A. Yes, I think it applies in all cases.

the distributors, when licensing on a percentage basis, were interested in the prices charged and even when licensing for a flat rental were interested in admission prices to be charged for subsequent runs which they might license on a percentage basis. Likewise all of the five major defendants had a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which they owned theatres, and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing their films to independent exhibitors in those areas. Even if the licenses were at a flat rate, a failure to require their licensees to maintain fixed prices would leave them free by lowering the current charge to decrease through competition the income in the licensors' own theatres in the neighborhood. The whole system presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas.

The similarity of specified minimum prices prescribed for the same theatres in the distributor-defendants' contracts of license is shown by the following table collated from exhibits in evidence.[6] The exhibits used to prepare the table con-

---

"Q. Is it included in license contracts for percentage pictures and also for flat rental pictures? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where the admission price is included for subsequent-run exhibition, does your answer with respect to who determines the admission price apply to that as well? A. That is correct. But, of course, it is reasonable to assume, to understand, that in setting our admission prices, we do not do that on an arbitrary basis because it is reasonable to expect that the larger theatres playing the first-runs would get the maximum price for the protection of the distributor and the producer. And in the secondary houses the prices are less.

"Q. That is, generally speaking, the first-run houses charge a higher price than subsequent-run, and then the prices step down among the runs? A. That is correct." Record p. 1000.

---

[6] This table is derived from Plaintiff's Exhibits 41, 42, 57 (1-49), 82, 94, 146, 127, 128, 139, 365, 369. In most of the exhibits there was no indication as to whether the admission price given included or excluded taxes. When this information was given in the exhibits, it is stated in the table as "tax incl.", or "tax excl." The word "none" is used to mean that though a license was in evidence, no admission

tained answers of the defendants to plaintiff's interrogatories about the first block of five features licensed for the 1943-44 season by each of the five major distributor-defendants, and about the first five pictures licensed by each of the three minor defendants, and about that picture of each defendant which during the season received the most billings in the United States.

Theatre	City, State	Paramount	Loew's	Warner	RKO	Fox	Col.	U.A.	Universal
Sneicer	Akron, Ohio	30¢ tax excl.	27¢	30¢	30¢	x	x	30¢	x
Bailey	Buffalo, N. Y.	30¢	x	30¢	none	27¢	29¢	none	x
Liberty	Covington, Ky.	28¢ tax excl.	x	33¢ tax incl.	none	x	x	x	x
Madison	Covington, Ky.	28¢ tax excl.	28¢	x	none	28¢	x	x	x
LaSalle	Niagara Falls,	30¢ tax incl.	27¢	x	none	27¢	x	x	x
Paramount	Akron, Ohio	20¢ tax excl.	22¢	25¢	none	20¢	x	25¢	x
Capitol	x 30¢	x	x	x	Cleveland, Ohio	30¢		27¢	x
Shaker	Cleveland, Ohio	35¢ tax excl.	x	35¢	x	35¢	x	35¢	x
Heights	Cleveland, Ohio	30¢ tax excl.	27¢ tax incl.	30¢	none	30¢	x	x	x
Senate	Detroit, Mich.	x	37¢	35¢	none	35¢	x	none	x
Ritz	Baltimore, Md.	x	25¢	28¢ tax incl.	none	25¢	x	none	25¢
Vilma	Baltimore, Md.	x	25¢	28¢	none	25¢	x	none	x
Centre	Baltimore, Md.	x	30¢	33¢ tax incl.	x	30¢	x	x	x
Hampden	Baltimore, Md.	x	x	x	x	27¢	x	27¢	x
Columbia	Baltimore, Md.	x	25¢	28¢	none	25¢	x	x	25¢
Broadway	Baltimore, Md.	x	27¢	x	x	27¢	x	27¢	25¢
Apollo	Baltimore, Md.	x	25¢	x	x	27¢	x	25¢	25¢
Irvington	Baltimore, Md.	x	x	28¢	25¢	25¢	x	x	25¢
Montevista	Cincinnati, Ohio	30¢	30¢	x	33¢	x	x	30¢	x
20th Century	Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	30¢	x	30¢	x	x	30¢	x
Jackson	Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	x	x	x	x	x	30¢	x

price was specifically stated in the contract, either thorugh inadvertence or on the understanding that the admission prices currently being charged or contained in previous licenses would be continued. Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1211. The symbol "x" is used to indicate that no license of that distributor for that particular theatre was in evidence.

City, State	Paramount	Loew's	Warner	RKO	Fox	Col.	U.A.	Univ.
Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	x	x	x	x	x	30¢	x
Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	x	x	x	x	x	30¢	x
Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	x	x	x	x	x	30¢	x
New Haven, Conn.	27¢	27¢	33¢	27¢	27¢	x	25¢	x
New Haven, Conn.	30¢	30¢	33¢	none	30¢	x	30¢	x
New Haven, Conn.	30¢	30¢	33¢	30¢	x	x	33¢	x
New Haven, Conn.	30¢	30¢	33¢	none	30¢	x	30¢	x
Indianapolis, Ind.	35¢	x	35¢	35¢	35¢	x	x	x
Albuquerque, N. M.	none	40¢	x	42¢	40¢	30¢	x	x
Appleton, Wisc.	40¢	46¢	none	none	45¢ tax incl.	none	x	46¢ plus 9¢ tax
Beloit, Wisc.	36¢	27¢	40¢	35¢	36¢ tax incl.	35¢	x	42¢ plus 8¢ tax
Charleston, W. Va.	x	40¢	x	40¢	x	x	x	x
Huntington, W. Va.	40¢	40¢	34¢	35¢	40¢	x	x	40¢
Alexandria, Va.	35¢	35¢	39¢ tax incl.	none	35¢	37¢	x	35¢
Norfolk, Va.	27¢	27¢	x	x	x	x	x	x
Burlington, Vt.	25¢	36¢	x	35¢	40¢	x	x	x
Charleston, S. C.	40¢	40¢	44¢	27¢	40¢	15¢	x	35¢
Woonsocket, R. I.	40¢	40¢	x	none	x	x	x	x x	x	x	44¢	35¢	35¢	x	30¢

It is apparent from the foregoing that there was great similarity and in many cases identity in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatre in the licenses of all the defendants. Where there was a marked difference in price, as for example in the admissions specified by RKO, Columbia and Universal, in a theatre in Charleston, South Carolina, it is likely to have been due to the showing of a picture of a different class from the others, or upon a different run.

Such uniformity of action spells a deliberately unlawful system, the existence of which is not dispelled by the testimony of interested witnesses that one distributor does not know what another distributor is doing; and there can, in our opinion, be no reasonable inference that the defendants are not all planning to fix minimum prices to which their licensees must adhere. See Record p. 1322.

In addition, several of the exhibits disclose operating agreements between the five distributor-defendants who are also theatre owners, or between them and independent theatre owners in which joint operation of the theatres covered by the agreements is provided and minimum admission prices to be charged are either stated therein, or are to be jointly determined by other means. Apparently those particular price-fixing agreements do not involve the three minor defendants or their subsidiaries. For example, in Plaintiff's Exh. 220 there are agreements between subsidiaries of Loew's and Warner, covering the period of May 5, 1938 to August 31, 1947, according to which the admission prices for three theatres in Pittsburgh—two of Warner and one of Loew's—are to be fixed by a joint committee. In Plaintiff's Exh. 218, an agreement between Warner and Paramount provides that from March 1, 1936, to August 31, 1953, two theatres previously operated by Warner, and one theatre previously operated by Paramount in Hammond, Indiana, should be managed by Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation and the then present scale of admission prices maintained. By other agreements in Plaintiff's Exh. 219, RKO and Warner provided for joint operation from August 27, 1937, to August 31, 1950, of five theatres in Cleveland—three of RKO and two of Warner— for which minimum prices are to be determined by a joint operating committee. See also, e.g., Plaintiff's Exh. 229 (Warner and independent); Exh. 213 (Loew's and independents); Exh. 202 (RKO and independent); Exhs. 226, 226a (Paramount, Warner, and independent); Exh. 223 (Warner and independent); Exh. 386 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exhs. 238, 239 (Fox and independents); Exh. 387 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exh. 206 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 221 (Warner and Paramount); Exh. 209 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 205 (Paramount and independent). These agreements show the express intent of the major defendants to maintain prices at artificial levels.

As further evidence of a conspiracy among the distributors to fix prices, we find master agreements and franchises between various of the defendants in their capacities as distributors and various of the defendants in their capacities as exhibitors. These contracts stipulate minimum admission prices often for dozens of theatres owned by an exhibitor-defendant in a particular area of the United States. Loew's as distributor, for example, fixed minimum prices for nearly all of Paramount's 133 theatres in Florida in an agreement covering the 1943-44 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (11). In the Chicago area Loew's again as distributor specified prices in a single agreement for upwards of 50 theatres owned by a Paramount subsidiary, Balaban & Katz Corporation. Plaintiff's Exhs. 250, 173. United Artists as distributor also specified prices for the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago for the 1941-42 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 369 (6). Similarly, Loew's specified prices for the entire Warner circuit of theatres for the 1943-44 season, Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (8-10, 21-2, 30, 32, 35, 38, 48); for the same season United Artists specified prices for five RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 274; Paramount for seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 240; Loew's for the same seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 248; Warner for forty or more RKO theatres in Greater New York, Plaintiff's Exh. 126; Loew's for six Fox theatres in Los Angeles County, Plaintiff's Exh. 249; Warner for subsequent run Paramount theatres in Detroit and Birmingham, Michigan, Plaintiff's Exh. 244.

A master agreement between United Artists as distributor and Fox as exhibitor for the season 1938-39 covered distribution of pictures of five independent producers in Fox theatre circuits in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Denver, and other cities, all on a percentage basis. It contained the following clause:

> "Where pictures are licensed on a percentage rental basis the scale of admission prices to be not less.

than the scale of admission prices charged to view pictures of comparable quality exhibited by the exhibitor and distributed by distributors other than United Artists."

The foregoing quotation shows an acquiescence of United Artists in admission prices fixed by any other distributor and an adherence to those prices in its own licenses. Plaintiff's Exh. 199.

A franchise agreement between Universal Corporation as distributor and Interstate Theatres, Inc., and Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., for the seasons 1941-44 is similar. Plaintiff's Exh. 261. In each of the two latter companies Paramount had a 50% interest. The franchise covered pictures distributed by Universal to the theatres of the two licensees and contained the ordinary provisions for penalties if minimum admission prices were not maintained. See note 2 supra. While no minimum prices were specified in the agreements it is not really questioned that in such circumstances the current prices were implied as part of the contract. See Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1210-11.

There is also in evidence a franchise agreement between Columbia Pictures Corporation as distributor and Marcus Loew Booking Agency, a Loew's subsidiary, for the seasons 1944-46 covering pictures distributed to Loew's Metropolitan New York Circuit. Plaintiff's Exh. 471. Minimum admission prices were not specified, but, as in other cases, were implied.

Licenses granted by one defendant to another for exhibition in only one theatre, while less striking evidence of conspiracy than the above master agreements and franchises, disclose the same inter-relationship among the defendants. Each of the five major defendants as a theatre-owning exhibitor has been licensed by the other seven defendants as distributors to exhibit the pictures of the latter at specified minimum prices. RKO, for example, as a theatre-owner, has been granted licenses with price restrictions by the other defendant-distributors. In turn, RKO, being itself a distributor, has granted similar licenses to the other four exhibiting defendants. We think that RKO, Loew's, Warner, Paramount and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum prices specified, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and that Columbia, Universal and United Artists, in requiring the maintenance of minimum prices in their licenses granted to these exhibitor-defendants, have participated in that system.

It is a reasonable inference from all the foregoing that the distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices. Such a conspiracy is per se a violation of the Sherman Act. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265.

Moreover, irrespective of the conspiracy among distributors to which we have referred, each distributor-defendant has illegally combined with its licensees, for in agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's picture in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby created. That the combination is made up of a sum of separate licensing contracts, individually executed, does not affect its illegality, for tacit participation in a general scheme to control prices is as violative of the Sherman Act as an explicit agreement. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3).

This practice of stipulating minimum admission prices in the contracts of license is illegal in another respect. The differentials in price set by a distributor in licensing a particular picture in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area are calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see the picture in the prior-run theatres where they will pay higher prices than in the subsequent runs. The reason for this is that if 10,000 people of a city's population are ultimately to see the picture—no matter on what run—the gross revenue to be realized from their patronage is increased relatively to the increase in numbers seeing it in the higher-priced prior-run theatres. In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible. This, we believe, to be in violation of §2 of the Sherman Act, at least when the distributor's own theatres are not exhibiting its picture on a prior-run and it is to theatres other than its own that it attempts to give a monopoly.

It is argued that the practice of minimum admission price-fixing is permitted under the Copyright Act. But that act has never been held to sanction a conspiracy among licensors and licensees artificially to maintain prices. We do not question that the Copyright Act permits the owner of a copyrighted picture to exhibit it in its own theatres upon such terms as it sees fit, nor need we now decide whether a copyright owner may lawfully fix admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor for the exhibition of its film, if other licensors and exhibitors are not in contemplation. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S.

208; cf. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476. As other licensors and exhibitors are always in contemplation, so far as we can see, the question would appear academic.

This does not contravene the rule announced in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, for there a license to only a single licensee—the Westinghouse Company—was involved, and, therefore, no conspiracy which sought to amplify the rights of the licensor under the Patent Act. The other question involved in that case was whether a patentee might lawfully require its bona fide agents to maintain minimum prices in selling the former's patented articles. The court held that it could. There is no claim here, however, that the exhibitors as licensees under the distributors' copyrights are agents in any sense, and we do not see that such a claim could be made. In any event, United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, involved facts closely analogous to those here and affords ample basis for our decision.

Some argument has been made that the defendants' fixing of minimum admission prices is exempted from operation of the Sherman Act by the Miller-Tydings Amendment to that act, 50 Stat. 693 (1937), 15 U.S.C.A. §1 (1940). The amendment pertains, however, only to "contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity", and the undisputed evidence is that the distributors merely grant licenses to the exhibitors for exhibition of their films and that title to none of their films at any time passes to the exhibitors. Furthermore, the distributor-defendants have engaged in a conspiracy, and the amendment explicitly states that despite its other provisions, contracts or agreements between "persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other" to establish or maintain minimum prices remain illegal. United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241.

The foregoing holding that the defendants have all engaged in unlawful price-fixing does not prevent the distributors from continuing their present methods of determining film rentals; they may measure their compensation by stated sums, by a given percentage of a particular theatre's receipts, by a combination of these two, or by any other appropriate means. What is held to be violative of the Sherman Act is not the distributors' devices for measuring rentals, but their fixing of minimum admission prices which automatically regulates the ability of one licensee to compete against another for the patron's dollar and tends to increase such prices as well as profits from exhibition.

If the exhibitors are not restrained by the distributors in the right to fix their own prices, there will be an opportunity for the exhibitors, whether they be affiliates or independents, to compete with one another. This is because one exhibitor by lowering admission prices will be able to compete with other exhibitors in obtaining patrons for his theatre—a competition which may well benefit both exhibitors and the public paying the admission fees.

Clearance and Run

Among provisions common to the licensing contracts of all the distributor-defendants are those by which the licensor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit a certain motion picture before a specified number of days after the last date of the exhibition therein licensed. This so-called period of "clearance" or "protection" is stated in the various licenses in differing ways: in terms of a given period between designated runs, as for example in the Chicago area, Plaintiff's Exh. 369, see Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946), and as in Washington and New York, Plaintiff's Exhibits 244, 471; in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres, as "20 days over 30¢ theatres, 28 days over 25¢ theatres," Plaintiff's Exhibits 57, 173, 178, 189; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres, Plaintiff's Exhibits 94, 181, 242, 253, 259; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified areas or towns.

Plaintiff's Exhibits 126, 175, 182, 182A, 183, 194, 244, 250, 255, 470, 476; in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 417; or in terms of combinations of these formulae.

It appears to be plaintiff's contention that clearance practices inherently operate to produce unreasonable restrictions of competition among theatres and are therefore per se violative of the Sherman Act. With this we do not agree, for it seems to us that a grant of clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration, affords a fair protection to the interests of the licensee without unreasonably interfering with the interests of the public. At common law a vendor of income-producing property may validly covenant with his purchaser not to compete for a given time or within a given area so long as the restrictions are reasonably necessary to protect the value of the property purchased. Cincinnati, Portsmouth, Big Sandy and Pomeroy Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179; see Rogers v. Parry, 2 Cro. 326 (K. B. 1613); United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 6). It is true that licenses of property rather than sales are here concerned and that the distributors covenant not only not to exhibit the films themselves, but also not to license them to others. Nevertheless, we believe these are not differences which affect the applicability of the common-law rule to the present case, for licenses between one distributor and one exhibitor with reasonable clearance provisions do not, in our opinion, involve anything unlawful. Such provisions are no more than safeguards against concurrent or subsequent licenses in the same area until the exhibitor whose theatre is involved has had a chance to exhibit the pictures licensed without invasion by a subsequent exhibitor at a lower price. It seems nothing more than an adoption of the common law rule to restrict subsequent exhibitions for a reasonable time within a reasonable area. While clearance may indirectly affect admission prices, it does not fix them and is, we believe, a reasonable restraint permitted by the Sherman Act.

Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106; Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830, affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4); see United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436.

The costs of each black and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800. Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs with a reasonable protection for the earlier runs is adopted in the way of clearance.

In Section VIII of the Consent Decree, moreover, there is the explicit statement to which all parties, including the plaintiff, consented.

> "It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures."

While, as previously stated, we do not deem ourselves bound by any provision of the consent decree, if we now find that it violates the Sherman Act, the forcefulness of the phrasing of this sentence indicates the proved utility of clearance practices in the movie industry and also their apparent necessity for a reasonable conduct of the business. Indeed, it is practically conceded that exhibitors would find extremely perilous the acceptance of licenses for the exhibition of films without assurance by the distributor that a nearby competitor would not be licensed to show the same film either at the same time or so soon thereafter that the exhibitor's expected income—perhaps on the basis of which he agreed to the specified rental—would be greatly diminished. Moreover, we understand the plaintiff to concede that the licensor may license its pictures for different successive dates. A reasonable clearance is in practical effect much the same. Either a license for successive dates, or one providing for clearance, permits the public to see the picture in a later-exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates.

Several courts have previously considered the validity of clearances under the Sherman Act and have concluded that in the absence of an unconscionably long time or too extensive an area embraced by the clearance, or a conspiracy of distributors to fix clearances, there was nothing of itself illegal in their use. Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830 (D. Md.), affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4), and unreported cases therein cited; Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., 120 F. 2d 891 (C. C. A. 7). We find the reasoning of these cases persuasive.

It is true that in some instances large theatre circuits by use of their great film-buying power have been able to negotiate successfully with the distributor-defendants for grants of unreasonable clearances or unjustified prior runs for their theatres. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3); United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 229 (W. D. N. Y.). While we cannot find sufficient evidence to support an inference that the major defendants here, though controlling some of the largest circuits of theatres in the country and thus possessing potential weapons of great strength, have either collectively or severally entered upon a general policy of discriminating against independents in their grants of clearances, yet they have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents and perhaps even of affiliates. The decision of such controversies as may arise over clearances should be left to local suits in the area concerned, or, even more appropriately, to litigation before an Arbitration Board composed of men versed in the complexities of this industry.

In determining the reasonableness of the specific clearances which may come before these tribunals, they should consider whether the clearance has been set so as to favor affiliates or control the admission prices of the theatres involved. A distributor will naturally tend to grant a subsequent run to and clearance over a theatre for which the owner of his own volition sets a low admission price, for the distributor will be inclined to seek out the higher priced theatres first where the revenue is likely to be greater and consequently in case of licenses on a percentage basis where a percentage share will be higher. This, however, would seem the inevitable result of the competition for the distributor's films from theatres which are the larger or better equipped, and for which higher admission prices may therefore be charged by their operators. Such competition the lower priced theatres must be prepared to meet, or else be content with subsequent runs and grants of clearance over them. The temptations to the distributor to use clearance grants to force a theatre to raise its prices and thus to qualify for prior runs having less clearance over it, and more clearance over competitors are nevertheless obvious and the courts or arbitration board should guard that this is not done. Clearance should be granted on the basis of theatre conditions which the exhibitor creates, not the distributor. The line to be drawn is indeed indistinct, but its existence is no less real.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the following factors should be taken into consideration and accorded the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The admission prices, as set by the exhibitors, of the theatres involved;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The foregoing has been directed to the validity of clearance provisions resulting from separate negotiations between individual distributors and exhibitors in free and open competition with other distributors and exhibitors, and, as stated, we believe their reasonable use to be lawful. It is here claimed by plaintiff, however, that the distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they license their films and that the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system. This we find to be the case and hold to be in violation of the Sherman Act.

The following testimony warrants the inference that the defendants, as we found to be the case in the fixing of admission prices, have acted in concert in their grants of run and clearance. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager and vice-president of Loew's, testified that the field managers determine whether a theatre shall be licensed to exhibit on a first or on a subsequent run, that the clearance of a given theatre is more or less historical, except for that of new theatres, and that there has been very little change in clearance over a period of years. Record pp. 542-3. Prior to 1943-44 Loew's license agreements provided that the clearance granted therein should apply to any theatre thereafter opened. Record p. 556.

Charles M. Reagan, vice-president of Paramount in charge of sales, stated that once clearance is agreed upon, it remains the same unless either exhibitor or distributor wants to change it. Record pp. 710-11. There is a difference between a distributor's and an exhibitor's interest in the period of clearance granted. The distributor wants to get the most possible in film rental from all the runs, the exhibitor to get as much clearance over a succeeding run as possible, because he has no interest in any succeeding run. The distributor, however, has a definite interest. Record p. 710. Clearances as granted apply to all pictures regardless of their quality. Record p. 715.

Martin J. Mullen, vice-president of M & P Theatres, a managing corporation which operates a group of New England theatres affiliated with Paramount, said that clearance is generally negotiated each time a license contract is made, but is actually carried along from year to year and generally understood when once established; that originally, before his time, clearance was established as a result of individual negotiations and followed along the same lines as they were with some changes. Record p. 968. All defendants grant the same clearance to the same theatre. Record p. 977.

John J. Friedl, president and general manager of the Minnesota Amusement Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Paramount, said that he generally got from the various distributors the same clearance for the particular theatre for which he is negotiating; that while clearance is negotiated with each license, it generally remains the same, and the same clearance is granted by distributor-defendants and non-defendants alike, Record p. 1003; that clearance is pretty well established, and it is definitely followed in all cases. Record p. 1013.

Morton J. Thalheimer, an independent theatre exhibitor in Richmond, Virginia, called as a witness by Fox, testified that clearance was in effect in Richmond when he first went into business, and it seemed perfectly normal and natural that it should remain that way; that it protects his first-run against his own sub-runs and against his competitors' sub-runs. Record p. 1384. To his knowledge, the system of clearances had existed in Richmond for over nineteen years, during which time there had not been any change. Record p. 1401.

Harold J. Fitzgerald, president of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc., operating sixty-six motion picture theatres in Wisconsin and Michigan, a wholly owned subsidiary of the defendant National Theatres Corporation, testified by affidavit that the situation with respect to the licensing of films, and the runs and clearances involved, were much the same in 1928 as they are today, Record p. 1973; that licensing arrangements were vital to distributor and exhibitor and that clearance obviously had a definite effect upon the capacity of his corporation to secure patronage at its top admission price. If Fox Wisconsin undertook to pay a distributor the film rental based upon a high percentage of gross, it would be interested in clearance over any neighborhood theatre which the distributor might license on a competing subsequent run. Generally negotiations as to clearance do not take place with respect to each block of pictures licensed because once a fair and reasonable clearance has been determined by the distributor and exhibitor it tends to become fixed, and ordinarily will be the same in a series of contracts in the absence of any unchanged circumstances and conditions. Record p. 1983.

Benjamin Kalmenson, sales manager of Warner Bros. Distributors Corporation, testified that clearances have been pretty well set through the country for a great many years, and are "acquiesced in by exhibitors, producers, independents, affiliates and everybody, until there has grown up a kind of a system of clearance." Record p. 1506.

Robert Mochrie, general sales manager of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., stated upon his examination that RKO in determining the length of clearance between theatres, takes into consideration the amount of clearance which in its opinion will yield it the largest revenue, taking all theatres into account as a whole and subject to a clearance condition that has built itself up in the city over a period of time. In negotiating licenses, there is frequent occasion to give consideration to the existing clearance between theatres, but they do not consider it anew each time because the factors which determined it originally at some past time remain stable from year to year. He said there are no general or frequent instances in his practice of clearances different in some particular city from those granted by a co-defendant. He usually knows what clearances other distributors are granting. His customer usually tells him what clearance he wants, which is what he is getting from other distributors. He has no agreements with other distributors that he will adopt the same clearance, and his explanation as to why in some instances the clearances granted by RKO to a prior run theatre is the same as a clearance granted by one or more other distributors serving the same theatre is that clearance has been the outgrowth in time between those two theatres, and the exhibitor buys such products on such a clearance basis and offers the witness the same. Record pp. 1714-5.

Abraham Montague, general sales manager of Columbia, testified that in negotiating deals, the "clearance is something we usually find when we arrive there, and we usually negotiate our deal within the clearance we find"; that it would be impracticable and impossible to set up new clearance. Record p. 1268. His company keeps a record of clearances in the community. Record p. 1347. Where his company grants clearance to one theatre over another, it usually follows the pattern set by clearance that is given by other major distributors as well as those which are not majors. He usually does not make any independent determination of whether the clearance is reasonable or unreasonable. He takes it as he finds it, and finding it in most cases standardized, his company does not feel that it is strong enough to change it. Record pp. 1376-7.

Paul N. Lazarus, manager of the contract department of United Artists, testified that clearances are "generally understood, and they follow along their established custom." Record p. 1440. For testimony of other witnesses to the same effect as the foregoing, see Record pp. 2012, 2043, 2049, 2086, 2110-11.

The fixed character of clearances and the uniformity of the distributor-defendants' practice with reference thereto are shown by the exhibits, as well as the testimony. Many of the franchises, master agreements, and so-called "formula deals" which are in evidence provide that clearances shall be the same as those in effect on the date of the agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 419A (RKO and independent); 419B (RKO and Paramount); 241 (Paramount and Fox); 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 473 (RKO and Universal); 245 (Warner and Fox); 251 (Fox and Paramount); 254 (Fox and RKO). Some of the agreements establish clearances for more than a season. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 181 (3 years, Loew's and Warner); 187 (3 years, Loew's and Fox); 249 (9 years, Loew's and Fox); 259 (3 years, Warner and Universal). Others provide that the clearance is to be no less favorable to the exhibitor than that which had been granted by the distributor for the previous season or in the preceding agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 265, 472, (Columbia and Fox); 190 (RKO and Fox); 199, 272A, 383, (United Artists and Fox).

In some of the agreements, the clearance therein stated was also to be granted to all theatres which the exhibitor-party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 266, 266A (Columbia and Warner); 471 (Columbia and Loew's); 192 (Fox and Warner). Moreover, the license forms for 1936-7 of Paramount, Fox, Loew's, Warner, RKO, Columbia and Universal, and for 1943-44 of Paramount, Warner, Columbia and Universal, each contain a provision identical or similar to the following:

> "If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre, then unless otherwise provided in the schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened." See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275, 277, 279-81, 283-6, 289-90.

It is clear that the purpose of these two types of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened, not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive factors normally entering into such a determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor-party to the agreement.

Much that has been said about clearances is applicable also to runs; the two are practically alike. Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent run, and the practice of clearance is so closely allied with that of run as to make comment on the one applicable to the other.

Rodgers, of Loew's, testified that a run usually remains static for a given theatre, Record p. 421, and he determines what runs shall be "offered" to an exhibitor. Record p. 418. The size of the theatre does not necessarily determine whether it is satisfactory for operation on a first run. Record p. 566.

Reagan, of Paramount, said that negotiations with an exhibitor are "usually conducted on the basis of a particular run." In the case of a new theatre, the distributor usually considers whether it wants to do business on the run the theatre would like.[7] In the New York area, second runs are sold by him only to Loew's and RKO. Record pp. 815-16.

---

[7] "Q. And some negotiations are conducted on the basis of a first-run of a product, some second, some subsequent? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: You mean the particular run is established before the negotiation with the exhibitor?

The Witness: Sometimes it generally is established, although that has been the result of years of experience that we have had in negotiating with our customers.

Judge Bright: How about a new theatre or new exhibitor?

The Witness: There is nothing established there, and we consider all the factors there and make a decision on whether we want to do business with him on the run that we would like to have.

The evidence we have referred to shows that both independent distributors and exhibitors when attempting to bargain with the defendants have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatres or with theatres to which the latter have licensed their pictures. Under the circumstances disclosed in the record there has been no fair chance for either the present or any future licensees to change a situation sanctioned by such effective control and general acquiescence as have obtained. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U.S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3); Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, 60 F. 2d 538 (D.C. Neb.). The only way competition may be introduced into the present system of fixed prices, clearances, and runs is to require a defendant when licensing its pictures to other exhibitors to make each picture available at a minimum fixed or percentage rental and (if clearance is desired) to grant a reasonable clearance and run. When so offered, the licensor shall grant the license for the desired run to the highest bidder if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment to present the picture to advantage. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable the one offering the best terms shall receive the license. Thus price fixing among the licensors or between a licensor and its licensees as well as the non-competitive clearance system may be terminated, and the

---

Q. Now, how is the matter of terms upon which Paramount films will be licensed, determined? A. Determined by negotiations based upon experience we have had with the particular theatre with whom we are negotiating." Record, p. 693.

Q. You do not mean that each time there is a negotiation the whole question of run is opened up again? A. No, it is not.

Q. The policy on which the theatre is operated has usually been established over a long period of time? A. Yes.

Michigan by a sale, purchase, or exchange of interests in jointly-owned theatres so long as the transaction sought to be achieved will not result in an unreasonable restraint of competition in exhibition within the particular competitive area. To this end the court will control the manner in which rearrangements of these joint interests are effected.

It seems impracticable to do more than lay down general rules as to the foregoing situations. If further details are required to cover specific provisions of the various pooling agreements, they should be set forth in the decree to be hereafter entered.

It should be added that in our opinion there can be no objection to operating, booking, or film buying through agents, provided the agent is not also acting in respect to theatres owned by other exhibitors, independent or affiliated, and provided that in case the agent is buying films for its principal he does this through the bidding system, theatre by theatre.

Discrimination among Licensees

The amended and supplemental complaint alleges that in licensing films each of the distributor-defendants has discriminated against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. Of the various contract provisions by which such discriminations are said to have been accomplished, plaintiff sets forth the following in its brief: suspending the terms of a given contract, if a circuit theatre remains closed for more than eight weeks, and reinstating it without liability upon re-opening, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 265-6, 383-4, 472-3; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films, Plaintiff's Exhibits 172, 177, 192, 263-6, 383-4, 472; allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played, Plaintiff's Exhibits 183-4, 190, 199, 242, 245, 247, 258-9, 262, 264-6, 271-2a, 274, 382-3, 473; granting moveovers and extended runs, Plaintiff's Exhibits 182-2a, 199, 260, 262, 265, 267, 274, 383-4, 474, 476; granting road-show privileges, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187-8, 199, 232, 265-6, 383-4, 472; allowing overage and underage, Plaintiff's Exhibits 190-1, 194, 259, 265-6, 383; granting unlimited playing time, Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 267, 269, 471; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent producers, Plaintiff's Exhibits 173-4, 181, 190-1, 194, 199, 262, 265-6, 272a, 383-4, 395, 470-2; granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187, 232, 259, 265, 472-3; and especially, discriminating in film rentals, clearances, and minimum admission prices, see Plaintiff's Brief pp. 56-70, 75-85.

These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Record pp. 1432-3; Columbia's Exhibit 9a; Universal's Exhibit 2; Plaintiff's Exhibits 195, 198, 259, 261, 265-6a, 384, 396, 470-3. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. Record pp. 1432-3; Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-90. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors in violation of the anti-trust laws. It seems unnecessary to decide whether the record before us justifies a reasonable inference that the distributor-defendants have conspired among themselves to discriminate among their licensees, for each discriminating contract constitutes a conspiracy between the licensee and licensor. Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

The defendants argue that these privileges granted to the circuits flow from their negotiations with the individual theatre-owners rather than from a standard policy of discrimination deliberately pursued by them. This is perhaps true, but the result is the same whether the bargaining power of the large exhibitors forces upon the distributors a discriminatory policy, or whether the latter voluntarily carry such a policy into effect. Acquiescence in an unreasonable restraint, as well as the creation of such a restraint, violates the Sherman Act. Under the bidding system we are requiring such discriminations would appear impossible. Those provisions which are not compatible with the operation of this system, or which are inherently unreasonable, such as a provision for clearance between theatres where there is no substantial competition, will no longer be includible in licenses, as mentioned elsewhere, but otherwise the bidders will compete for licensing contracts on a parity, in that the same offer will be made to all prospective exhibitors in a community.

The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices. They have perhaps done so, but we are without sufficient knowledge of the many factors entering into the determination of these provisions such as the character of specific communities, the nature of the different theatre appointments, of the patrons, operating policies, locations, and responsibility of operators. In the absence of such facts, we are unable to infer that the distributor-defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard, but any discriminations in the other ways noted above in favor of affiliated licensee or licensees connected with independent circuits as against individual independents must be enjoined, and we believe will not exist in future licenses under the bidding system for which we are providing.

Divestiture of Theatres

We cannot accede to the prayer of the plaintiff that the major defendants should be divested of their theatres in order that no distributor of motion pictures shall be an exhibitor. Undoubtedly such a step, while not ipso facto preventing price-fixing agreements or unreasonable clearance would terminate the government's most urgent objections to the present methods of conducting the motion picture business, but it would also withdraw the defendant-distributors from competition in the exhibition field and at the same time would create a new set of theatre owners which would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted in view of the latter's demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded as in general the largest and best equipped theatres. We think that the opportunity of independents to compete under the bidding system for pictures and runs renders such a harsh remedy as complete divestiture unnecessary, at least until the efficiency of that system has been tried and found wanting.

In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137 or 17.35 per cent. Of the latter, Paramount or its subsidiaries owned independently of the other defendants 1395—a little less than half, or about 7.72 per cent; Warner 501, or about 2.77 per cent; Loew's 135, or about .74 per cent; Fox 636, or about 3.52 per cent, and RKO 109, or about .60 per cent. There were 361 theatres, or about 2.00 per cent, in which two or more of these defendants had joint interests, whether held directly or indirectly through stock ownership in the same corporation or through a lease or operating agreement. This tabulation excludes theatres connected with one or more of the defendants through film-buying or management contracts or through corporations in which a defendant owns an indirect minority stock interest. It includes all theatres in which each defendant otherwise owns a direct or indirect interest of any amount. See Loew's Exhibit 2; RKO's Exhibit 11; Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 12-3, 22, 47-8, 64, 87-8, 97, 100, 118-20, 156-64, 360.

It would seem unlikely that theatre owners having aggregate interests of little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States are exercising such a monopoly of the motion picture business that they should be subjected to the requirements of the Sherman Act, which the present system violates, will be adequately met. The administrative details involved in such changes will require further consideration. We are satisfied that existing arrangements are in derogation of the rights of independent distributors, exhibitors, and the public, and that the proposed changes will tend to benefit them all.

Formula Deals, Master Agreements, and Franchises.

Formula deals, certain master agreements, and franchises have tended to restrain trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion picture features and in view of the history and relation to the moving picture business of the various parties to this action have exercised unreasonable restraints. In our opinion these restraints will be obviated or at least sufficiently mitigated by requiring a distributor wishing its pictures to be shown outside of its own theatres to offer to license each picture to all theatres desiring to show it on a particular run and, if the theatres are responsibly owned and otherwise adequate, to grant the desired run to the highest bidder.

Formula deals have been entered into by Paramount and by RKO with independent and affiliated circuits. By such agreements a particular circuit has been licensed to exhibit a certain feature in all its theatres at a specified percentage of the national gross receipts realized from that feature by all theatres in the United States. The circuit may allocate playing time and film rentals among the various theatres as it sees fit. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 419A, 419B. Arrangements whereby all the theatres of a circuit are included in a single agreement, and no opportunity is afforded for other theatre owners to bid for the picture in their several areas, seriously and as we hold unreasonably restrain competition. These formula deals have been negotiated without, so far as we are informed, any competion on the part of independent theatre owners who would labor under a great disad-vantage in attempting severally to match or outbid the offers of a circuit that was making offers for all of its theatres.

Certain master agreements are open to the same objection as formula deals, for they cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best, and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 196, 251, 267, 270, 270A, 273, 476. These are different from some other master agreements in which there are separate provisions covering the licensing of the picture for each particular theatre. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 182, 182A, 189, 190, 191, 248. These later agreements in effect only combine in one document a number of theatres with proper licenses for each. This may be done if there is an opportunity for exhibitors to bid for the same runs at an offered price.

Franchises which so far as the five major defendants are concerned were forbidden by the consent decree are also objectionable because they cover too long periods (more than one season) and also because they embrace all the pictures released by a given distributor. They necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture, theatre by theatre, to the highest bidder.

It is true that a prohibition of formula deals, master agreements and franchises will interfere with certain contracts which have been made in the past but their formation was a restraint upon trade which was unlawful at the time they were made, and therefore should not be continued. We see no reason to hold that the failure to bring in to this suit one of the contracting parties prevents the issue of an injunction forbiding one who is a party to the suit from continuing to carry out an arrangement which causes unlawful restraints. While our decision will not be res judicata as to those not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily and properly bound, and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the questions of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce.

In our opinion it follows from the foregoing that provisions in license agreements known as moveovers which give to a licensee the privilege of exhibiting a given picture in a second theatre as a continuation of a run in a first theatre are incompatible with the system we have prescribed of bidding for pictures and runs theatre by theatre. The same would seem to be true of so-called overage-and-underage provisions which are often inserted in licenses to permit an exhibitor owning a number of theatres to apply a deficit in the playing time in one or more others. Under such provisions it is not possible to determine the amount payable for the account of one theatre until the performances in the others have been completed, or practically to apply the bidding system we are establishing. But provisions in licenses for "extended" or "repeat" runs in the same theatre, though apparently criticized by the government, would not seem to be objectionable if reasonably limited in time when other exhibitors are given the opportunity to bid for similar licenses. Likewise, any other license provisions which may be called to our attention that would substantially interfere with the effectiveness of the bidding system would have to be revised and perhaps may have to be specially dealt with in the decree to follow this opinion.

Block-booking and Blind-selling

For many years the distributor-defendants licensed their films in "blocks", or indivisible groups, before they had been actually produced. In such cases the only knowledge prospective exhibitors had of the films which they had contracted for was from a description of each picture by title, plot and players. In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any, though sometimes the exhibitor was given a right of subsequent cancellation for a certain number of pictures. Because of complaints of block-booking and blind-selling based upon the supposed unfairness of contracts which often included pictures—the inferior quality of which could not be known—Sections III and IV of the consent decree required the five consenting distributors to trade-show their films before offering them for license and limited the number which might be included in any contract to five. More than one block of five however could be licensed where the contents of any had been trade-shown. While this restriction in the consent decree has now ceased by time limitation, the consenting distributors have continued to observe the restriction. The non-assenting distributors have retained up to the present time their previous methods of licensing in blocks, but have allowed their customers considerable freedom to cancel the license as to a percentage of the pictures contracted for.

The plaintiff argues that the Sherman Act forbids block-booking in toto. This is said to be because it is illegal to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another, and it therefore can make no difference whether the group of films involved in a license be two or forty. In our opinion this contention is sound, and any form of block-booking is illegal by which an exhibitor, in order to obtain a license for one or more films, must accept a license for one or more other films.

A patentee who has granted a license in consideration that the patented invention shall be used by the licensee only with unpatented material furnished by the licensor may not restrain as a contributory infringer one who sells to the licensee like materials for like use. Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680; Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488, 491; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502; Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Corp., 283 U. S. 27; Leitch Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458. Moreover, as was said in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670, a decree for an injunction against a contributory infringer would sanction both "a misuse of the patent privilege and a violation of the anti-trust laws." The same rule would appear to apply to copyrights and prevent a suit for contributory infringement by a copyright owner who had licensed the printing of his book, only in connection with paper supplied by him, against a third party supplying paper to the licensee in violation of the agreement. See Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Straus v. Am. Publisher's Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222.

It is true that a copyrighted motion picture when united with another copyrighted picture by block-booking is not tied to an uncopyrighted article. Nevertheless the objections to conditioning the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another are the same, for the result is to give the copyright owner not only the reward which is his due from the licensing of a single copyrighted film, but to extend his monopoly by requiring his licensee to accept one or more other films and to pay royalties therefor as an additional consideration. We cannot see that this differs in principle from requiring the licensee to purchase uncopyrighted articles in connection with the license of a copyright. In either case the copyright owner is obtaining something which the decisions have forbidden as beyond the grant of his limited monopoly. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, 519, argued persuasively that the right of the owner of a patent to keep his device out of use included the right to condition its use. Such a doctrine would contravene the rule we are laying down, but his views were rejected by the majority of the Supreme Court in that decision, as well as in Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490, and have proved to be contrary to a long line of subsequent decisions of that court—indeed to have been supplanted by the general trend of authority ever since the days of Henry v. Dick, 224 U. S. 1.

It may be argued that the common law gives a right to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another—that it is as though the owner of ordinary chattels refused to sell a lot to A unless the latter would purchase in a larger quantity than he desired. The question whether such a contract involving patents or copyrights was good at common law was apparently left open in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 503, and Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Co., 157 U. S. 659, and in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sustained contracts of block-booking.

Block-booking, when the license of any film is conditioned upon taking of other films, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single pictures on their individual merits and adds to the monopoly of a single copyrighted picture that of another copyrighted picture which must be taken and exhibited in order to secure the first. It differs from such a sale of chattels as we have mentioned because it extends a monopoly which the owner of the chattels is not assumed to have. We are not inclined to follow Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152 (C.C.A. 2), for the reason we have given and particularly because of recent decisions of the Supreme Court. As Stone, C.J., said in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 459,—when dealing with the use of one patent to exploit another:

> "* * * It [Ethyl Gasoline Corporation] has chosen to exploit its patents by manufacturing the fluid covered by them and by selling that fluid to refiners for use in the manufacture of motor fuel. Such benefits as result from control over the marketing of the treated fuel by the jobbers accrue primarily to the refiners and indirectly to appellant, only in the enjoyment of its monopoly of the fluid secured under another patent. The licensing conditions are thus not used as a means of stimulating the commercial development and financial returns of the patented invention which is licensed, but for the commercial development of the business of the refiners and the exploitation of a second patent monopoly not embraced in the first. The patent monopoly of one invention may no more be enlarged for the exploitation of a monopoly of another, see Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, supra, than for the exploitation of an unpatented article, United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, supra; Carbice Corporation v. American Patents Corp., supra; Leitch Manufacturing Co. v. Barber Co., supra; American Lecithin Co. v. Warfield Co., 105 F. 2d 207, or for the exploitation or promotion of a business not embraced within the patent. Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra, 228-230."

See also United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, 415, 452-3; Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680, 684; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 277-8; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 227-230; Stokes & Smith Co. v. Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp., decided by Second Circuit Court of Appeals May 1, 1946.

We however declare illegal only that aspect of block-booking which makes the licensing of one copyright conditional upon an agreement to accept a license of one or more other copyrights. A distributor may license to an exhibitor at one time as many films as the latter wishes to receive, but the distributor may not constitute groups of pictures which it refuses to license separately. The distributor may of course not license his pictures at all, but if he does license them, he must do so severally and, in accordance with the bidding procedure previously indicated, must license them to the exhibitor or exhibitors who are qualified and offer the best terms for the various runs.

Blind-selling does not appear to be as inherently restrictive of competition as block-booking, although it is capable of some abuse. By this practise a distributor could promise a picture of good quality or of a certain type which when produced might prove to be of poor quality or of another type—a competing distributor meanwhile being unable to market its product and in the end losing its outlets for future pictures. The evidence indicates that trade-shows, which are designed to prevent such blind-selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors. Record pp. 1178-9. Accordingly, exhibitors who choose to obtain their films for exhibition in quantities, need to be protected against burdensome agreements by being given an option to reject a certain percentage of their blind-licensed pictures within a reasonable time after they shall have become available for inspection. Such right of rejection has been incorporated in numerous licenses given by the defendants and should be afforded whenever licenses of unproduced films and films not trade-shown are secured by an exhibitor who has made the best competitive bid for them.

The only group licensing we are prepared to sanction is licensing by which the group is not offered on condition that the licensee shall take all the pictures included in it, or none, but in which the pictures are separately priced, and each picture is to be sold to the highest duly qualified bidder. As we have already indicated in discussing formula deals, master agreements, and franchises, the offering of pictures should be theatre by theatre, and if more than one picture is included in a license agreement, it will be only because of business convenience and to the extent that each picture so included has received the best bid.

"Pooling" Agreements

It is claimed by plaintiff that the theatre-owning defendants have combined with each other and with independent theatre-owners by "pooling" their theatres through operating agreements, leases, joint stock ownership of theatre-operating corporations, or through joint ownership of theatres in fee. We are asked to determine the validity of these various means of joining interests.

By far the most numerous type of agreement in evidence is that by which given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition with each other, are operated as a unit or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, and by which profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 100, 200, 206, 213, 218, 220-1, 223, 226, 226A, 232. Some of the agreements provide that the parties thereto may not acquire other theatres in the competitive vicinity without first offering them for inclusion in the "pool". See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 201, 205-6, 219.

These operating agreements we hold to be in clear conflict with the Sherman Act, for through them a defendant exhibitor reduces to a minimum opposition between its own and other theatres in the "pool". Cooperation, rather than competition, characterizes their operation, and in view of the exhibitor-defendants' financial strength, control of first-class film distribution, ownership of concentrated numbers of first-run theatres, and especially their combination to reduce competition in exhibition through systems of price-fixing and clearances, such restraints as these agreements impose upon free commerce in motion pictures are far less than reasonable. The result is to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of films which would flow almost automatically to the theatres in the earnings of which they have a joint interest.

Other forms of operating agreements are between major defendants and independent exhibitors rather than between major defendants, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 97, 118, 208, 238-9, 358, but we are not of the opinion that this renders them legal. The effect is to ally two or more theatres of different ownership into a coalition for the nullification of competition between them and for their more effective competition against theatres not members of the "pool". Even if the parties to such combinations were not major film producers and distributors, but were all wholly independent exhibitors, such agreements might often be regarded as beyond the reasonable limits of restraint allowance under the Sherman Act. This result is certain when some of the parties are of major statute in the movie industry and have in other ways imposed unlawful restraints upon it, as we have found to be the case upon the record before us.

In certain other cases the operating agreements are accomplished by leases of theatres, the rentals being determined by a stipulated percentage of profits earned by the "pooled" theatres, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 106, 118, 204. This appears to be but another means of carrying out the illegal objection discussed above. While a theatre-owner may of course remove itself from the business of operating theatres by leasing them to anyone it deems fit upon a fixed rental basis, so long as a monopoly in exhibition is not thereby achieved by the lessee, any arrangement whereby one of the exhibitor-defendants in this case allies its theatres with those of a competing exhibitor, independent or affiliated, and yet itself remains in the trade of exhibiting motion pictures by retaining an interest in the profits earned by the allied theatres, is unlawful under the anti-trust acts.

Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, in some cases in conjunction with independents. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 46, 48, 62, 164, 355, 387; RKO's Exhibit 11. As these joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively, we find them illegal for the reasons above stated. Appropriate steps should be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant will own theatres (whether represented by fee, beneficial, or stock interests) jointly with other exhibitor-defendants, regardless of the size of the interests involved. Appropriate steps should also be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant or defendants will jointly own a theatre or stock interest therein with any independent exhibitor, except when a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, which we deem de minimis and only to be treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition. See infra p. 71. This result may be reached in situations like Florida, Texas, Minnesota and drastic remedy of complete divestiture in order to effect a proper degree of free competition. It is only in certain localities, and not in general, that an ownership even of first-run theatres approximating monopoly exists. Under the proposed system, the only theatres the competition of which in exhibition even Paramount—the largest owner—would in anywise control are the 7.72 per cent which it now owns. Each of the other four major defendants would control a far smaller percentage of the theatres. Even in places like Philadelphia and Cincinnati, where Warner and RKO have owned all the first-run theatres, their theatre interest cannot properly be aggregated to establish a conspiracy in restraining exhibition, for in such localities there would seem to be nothing to prevent other persons from building theatres of a similar type if the market for the distribution of films should be opened to the highest bidder and the builder of a new theatre could compete with the other theatre owners in obtaining pictures for exhibition in the theatre he had built. The only pictures that the present sole exhibitors in such localities could control would be their own, which they can always exhibit freely in their own theatres.

In about 60 per cent of the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000 on which the government mainly relies to prove its case, there are independent first-run theatres in competition with those of the major defendants except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices we have criticized.[8] In about 91 per cent of these cities there is competition in first runs between independents and some of the major defendants or among the major defendants themselves, except so far as it may be restricted by the above trade practices.[9] If the bidding system we propose to set up, minimum admission prices in licenses eliminated, and the other restrictive agreements which we have discussed terminated, it is our opinion that adequate competition would exist. Indeed in all of the 92 cities, even where there is no present competition in first runs there is always competition in some run.

---

[8]According to Loew's Exhibit 13 and RKO's Exhibit 11, there are independent first-run theatres in all but the following 38 cities: Albany, Bridgeport, Charlotte, Chattanooga, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dallas, Dayton, Des Moines, Elizabeth, Erie, Flint, Fort Worth, Grand Rapids, Houston, Jersey City, Kansas City, Mo., Knoxville, Lowell, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Newark, New Haven, Norfolk, Omaha, Paterson, Peoria, Rochester, San Antonio, Scranton, South Bend, Syracuse, Toledo, Wichita, Worcester, Yonkers.

Moreover, there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416 (C. C. A. 2). The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. They can only be restrained from the unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block-booking, and other things we have criticized.

If in certain localities there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from "inherent vice" on the part of these defendants. Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, and it takes greater proof than that each of them possessed great financial strength, many theatres, and exhibited the greater number of first-runs to deprive it of the ordinary rights of ownership. Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures. Record p. 1062.

[9] Upon the termination of "pooling" agreements a major defendant may control all of the first-run theatres in only the following 8 cities: Charlotte, Chattanooga, Cincinnati, Erie, Knoxville, Peoria, South Bend, Wichita. Loew's Exhibit 13; RKO's Exhibit 11.

As was said by the expediting court in United States v. The Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, (E. D. Pa., 1945):

> "If there is only one store in a town at which every one trades, that fact does not itself constitute a monopoly in the legal sense. It is only when the merchant maintains his position by devices which compel everyone to trade with him exclusively that the situation becomes legally objectionable."

In the case at bar, as we have reiterated, many of the objections are to the trade practices we have alluded to, and not to the ownership of theatres either by the major defendants or by their wholly-owned subsidiaries. If those theatres were all owned by entirely independent corporations the distributing-producing defendants, if not in competition in the distribution of their films, would control competition in the exhibition business by in the aggregate controling the distribution of most of the best pictures in the United States and imposing restrictions upon their use. The root of the difficulties we have discovered lies not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five major defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited. That such would be the case seems amply demonstrated by the decisions where powerful independent circuits were involved. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208. If the objectionable trade practices were eliminated, the only difference between such an assumed situation in which the defendants owned no theatres and the present would be the inability of the major defendants to play their own pictures in their own theatres. The percentage of pictures on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatres would be relatively small and in nowise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition.[10]

There has however been restraint of competition in exhibition by the five major defendants through ownership of theatres jointly with one another or if their interests be more than five per cent even where jointly held with independents

[10]The following table is derived from Plaintiff's Exhibit 426 and Record pp. 2400-1:

FEATURE FILMS RELEASED DURING THE 1943-44 SEASON BY ALL DISTRIBUTORS.

	No. of Films	Percentages of Total
		With "Westerns" included:	With "Westerns" excluded:
Fox	33	8.31%	9.85%
Loew's	33	8.31%	9.85%
Paramount	31	7.81%	9.25%
RKO	38	9.57%	11.34%
Warner	19	4.79%	5.67%
Columbia	41	10.32%	12.24%
United Artists	16	4.04%	4.78%
Universal	49	12.34%	14.63%
Republic	29 features 30 "Westerns"	14.86%	8.66%
Monogram	26 features 16 "Westerns"	10.58%	7.76%
PRC	20 features 16 "Westerns"	9.07%	5.97%
Totals	397	100%	100%
	335 without "Westerns"

which, in our opinion, calls for a divestiture of such interests whether such partial interest is in fee or through stock ownership or otherwise.

There is no evidence that in a city such as Cincinnati, in which a major defendant owns all of the first-run theatres, other exhibitors, affiliated or unaffiliated, have been prevented from also owning theatres for exhibition on first-run and there consequently is no monopoly in the legal sense, see United States v. Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, and no reason for directing a divestiture. But when theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. In such case their joining of interests is illegal under the anti-trust laws for the reason that the major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently. Such an elimination of competition is unreasonable in view of the defendant's being a powerful factor in the industry capable of exerting vast influence to its ends, and of the methods it has employed to restrain and control normal competition in distributing and exhibiting motion pictures through price-fixing, system of clearances, block-booking, pooling and the other practices we have alluded to.

We find such joint interests in a great number of theatres, a summary of which is set forth below,[11] and hold that they

---

[11]In so far as information could accurately be obtained from RKO's Exhibit 11, the numbers of theatres jointly owned by the defendants are approximately as follows:

THEATRES JOINTLY OWNED WITH INDEPENDENTS:

Paramount	993
Warner	20
Fox	66
RKO	187
Loew's	21

must be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendant-exhibitors. The decree or subsequent orders to be entered in conformity with this opinion will control sales or exchanges of such fractional interests for the purpose of restoring or creating a reasonable competition in the areas in question.

General Considerations

It may be said that such restrictions in commercial dealings as we would impose will interfere with the right of a copyright owner to choose his customers or contract for the disposition of his own property. The answer is that no such aboslute right exists where its exercise will involve an extension of a copyright monopoly or an unreasonable interference with competition in the distribution and exhibition of

---

THEATRES JOINTLY OWNED BY TWO DEFENDANTS:

Paramount-Fox	6
Paramount-Loew's	14
Paramount-Warner	25
Paramount-RKO	150
Loew's-RKO	3
Loew's-Warner	5
Fox-RKO	1
Warner-RKO	10
Total	1,501 Theatres

Of the above theatres jointly owned with independents, the following numbers will not be affected by the decree, since the defendant or co-owning independent owns less than a 5% interest:

Paramount	177
RKO	32
Total	209 Theatres
Total affected by the decree according to RKO's Exhibit 11	1,292 Theatres moving pictures. A system of fixed admission prices, clearances and block-booking is so restrictive of competition in its tendency that it should be modified to comply with the terms of the Sherman Act. The modifications in practices we have indicated will relieve conditions that have grown up through the years. Indeed the practices are defended on the ground that business convenience and long usage ought to sanction them. But, in spite of their long continuance, we cannot escape the conclusion that in various ways the system stifles competition and violates the law and that business convenience and loyalty to former customers afford a lame excuse for depriving others of rights to compete and for perpetuating unreasonable restrictions. The remedy we are giving against the infractions is certainly no more drastic in effect than the one the Supreme Court granted in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, nor more severe than the one it imposed in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. The defendants have built up great business enterprises in a very popular field. Yet they have carried on practices we have found unduly restrictive of interstate commerce and even though we do not suggest that they any more than "those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell" have been "sinners above all men", yet measures should be taken to restore the moving picture business to a condition of competition that will benefit both competitors and the general public and to abate practices that are unlawful.

It is argued that the steps we have proposed would involve an interference with commercial practices that are generally acceptable and a hazardous attempt on the part of judges—unfamiliar with the details of business—to remodel its delicate adjustments which have hitherto provided the public with what is a new and great art. But we see nothing ruinous in the remedies proposed. Disputes which may arise under the bidding system are likely to relate to questions whether the bidder has a theatre adequate for the run for which he bids, whether the clearance requested is reasonable as regards his own theatre and those of others, and similar matters generally involved in comparing bids. If the defendants will consent to an arbitration system for the determination of such disputes of the kind that has worked so well under the consent decree, they will facilitate the adjustment of most of the differences that are likely to occur, with a large saving of time and money as compared with separate court actions.

A suit in the district court for violation of the Sherman Act is doubtless an awkward way to cure such ills as have arisen, but it is perhaps the best remedy now available to the government. There surely are evils in the existing system, and the Sherman Act provides a mode of correction which is lawfully invoked. At all events, that which is written is written, and is controlling on us.

It does not follow from the foregoing that we should wholly break up the exhibition business of each of the major defendants even though a "root and branch" decree might be legally possible. Such total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned, and, if we are right in our analysis of the situation, we should still have to give relief against price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements, and other agreements we have held invalid. The relief proposed we believe should suffice, while total divestiture would be damaging to the public as well as to the defendants and not accomplish any useful purpose at the present time.

The Decree

A decree is granted in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion to be settled on ten days' notice. It should provide for the dismissal of all claims asserted by the plaintiff against any of the defendants which act only as producers of motion pictures and for the dismissal of claims against any other defendants based on their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

The granting of licenses by any of the defendant-distributors which fix minimum prices for admission to theatres either of the defendants or of any other exhibitor should be enjoined in which such minimum admission prices are fixed by the parties either in writing, or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event, or in any other wise.

The defendants should be enjoined from concertedly agreeing to maintain a system of clearances as among themselves or with other exhibitors, and no clearances should be granted against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving a license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Existing clearances in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensees in the runs awarded to them shall be invalid pro tanto. In determining what is a reasonable clearance the following factors should be taken into consideration:

(1) The admission prices of the theatres involved, as set by the exhibitor;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The further performance by any of the defendants of existing formula deals, master agreements to the extent that we have previously found them invalid, or franchises should be enjoined, and the defendants should also be enjoined from entering into or carrying out any similar agreements in the future.

Defendants owning a legal or equitable interest in theatres of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries may exhibit pictures of their own or of their wholly owned subsidiaries in such theatres upon such terms as to admission prices and clearances and on such runs as they see fit.

No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least ninety-five per cent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered. The license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatever. Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. No contracts for exhibition shall be entered into, or if already outstanding shall be performed, in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon an agreement of the licensee to take a license of one or more other features, but licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade-shown prior to the granting of a license for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject a percentage of such pictures not trade-shown prior to the granting of the license to be fixed by the decree. But that right to reject any picture must be exercised within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it.

The defendants shall be enjoined from entering into or continuing to perform existing pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition, are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. They shall also be enjoined from making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in the competitive area without first offering them for inclusion in the pool. The making or continuance of leases of theatres under which defendants lease any of their theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the competitive area in return for a share of the profits shall be enjoined.

Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership of an interest in any theatre, whether in fee or in stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant-exhibitor. Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership, jointly with an independent, of an interest in any theatre, greater than five per cent, unless such defendant's interest is ninety-five per cent or more; and where the interest of such defendant is more than five per cent and less than ninety-five per cent, such joint interests shall be dissolved either by a sale to, or by a purchase from, such co-owner or co-owners. Rearrangements of such joint interests with an independent, if by purchase, shall, however, be subject to the direction of this court so that their effectuation may promote competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. Where a defendant owns a ninety-five or greater per cent interest in any theatre, such theatre may be considered as its own so far as this opinion and the decree to be entered hereon are concerned. Each of the defendants shall be enjoined from expanding its theatre holdings except for the purpose of acquiring a co-owner's interest in jointly owned theatres, and this only in cases where the court shall permit such acquisition, instead of requiring an outright sale of the undivided interest of the defendant in question. The foregoing provision as to divestiture of partial interests in theatres shall apply both to interests held in fee and beneficially and to those represented by shares of stock. But it shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the later case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor.

Each defendant shall be enjoined from operating, booking or film-buying through any agent who is also acting in such matters for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliated.

The decree shall also provide for arbitration of disputes as to bids, clearances, runs, and any other subjects appropriate for arbitration in respect to all parties who may consent to the creation of such tribunals for adjustment of such disputes. It shall also provide for an appeal board generally similar to the one created by the consent decree as to any parties consenting thereto. It shall make such disposition of the provisions of the existing consent decree signed November 30, 1940, as may be necessary in view of the foregoing opinion.

In order to secure compliance with the decree to be entered, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall on the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust matters, and on reasonable notice to the defendant or defendants affected, be permitted reasonable access to all books and papers of the defendants and reasonable opportunity to interview their officers or employees, as provided in Section XVIII of the Consent Decree.

Proceedings under the decree to be entered shall be stayed pending appeal or for the purpose of enabling the parties to adjust their business without an unfair burden or as practice may require upon such terms as the decree shall provide.

Jurisdiction of this cause shall be retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the decree to apply to the court at any time for such orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the some, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

Findings should be proposed by the parties for the assistance of the court, but such proposed findings will form no part of the record.

Dated June 11, 1946.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND,
U. S. Circuit Judge.

HENRY W. GODDARD,
U. S. District Judge.

JOHN BRIGHT,
U. S. District Judge.

United States District Court

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Plaintiff,

against

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., et al.,
Defendants.

MEMORANDUM IN RE FINDINGS AND DECREE

In order to meet some of the objections raised at the hearing to the system of bidding for features described in the opinion of the court, we have modified the system there proposed so that competitive bidding will only be necessary within a competitive area and in such an area where it is desired by the exhibitors. In other words, the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so.

The arrangement for arbitration and an appeal board has been terminated except as to unfinished litigations and other matters referred to in the decree, because of the unwillingness of some of the parties to consent to their continuance. Nevertheless, as we have indicated in the opinion, these tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded.

Indeed, the arbitration system set up under the consent decree of November 20, 1940, was created pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint by the United States filed November 14, 1940, in which, among other things, the plaintiff prayed that "a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein."

We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree.

Dated: December 31, 1946

AUGUSTUS N. HAND,
United States Circuit Judge.

HENRY W. GODDARD,
United States District Judge.

JOHN BRIGHT,
United States District Judge.

United States District Court

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Plaintiff,

against

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., KEITH-ALBEE-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO PROCTOR CORPORATION, RKO MIDWEST CORPORATION, WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., and UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants.

Equity No. 87-273

DECREE

The court having rendered its opinion herein on June 11, 1946, having duly considered the proposals of the parties and of amici curiae as to its findings and judgment, and having filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein certain of the defendants herein were found to have violated the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, commonly known as the Sherman Act,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED, as follows:

I.

1. The complaint is dismissed as to the defendants Screen Gems, Inc. and the corporation named as Universal Pictures Company, Inc., merged during the pendency of this case into the defendant Universal Corporation. The complaint is also dismissed as to all claims made against the remaining defendants herein based upon their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

II.

Each of the defendant distributors, Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loews, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures Distributing Corporation [formerly known as Vitagraph, Inc.]; Twentieth-Century Fox Film Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation; Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation; Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.; Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; and United Artists Corporation; and the successors of each of them, and any and all individuals who act in behalf of any thereof with respect to the matters enjoined, and each corporation in which said defendants or any of them own a direct or indirect stock interest of more than fifty per cent, is hereby enjoined:

1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means.

2. From agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances; the term "clearances" as used herein meaning the period of time stipulated in license contracts which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

3. From granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

4. From granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof.

5. From further performing any existing franchise to which it is a party and from making any franchises in the future. The term "franchise" as used herein means a licensing agreement or series of licensing agreements, entered into as a part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of agreement.

6. From making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party. The term "formula deal" as used herein means a licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. The term "master agreement" means a licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal" covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres usually comprising a circuit.

7. From performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features. To the extent that any of the features have not been trade shown prior to the granting of the license for more than a single feature, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject twenty per cent of such features not trade shown prior to the granting of the license, such right of rejection to be exercised in the order of release within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect the feature.

8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre, not its own, in any manner except the following:

(a) A license to exhibit each feature released for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in such area who desires to exhibit it on some run [other than that upon which such feature is to be exhibited in the theatre of the licensor] selected by such operator, and upon uniform terms;

(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;

(c) Where a run is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify, not less than thirty days in advance of the date when bids will be received, all exhibitors in the competitive area, offering to license the features upon one or more runs, and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Within fifteen days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in such competitive area may bid for such license, and in his bid shall state what run such exhibitor desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make. The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. The method of licensing specified in this subdivision shall not be required in areas where there is no competition among theatres or in run, or in which there is no offer made by any exhibitor within the time above mentioned. The words "exclude simultaneous exhibition" shall be held to mean the exhibition of a specified run in one theatre with clearance over other theatres in the competitive area. The words "competitive area" shall refer to the territory occupied by more than one theatre in which it may fairly and reasonably be said that such theatres compete with each other for the exhibition of features on any run.

(d) Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture.

(e) A theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns therein a legal or equitable interest of ninety-five per cent or more, either directly or through affiliates or subsidiaries.

9. From arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with another theatre not owned or operated by a defendant distributor, or its affiliate or subsidiary, made by registered mail, addressed to the home office of the distributor, to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. Such demand shall be deemed to have been refused either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of a refusal in writing or upon the expiration of ten days after the receipt of the exhibitor's demand.

III

Each of the defendant exhibitors, Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loews, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation, and National Theatres, Inc. is hereby enjoined and restrained:

(1) From performing or enforcing agreements referred to in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the foregoing section II hereof to which it may be a party.

(2) From making or continuing to perform pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to prearranged percentages.

(3) From making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in a competitive area where a pool operates without first offering them for inclusion in the pool.

(4) From making or continuing leases of theatres under which it leases any of its theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the same competitive area in return for a share of the profits.

(5) From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant, and from continuing to own or acquire such an interest in conjunction with an independent [meaning any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question,] where such interest shall be greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years. The relationships between the defendants and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendants. In dissolving relationships among defendants and between defendants and independents which violate this provision, one defendant may acquire the interest of another defendant or independent if such defendant desiring to acquire such interest shall show to the satisfaction of the court, and the court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Each of the defendants shall submit to this court within six months a statement outlining the extent to which it has complied and the manner in which it proposes to comply with this provision, setting forth in detail the names, locations, and general descriptions of the theatres, corporate securities, and beneficial interests of any kind involved, the sales thereof that it has made, and such interests as it proposes to acquire, with a statement of facts regarding each competitive situation involved in such proposed acquisition sufficient to show the probable effect of such acquisition on that situation. Similar reports shall be made quarterly thereafter until this provision shall have been fully complied with. Reasonable notice of such acquisition plans shall be served upon the Attorney General and plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the court.

(6) From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in the preceding paragraph.

(7) From operating, booking, or buying features for any of its theatres through any agent who is known by it to be also acting in such manner for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliate.

IV.

Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of each distributor-defendant to license, or in any way to arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which such distributor defendant has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this Decree, a proprietary interest of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries.

V.

The provisions of the existing consent decree are hereby declared to be of no further force or effect, except insofar as may be necessary to conclude arbitration proceedings now pending and to liquidate in an orderly manner the financial obligations of the defendants and the American Arbitration Association, incurred in the establishment of the consent decree arbitration systems. Existing awards and those made pursuant to pending proceedings shall continue to be enforceable. But this shall in no way preclude the parties or any other persons from setting up a reasonable system of arbitration either through the use of the present boards or any others as among themselves.

VI.

For the purpose of securing compliance with this Decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this Decree, and that during the times that the plaintiff shall desire such access, counsel for such defendant may be present, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees, regarding any such matters, at which interview counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for such defendant company may be present.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

VII.

Paragraphs 7 and 8 of section II of this judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947.

VIII.

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the judgment and no others, to apply to the court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification, or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

IX.

The operation of this judgment is stayed for sixty days from the date hereof, and, if an appeal is taken, for thirty days thereafter in order to enable any appellant to move before the Supreme Court for a stay in respect to any portion of the judgment from which an appeal has been taken.

Dated, December 31, 1946.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND
United States Circuit Judge

HENRY W. GODDARD
United States District Judge

JOHN BRIGHT
United States District Judge

IN THE

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff, v. PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., et al., Defendants.	Equity No. 87-273

ORDER

The Court having entered its findings and judgment herein on December 31, 1946, and having heard and considered the motions to amend and clarify the findings and judgment filed by all defendants and having decided said motions on February 3, 1947, with a direction to settle the order therein upon due notice to the parties, which has now been given,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

Paragraph III (2) of said judgment is hereby modified by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Pooling agreement by one or more defendants with others not parties to this action which violate this provision shall be dissolved prior to July 1, 1947."

Paragraph III (4) of said judgment is hereby modified by adding at the end thereof the following: "The leases referred to herein between a defendant and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated prior to July 1, 1947."

Said motions are in all other respects hereby denied.

/s/ AUGUSTUS N. HAND
United States Circuit Judge
/s/ HENRY W. GODDARD
United States District Judge
/s/ JOHN BRIGHT
United States District Judge

Dated this 10th day of February, 1947.

(Filed Feb. 11, 1947
U.S. District Court, S. D. of N. Y.)

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1947

No. 79

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellant,

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al., Appellees.

No. 80

LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., et al., Appellants,

v.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.

DIRECT APPEALS FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

SCHEDULES

SUBMITTED ON BEHALF OF APPELLEE-APPELLANT LOEW'S INCORPORATED

JOHN W. DAVIS,
J. ROBERT RUBIN,
Attorneys for Loew's Incorporated

S. HAZARD GILLESPIE, JR.,
BENJAMIN MELNIKER,
Of Counsel.

February 2, 1948.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1947

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant, v. PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al., Appellees.	No. 79
LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., et al., Appellants, v. THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee.	No. 80

SCHEDULES

The information on the annexed schedules is from the records of Loew's Incorporated. It is not in evidence, nor is it offered as evidence on this appeal. Its purpose is stated at pages 98-100 of the brief on behalf of Appellee-Appellant Loew's Incorporated.

JOHN W. DAVIS,
J. ROBERT RUBIN,
Attorneys for Loew's Incorporated

S. HAZARD GILLESPIE, JR.,
BENJAMIN MELNIKER,
Of Counsel.

February 2, 1948

LOCALITY	RUN	THEATRE	SEAT. CAP'TY	TYPE OPER-ATOR	OPERATOR	NO. PICT. AWARDED BY COMP. BID	DATE OF 1st LETTER SOLI-CITING BID
Batavia, N. Y.	1st	Family	982	A-W	Warner Bros. Circuit	9	4/10/47
		Lafayette	939	A-W	Warner Bros. Circuit	1	6/4/47 - Dipson stopped bidding. 10/24/47 - Dipson resumed bidding.
		Batavia	1,400	IC	Dipson Theatres, Inc. - W. Dipson	2
Bellows Falls, Vt.	1st	Opera House	930	IC	Rockingham Operating Co. - Interstate Theas. Corp.	5	3/4/47
		State	520	I	State Amusement, Inc. - John E. Voudoukis	21
Binghamton, N. Y.	3rd	Surburban	1,014	A-P	Meco Theatre Corp. - Comerford - T. J. Walsh	5	7/2/47
		Jarvis	697	I	Danan Theatre Corp. - N. Pearlman	8
Brandon, Vt.	1st	Brandon	521	IC	Graphic Theatres Circuit - N. B. Kurson	5	2/22/47
		Community	550	I	Community Theatre - J. P. Wilson	14
Bridgeton, Me.	1st	Mayfair	420	IC	Graphic Theatre Circuit - N. B. Kurson	5	4/9/47
		State	584	I	Clarence F. Millet	17
Dover, N. H.	1st	Strand	918	A-P	M & P - New England Theatres, Inc. - C. L. Stoddard	7	5/9/47
		Uptown	600	I	L. H. Bridgham	12
		State	400	I	C. & C. Theatres, Inc. - Fred Couture	3
Greenfield, Mass.	1st	Garden	1,877	A-P	Western Mass. Theatres, Inc. - Sam Goldstein	14	7/7/47
		Victoria	880	I	L. Rosensweig - H. Brown	6
		Lawler	1,089	IC	Jamestown Amusement Co., Inc. - E. C. Grainger	-
New London, Conn.	1st	Garde	1,672	A-W	Warner Bros. Circuit M'gmt. Corp.	4	5/29/47
		Capitol	1,586	A-P	M & P Theatres Corporation - C. L. Stoddard	9
		Victory	1,110	I	Allied Management Company - Sol Edwards	8
Union City, N. J.	1st	Lincoln	1,732	A-W	Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp.	-	12/26/47
		Roosevelt	1,663	A-W	Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp.	2
		Summit	800	I	Summit Amuse. Corp. - L. Weitzman	1
		Park	1,500	I	Mosart Amusement Co., Inc. - Chas. H. Moses	1
White Plains, N. Y.	2nd	Colony	600	IC	Brandt Theatres - Gladpearl Inc.	2	11/5/47
		Pix	400	I	David Mavity	5
Fall River, Mass.	1st	Durfee	2,229	I	Rialto Amusé. Co.)	-	Authorized bidding 1/16/48
		Empire	1,819	I	Atlantic Amuse. Co.) N. Yamins	-
		Center	1,390	I	Center Theatres Co.)	-
		Embassy	900	I	Embassy Thea. Corp. of Fall River - Wm. Purcell	-
		Academy	1,880	I	Zeitz Theatres of Fall River, Inc. - Harry Zeitz	-

KEY:
- A - F Fox affiliate
- A - P Paramount affiliate
- A - R RKO affiliate
- A - W Warner affiliate
- IC Independent circuit *
- I Small independent

* 5 or more theatres

LOCALITY	RUN	THEATRE	SEAT. CAP'TY	TYPE OPER-ATOR	OPERATOR	NO. PICT. AWARDED BY COMP. BID	DATE OF 1st LETTER SOLI-CITING BID
Philadelphia, Pa.	1st	Aldine	1,297	A-W	Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp.	5	8/28/46
		Boyd	2,338	A-W	" " " " "	4
		Stanton	1,344	A-W	" " " " "	4
		Stanley	2,947	A-W	" " " " "	6
		Earle	2,765	A-W	" " " " "	5
		Mastbaum	4,387	A-W	" " " " "	1
		Goldman	1,200	I	William Goldman Theatres Inc.	7
		Karlton	944	I	" " " "	5
		Erlanger	1,445	I	" " " "	1
		Pix	500	I	Pix Theatre Company - Samuel Cummings	3
		Fox	2,423	I	H. Seidenberg - Fox Philadelphia Theatre	-
					Central Division
Rolla, Mo.	1st	Ritz	680	I	Mildred Routh	16	3/11/47
		Uptown	1,000	I	R. E. Carney Theatres - C. Berutt	12
Rolla, Mo.	2nd	Ritz	680	I	Mildred Routh	6	6/13/47
		Rollamo	746	I	R. E. Carney Theatres - C. Berutt	4
Cape Girardeau, Mo.	1st	Broadway	1,203	A-F	Fox Midwest Am. Corp.	8	4/1/47
		Orpheum	673	A-F	Fox Midwest Am. Corp.	1
		Esquire	765	I	Bernard Woolner	18
		Rialto	570	I	Shirley Thea. Co. - E. J. Rosecan	-
Cincinnati, O.	3rd	Ambassador	724	I	William Bein	17	6/3/47
		20th Century	899	I	Willis Vance	6
Beattyville, Ky.	1st	Lee	286	I	J. F. Carnahan	14	3/13/47
		Ritz	350	I	Chas. Bowles	15
Caldwell, O.	1st	Noble	473	I	Noble Theatre Company - C. E. Huprich & C. G. Velas	12	4/9/47
		Roxy	400	IC	Mena Fliehman Co-Op. Theatres of Ohio - Agent	5
New Philadelphia, O.	1st	Quaker	748	IC	Shea Theatre Corp.	-	1/21/48
Uhrichsville, O.		State	801	I	Urban Anderson	-
Detroit, Mich.	1st	United Artists	2,018	A-P	United Detroit Thea. Corp.	3	4/11/47
		Palm State	2,967	A-P	" " " "	1
		Michigan	4,029	A-P	" " " "	2
		Broadway Capitol	3,448	A-P	" " " "	1
		Downtown	2,800	I	Elmer Balaban	5
		Adams	1,600	I	Elmer Balaban	8
Moberly, Mo.	1st	Fourth St.	900	A-F	Fox Midwest Amuse. Corp.	1	4/23/47
		Grand	920	A-F	" " " "	4
		Dickinson	510	I	Dickinson Operating Co. Inc. - Glen Dickinson, Jr.	16
		Sosna	510	I	Louis Sosna	4
Siloam Springs, Ark.	1st	Spot	499	I	S. V. Eagan	11	3/28/47
		Grand	525	I	L. B. Killebrew	8
		Rialto	490	I	-

LOCALITY	RUN	THEATRE	SEAT. CAP'TY	TYPE OPER-ATOR	OPERATOR	NO. PICT. AWARDED BY COMP. BID	DATE OF 1st LETTER SOLI-CITING BID
Topeka, Ks.	1st	Orpheum	709	A-P	Fox Midwest Amuse. Corp.	-	4/30/47
		Jayhawk	1,358	A-P	" " " "	1
		Grand	1,262	A-P	" " " "	6
		Dickinson	1,180	I	Dickinson Operating Co. Inc. - Glen Dickinson, Jr.	16
Brownsville, Pa.	1st	Plaza	750	I	Moody & Dickinson	-	1/14/48
		Strand	400	I	Laskey Bros. Amuse. Corp.	-
Ford City, Pa.	1st	Roxy	240	I	A. F. Serrao	14	4/29/47
		Ford	490	IC	Ford City Theatres Inc.	5
Bradford, Pa.	1st	Shea	1,239	IC	Erie Amuse. Co.	7	4/9/47
		Grand	818	IC	" " "	1
		New Bradford	1,208	IC	Bradford Playhouse, Inc.	13
Ambridge, Pa.	1st	State	750	A-P	Penmare Theatre Corp.	9	7/25/46
		Ambridge	1,335	A-W	Warner Bros. Thea. Inc. of Penn.	7
		Penn	507	I	Harry Norman Ball	26
Pittsburgh, Pa.	*	Belmar	580	A-W	Stanley Company of America	6	7/7/47
Penn Township, Pa.	*	Eastwood	628	I	Rudolph Navari	6
					Southern Division
Gadsden, Ala.	1st	Pitman	1,100	I	Alga Theatre Corp. - Chas. S. Pitman	6	8/14/47
		Princess	1,118	IC	Crescent Amusement Co. - Kermit C. Stengel	5
		Gadsden	817	IC	" " " " " "	1
		Capitol	379	IC	" " " " " "	-
Macon, Ga.	1st	Bibb	748	I	Fred G. Weiss	16	3/19/47
		Grand	1,067	A-P	Lucas & Jenkins - W. K. Jenkins	4
		Rialto	840	A-P	" " " " "	-
		Capitol	908	A-P	" " " " "	1
Savannah, Ga.	1st	Weis	1,300	I	Fred G. Weiss	22	10/9/46
		Avon	1,300	A-P	Lucas & Jenkins - John Cunningham	5
		Lucas	1,542	A-P	" " " "	4
		Bijou	989	A-P	" " " "	2
		Victory	723	A-P	" " " "	-
Tampa, Fla.	1st	State	615	I	Claughton Theas. - Mrs. Lillian Claughton	1	4/22/47
		Park	1,281	I	Harvey Fleischman	7
		Tampa	1,381	A-P	Florida Theas. - Frank Rogers	9
		Strand	753	A-P	" " " "	-
		Palace	1,392	A-P	" " " "	4
		Florida	901	A-P	" " " "	2
Burlington, N. C.	1st	State	600	I	E. C. Qualls	20	3/6/47
		Paramount	777	A-P	Wilby-Kincey Service Corp. - H. F. Kincey	4
		Alamance	419	A-P	" " " " " " "	-
Graham, N. C.		Graham	777	I	A. B. Thompson	-
Burlington, N. C.	2nd	Alamance	419	A-P	Wilby-Kincey Service Corp. - H. F. Kincey	-	4/15/47
		State	600	I	E. C. Qualls	14

* 7 days after 1st run Wilkinsburg

LOCALITY	RUN	THEATRE	SEAT. CAP'TY	TYPE OPER-ATOR	OPERATOR	NO. PICT. AWARDED BY COMP. BID	DATE OF 1st LETTER SOLI-CITING BID
Charlotte, N. C.	2nd	Visulite	494	IC	B & L Enterprises - T. A. Little	2	10/25/47
		Manor	700	IC	H. B. Meiselman	4
Elizabeth City, N. C.	1st	Love's State	610	IC	Exhibitor's Service - H. D. Hearn	7	9/9/47
		Carolina	900	IC	Carolina Amusement Co. - J. H. Webster	2
		Center	550	IC	" " " " " "	1
Greenville, S. C.	1st	Ritz	488	I	Trio Amusement Co. - Fred S. Curdts	1	10/16/47
		Fox	744	I	" " " " " "	1
		Carolina	1,118	A-P	Wilby-Kincey Service Corp. - H. F. Kincey	3
		Center	781	A-P	" " " " " " "	-
Bowie, Tex.	1st	Texan	395	I	Kenneth Arnold	20	3/4/47
		Bowie-Majestic	350	I	J. H. Lutzer	8
Brady, Tex.	1st	Texas	800	I	Bob Shanks	12	4/17/47
		Brady	721	IC	Thea. Enterprises, Inc. - Ray Higdon *	8
		Palace	470	IC	" " " " "	1
Bryan, Tex.	1st	Palace	675	A-P	Jefferson Amuse. Co. - Julius Gordon	2	12/1/47
		Queen	550	A-P	" " " " "	-
College Station, Tex.		Campus	720	I	Ben Ferguson	2
		Guion Hall	1,200	I	Thomas Puddy	-
Dallas, Tex.	45 day avail.	Delman	1,145	I	I. B. Adelman	5	10/6/47
		Maple	800	I	Forrest White	-
		Village	895	A-P	Interstate Theas. Inc. - R. J. O'Donnell	2
		Esquire	1,309	A-P	" " " " " "	1
Dallas, Tex.	52 day avail.	Delman	1,145	I	I. B. Adelman	1	11/3/47
		Maple	800	I	Forrest White	-
		Village	895	A-P	Interstate Theas. Inc. - R. J. O'Donnell	1
		Esquire	1,309	A-P	" " " " " "	2
Dallas, Tex.	59 day avail.	Delman	1,145	I	I. B. Adelman	-	11/12/47
		Maple	800	I	Forrest White	3
		Village	895	A-P	Interstate Theas. Inc. - R. J. O'Donnell	-
		Esquire	1,309	A-P	" " " " " "	-
Huntsville, Tex.	1st	Town	820	I	R. B. Weatherall	-	1/19/48
		Life	400	IC	Robb & Rowley Theas.	-
Meridian, Tex.	1st	Circle	456	I	D. C. Caraway	13	4/3/47
		Capitol	554	I	R. F. Curtis	9
New Braunfels, Tex.	1st	Capitol	360	IC	Rubin Frels, Inc. - Rubin Frels	7	4/11/47
		Brauntex	930	IC	Theatre Enterprises, Inc. - Ray Higdon *	16
Nocona, Tex.	1st	Cona	350	I	Lester Morgan	17	3/4/47
		Ritz	330	I	J. H. Lutzer	16
Plainview, Tex.	2nd	State	400	I	Price Holland	12	3/4/47
		Texas	639	IC	Theatre Enterprises, Inc. - Ray Higdon *	9
		Fair	425	IC	" " " " "	9
San Antonio, Tex.	59 day avail.	Josephine	1,000	I	Mul-Den Enterprises	-	12/24/47
		Laurel	916	A-P	Interstate Theatres, Inc. - R. J. O'Donnell	3
Teague, Tex.	1st	Lee	387	I	Wm. Henderson	10	4/2/47
		Star	680	IC	J.G. Long Theas. - Theo. Routt	13

LOCALITY	RUN	THEATRE	SEAT. CAP'TY	TYPE OPER-ATOR	OPERATOR	NO. PICT. AWARDED BY COMP. BID	DATE OF 1st LETTER SOLI-CITING BID
Amory, Miss.	1st	Amory	300	I	J. A. Owen	13	3/5/47
		Varsity	447	I	Flexer Theatres, Inc. - David Flexer	6
Durant, Miss.	1st	Odom	300	I	H. W. Odom	6	1/17/47
		Strand	380	IC	Strand Enterprises, Inc. - G. W. Haynes	21
Kosciusko, Miss.	1st	Pix	400	IC	Associated Theatres, Inc. - W. A. Prewitt, Jr.	3	4/26/47
		Strand	671	IC	Strand Enterprises, Inc. -G. W. Haynes	12
Delhi, La.	1st	Cave	690	I	Chapman Davis	24	3/3/47
		Delhi	520	I	E. I. Hawkins	8
Rayne, La.	1st	Bruce	700	IC	Associated Theatres, Inc. - W. A. Prewitt, Jr.	19	6/24/47
		Acadia	825	IC	Film Service Corp. - L. C. Montgomery	-
St. Martinsville, La.	1st	Main	576	I	J. G. Broggi	7	12/1/47
		Teche	690	IC	Film Service Corp. - L. C. Montgomery	-
Nowata, Okla.	1st	ex	609	I	Mrs. Lucille DeShazo	12	3/31/47
		Luxor	350	I	Chester Fleming	4
		Rainbo	325	I	" "	1
Oklahoma City, Okla.	Sub	Uptown	700	I	Charles Ferris	-	1/2/48
		Plaza	722	IC	Cooper Foundation - Pat McGee	1
Oklahoma City, Okla.	Sub	Villa	600	I	Charles Ferris	1	1/2/48
		May	700	IC	Theatre Enterprises, Inc. - Ray Higdon (R.C. Griffith)	-
Oklahoma City, Okla.	1st Col.	Eastside	850	I	Mrs. H. L. Miller	9	10/31/46
		Jewel	385	I	J. W. Sanford	18
Shamrock, Tex.	1st	Liberty	400	I	J. S. Worley	9	3/10/46
		Texas	700	I	J. R. Brown	11
Wynnewood, Okla.	1st	Sun	168	I	Irwin W. Tucker	21	11/22/46
		Deal	385	I	Frank Deal - Charles G. Kemble	12
Baltimore, Md.	2nd Col.	Roosevelt	756	I	Lincoln Amuse. Co. - Morris Flaks	-	12/16/47 - No bids submitted to date.
		Lincoln	742	I	" " " " "	-
		Lennox	444	I	Harry Goldman	-
		Diane	441	I	" "	-
Baltimore, Md.	Sub	Victory	800	I	Victory Thea. Co. - M. H. Rosen	-	1/12/48 - No bids submitted yet.
		Patapsco	650	I	S. Marcus	-
Middle River, Md.	1st	Hiway	825	I	Edgewater Corp. - N. Schwartz	12	6/3/47
		Aero	660	I	Stansbury Eastern - E. F. Perotka	10
Essex, Md.		New	625	I	G & R Cohen - L. Cohen	-
Portsmouth, Va.	1st Col.	Lyric	515	I	A. E. Landreth	9	4/11/47
		Queen	315	I	S. Cummins	3
		Capitol	835	I	District Theatres - Clark Davis	2
		Bland	742	I	" " " "	2

LOCALITY	RUN	THEATRE	SEAT. CAP'TY	TYPE OPER-ATOR	OPERATOR	NO. PICT. AWARDED BY COMP. BID	DATE OF 1st LETTER SOLI-CITING BID
Salisbury, Md.	1st	Boulevard	1,100	I	Ulman Thea. Corp. - R. Todd & T. Howard	10	9/18/47
		Ulmans	967	I	" " " " " " "	2
		New	500	I	" " " " " " "	1
		Wicomico	560	IC	Schine Theatres - G. V. Lynch	8
		Arcade	899	IC	" " " " "	-
Washington, D. C.	1st Sub	Atlas	993	I	Kogod & Burka - Frank M. Boucher	5	9/18/47
		Beverly	946	A-W	Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corp. - John J. Payette	6
					Mid-West Division
Chicago, Ill.	1st	Chicago	3,819	A-P	Balaban & Katz Corp. - W. Immerman	1	1/7/48
		Monroe	953	I	J. Jovan	1
		Rialto	1,620	I	N. S. Barger	-
		Roosevelt	1,535	A-P	Balaban & Katz Corp. - W. Immerman	-
		United Artist	1,694	A-P	" " " " "	-
		Salt Lake	2,649	A-P	" " " " "	-
		Oriental	3,188	IC	Essaness Thea. Corp. - E. Silverman	1
		Palace	2,529	A-R	F. Smith - R.K.O. Film Booking Corp.	-
		Garrick	974	A-P	Balaban & Katz Corp. - W. Immerman	-
		Apollo	1,340	A-P	" " " " "	-
Chicago, Ill.	Sub	Harmony	300	IC	J. Kirsch - Allied Thea. Corp.	19	Approx. 1/9/47
		Vision	722	IC	S. Greiver	15
Decatur, Ill.	1st	Lincoln	1,389	A-P	J. P. Dromey - Publix Great States Theas. Inc.	14	3/6/47
		Empress	990	A-P	" " " " " " "	2
		Avon	965	I	Gus. Conston	16
Kewanee, Ill.	1st	Peerless	896	A-P	J. P. Dromey - Publix Great States Theas. Inc.	13	3/3/47
		Kee	437	A-P	" " " " " " "	-
		Wanee	890	I	Bramblett & Norton	18
Maywood, Ill.	1st	Lido	1,840	IC	J. Rose - Manta & Rose	16	4/7/47
		Yale	600	IC	V. A. Nomikos	4
Michigan City, Ind.	1st	Liberty	563	I	L. B. Philon	14	3/4/47
		Tivoli	1,285	IC	The Dunelake Corp. - Jack Rose	5
		Lido	853	IC	" " " " "	7
Michigan City, Ind.	2nd	Liberty	563	I	L. B. Philon	6	12/11/46
		Uptown	300	IC	The Dunelake Corp. - Jack Rose	-
Ft. Dodge, Ia.	2nd	Dodge	435	I	C. C. Dunsmoor	19	4/1/47
		Iowa	700	A-P	M. Blank - Central States Thea. Corp.	2
Waupaca, Wis.	1st	Palace	723	IC	J. P. Adler - Adler Thea. Co., Inc.	-	1/14/48 - No bids submitted to date.
		State	447	I	I. Ashe - Ashe Thea. Corp.	-
Eau Claire, Wis.	1st	State	1,261	A-P	Minnesota Amusement Co.	4	4/15/47
		Hollywood	944	I	Sheldon M. Grengs	14	4/15/47
		Cameo	468	A-P	Minnesota Amusement Co.	2	6/9/47
		Badger	931	A-P	" " "	1	6/9/47

LOCALITY	RUN	THEATRE	SEAT. CAP'TY	TYPE OPER-ATOR	OPERATOR	NO. PICT. AWARDED BY COMP. BID	DATE OF 1st LETTER SOLI-CITING BID
White Bear, Wis	1st	White Bear	550	I	S. Silberstein - White Bear Thea. Corp.	3	2/27/47
		Avalon	669	I	Mrs. J. I. Jensen	21
Omaha, Nebr.	1st	Omaha	2,053	A-P	Dale McFarland - Tri States Thea.	-	4/16/47
		Paramount	2,290	A-P	" " " " "	1
		Orpheum	2,959	A-P	" " " " "	1
		State	850	I	R. D. Goldberg	4
		Brandies	1,100	A-R	J. D. Redmond - R.K.O.	-
Omaha, Nebr.	Sub	Admiral	1,000	I	H. Blank	17	3/19/47
		Avenue	800	I	R. D. Goldberg	3	3/20/47
		Dundee	591	I	" " "	2	3/19/47
		Military	953	I	" " "	1	3/20/47
					Western Division
So. Pasadena, Calif.	1st	Rialto	1,200	A-F	Fox West Coast - P. L. Lundgren	-	12/3/47
		Ritz	700	IC	M & S. Theas. Inc. (Exhibitor's Service)	3
Monrovia, Calif.	1st	Lyric	1,209	IC	M & S Theas. Inc. (Exhibitor's Service)	4	12/15/47
		Monrovia	700	I	Wm. Knotts Mgr. - (In Receivership)	-
Bakersfield, Calif.	2nd	Tejon	1,000	I	Banducci & Lemucchi Thea. Co. - Dick Lemucchi	18	5/23/47
		Kern	882	A-F	Fox West Coast - Ed Zabel	3
Bakersfield, Calif.	3rd	Granada	651	I	Banducci & Lemucchi Thea. Co.	-	No bidding on 3rd run because Ind. awarded picts. on second run.
		Kern	882	A-F	Fox West Coast	-
San Francisco, Calif.	4th	Metro	1,240	IC	Golden State - Roy Cooper	7	3/12/47
		Marina	1,116	I	Baron & Nathan - C. A. Nathan	21
		El Presidio	868	I	" " " "	2
San Francisco, Calif.	5th	Empire	850	IC	Ben Levin	12	3/28/47
		Parkside	1,343	IC	Golden State - Roy Cooper	12
Carmel, Calif.	1st	Golden Bough Playhouse	250	I	Edward G. Kuster	5	5/15/47
		Carmel	896	IC	T & D Enterprises - V. C. Taylor	-
Fresno, Calif.	1st	Wilson	1,901	A-F	Fox West Coast - Richard Spier	18	11/15/46
		Kinema	1,400	A-F	" " "	3
		Hardy	1,900	I	Gerald Hardy	16
Vallejo, Calif.	1st	Senator	780	A-F	Fox West Coast - Richard Spier	-	1/9/48 - No bids submitted to date.
		Manlon	1,276	A-F	" " " " "	-
		Rita	695	I	Raymond J. Syufy	-
Spokane, Wn.	1st	Fox	2,251	A-F	Fox West Coast - Frank Christie	7	5/12/47
		State	972	A-F	" " " " "	4
		Orpheum	1,295	A-F	" " " " "	2
		Post	1,368	I	Joseph Rosenfield	9
		Granada	600	I	" "	2

LOEW'S COMPETITIVE BIDDING SITUATIONS

Western Division (Continued)

LOCALITY	RUN	THEATRE	SEAT. CAP'TY	TYPE OPER-ATOR	OPERATOR	NO. PICT. AWARDED BY COMP. BID	DATE OF 1st LETTER SOLI-CITING BID
Seattle, Wn.	1st	Blue Mouse	855	A-F	Fox West Coast	-	4/2/47
		Music Hall	2,850	A-F	" " "	6	Discontinued Bidding
		Fifth Ave.	2,366	A-F	" " "	5	8/1/47. Reinstated
		Music Box	846	A-F	" " "	1	Bidding 10/29/47
		Orpheum	2,600	A-F	" " "	1
		Paramount	3,050	A-F	" " "	3
		Liberty	1,679	I	Jenson & Von Herberg	-
		Roosevelt	734	I	Frederic A. Danz	1
		Palomar	2,000	I	" " "	1
Salt Lake City, Utah	1st	Utah	1,856	A-P	Intermountain Theas. - Tracy Barham	5	9/21/46
		Centre	1,623	A-P	" " " "	5
		Capitol	1,842	A-P	" " " "	1
		Uptown	1,400	I	Joseph L. Lawrence Theas.- D.K. Edwards	26
		Rialto	812	I	" " " " "	6
Blackfoot, Idaho	1st	Roxy	500	I	A. W. Barrott	4	12/2/47
		Nuart	612	IC	DeMordaunt & Drennan - Paul DeMordaunt	2
		Idaho	396	IC	" "	1
Trinidad, Colo.	2nd	Rialto	388	A-F	Fox Intermountain - Rick Ricketson	7	10/1/47
		Strand	520	I	Geo. Sawaya	5
Sandy, Ore.	1st	Sandy	498	I	C. M. Gillmore	23	3/21/47
		Sunset	300	I	Tom Moyer	6

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1947

No. 79

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellant,

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al.,

Appellees.

No. 80

LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., et al.,

Appellants,

v.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellee.

DIRECT APPEALS FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF ON BEHALF OF APPELLEE-APPELLANT LOEW'S INCORPORATED

JOHN W. DAVIS,
J. ROBERT RUBIN,
Attorneys for Loew's Incorporated

S. HAZARD GILLESPIE, JR.,
BENJAMIN MELNIKER,
Of Counsel.

February 2, 1948.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
OPINION AND JUDGMENT BELOW	1
JURISDICTION AND STATUTES INVOLVED	2
STATEMENT OF THE CASE	2
A. Nature of the Action, Description of Loew's Incorporated, and the Proceeding Below	2
B. The Government's Contentions Below and the Judgment of the District Court with respect thereto	8
SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS, STATEMENT OF ISSUES, AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	21
ARGUMENT AS APPELLEE ON APPEAL NO. 79
POINT I—THE DISTRICT COURT DID NOT ERR IN REFUSING TO CONCLUDE THAT LOEW'S INDIVIDUALLY OR COLLECTIVELY WITH THE OTHER PRODUCER-EXHIBITORS HAD A MONOPOLY OF EXHIBITION OR DISTRIBUTION OF MOTION PICTURES	25
A. Loew's, Individually, Has No Monopoly of Exhibition, Nationally or Locally	30
(1) Loew's has no monopoly in terms of theatre holdings	30
(2) Loew's has no "first-run" monopoly in any city where it operates	36
(3) Loew's first-run theatres do not monopolize the available film supply	39
B. Loew's, Individually, Has No Monopoly of Distribution	41

PAGE

C. Neither the Lehigh, Reading, Yellow Cab, Swift nor any Other Case Supports the Government's Theory that Loew's Individual Business as Producer, Distributor and Exhibitor Constitutes a Restraint and Monopolization. 43

(1) These authorities do not support the Government's legal theory 43

(2) Loew's integrated business does not come within the condemnation of the Lehigh, Reading, Yellow Cab, Swift or any other case 52

D. Loew's Cannot be Treated Collectively with Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner to Establish a Monopoly of Exhibition or Distribution 56

(1) The five companies, even if aggregated, have no monopoly, either of theatre holdings or of the national exhibition business 56

(2) The Government's aggregation of first-run theatres and the film rentals which they pay, is without support in law or in fact 59

(a) There is no legal precedent or justification for treating these five autonomous companies as a unit..... 59

(b) "Cross-licensing" is but an empty catchword—the Government's claim that the producer-exhibitor defendants do not compete with each other is not applicable to Loew's..... 62

(c) There is no pattern of conduct, on the part of the defendant Loew's in dealing with the other four producer-exhibitors, evidencing a plan among them to exchange first-run privileges 66

PAGE

(d) With the disproof of any basis for aggregating the first-run theatres of the five producer-exhibitors, any collective monopoly of distribution must likewise fall 68

POINT II—THE DISTRICT COURT DID NOT ERR IN DENYING DIVESTITURE 71

A. Absent Monopoly, Divestiture is Wholly Unwarranted 71

B. Divestiture Is No Remedy for the Illegalities Found 76

C. Prohibiting the Theatre of a Producer-Exhibitor from Exhibiting a Feature Distributed by Another Producer-Exhibitor is Divorcement by Indirection and Was Properly Denied. 79

POINT III—THE INJUNCTIVE RELIEF DECREED BY THE DISTRICT COURT IS ENTIRELY ADEQUATE TO ELIMINATE ANY ILLEGAL RESTRAINTS IN DISTRIBUTION OR EXHIBITION 86

A. Any Violation of the Sherman Act With Respect to Theatre Admission Prices Has Been Eliminated by the Judgment 86

B. Any Violation of the Sherman Act With Respect to Clearance Has Been Eliminated by the Judgment 90

C. Competitive Bidding and the Injunction Against Arbitrary Refusal to License the Run Demanded by Any Exhibitor Will Effectively Prevent any Violation of the Sherman Act With Respect to the Granting of Run 93

D. Any Violation of the Sherman Act With Respect to Theatre Operation has been Eliminated by the Judgment 108

PAGE

(1) "Pooling" agreements have been eliminated by the judgment 108

(2) "Joint Ownerships" have been eliminated by the judgment 109

(3) All trade practices wherein the defendants have been found to violate the Sherman Law as exhibitors have been eliminated by the prohibition against such practices on the part of distributors 111

ARGUMENT AS APPELLANT ON APPEAL NO. 80

POINT IV—THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN FINDING AND CONCLUDING THAT LOEW'S AND THE OTHER DEFENDANTS COMBINED AND CONSPIRED TO RESTRAIN TRADE IN DISTRIBUTION AND EXHIBITION OF MOTION PICTURES 113

POINT V—THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN IMPOSING A PROHIBITION UPON LOEW'S EXPANDING ITS THEATRE HOLDINGS 128

A. Loew's Exemplary Record in the Exhibition Field Warrants Particular Consideration 128

B. The Judgment Should Be Modified to Permit Loew's to Acquire Additional Theatres with Court Approval 131

POINT VI—THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN ENJOINING LOEW'S FROM OWNING ANY BENEFICIAL INTEREST IN A THEATRE WITH AN INDEPENDENT 135

POINT VII—THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN DECREEING THAT WHENEVER ANY CLEARANCE PROVISION IS ATTACKED AS NOT LEGAL UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THIS DECREE, THE BURDEN SHALL BE UPON THE DISTRIBUTOR TO SUSTAIN THE LEGALITY THEREOF 139

PAGE

POINT VIII—THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN ENJOINING LOEW'S FROM AGREEING WITH A LICENSEE THAT THE LATTER SHOULD CHARGE A SPECIFIED MINIMUM ADMISSION PRICE DURING THE EXHIBITION OF THE FEATURE LICENSED 140

POINT IX—THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN FAILING TO CONCLUDE THAT IT HAD POWER TO CONTINUE THE ARBITRATION SYSTEM CREATED BY THE CONSENT DECREE AND TO PROVIDE FOR THE ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES BETWEEN EXHIBITORS AND DEFENDANTS ARISING UNDER THE PRESENT JUDGMENT 142

CONCLUSION 143

TABLE OF CASES

Adamson v. Gilliland, 242 U. S. 350 70
Alabama Power Co. v. Ickes, 302 U. S. 464 70
Bigelow v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, 162 F. (2) 520 82
Chrysler Corporation v. U. S., 316 U. S. 556 142
French v. Gilson, 41 U. S. 327 117
General Pictures Co. v. Electric Co., 304 U. S. 175 70
Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386 62
International Salt Co. v. U. S. (No. 46, October Term, 1947) 85, 100
Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208 ..... 50, 51, 115
Lincoln v. French, 105 U. S. 614 117
National Labor Relations Board v. Knoxville Pub. Co., 124 F. (2) 875 139
National Labor Relations Board v. Whittier Kills Co., 123 F. (2) 725 139
Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. Chamberlain Adm., 288 U. S. 333 117
Reliance Life Ins. Co. v. Burgess, 112 F. (2) 725 (cert. den., 311 U. S. 699, rehearing den. 311 U. S. 730) 139

PAGE

Schine Chain Theatres v. U. S. (No. 10, October Term, 1947) 54
Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 73
Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163..... 62
United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. (2) 416 74
United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106. 74
United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 ..... 55, 63, 72, 73, 110, 133
United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255 29, 45, 46, 47, 49
United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265..... 115
United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319...72, 78
United States v. Radio Corp. of America, 46 F. Supp. 654 142
United States v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324 74
United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26.....45, 48, 74
United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106.....29, 45, 49, 50, 142
United States v. Trenton Potteries, 273 U. S. 392..... 115
United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218.....28, 29, 45, 49

OTHER AUTHORITIES

The Film Daily Year Book, 1945..... 31
The Film Daily Year Book, 1947..... 54,
T. N. E. C. Monograph No. 43, The Motion Picture Industry—A Pattern of Control 55

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1947

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant, v. PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al., Appellees.	No. 79
LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., et al., Appellants, v. THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee.	No. 80

DIRECT APPEALS FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF ON BEHALF OF APPELLEE-APPELLANT LOEW'S INCORPORATED

OPINION AND JUDGMENT BELOW

The opinion of the District Court is reported in 66 F. Supp. 323 (1946). The opinion and judgment are printed, commencing at R. 3504 and R. 3694, respectively.

JURISDICTION AND STATUTES INVOLVED

The judgment of the District Court was entered December 31, 1946 (R. 3694). The petition for appeal in No. 79 was filed February 18, 1947, and was granted by the District Court February 21, 1947 (R. 3720, 3725). The petition for appeal in No. 80 was filed in and granted by the District Court February 26, 1947 (R. 3726, 3737). Probable jurisdiction was noted by this court June 21, 1947 (R. 3840). The jurisdiction of this court is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 272; 15 U. S. C. § 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925 (43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. § 345).

The statute under which this case was prosecuted was the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (Sections 1, 2 and 4, Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended; 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2 and 4).

Also directly involved is the Copyright Act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. Part 1, pp. 1075-1088), as amended August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. Part 1, pp. 488-490), U. S. C. Title 17.

The pertinent provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and of the Copyright Act are set forth as Appendix I to this brief.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Action, Description of Loew's Incorporated, and the Proceedings Below.

Nature of the Action

This action was commenced July 20, 1938 in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. The original petition charged concerted monopolization of the domestic motion picture industry by eight of the principal companies therein. Five of these companies (Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner) were engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. Two of the eight companies (Columbia and Universal) were engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures, and United Artists was engaged solely in distribution.

In addition to injunctive prohibition against certain trade practices of the industry, the complaint demanded that Loew's and the other four defendants, engaged in production, distribution and exhibition, be permanently debarred from the exhibition field by divestiture of their theatres.

Description of Loew's Incorporated

Loew's Incorporated (a Delaware corporation) was organized in 1919 to carry on the vaudeville and motion picture enterprises, which the late Marcus Loew had previously established and developed. For more than 20 years the company has been engaged in the production and distribution of motion picture films, known as Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures. In addition, through the operation of theatres, it has engaged in the exhibition of its own pictures and those of other producers (for a brief history of Loew's, see R. 1838-9).

In both ownership and management Loew's is entirely free from any connection with any of the co-defendants or any form of control by any of them. None of these co-defendants owns any stock or any form of security in Loew's. There are no directors or officers in common. Loew's owns no stock or any other securities in any co-defendant; nor do any of Loew's officers or directors. All of this Government's counsel concedes.[1] The dissociation of Loew's from the co-defendants could not be more complete.

In producing Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures Loew's has its own actors, buys its own stage material, employs its own writers, directors and other needed operators. While from time to time it lends or borrows stars and stage accessories to or from other producers in the production colony, the District Court found that there exists "active competition" among all the defendants and others in the production of motion pictures (Find. 59; R. 3670).

Loew's distribution of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures is carried on by 32 branch offices or exchanges, which it maintains and operates separately and apart from any other defendant in this case. These exchanges are located in the more important cities throughout the United States and serve to distribute the prints of films for use in the theatres in the area served by each exchange. A feature picture is usually prepared in 300 to 350 positive prints, which are licensed to anywhere from 7,000 to 15,000 theatres (R. 415; Exh. L-4). In the season 1943-44, Loew's distributed 33 features,[2] amounting to approximately 180,000 transactions

---

[1] Government's counsel at R. 215-216:

> "* * * as between the eight groups of defendants, I think it is quite true that there are no common officers; there is no common stock control, although it may be, of course, that executives or officials of one or more of them hold some listed stock in the others." But as to those, "We do not attach any significance to them."

All emphasis in this brief has been supplied.

[2] Pursuant to arrangement between the parties, the 1943-44 season was taken as a typical one for the purpose of assembling pertinent statistical information such as the number of features which were carried out by distribution field forces costing Loew's an average of $115,000 per week (R. 437-444).

Loew's engages in exhibition of motion pictures to the extent of operating 131 theatres throughout the United States, where it shows films produced by itself and others (Exh. L-12).[1]

In no place where Loew's operates does it have a "closed town," or even a first-run monopoly. On the contrary, in every single city where it has a theatre there are other competing theatres on first-run as well as subsequent runs (Find. 149; R. 3689; Appendices II and III; Exh. L-15).

Loew's 131 theatres are located in 42 of the larger cities across the United States and represent 7/1000 of the 18,076 theatres operating in the United States on January 1, 1945 (Appendices II and III; Find. 145, R. 3688).

There is absolutely no evidence that the 131 theatres operated by Loew's were acquired in any other than a normal, lawfull manner or that they were acquired by purchase from a competitor, or that Loew's ever engaged in any predatory practice against any competitor, or even that any competitor of Loew's ever went out of business.

As long ago as 1932 Loew's was operating 122 theatres so that during the thirteen years preceding the hearings in this litigation the theatres operated by Loew's increased by only 9 (Exh. L-12). During this same period the total distributed by the defendants, film revenue, etc. Thus, all references in this brief to the amount of product used by a particular theatre, or licensed by a particular distributor, relate to this season.

---

[1] This does not include 11 theatres operated by Buffalo Theatres Inc., for which Loew's does the buying and booking of films. We do not regard these theatres as actual Loew-operated theatres, but, to avoid controversy, on all revenue and product charts introduced in evidence by Loew's these theatres were included.

theatres operating in the United States increased by 5,471 (Exh. L-12; cf. Find. 145, R. 3688), an increase of 600 to 1 of Loew's.

Loew's proprietary interest in theatres, either through ownership or leasehold, had a book value apportionable to Loew's interest of approximately $69,000,000 as of August 31, 1944 and an assessed valuation apportionable to Loew's interest of about $57,000,000 (R. 1839).

Proceedings Below

Loew's, along with the other defendants, filed answer to the Government's petition, denying the material allegations thereof, and the case came on for trial on June 1, 1940. Prior to the taking of any testimony, negotiations were begun to determine whether the case could be disposed of by consent decree. After several months negotiation, an agreement for a consent decree was reached, and on November 14, 1940, an amended and supplemental complaint was filed (R. 3137). Loew's as well as the other defendants again answered (R. 3217) and on November 20, 1940, the District Court entered a decree on consent of the Government and the defendants Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner. The defendants United Artists, Universal and Columbia did not join in the consent and were not subject to this decree.

By the consent decree each of the defendants mentioned undertook to discontinue certain trade practices, hereafter considered in detail, and for a period of three years agreed not to enter "upon a general program of expanding its theatre holdings" (R. 3387). At the same time, however, it was specifically provided that nothing in this consent decree should prevent any defendant "from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purpose of its business" (R. 3387). Each of these defendants also undertook to report immediately to the Department of Justice the acquisition by it of any additional theatre or theatres (R. 3386). The Government, on its part, undertook that for a period of three years it would not seek to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition (R. 3395).

In addition, the consent decree provided, as prayed in the amended and supplemental complaint, for the establishment of a nation-wide system of arbitration tribunals to deal with certain trade disputes inherent in distributing and exhibiting motion pictures (R. 3395 et seq.).

Finally, the District Court retained jurisdiction of the action for the purpose, among other things, of enabling any of the parties to apply to the court after three years for modification of its decree (R. 3400).

Such an application was filed by the Government August 7, 1944. It sought modification, among other things, of the matters made subject to arbitration by the consent decree (R. 3414), and for complete divorcement by each of the defendants Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner, of their exhibition business from their production and distribution business (R. 3418).

This application for modification was noticed for hearing on December 5, 1944, and after a series of conferences with the court, the date for hearing was set for October 8, 1945. Prior thereto on June 13, 1945, the Government filed an application, pursuant to the Expediting Act, 15 U. S. C. Section 28, for the appointment of a special three judge expediting court. Such court was duly constituted on June 16, 1945, with Augustus N. Hand, Circuit Judge, Henry W. Goddard and John Bright, District Judges. Hearings commenced on October 8, 1945 and continued through November 20, 1945.

The court rendered its opinion on June 11, 1946 (R. 3504) and its judgment and findings of fact and conclusions of law (together with a supplemental memorandum) on December 31, 1946 (R. 3694, 3659, and 3702). Thereafter certain of the defendants, including Loew's, moved to amend the judgment in several respects, and to amend one of the conclusions of law. This motion, except in a minor particular immaterial to this appeal, was denied by order entered February 11, 1947 (R. 3719).

It is from certain provisions of the judgment entered December 31, 1946, and the findings and conclusions, as well as the denial of the motion to amend, that the Government and the various defendants have appealed to this Court. On April 7, 1947, this Court granted a stay of certain provisions of the judgment of December 31, 1946, "pending the final disposition of the case by this court."

B. The Government's Contentions Below and the Judgment of the District Court with respect thereto.

The Government's Contentions Below and the Judgment of the District Court with Respect to Monopoly of Production.

The amended and supplemental complaint contains elaborate charges that Loew's and other defendants combined and conspired to unreasonably restrain and monopolize production of motion pictures, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (26 Stat. 209 (1890), as amended 50 Stat. 693 (1937), 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2; Appendix I).

More specifically, it was claimed that Loew's and other defendants loaned and exchanged production personnel and costly equipment on non-competitive terms and excluded independent producers from access to that personnel and property (R. 3184). At the trial the Government failed to substantiate these charges and finally on questioning by the court formally abandoned the charges as alleged (R. 1952-3).[1]

With regard to production the District Court made the following findings (R. 3670):

> "59. There exists active competition among the defendants and others in the production of motion pictures.
>
> 60. None of the defendants has monopolized or attempted to monopolize or contracted or combined or conspired to monopolize or to restrain trade or commerce in any part of the business of producing motion pictures."

In the judgment the District Court provided (Section I, 1; R. 3695):

> "The complaint is also dismissed as to all claims made against the remaining defendants herein based

---

[1] "Judge Goddard: Do you claim there is a monopoly in production? I don't think I understand your position.
Mr. Wright: I don't think we do.
Judge Goddard: I beg your pardon?
Mr. Wright: No, we do not. * * *" (R. 1952-3).
See also R. 384-389.

upon their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others."

The Government's Contentions Below with respect to MONOPOLY OF EXHIBITION AND DISTRIBUTION.

Motion pictures reach the public through successive exhibitions—the first exhibition of a picture in a particular area being known as the first-run, the next subsequent, the second-run, and so on (Find. 1, R. 3660-1). All feature motion pictures are licensed by the distributor to the theatre operator exhibiting them. Although the expression "selling a picture" is frequently used in distribution parlance, the transaction is always a license under copyright and not a sale (Find. 61; R. 3670). The film or print is physically returned to the distributor after each engagement (R. 415, 531). The contract whereby a distributor licenses a theatre to exhibit a picture on a particular run usually stipulates a time which must elapse before that feature may again be shown in the particular competitive area or in another specified competitive theatre. This agreed interval of time is known as clearance (Find. 1, R. 3660).

The Government charged in the lower court that Loew's and the other four distributors who own theatres—Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner—have a nation-wide monopoly of exhibition and distribution of motion pictures, which they have achieved and maintain by practices as to run, clearance and theatre admission prices, in violation of the Sherman Law.

The nation-wide monopoly of exhibition claimed by the Government is predicated on the fact that the number of first-run theatres operated by Fox, by Loew's, by Paramount, by RKO and by Warner, if aggregated, comprise 70% of the first-run theatres in major cities across the United States; i.e., the 92 cities with over 100,000 population (Find. 148; R. 3688).

The existence of the claimed monopoly of distribution is predicated upon the aggregating of the revenues that these five companies receive as distributors from the theatres of each of them as an exhibitor. Thus, when the film rental paid by Loew's theatres to Fox, to Loew's itself, to Paramount, to RKO and to Warner, as distributors, is aggregated, the five receive 71% of the total film rental paid by the Loew's theatres; and the same is true with respect to the theatres of each of the other four, but in increasing percentages, up to 81% (Find. 127; R. 3685). However, in making up the 71% received by the five from Loew's theatres, 47 of that 71% is what Loew's as a distributor itself received from its own theatres, only the balance of 24% going to the other four producer-exhibitors (Find. 135; R. 3687).

In justification of thus aggregating the defendants' theatres and thus aggregating their revenues, and treating these five companies collectively, the Government advanced the following contentions:

— Each of these five producer-exhibitors, in distributing its pictures has the first-run of those pictures in its own theatres, but in localities where it has no theatre, it licenses the first-run privilege to another producer-exhibitor. When the latter occurs, Government's counsel terms the license a cross-license or a diagonal-license, alleging that the producer-exhibitor has licensed another producer-exhibitor, rather than an independent exhibitor, pursuant to a nationwide scheme whereby the producer-exhibitor in turn will obtain first-run where it operates a theatre (Amended and Supplemental Complaint, Pars. 150 and 151; R. 3192; Government Brief in District Court, p. 20).

— In addition to having the first-run of their features in their own or in each other's theatres, the defendants, as distributors, according to Government's counsel, grant to those theatres excessive clearance or protection before the feature can next be exhibited in a competing theatre, thus impelling more of the theatre-going public to attend at the more profitable first-run. The distributor does this in return for similar treatment where it operates a first-run theatre (Amended and Supplemental Complaint, Pars. 125, 130, and 149(c); R. 3178, 3180 and 3186).

— It is the distributor's practice to include in license contracts a provision that the theatre exhibiting the feature will not charge less than a specified admission price during the exhibition of the feature licensed. According to Government's counsel, subsequent run exhibitors are thus prevented from reducing their admission prices, and the competition which they might otherwise give to the first-run theatre of a producer-exhibitor is also restricted (Amended and Supplemental Complaint, Pars. 130 and 149(d); R. 3183 and 3187).

In addition to the charges just outlined, upon which the Government predicated its right to aggregate the five defendants' theatres and revenues, counsel took the position at the hearings that clearance per se was unreasonably restrictive of competition and violated the Sherman Act (R. 2572, 2591-9). This was a position directly opposed to that which Government's counsel had taken at the time of the consent decree. That decree, by agreement of the Government and the five producer-exhibitors, provided (R. 3380):

> "It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures."

The Judgment Below with Respect to MONOPOLY OF EXHIBITION AND DISTRIBUTION.

The District Court refused to adopt the theory of Government's counsel that the five defendants Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner, as producers and as exhibitors have engaged in a mutual interchange or conditioning of first-run privileges. With this, the key to aggregation, gone, the charges of monopolization, built upon it, likewise had to go. And the lower court held (Opinion, R. 3553):

> "The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition."

Furthermore, the District Court did not accept the theory of Government's counsel that the defendant distributors had achieved a monopoly of distribution. Said the court (Opinion, R. 3554):

> "Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust > laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures."

In addition, the lower court refused to hold that clearance is illegal per se. On the contrary, it affirmatively found (R. 3674):

> "78. Clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. The practice is of proved utility in the motion picture industry and necessary for the reasonable conduct of the business."

However, the District Court did find that all eight of the defendants engaged in distribution, aided particularly by those five also engaged in exhibition, had combined and conspired by uniform action and acquiescence to create a rigid nation-wide system of runs, clearances and admission prices in violation of the Sherman Act (Finds. 81-84; R. 3674).

It found, in addition, that all eight distributors "by the fixing of minimum prices" to be charged in subsequent run theatres attempt to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible, also a violation of the Sherman Act. (Find. 72; R. 3672.)

To remedy the condition resulting from agreement as to minimum theatre admission prices, the court prohibited henceforth the inclusion in license agreements of any provision as to the minimum price which a theatre might charge (Judgment, II, 1; R. 3695).

To remedy the claim of excessive clearance, the lower court enjoined each of the eight defendants engaged in distribution from granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition and from granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in competition "in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted."[1] It was further provided that whenever any clearance is attacked as not legal under the provisions of the decree "the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof" (Judgment, II, 3, 4; R. 3695).

The District Court likewise took affirmative steps to eradicate any fixed condition as to run positions; that is, to put an end to the prior-run position which any theatre might possess by reason of conditions other than payment of highest film rental (e.g., favoring an "old customer" over a newcomer with a superior theatre, or favoring an "affiliated" theatre over that of an independent). The judgment prohibits each distributor from arbitrarily refusing the demand of any exhibitor, to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another competing exhibitor. The only exemption granted to a distributor is in the case of his own product in his own theatre (Judgment, II, 9; R. 3698). In addition, the judgment provides for picture by picture and theatre by theatre licensing, as well as a detailed procedure for so-called "competitive bidding" between competing exhibitors who may elect to use that procedure (Judgment, II, 8; R. 3696; see also Supplemental Memorandum, R. 3702).[2]

---

[1]Loew's has not appealed from the injunction against granting clearance between theatres not in substantial competition and from granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in competition "in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted" (Judgment, II, 4; R. 3695).

[2]Loew's has not appealed from either paragraph 8 or paragraph 9 of section II of the judgment.

The Government's Contentions Below and the Judgment of the District Court with Respect to BLOCK-BOOKING, MASTER AGREEMENTS, FRANCHISES, FORMULA DEALS and "POOLING" AGREEMENTS.

So far as block-booking,[1] franchises,[2] master agreements,[3] and formula deals[4] are concerned, the Government claimed and the District Court found that these methods of licensing by their nature unreasonably restrain trade. All four of these practices are prohibited henceforth by the judgment (Section II, 5, 6 and 7; R. 3696). With respect to formula deals the District Court found as to Loew's (R. 3675):

> "87. Loew's is not, and never has been, a party either as a distributor or as an exhibitor, to any 'formula deal' license agreements."

---

[1]The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period (Find. 1, R. 3659).

[2]A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of features released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement (Find. 1, R. 3660).

[3]A licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal", covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit (Find. 1, R. 3660).

[4]A licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross (Find. 1, R. 3660).

As these particular trade practices here mentioned have been relatively unimportant to Loew's distribution (see Finds. 90, 94; R. 3675, 3676), it has taken no appeal with regard to the prohibition against block-booking, franchises, master agreements or formula deals.

In addition to these trade practices, the Government attacked certain agreements known as "pooling agreements", which were made in limited instances by the exhibitor defendants with each other or with an independent, by which given theatres in a particular city normally in competition with each other, were operated as a unit, or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors. These agreements also provided for division of profits of the "pooled" theatres among the exhibitors according to preagreed percentages or otherwise (Find. 112, R. 3682).

The District Court found the "pooling agreements" to be illegal (Concl. of Law, No. 9 (a); R. 3693) and decreed the dissolution of all such agreements by not later than June 30, 1947 (Judgment, III (2), R. 3698; IX, R. 3701).

The defendant Loew's has carried out the dissolution of the only two pooling agreements to which it was a party at the time of the judgment, and has taken no appeal with regard to the provision of the judgment prohibiting pooling agreements.

The Government's Contentions Below with Respect to THEATRE DIVESTITURE.

At the time of the hearings in the District Court, the Government demanded divorcement of theatre operation from production and distribution on three grounds:

First, each of the defendants engaged in production and distribution, who also operates theatres, is individually an illegal combination, that can only be eliminated by divorcement.

Second, the five defendants, engaged in production and distribution, who also operate theatres, have collectively achieved a monopoly of exhibition, that can only be eliminated by divorcement.

Third, the illegal trade practices engaged in by the defendants can only be remedied by divorcement.

The Judgment Below with Respect to THEATRE DIVESTITURE.

The District Court denied divorcement of exhibition from distribution and production.

As to the first ground advanced by Government's counsel (i.e. that each of the producer-exhibitors, individually considered, is an illegal combination) the court stated (Opinion, R. 3553-4):

> "Moreover, there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416 (C. C. A. 2)."
>
> * * * * *
>
> "Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, and it takes greater proof than that each of them possessed great financial strength, many theatres, and exhibited the greater number of first-runs to deprive it of the ordinary rights of ownership."

As to the second ground (i.e., that the five defendants, collectively, have achieved a monopoly of exhibition that can only be eliminated by divorcement) the District Court held that these five defendants could not be "treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition" (Opinion, R. 3554).

As to the third ground (i.e., that divorcement is the only remedy for the illegal trade practices claimed by the Government), the District Court found (R. 3690):

> "154. The illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited.
>
> * * * * *
>
> "156. Total divestiture would not remedy the price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and the other practices which have been found unreasonably to restrict competition."

While the District Court refused divorcement as demanded by the Government, it did strike down certain forms of the defendants' interests in theatres as violative of the Sherman Law. The judgment of the District Court (Section III (5); R. 3699) requires that all defendants put an end to all joint interests in theatres with either a defendant or an independent, on the theory that such joint interests eliminate putative competition between the defendant and the other operator who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently[1] (R. 3556).

The District Court in its opinion (R. 3562) took the position that each of the exhibitor-defendants should be prohibited from expanding its theatre holdings, except "to protect its investment, or in order to enter a competitive field." In the latter case, the acquisition was to be approved by the court after due application. Although no further testimony or proof of any kind was thereafter taken, the judgment entered by the court imposed an absolute prohibition against any further growth without either of these exceptions previously authorized (Judgment, III, (6); R. 3698, 3700).

The Government's Contention Below and the Judgment of the District Court with Respect to a Ban on Producer-Exhibitors' Licensing Each Other's Product.

After the District Court had rendered its opinion, counsel for the Government made formal demand for the first time for a prohibition against a producer-exhibitor's licensing for exhibition in its theatre the product of another producer-exhibitor (cf. R. 2568-70). This formal demand was contained in a proposed judgment submitted by counsel for the Government, which judgment asked that the producer-exhibitor defendants be enjoined and restrained (R. 3601):

[1]Interests of less than 5% and more than 95% were not condemned—the joint character of the ownership being so small as to be inconsequential (R. 3549).

> "8. From licensing for exhibition in any theatre owned or controlled by it films distributed or produced by another defendant named in this section which is not affiliated with it, for a period commencing one year after the entry of this decree and continuing for a period of not less than ten years. At the conclusion of said period, any party may move to modify this provision in any manner which the facts then appearing to the Court may warrant."

The District Court declined to grant this relief.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS, STATEMENT OF ISSUES, AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

There are six appeals. Loew's is a party only to the Government's Appeal, No. 79, as appellee, and to No. 80 in which Loew's is one of four appellants. This brief presents Loew's position on these two appeals in the order in which the appeals were filed. Accordingly, Loew's argument as appellee precedes its argument as appellant.

On Appeal No. 79 the Government, as appellant, by its assignments of errors (R. 3721, et seq.), raises "four main questions", which its Statement as to Jurisdiction states as follows:

"First, accepting the expediting court's findings as to the extent and nature of the violations involved in their entirety, it erred as a matter of law in failing to enter a judgment which dealt adequately with these violations.

Second, the court erred as a matter of law in concluding that the major defendants [Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner] had not actually achieved a monopoly in exhibition, either singly or collectively and that all of the defendants had not actually collectively achieved a monopoly of distribution, in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

Third, the court erred as a matter of law in concluding that any of the defendants may make a valid clearance agreement for the purpose of protecting any exhibitor from competition.

Fourth, the court upon proper findings as to the legal consequences of the defendants' violations, should have ordered the ultimate divorcement of the major defendants' theatre holdings from their distribution and production activities and should have restrained them from licensing films for exhibition in each other's theatres while such relief is being effectuated. It should also have enjoined all of the defendants from continuing to make clearance agreements."

Points I, II and III of this brief present Loew's response to these contentions of the Government. Thus, Point I deals with the Government's claim that the court below should have found that the defendants had achieved a monopoly of exhibition and distribution. Point II presents Loew's position with respect to the Government's demand for divestiture of the defendants' theatre properties and exhibition business and Loew's position as to the Government's demand that pending divorcement each of the defendants, Fox, Paramount, Loew's, RKO and Warner, be prohibited from licensing its features to a theatre which is owned or operated by any of the other defendants. Point III deals with the adequacy of the relief decree by the District Court, including its upholding the legality of clearance.

These three points presented by Loew's, as appellee, will be followed immediately by Loew's position as appellant on Appeal No. 80. On Loew's appeal it will present six points which, with the assignments of errors to be urged, are:

IV. The District Court erred in finding and concluding that Loew's and the other defendants combined and conspired to restrain trade in distribution and exhibition of motion pictures (Assignments Nos. 3-13, 15-18, 20-24, 32 and 36-39; R. 3728-33, 3735-6).

V. The District Court erred in imposing a prohibition upon Loew's expanding its theatre holdings (Assignments Nos. 30, 31 and 33; R. 3735).

VI. The District Court erred in enjoining Loew's from owning any beneficial interest in a theatre with an independent (Assignments Nos. 25-29; R. 3733-4).

VII. The District Court erred in decreeing that whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof (Assignment No. 19; R. 3732).

VIII. The District Court erred in enjoining Loew's from agreeing with a licensee that the latter should charge a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the feature licensed (Assignments Nos. 1 2 and 14; R. 2728, 2731).

IX. The District Court erred in failing to conclude that it had power to continue the arbitration system created by the consent decree and to provide for the arbitration of disputes between exhibitors and defendants arising under the present judgment (Assignments Nos. 34 and 35; R. 3736).

Note: The foregoing twenty-three pages of Loew's brief together with its appellant's points numbers IV-IX, were served on Government's counsel on January 16, 1948. On that occasion, Government's counsel in turn served a draft of its appellant's brief upon counsel for Loew's. We thus learned for the first time that the Government had abandoned and is not arguing the "third" of its "four main questions" just referred to; to wit, the claim that > "the court erred as a matter of law in concluding that any of the defendants may make a valid clearance agreement for the purpose of protecting any exhibitor from competition."

As proof of the Government's abandonment of this "main" question we respectfully refer the Court to the Government's Specification of Errors to be Urged (brief, p. 46) which omits its assignment's numbers 4, 14 and 15 (R. 3721-2) directed to legality of clearance.

In view of the Government's abandonment of this point, Loew's, contrary to our previous statement at pages 22-23, will not present argument sustaining the District Court's holding that clearance is legal per se.

ARGUMENT AS APPELLEE ON APPEAL NO. 79

Point I.

THE DISTRICT COURT DID NOT ERR IN REFUSING TO CONCLUDE THAT LOEW'S INDIVIDUALLY OR COLLECTIVELY WITH THE OTHER PRODUCER-EXHIBITORS HAD A MONOPOLY OF EXHIBITION OR DISTRIBUTION OF MOTION PICTURES.

Introduction

In the District Court, in asking for a nationwide decree of divorcement against five of the principal companies in an industry (each concededly autonomous as to stock ownership, directors and officers[1]), the Government proceeded upon the theory that these five companies could be treated collectively and their separate theatre holdings aggregated so as to establish a nationwide monopoly of the exhibition business. Indeed, proof was not offered to establish illegal monopoly in any particular locality or localities.[2]

---

[1]R. 215-216.

[2]The District Court held (R. 3554, 3556):

> "If in certain localities there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from 'inherent vice' on the part of these defendants.
>
> * * * * *
>
> There is no evidence that in a city such as Cincinnati, in which a major defendant owns all of the first-run theatres, other exhibitors, affiliated or unaffiliated, have been

Notwithstanding their endeavor in the District Court to establish a collective monopoly, Government's counsel frankly conceded that the following facts had been established:

> "1. Individually considered, each distributor defendant directly controls only a fraction of the entire domestic distribution business.
>
> 2. Individually considered, each producer-exhibitor directly controls only a fraction of the entire domestic exhibition business and the local theatre situations in which their individual control is 100% are few in number when compared to the total domestic theatre market."[1]
>
> (Government's brief in the District Court, p. 2)

In view of these facts, for the Government to have proven a collective monopoly, an obvious sine qua non was to establish that these concededly autonomous companies could be treated collectively and their separate theatre holdings aggregated to establish a national monopoly.

But the District Court properly held that "The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition," and that "there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; prevented from also owning theatres for exhibition on first-run and there consequently is no monopoly in the legal sense, see United States v. Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, and no reason for directing a divestiture."

---

[1] So far as Loew's is concerned, in no place where it operates does it operate all the first-run theatres (Appendices II and III).

United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. (2d) 416 (C. C. A. 2)." (Opinion, R. 3553)

In view of the foregoing and in view of the Court's further conclusion that the illegalities which it found were in trade practices and not in who owned the theatres concerned (Find. 154; R. 3690), it properly declined the divorcement sought by Government's counsel (Opinion, R. 3559).

In their present brief before this Court, Government's counsel have pursued a subtle but even more fallacious approach.

Once again, from the outset the Government's brief abounds with statistics of the combined theatre holdings and combined revenues of the five separate companies, without the establishment of the preliminary right to treat these separate companies collectively. And at page 11 of their brief Government's counsel state that they "challenge the court's failure to conclude that the defendants, both individually and collectively, had monopolized important segments of the motion picture industry."

But here, however, the similarity to the Government's District Court approach ceases.

While the Government at various places prior to the "ARGUMENT" in its brief mentions its disagreement with the failure of the lower court to find a collective monopoly, in its "ARGUMENT" it completely abandons this theory. No longer do Government counsel argue for the existence of collective monopoly. Instead, they now bottom their entire case for monopoly on a theory that each of the five separate producer-exhibitor companies, individually considered, is in and of itself a monopoly requiring dissolution to meet the requirements of the Sherman Act.[1]

As a consequence, the collective statistics, having no other purpose than such opprobrious effect as they may create, are neither validly sustained in the evidence nor relevant to the question at issue.

As proof of this complete change in theory by the Government, we point to the only headnote and the only argument in the Government's brief on the subject of monopoly warranting divestiture. The headnote reads as follows (Government's brief p. 90):

> "A. EACH INTEGRATED VERTICAL COMBINATION BETWEEN A MAJOR DEFENDANT'S PRODUCING AND DISTRIBUTING BUSINESS AND ITS AFFILIATED THEATRES CONSTITUTES A RESTRAINT AND A MONOPOLIZATION OF AN APPRECIABLE SEGMENT OF TRADE WHICH CAN BE REMEDIED ONLY BY DIVORCEMENT."

It would appear that this switching of horses in midstream by the Government from a theory of "collective monopoly" by five separate companies to one of "individual monopolization" by each of them has been inspired by a last-minute, but erroneous reliance upon United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, which was decided by this Court after the decision of the instant case by the lower court.

This is further demonstrated by the fact that two of the other three cases primarily relied upon by the Government in support of this new theory, United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255, now cited or quoted from at pp. 50, 92, 93, 95, 105 and 106 of the Government's brief and U. S. v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, now cited or quoted from at pp. 51, 109, 111, 114 and 133 of the Government's brief, were not even referred to or cited in the brief of the Government before the District Court.

---

[1] In the District Court the Government did make the argument that "each of the producer-exhibitor defendants is a combination which violates the Sherman Act per se." However, the entire basis of that argument was one of inter-defendant licensing and not that each integrated unit by its relations intra se was violating the act. Indeed, Government's counsel took the opposite position at R. 1945.

Particularly in view of this new approach, which the Government has taken in this Court, against the defendants, qua individuals, the defendant Loew's is entitled to be dealt with on its own individual record and not that of other defendants before this Court.

The Government cannot establish a monopoly against the defendant Loew's for four reasons:

A. Loew's, individually, has no monopoly of theatre holdings or of first-run exhibition, either locally or nationally.

B. Loew's, individually, has no monopoly of distribution.

C. Neither the Yellow Cab, Lehigh, Reading, Swift nor any other case, supports the Government's theory that Loew's integrated business as a producer, distributor and exhibitor constitutes restraint and monopolization.

D. Loew's cannot be treated collectively, with Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner to establish a monopoly of exhibition or distribution.

A. Loew's, Individually, Has No Monopoly of Exhibition, Nationally or Locally.

(1) Loew's has no monopoly in terms of theatre holdings.

The District Court made the following finding (R. 3684):

> "119. The present theatre holdings of the five defendant-exhibitors Paramount, Loew's, Fox, RKO and Warner, aggregate little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States, and by such theatre holdings alone the defendants do not and cannot collectively or individually, have a monopoly of exhibition."

The Government takes issue with this finding by its Assignment of Error No. 20, reading as follows (R. 3723):

> "20. The Court erred in concluding that the defendants' theatre holdings are not large enough to permit them, individually or collectively, to have a monopoly of exhibition."

Loew's Exhibit L-2 establishes that on January 1, 1945, there were 18,076 motion picture theatres in operation in the United States. The lower court so found (Find. No. 145, R. 3688). Of this number, Loew's was operating 131 at the time of the hearings, which is 7/1,000 of the total theatres operating in the country (Exh. L-12; cf. Find. No. 118; R. 3684; Appendix to Government Brief in this Court, p. 255).

The location of every Loew-operated theatre throughout the country, city by city, as well as the total theatres operating in those cities, are set forth in the table which follows:

City	Total Operating Theatres[1]	Number of Loew's Operated Theatres[2]
Akron, Ohio	34	1
Atlanta, Ga.	42	1
Baltimore, Md.	108	3
Boston, Mass.	34[3]	2
Bridgeport, Conn.	22	4
Canton, Ohio	10	1
Cleveland, Ohio	108	3
Columbus, Ohio	51	2
Dayton, Ohio	27	1
Evansville, Ind.	13	2
Harrisburg, Pa.	14	1
Hartford, Conn.	17	2
Houston, Tex.	47	1
Indianapolis, Ind.	56	1
Jersey City, N. J.	17	2
Kansas City, Mo.	52	1
Louisville, Ky.	36	1
Memphis, Tenn.	35	2
Meriden, Conn.	3	2
Nashville, Tenn.	20	1

[1]Source: Film Daily Year Book, (1945) pp. 826-932, except as to Baltimore, Md., Kansas City, Mo., New York, N. Y., New Orleans, La., Pittsburgh, Pa., St. Louis, Mo., and Washington, D. C., which are from Exhibit L-2.

[2]Source: Appendices II and III of this Brief, Exhibit L-2, Appendix to Government Brief in this Court, p. 255.

[3]Does not include metropolitan area, such as Brookline, Cambridge, etc.

City	Total Operating Theatres	Number of Loew's Operated Theatres
Newark, N. J.	41	1
New Haven, Conn.	23	3
New Orleans, La.	61	1
New York, N. Y. (Metropolitan area)	658	69
Norfolk, Va.	29	1
Norwich, Conn.	3	1
Pittsburgh, Pa.	82	1
Providence, R. I.	17	1
Reading, Pa.	10	1
Richmond, Va.	21	1
Rochester, N. Y.	32	1
St. Louis, Mo.	95	2
Springfield, Mass.	14	1
Syracuse, N. Y.	26	2
Toledo, Ohio	32	2
Washington, D. C.	64	3
Waterbury, Conn.	11	2
Wilmington, Del.	13	1
Worcester, Mass.	11	2
Yonkers, N. Y.	9	1
TOTAL ALL CITIES WHERE LOEW'S OPERATES	1,998	131 (6.6%)[1]

[1]This does not include 11 theatres operated by Buffalo Theatres Inc. (10 in Buffalo and 1 in Niagara Falls), for which Loew's did the buying and booking of films. We do not regard these theatres as actual Loew-operated theatres, but, to avoid controversy, on all revenue and product charts introduced in evidence by Loew's these theatres were included. In addition, in considering Loew's first-run situations across the country, again to avoid controversy, we have included the cities of Buffalo, New York, and Niagara Falls, New York, which are not included in the foregoing list for the reason stated. This brings the total cities to 42 as contrasted to the 40 listed here.

Summary by States

State	Total All Theatres Operating In State[1]	Number of Loew's-Operated Theatres[2]
Connecticut	196	14
Delaware	35	1
Georgia	358	1
Indiana	441	3
Kentucky	279	1
Louisiana	347	1
Maryland	238	3
Massachusetts	387	5
Missouri	575	3
New Jersey	390	3
New York	1,279	73
Ohio	910	10
Pennsylvania	1,186	3
Rhode Island	62	1
Tennessee	295	3
Texas	1,218	1
Virginia	260	2
Washington, D. C.	64	3
TOTAL ALL STATES WHERE LOEW'S OPERATES	8,520	131 (1.5%)

The foregoing tables establish three facts of decisive significance with respect to Loew's theatre operations.

First, Loew's has no "closed town," i.e. in no city where Loew's operates does it operate all of the theatres in that city;

Second, in each state where it operates it operates an infinitesimal part of the total operated theatres in that state, and

[1]Source: Exhibit L-2.
[2]Source: Summary of preceding table.

Third, in each particular locality where Loew's operates, Loew's theatres are but a fraction of the total theatres operating there.

It is to be noted that of the total number of 69 theatres operated by Loew's in the New York metropolitan area (which represent but 1/10th of the total theatres operating there), two are first-run Broadway theatres, the Capitol and the Criterion facing the competition of eight independent first-run theatres—Radio City Music Hall, Astor, Rialto, Gotham, Republic, Victoria and Ambassador (Appendix II of this brief, p. xii).

Additional first-run competition in the Broadway area is provided by the Roxy, operated by Fox, the Paramount, operated by Paramount, the Hollywood and Strand by Warner, and the Palace by RKO (Appendix II of this brief, p. xii).

The remaining 67 of Loew's theatres in the metropolitan area of New York are operated on subsequent run. That each of them meets with the severest competition is illustrated not only by the maps of the five boroughs of New York (Exh. L-15), which show every Loew theatre closely surrounded by at least three or four other theatres, but by the other very substantial circuits operating on subsequent run in this area. Those circuits, as set forth in Exhibit L-15a, are:

Circuit	Number of Theatres Within Five Boroughs of Greater New York	Number of Theatres Outside the Five Boroughs of Greater New York	Total Number of Theatres
BRANDT	79	41	120
RANDFORCE	44	None	44
SKOURAS	27	36	63
R. K. O.	34	21	55
ISLAND	28	24	52
INTERBORO	29	7	36
CENTURY	21	15	36
TOTALS	262	144	406

That Loew's has not indicated even a tendency to monopolize exhibition in terms of theatre holdings, is conclusively demonstrated by the very limited increase in the number of its theatres over the past 13 years.

From January 1, 1932 to the date when these hearings commenced in 1945, the total theatres operated by Loew's increased by only 9, from 122 to 131. During the same period, the total theatres operating in the United States expanded by 5,471, from 12,605 to 18,076.

This, we submit, establishes beyond question that Loew's has not used its theatres (nor, indeed, its position as a producer and distributor of films) to expand its theatre position to the exclusion of other operators. Loew's Exhibit L-12 sets forth in graphic form the increase in total theatres in operation in the United States for the period from 1932 to 1945 and the increase in the total theatres operated by Loew's during the same period. The respective figures are set forth below:

Jan. 1	Total Theatres	Loew's Theatres
		131*
1945	18,076	132
1944	17,919	133
1943	17,728	131
1942	17,919	126
1941	17,541	127
1940	17,003	126
1939	15,701	126
1938	16,251	126
1937	16,055	123
1936	14,161	124
1935	13,386	126
1932	12,605	122
Gross Increase	5,471	9

*Oct. 1, 1945.

On such a record, we submit, it borders on the absurd to assert that Loew's individually, has monopolized, or has power to monopolize either national or local exhibition.

(2) Loew's has no "first-run" monopoly in any city where it operates.

The Government's Assignment of Error No. 2 reads as follows (R. 3721):

> "2. The Court erred in concluding that the major defendants had not actually achieved a monopoly in exhibition, either singly or collectively."

In the court below the Government based its claim that the defendants, "singly", have achieved a monopoly of exhibition on the ground that each of them enjoys a monopoly of first-run exhibition in the larger cities across the country where they respectively operate theatres. The plaintiff's contention so far as Loew's is concerned, is conclusively rebutted by the record.

The District Court found (R. 3689):

> "149. Loew's operates first-run theatres in 36 of the 92 cities in the United States with more than 100,000 population; in every one of these 36 cities, there are other 'first-run' theatres exhibiting the features of one or more of the other defendant distributors; in 21 of these 36, one or more of the other first-run theatres are operated by independents."

The District Court, therefore, affirmatively found that in not one of these cities of over 100,000 population where Loew's operates does it have a monopoly of first-run exhibition. On the contrary, in every one of them there are other competing first-run theatres and in the great majority of them (21) one or more of these first-run houses are independents.

As a basis for this Finding No. 149, defendant Loew's tendered evidence as to the detailed conditions in each of the 36 cities of over 100,000 population where it operates first-run theatres. This information has been summarized with respect to each of the cities and is included in Appendix II to this brief. The cities are listed in alphabetic order but to make clear the significant facts with regard to each of these local situations, we include as illustrative the first in the alphabet, which is Akron Ohio. Appendix II discloses the following with respect to this city:

AKRON, OHIO

Theatre1	Capacity1	Operator1	Affiliation2	Product3
Colonial	1750	Fiber & Shea	Independent	(Fox (RKO ½
Strand	1160	Warner Bros.	War	War
Palace	2083	Katz & Chatkin	Independent	(Uni (Par ½ (RKO ½ (Col
Loew's	2986			Loew's 29 UA 19 Par 16

Abbreviations

Loew's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer...Loew's
20th Cent. Fox .....Fox
Paramount .....Par
RKO .....RKO
Warner Bros .....War
Columbia .....Col
Universal .....Uni
United Artists .....UA

Sources

1—Exh. L-13, L-17, 48
2—Exh. 156-163, 359-360
3—Exh. L-17, 44, 58, 84, 95, 129, 145, 147, 349 (Products listed are limited to those of 8 defendants)

In connection with Akron, Ohio, we call particular attention to two facts: First, Loew's clearly has no monopoly of first-run exhibition. There are two independent first-run theatres and another smaller theatre operated by Warner, not to mention 29 additional theatres operating on subsequent run (p. 31 of this brief). Second, although Loew's has outstandingly the largest theatre, it certainly has no monopoly of the exhibition of the features distributed by the other seven defendants. In the 1943-44 season, the Loew's theatre exhibited 29 of its own pictures and 19 of United Artists' (a distributor which owns no theatres) and 16 pictures of Paramount. The Palace, one of the independent theatres, had all of the product of Universal, all of Columbia, one-half of RKO and one-half of Paramount. The other independent theatre, The Colonial, had all the product of Fox, and one-half of RKO.

How unjust and unwarranted it would be to prohibit the producer Loew's and the producer Warner from exhibiting in Akron, Ohio, on any theory that they have a monopoly of first-run exhibition in this local situation. We point this out simply to demonstrate that the Government's technique of lumping nation-wide statistics as to first-run exhibition and demanding thereupon a segregation of production and exhibition is wholly unwarranted when examined in the light of local situations and specific defendants.

An examination of the balance of the 36 cities where Loew's operates first-run theatres, all set forth in Appendix II, will disclose that Loew's has no first-run monopoly in any city where it operates. Indeed, in virtually every one of these 36 cities, Loew's first-run theatres represent but a fraction of the first-run theatres competing in those cities.

In addition to the 36 cities with over 100,000 population, Loew's operates first-run theatres in 6 cities of less than 100,000 population bringing the total to 42. These cities of less than 100,000 are Evansville, Ind., Harrisburg, Pa., Meriden, Conn., Niagara Falls, N. Y., Norwich, Conn., and Waterbury, Conn. In every one of the 6 cities with less than 100,000 population, Loew's has competition on first-run, similar to that in the 36 just described (see Appendix III to this brief).

On pages 21 and 55 of its brief, the Government argues that in the cities of between 25,000 and 100,000 population, the producer-exhibitor defendants own interests in 577 of a total of 978 first-run theatres; in addition, that in 135 such cities, the affiliated first-run theatres played all of the product of the eight defendants. Loew's operates in only six cities of less than 100,000 population (Appendix III to this brief). Each such city is in the category of between 25,000 and 100,000 population. The theatres operated by Loew's in these six cities are a total of 9 (Appendix III of this brief). Thus, Loew's operates only 9 theatres of the 577. In not one of these six cities does Loew's have the product of all eight distributor defendants. (Appendix III of this brief). Thus the Government's charge as to these 135 cities is in no way applicable to Loew's.

The Government also asserts at page 21 of its brief:

> "And in at least 300 additional towns, most of them with populations under 25,000, an operator affiliated with one of the major defendants has all of the theatres in the town (Exs. 371, 397; R. 359-370, 2166)."

Loew's does not operate a single theatre in any such town.

(3) Loew's first-run theatres do not monopolize the available film supply.

We have shown that in the case of Akron, Ohio, Loew's had in addition to its own, the product of United Artists and one-half the season's product of Paramount and that the two independent first-run theatres, The Palace and The Colonial had between them all of the product of Fox, all of RKO, all of Columbia, all of Universal and one-half of Paramount. Loew's was certainly not monopolizing available film supply. The fact is, that Loew's first-run theatres across the country use a relatively small portion of the other four producer-exhibitors' product. In this regard the District Court found (R. 3686):

> "131. In 21 of the 36 out of the 92 cities where Loew's operates theatres none of the other four producer-exhibitors licensed its features in the 1943-44 season for first-run exhibition in a Loew's theatre, to the extent of more than three features, the Loew's theatres' first-run exhibition being otherwise limited to its own features and those of non theatre-owning producers."

In the remaining 15 of the 92 cities where Loew's operates theatres, there are 5 in which Loew's used the product of only one other producer-exhibitor, 7 where it used the product of two, and only 3 where it used the product of three other producer-exhibitors. In no place does Loew's have the product of all four other producer-exhibitors (Appendix II to this brief).

The fact that Loew's did not exclude independent first-run theatre operators from the use of the majors' product is conclusively demonstrated by the situation in Indianapolis, Louisville, St. Louis and Harrisburg. In those cities Loew's operates the only affiliated first-run theatres in the city, all competing first-run theatres being independent. In not one of these cities did Loew's have the product of any one of the other four producer-exhibitors. Instead, in each place all four, Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner, licensed the independent first-run theatres to the exclusion of Loew's (Appendices II and III of this brief).

B. Loew's, Individually, Has No Monopoly of Distribution.

The District Court made the following finding with respect to distribution (R. 3677):

> "99. During the 1943-44 season, the number of features distributed by eight distributor-defendants and the three other national distributors were as follows:

Distributor-defendants	No. of Films	Percentage of Total: With Westerns Included	Percentage of Total: With Westerns Excluded
Fox	33	8.31%	9.85%
Loew's	33	8.31%	9.85%
Paramount	31	7.81%	9.25%
RKO	38	9.57%	11.34%
Warner	19	4.79%	5.67%
Columbia	41	10.32%	12.24%
United Artists	16	4.04%	4.78%
Universal	49	12.34%	14.63%
Sub-total	260
Other National Distributors
Republic (29 features, 30 Westerns)		14.86%	8.66%
Monogram (26 features, 16 Westerns)		10.58%	7.76%
PRC (20 features, 16 Westerns)		9.07%	5.97%
		100%	100%
Sub-Total.. 137	397
Total without Westerns...	335"

It is clear from the foregoing that at the maximum Loew's distributes but 9.85% of the total pictures distributed in the United States. The record not only negatives monopolization of distribution in terms of number of features distributed, but it is also wholly void of any indication that any of the distributors, including Loew's, has used its power either as a producer, as a distributor, or as an exhibitor, to exclude others from the distribution field.

Government's counsel conceded (R. 387):

> "But I would concede that the evidence you have before you does not show that any particular independent producer who wanted to make a picture could not get it released by one of these distributors."

We respectfully submit that it is idle to talk about exclusion in the distribution field, where just as in the production field, there is absolutely no evidence that anyone who wishes to spend the money on distribution facilities, cannot enter upon the business of "selling" motion pictures to the 18,076 theatres operating in the United States today (Ex. L-2). In view of this lack of proof, the lower court was altogether warranted in holding (Opinion, R. 3554):

> "Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures."

C. Neither the Lehigh, Reading, Yellow Cab, Swift nor any Other Case Supports the Government's Theory that Loew's Individual Business as Producer, Distributor and Exhibitor Constitutes a Restraint and Monopolization.

(1) These authorities do not support the Government's legal theory.

The District Court found "active competition" in the production of motion pictures.[1]

We have demonstrated that the District Court's findings as to the competitive character of Loew's participation in both national and local exhibition are amply supported by the proof.

In distribution Loew's participates to the extent of distributing less than 1/10 of the pictures distributed in the United States in competition with all other distributors in the industry and the Court so held.[2]

Notwithstanding the competition with which Loew's is faced in each phase of its business, Government's counsel advance the theory that, individually considered, Loew's integrated business as producer-distributor-exhibitor constitutes a restraint and monopolization requiring divorcement.

Thus at pages 90-91, the Government's brief argues:

> "We contend that each vertical affiliation between a major distributor and its theatres necessarily results in a continuing restraint and monopolization with respect to that important segment of trade represented by the pictures it distributes to its own theatres.

---

[1]Finding No. 59; R. 3670. While the Government assigned error to this finding (No. 12; R. 3722) it has abandoned and is not urging this error in argument (Gov't Brief, pp. 46-53).

[2]Opinion, R. 3554.

* * * * * *

"It is clear, * * *, that such integrations were in no sense an effort to meet an expanding business demand resulting from superior skill in film production or distribution. They were in each case a deliberate creation of a market control which would assure them of retail outlets regardless of the merits of their product."

Further explaining their theory in this regard, Government's counsel argue, pp. 91-92:

"Each vertical relationship thus has two serious trade-restraining consequences. First, to the extent that the motion picture requirements of each group of affiliated theatres are satisfied by the pictures of its distributor all other distributors are excluded from that important segment of the market. Second, wherever a distributor has theatres, the other exhibitors are excluded from the opportunity of licensing the exclusive runs reserved for the distributor's own theatres."

In furtherance of its contention the Government's brief (p. 96) points out that during the 1943-'44 season Loew's distributed 33 out of a total of 260 pictures distributed by the defendants, and a total of 335 distributed by all national distributors, and in addition that Loew's had theatre interests in "135" theatres, citing Findings 99 and 118 (R. 3677, 3684). From these facts the Government concludes that "each vertical relationship results in a restraint and a monopolization of an 'appreciable segment' of the market" (Gov't brief, p. 96).

We do not question that Loew's participation in distribution and exhibition represents "an appreciable segment of the market." However, we do challenge the Government's theory that possession of such an appreciable segment by an integrated business per se establishes restraint and monopolization. Market control—not merely possession of an appreciable segment of the market—is the key to illegality. And market control can be considered only in relation to a particular market, or of course the national market. An integrated enterprise which acquires market control with a deliberate, calculated scheme to crush competition undoubtedly constitutes illegal monopolization. But no such case exists as to Loew's.

In support of its theory the Government relies primarily upon four cases: United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255, United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, and United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106.

None of these cases support counsel's theory.

The Lehigh, Reading and Yellow Cab cases stand for or recognize the proposition that vertical integration intentionally created to obtain market control constitutes an illegal restraint and, where market control is obtained, monopolization.

The basic fallacy in the Government's application of this proposition to the case at bar is in the meaning which its counsel assign to "market control".

Obviously, if a manufacturer of shoes acquires one of five retail shoe stores in a community, that manufacturer is not thereby acquiring market control, notwithstanding that all other manufacturers are precluded from selling its shoes to that store, notwithstanding that the manufacturer thus acquires a retail outlet regardless of the merit of its product, and notwithstanding that other shoe stores in the community are excluded from handling the manufacturer's product. Nor would market control result if this shoe manufacturer acquired in the course of normal expansion one shoe store in every one of a hundred similar communities where there were competing shoe stores. This is so, even though an appreciable segment of the shoe market is involved in the business of a hundred shoe stores.

On the other hand, if the same manufacturer bought up all or practically all of the retail outlets in the single community first mentioned, with the deliberate calculated purpose of eliminating its competition in that community, there would be the type of market control contemplated in the authorities erroneously relied upon by the Government.

In other words, when these authorities use the term "market control", they always have in mind a local market in which the defendant is operating, or of course a national market, and not that market represented by the defendant's own business. Were this not so, any integrated enterprise would be condemned, for to the extent of its own retail business, an integrated enterprise excludes other producers from utilizing that retail outlet, and by the same token excludes other competing outlets from purchasing the goods of that integrated producer.

The crux of the question must always be whether the integrated enterprise, through a deliberate, calculated course of conduct has acquired control of a particular market in which it is operating.

The basic fallacy in the Government's theory is well illustrated by the Lehigh case itself (254 U. S. 255). The market of the defendant, Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, was in the coal fields adjacent to its tracks and among the coal operators seeking carriage of their commodity to distant cities. The particular area, the Wyoming Field in Pennsylvania was also served by a connection with The Reading Railroad, The Pennsylvania Railroad and The Jersey Central Railroad. The Lehigh commenced a systematic buying up of the coal fields adjacent to its road and in 1905 purchased the coal operating company which owned the connection with the competing railroad lines. Finally in 1908 the Interstate Commerce Commission found that the Lehigh

> "controlled 95% of the tonnage moving over its line to tide water" (254 U. S. 263).

In other words, the Lehigh went into its market and acquired virtually complete control thereof. As this Court put it at 254 U. S. 269:

> "Without further comment, this discussion of the record requires us to conclude that it is clearly established that prior to the enactment of the Anti-Trust Act, the Railroad Company, in combination with its coal company subsidiary, deliberately entered upon a policy of making extensive purchases of anthracite land tributary to the Railroad Company's lines, for the purpose of controlling the mining, transportation and sale of coal to be obtained therefrom and of preventing and suppressing competition, especially in the transportation and sale of such coal in interstate commerce, and that this policy was continued after the passage of the Anti-Trust Act with increasing energy and tenacity of purpose, with the result that a practical monopoly was attained of the transportation and sale of anthracite coal derived from such lands."

The fact that the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company controlled 20% of the total national anthracite market was of no significance in the decision of that case. In other words, the fact that 20% of the national market represented an appreciable segment of commerce, was in no way determinative of the legality or illegality of the integration. The decisive point was that the Lehigh Railroad Company intentionally acquired dominant control, to wit, 95%, of the market there involved.

The Reading case is in the same category (253 U. S. 26). There, the Schuylkill coal area of Pennsylvania was involved. The tracks of the Reading Railroad, the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Lehigh Valley Railroad companies each entered the Schuylkill region. Once again, it was a case of the defendant by a deliberate, calculated plan acquiring control of a particular market in which it was involved. Indeed, the Government's brief in the Reading case pointed out (p. 34):

> "* * * Reading Holding Company controls, as before stated, more than two-thirds of all the coal-bearing lands in the entire Schuylkill region."

In addition to the vertical integration whereby control of the Schuylkill anthracite field was obtained, the Reading Holding Company acquired the stock of a competing road, which served an adjacent coal field, and likewise there owned a large coal operating company. There was thus also effected a horizontal integration, or "complete dominion over two great competing interstate carriers and over two great competing coal companies" (253 U. S. 59).

In consequence, it is little wonder that in the Reading case this Court held:

> "* * * this dominating power was not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a busi> ness growing as a result of superior and enterprising management but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control" (253 U. S. at 57).

The Yellow Cab case (332 U. S. 218) does not change the principles enunciated by this Court in the Reading and Lehigh cases. Since the case came to this Court on appeal from a judgment dismissing the Government's complaint on motion there was in fact no holding of monopolization of any kind. So far as relevant here, the case stands only for the proposition that the amount of commerce there involved was a sufficient segment of commerce to be the subject of a Sherman Act violation and that the complaint was not insufficient for failure to allege a monopoly of the total number of taxicabs in the country. The case also held that the defendants could not claim exemption from the anti-trust laws simply because they were affiliated by common stock ownership. There is nothing whatever in the Yellow Cab case which changes the cardinal rule that a monopolization can occur only with respect to the acquisition of control of a particular market pursuant to a deliberate, calculated scheme to obtain such control.

The Swift case (286 U. S. 106) is definitely not a precedent to be applied to the case at bar. In that case the defendants voluntarily consented to the entry of a decree under which they agreed to refrain from engaging in certain businesses, including the wholesale grocery business. Ten years later, upon application of some of the defendants, the District Court removed the prohibition in the consent decree against the defendants' participation in the wholesale grocery business. This Court in reviewing the propriety of the lower court's action plainly indicated that the only question involved was whether there was a sufficient change in conditions as to warrant the removal of the ban to which the defendants had consented. This Court stated at 286 U. S. 119:

> "Nothing less than a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions should lead us to change what was decreed after years of litigation with the consent of all concerned.
>
> * * * * *
>
> They chose to renounce what they might otherwise have claimed, and the decree of a court confirmed the renunciation and placed it beyond recall. What was then solemnly adjudged as a final composition of an historic litigation will not lightly be undone at the suit of the offenders, and the composition held for nothing."

In this case obviously no such question is presented.

The Government's reliance upon Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, to bolster its newly adopted theory of illegality of integration is also without merit. The Government argues at pages 98 et seq. of its brief that integration of production, distribution and exhibition, violates the Sherman Act because it sanctions a restraint of trade outlawed by the Interstate decision. Counsel point to the provision of the judgment in the case at bar, which permits a distributor to exhibit its pictures in any theatre in which it has an interest of 95% or more upon any terms satisfactory to it, (Section IV, R. 3700), and argue therefrom that if Paramount owned a 95% instead of a 50% interest in the Interstate Circuit, it could impose the unreasonable restraints against independents which were held illegal in the Interstate decision.

This argument is fallacious because the Interstate case was fundamentally one of horizontal conspiracy, i.e. a conspiracy on the part of Interstate Circuit with all of the distributors to restrain the competition of independents. Consequently, even the complete integration of Paramount and Interstate would not render innocent any such illegal conspiracy as that fostered by Interstate. In the case at bar, of course, any conspiracy among distributors found by the District Court has been wholly eliminated by its sweeping injunction against minimum admission prices, unreasonable clearances, etc., as well as the requirements of competitive bidding.

The Interstate case in no way detracts from the right of a copyright holder to exhibit its own picture and to prevent its exhibition by others. Indeed, even the Government concedes "that under the Copyright Act, the copyright owner has the right to exhibit its own pictures and to prevent their exhibition by others * * *" (Government's brief, p. 97).

This being so, the provision of the District Court's judgment in the present case which permits a distributor to exhibit its own pictures in its own theatres, upon such terms and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it in no way runs counter to the holding of the Court in the Interstate case.

We do not contend, however, that this copyright privilege becomes a shield for illegal restraints or monopolization. Accordingly, if a producer-exhibitor in exhibiting its pictures in a particular locality adopts a course of action with a deliberate calculated scheme to crush competition and acquires market control, there would result an illegal restraint and monopolization, notwithstanding the legality imparted by the Copyright Act to the integrated business of production and exhibition of motion pictures.

We submit, therefore, that the judgment of the District Court, in sustaining the ownership of theatres by producer-exhibitors does not sanction a "continued restraint of trade implicit in such ownership", as the Government contends (brief, p. 103), for whatever illegalities may occur, do not arise from the integration per se.

(2) Loew's integrated business does not come within the condemnation of the Lehigh, Reading, Yellow Cab, Swift or any other case.

So far as Loew's is concerned, there is absolutely no factual basis for bringing it within the condemnation of any of these decisions.

We have shown that Loew's has not monopolized theatre holdings, either on a local or a national basis and that it has not monopolized first-run exhibition in any locality where it operates. Thus, even though its business represents an appreciable segment of the motion picture industry, it has no market control in any place where it operates.

Although we need go no further to establish that Loew's factually does not come within these cases, there is an additional ground of distinction on the facts so far as Loew's is concerned. An essential requisite in all of those cases, and even in the Government's theory itself, is proof that the integration was brought about for the deliberate, calculated purpose of obtaining market control.

In two instances in the Government's brief counsel attempt to bring Loew's within this condemnation. Thus at page 54 the assertion is made:

> "Five of these defendants have entered the exhibition field on a large scale, primarily by purchasing theatre circuits from former independent operators (Fdgs. 8, 18, 19, 21, 27-29, 30, 42, R. 3662, 3664-3665, 3667)."

Again at page 91 it is alleged:

> "Most of the major defendants' vast theatre holdings were acquired through purchase of assets or stock in, or merger with, independent theatre enterprises (Fdgs. 8, 21, 28-30, 42; R. 3662, 3664, 3665, 3667)."

None of the findings relied upon in either of these general statements makes any reference to Loew's whatsoever.

The Government's brief goes further. It argues on pages 47 and 91:

> "These vertical combinations were formed in order to acquire an assured outlet for films.
>
> * * * * *
>
> It is undisputed in the record that the other four major defendants [Loew's, Fox, RKO and Warner] also integrated theatre operations with film distribution in order to have non-competitive market outlets for their films."

Neither the general statements, charging the "five" defendants with entering the exhibition field by purchasing theatre circuits, nor the specific statement at pages 47 and 91 of the Government brief that these combinations were formed in order to acquire an assured outlet for films can in any way apply to Loew's. Indeed, the Government's brief itself at page 14 concedes that Loew's integrated production, distribution and exhibition unit came into being, not by a distributor "purchasing theatre circuits from former independent operators", but by Loew's, a theatre operator, acquiring Metro Pictures Co., a producer and distributor. Says the Government brief (p. 14):

> "In 1920, Loew was a substantial theatre operator. At that time it acquired Metro Pictures Co., a producer and distributor. In 1924, Metro was merged with Goldwyn Pictures Co. and Mayer Pictures Co., both producers and distributors, to form Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer (Ex. 48, R. 181)."[1]

Moreover, the Government brief acknowledges the exceptional position as to Loew's, for at page 15 it states:

> "In 1929 and 1930, all of the major defendants except Loew acquired additional theatre circuits and emerged in 1930 in substantially their present form (Exs. 45, 85, 94, 116, R. 175, 197, 203, 209)."

Of course, we do not deny that the theatres operated by Loew's have increased over the years, but it has been only a very gradual, normal growth. The record affirmatively shows, without contradiction, that over the 13 years preceding the hearings in this case, the theatres which Loew's operated increased by only 9, bringing its total to only 131[2] (Exh. L-12). During this same span of time the total theatres operating in the United States increased by 5,471, an increase of 600 to 1 of Loew's (Exh. L-12; cf. Find. 145; R. 3688).

This conservative normal growth which has characterized Loew's theatre operations is in striking contrast to

---

[1]"Mayer Pictures Co." was not a distributor, only a producer (Ex. 48, P. 181).

[2]These 131 theatres operated by Loew's are but a fraction of its co-defendants' interests in theatres, with the exception of RKO which operates 109 theatres (Find. 118; R. 3684) and are less than both the Griffith and Schine circuits, each of which has 147 theatres. (Film Daily Year Book [1947] pp. 1057, 1078; appellant's brief in Schine Chain Theatres Inc. v. U. S., No. 10, October Term 1947 at p. 28.)

the rapid expansion attendant upon illegal operations as in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. There, the District Court in discussing the expansion of the defendant Crescent Amusement Co., and its affiliates (none of which is in any way connected with any of the defendants in the case at bar) said (323 U. S. 181 [footnote]):

> "On August 11, 1934, the defendant exhibitors and their affiliates operated in thirty-two towns in Tennessee (excluding Nashville), Kentucky, and Alabama, in six of which they had competition. On August 11, 1939, the defendant exhibitors and their affiliates, with the exception of Strand, heretofore dismissed as a defendant, operated in seventy-eight towns in Tennessee (excluding Nashville), Kentucky, Alabama, and North Carolina * * *"

In view of the entirely legitimate growth of Loew's theatre operations, it is not surprising that Monograph No. 43, The Motion Picture Industry—A Pattern of Control, TNEC, which is relied upon and cited by the Government at page 16 of its brief, makes the following statement at page 15:

> "Loew's has always pursued a very conservative policy regarding theatre acquisitions."

On such a record as this there can be no support for the Government's contention, so far as Loew's is concerned, that the integration came about for the deliberate, calculated purpose of obtaining market control.

It follows, therefore, that there is no justification either in fact or in law for the Government's theory that Loew's integrated business of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures constitutes monopolization and restraint.

D. Loew's Cannot be Treated Collectively With Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner to Establish a Monopoly of Exhibition or Distribution.

The Government's brief in this Court does not present argument, as in the District Court, in support of a collective monopoly of exhibition and distribution on the part of the five major defendants. On the other hand, at page 11 of their brief in this Court Government's counsel point out that they "challenge the Court's failure to conclude that the defendants, both individually and collectively, monopolize important segments of the motion picture industry."

Because Government's counsel have noted this objection and because they constantly submit collective statistics throughout their brief and argue that the five defendants do not compete with each other, we are obliged to present argument that these five companies cannot be treated collectively to establish claims of monopolization and that they in fact all compete with each other.

Preliminarily, however, we shall show that the five companies even on an aggregate basis have no monopoly of exhibition.

(1) The five companies, even if aggregated, have no monopoly, either of theatre holdings or of the national exhibition business.

As we have previously shown the District Court found (R. 3684):

> "119. The present theatre holdings of the five defendant-exhibitors Paramount, Loew's, Fox, RKO and Warner, aggregate little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States, and by such theatre holdings alone the defendants do not and cannot collectively or individually, have a monopoly of exhibition."

To this finding, as we have also previously indicated, the Government assigns error, as follows (R. 3723):

> "20. The Court erred in concluding that the defendants' theatre holdings are not large enough to permit them, individually or collectively, to have a monopoly of exhibition."

In thus presenting the collective picture, i.e., the aggregated theatre holdings and the aggregated exhibition business of these five companies, we do so solely to demonstrate that even on that basis, monopoly of national exhibition is non-existent. We challenge counsel's right to aggregate the properties and business of these five separate companies and to deal with them as though they were one organization. There is no legal or factual justification for that technique of proving monopoly by what amounts to an assumption of its existence. However, for the purpose of the present sub-point we shall deal, arguendo, with the situation produced by aggregation as to theatre holdings and as to the business of exhibition.

The detailed facts as to the five companies' theatre holdings are set forth in the District Court's Finding of Fact No. 118, which reads in part as follows (R. 3684).

> "118. In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion pictures theatres in the United States, of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137, or 17.35 percent [one-sixth] * * *"

Since the five producer-exhibitors collectively are interested in but 17.35%, or one-sixth of the total theatres presently operating in the United States, there should be no question but that the District Court was correct in finding that the five major companies do not monopolize exhibition in terms of their aggregate theatre holdings.

Nor is the absence of collective monopoly confined to mere numbers of theatre holdings. It is non-existent even as to the portion of exhibition business carried on by these five companies.

It will be recalled that it is one of the major complaints of counsel for the Government that among them Fox, Loew's Paramount, RKO and Warner control the greater portion of the first-run theatres throughout the country and consequently develop the greatest box office receipts and pay the highest film rentals. Notwithstanding this fact, even when all theatres of the five companies exhibiting on any run are aggregated, they carry on collectively less than half of the exhibition business in the country. The Government states with apparent satisfaction at page 57 in its brief "While defendants' theatres comprise only a little over 17% of the total number of theatres in the United States, they have paid 45% of the total domestic film rental received by all eight distributor-defendants."

We submit that the fact that 17% of the theatres in the country produce 45% of the revenue does not alter the conclusion in any respect that 45% of the total revenue nowhere near approximates a monopoly of total exhibition. Whether the ability of 17% of the country's theatres to produce 45% of the revenue is based upon larger theatres, legally acquired, superior skill, enterprise and management or arises from conspiracies and illegal restraints, it is perfectly clear that the answer to that question does not change the fact that 45% (made up from five companies) is by no means the equivalent of a national monopoly.

(2) The Government's aggregation of first-run theatres and the film rentals which they pay, is without support in law or in fact.

(a) There is no legal precedent or justification for treating these five autonomous companies as a unit.

Apparently aware that Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner even collectively have nothing that approaches a nationwide monopoly of exhibition, the Government in the lower court restricted the scope of its claim of monopoly to but a part of exhibition, to wit, first-run exhibition in the larger cities of the country.[1] In so doing, of course, at least 17,500 of the 18,076 theatres[2] and well over half of the exhibition business in the country, are removed from the calculations.

While the Government in its present brief does not argue expressly for collective monopoly of first-run exhibition it states at pages 20 and 55: Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner, as exhibitors, have in the aggregate 70% of the first-run theatres in the 92 cities of the United

---

[1]Government's Brief in the District Court, p. 1:

> "1. Fox, Loew, Paramount, RKO, and Warner, the producer-exhibit defendants, collectively receive as film distributors more than 70% of the total film rental derived from first-run theatres in the United States.
>
> 2. They collectively own, through direct or indirect stock ownership and operating agreements, a financial interest in the operation of more than 70% of the 'key city' first-run theatres in the United States."

[2]Exhibit L-13, set forth at pp. 327-338 of the Appendix to the Government brief in this Court, shows that there are only 512 first-run theatres in the 92 cities of over 100,000 population in the United States. These 512 theatres, of course, include both independent and affiliated theatres.

States with over 100,000 population. By reason of having this 70% of the first-run theatres, these five companies, as distributors, obtain in the aggregate at least 71% of the total film rental paid by the first-run theatres of each of them.

The purport of this presentation is plain: by aggregating the first-run theatres of the five producer-exhibitors, and treating them as though they were parts of one organization the Government sees a monopoly of first-run exhibition. Then, proceeding on this premise (which we say is false) the deduction is that since these five companies have a monopoly of first-run exhibition, the film rentals paid by the theatres of each of them to the five companies, as distributors, are to be aggregated, and that if this is done, it demonstrates that the five have a monopoly of distribution.

But take away this aggregating of the five companies' first-run theatres—consider these five autonomous companies separately, and the theory for collective monopoly collapses. First, goes the monopoly of exhibition and then falls the monopoly of distribution built thereon.

We respectfully ask what precedent is there for treating five wholly autonomous companies as a single unit?

We refer to them as "autonomous" with due regard for the meaning of the word. They are wholly independent, as Government's counsel conceded when he stated (R. 215), "* * * as between the eight groups of defendants, I think it is quite true that there are no common officers; there is no common stock control, although it may be, of course, that executives or officials of one or more of them hold some listed stock in the others.", but as to those, "We do not attach any significance to them." (R. 216).

We know of no case where the properties and revenues of five separate companies have been aggregated, treated as a unit, and held to be a monopoly of a particular industry.

Furthermore, we have searched in vain among the arguments of Government's counsel for a definite statement purporting to justify what is otherwise nothing more than an assumption of the right to aggregate. The only indication of any such rationale in the Government's brief in the District Court was as follows (Gov't. brief, p. 20):

> "The constant use by most of the affiliated theatres of films distributed by two or more producer-exhibitors in important situations tends to induce them to select each other as their first run outlets. This is not because the negotiations by the theatres of A for the films of B are expressly conditioned upon similar negotiations by the theatres of B for the films of A, but because A and B have a natural community of interest as both distributors and exhibitors in seeing that the market for the products of both is not disturbed by outsiders interested only in theatre operations."

This theory is carried over in the Government's present brief at pages 56-57, where counsel state: "Each of the defendants selected not only its own theatres but also those of the other defendants for first-run showings * * *."

Although nowhere clearly defined the Government's contention, as we understand it, is that there exists some sort of nation-wide practice among the five producer-exhibitors whereby each of the five, as distributor, favors the theatre of a co-defendant over that of an independent in return for similar treatment where the distributor itself operates a theatre. Apparently in the desire to create a further atmosphere of opprobrium, counsel refer to this alleged practice as "cross-licensing."

corporations entitled to the same of the stock which had been turned over to the New Jersey company in exchange for its stock."

In United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, the principal subject organization was again a corporation, created to acquire the properties of five distinct concerns which manufactured, distributed and sold in the United States and abroad, 95% of all the domestic cigarette tobacco produced in the United States. It thereafter acquired ownership of other companies, thus obtaining for itself a dominant position in all branches of the tobacco industry. This Court in decreeing dissolution, pointed to the fact that "the very first organization" was created as a result of and to eliminate competitive conditions (221 U. S. at 182).

In the Reading cases (United States v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324 and 253 U. S. 26), according to the Court's opinion in the later case, a holding company was organized to provide "complete dominion over two great competing interstate carriers and over two great competing coal companies" (253 U. S. at 59).

United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. (2d) 416 (C. C. A. 2d), on the other hand, is an example of the second type of monopoly where divestiture has been held the appropriate remedy. There, a single company monopolist, Aluminum Company of America, through alleged exclusionary practices maintained a monopoly of all the virgin ingot aluminum produced in this country and a monopoly amounting to 90% of all aluminum (i.e. its own, second, scrap and imported). Divestiture in that case meant the fission of a single organization into competing units which had not previously been separate.

It is altogether clear that Loew's does not come within either group of cases in which the remedy of divestiture is the required relief, for the reason that neither its integrated business nor any part thereof is an illegal monopoly.

Furthermore, in the industry at bar there already exist the separate autonomous companies which the remedy of divestiture is designed to provide. The only relief, which could be warranted is a decree such as that which the District Court has rendered, guaranteeing competition among these companies as well as other units in the industry.

(b) "Cross-licensing" is but an empty catchword—the Government's claim that the producer-exhibitor defendants do not compete with each other is not applicable to Loew's.

The customary meaning of the expression "cross-licensing" as indicated by this Court in the "cracking" case, Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163, 171, is "An interchange of patent rights and a division of royalties according to the value attributed by the parties to their respective patent claims" and as the Court said, "is frequently necessary if technical advancement is not to be blocked by threatened litigation."[1]

It is clear that the Government in using this term "cross-licensing" throughout the case is seeking to create the impression that there exists here the "interchange" aspects present in the customary agreement for exchange of patent or other rights. In other words, counsel seek to create a picture of a group of competitors pooling licenses either to reduce the competition between them or to advance the development of a single product from which the group will

[1] A true cross-licensing situation is that described by the Court in Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386, 400:

> "In summary, the situation brought about in the glass industry, and existing in 1938, was this: Hartford, with the technical and financial aid of others in the conspiracy, had acquired, by issue to it or assignment from the owners, more than 600 patents. These, with over 100 Corning controlled patents, over 60 Owens patents, over 70 Hazel patents, and some 12 Lynch patents, had been, by cross-licensing agreements, merged into a pool which effectually controlled the industry. This control was exercised to allot production in Corning's field to Corning, and that in restricted classes within the general container field to Owens, Hazel, Thatcher, Ball, and such other smaller manufacturers as the group agreed should be licensed. The result was that 94% of the glass containers manufactured in this country on feeders and formers were made on machinery licensed under the pooled patents."

benefit. Such an impression, so far as this industry is concerned, could not be more completely false.

At the outset it should be made clear: the five companies never license each other to act as distributors of their respective motion pictures. Each is in open competition with all the other seven distributors to "sell" its features to as many theatres as possible.[1] There literally is no "cross-licensing" between the five competing companies as distributors. Each does its own distributing to the exclusion of the others, and each copyright of each defendant for each of its pictures has nothing at all to do with the copyright of any other defendant for any of its pictures.

The same is true on the exhibition level. The business of exhibiting motion pictures is obviously a local one.[2] It is carried on in thousands of segregated markets—the "Main

---

[1] District Court Opinion, R. 3554:

> "Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures."

Government's counsel, in attempting to establish that the theatres of the major defendants do not compete with each other for product, state twice in their brief (pp. 18, 66) that William F. Rodgers, Sales Manager of Loew's, "conceded that there was no competition among the major defendants' theatres in licensing films he sold." In support of this claimed concession the Government refers to R. 572. It is obvious from Mr. Rodger's answer to the next question (R. 573) that in stating that there was no competition for Loew's pictures, he was referring to the situation in those cities where Loew's operates theatres. In those cities, Loew's obviously exhibits its pictures in its own theatres and does not make them available for first-run exhibition to other exhibitors operating there.

[2] "The showing of motion pictures is, of course, a local affair." U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 at 183.

Streets" of the cities and towns across the country. Thus, Loew's "Colonial" in Reading, Pa. is not in the same competitive market as the "Paramount" in Springfield, Mass. The two markets of exhibition are wholly separate and distinct. This segregation of markets is of fundamental significance in the industry at bar.

While the five producer-exhibitors own and operate theatres across the country, in any local exhibition market where two or more of them are operating first-run theatres, two or more producer-exhibitors never license each other's theatres. They exhibit the first-run of their pictures exclusively in their own theatres.[1] Consequently, there is no "cross-licensing" between these five companies on the exhibition level. Whenever they are operating as exhibitors, they are in open direct competition with each other—undiminished by any license agreements between them.

In an effort to prove that the producer-exhibitor defendants do not compete with each other as exhibitors, the Government states in two places in its brief (pp. 16, 55-56) that of the 922 towns in the country in which defendants own theatre interests there are only 47 towns (5%) in

---

[1]Loew's sales manager, William F. Rodgers, testified (R. 442-3):

> "Q. Do your theatres always exhibit your own Loew's films? Put it this way: Do Loew's theatres always exhibit Loew's films? A. With one exception.
>
> Q. What is the exception. A. The exception is in Niagara Falls where we have an interest in a theatre in Niagara Falls but our product is played in the theatre of an independent exhibitor."

Government Brief in District Court, p. 19:

> "It appears to be conceded that each distributor normally selects the theatre in which it has a financial interest as its own first-run outlet in the communities where they are located."

which the theatre interests of two or more defendants are "operating in nominal competition with each other." So far as the defendant Loew's is concerned, this statement is so inaccurate as to be absurd. Loew's operates theatres in 42 cities in the United States. (Appendices II and III of this brief.) In 32 of such cities Loew's competes with the theatres of one or more producer-exhibitors. Thus, in 71%, not 5% as the Government asserts, of the cities where Loew's operates there are theatres of one or more of the other producer-exhibitors. In the remaining 10 cities where Loew's operates, without competition from the other producer-exhibitor defendants, there are one or more competing independent first-run theatres. (Appendices II and III of this brief.)

The foregoing establishes, so far as the defendant Loew's is concerned, not only that it is in competition on the exhibition level with the other producer-exhibitors but that the Government's technique of aggregate statistics gives an entirely false picture as to Loew's own situation.

It is, of course, true that when a producer-exhibitor has no theatre in a locality and another producer-exhibitor has, the former may license its pictures for exhibition in the theatre of the latter. This, however, in no way lessens competition as among the five companies here involved. For example, if Paramount licenses a feature or features to Loew's "Colonial" in Reading, Pa., that licensing does not reduce the competition between Loew's and Paramount as exhibitors, for Paramount has no theatre competing in that area, or it would not be licensing another theatre, such as Loew's "Colonial". In this situation, however, the Government claims that there is a pattern of a mutual interchange of interest whereby one producer-exhibitor favors the theatre of another over that of an independent in return for the latter favoring the theatre of the former in a different locality. We shall show that as to Loew's this claimed reciprocity does not exist.

(c) There is no pattern of conduct, on the part of the defendant Loew's in dealing with the other four producer-exhibitors, evidencing a plan among them to exchange first-run privileges.

If the defendant Loew's were a party to a nation-wide scheme among the five producer-exhibitors to use each other's theatres as their first-run outlets in preference to, and to the exclusion of, more suitable independent theatres, one would expect to find some evidence of the results of such a reciprocal arrangement—a pattern of mutual benefit, one to another, among the five producer-exhibitors. Indeed, without some evidence of that nature there certainly can be no inference of any collective action which would sustain the Government's aggregation of these five autonomous companies.

However, in view of the District Court's conclusion that these companies could not be treated "collectively" (Opinion, R. 3553) it is not surprising to find that there is absolutely no proof of reciprocity. Both the testimony[1] and the documentary proof is directly to the contrary.

In the majority of the 36 cities of over 100,000 population where Loew's operates first-run theatres none of the other four producer-exhibitors licensed Loew's theatres to the extent of more than three features a year. In this regard, the lower Court found (R. 3686):

> "131. In 21 of the 36 out of the 92 cities where Loew's operates theatres none of the other four producer-exhibitors licensed its features in the 1943-

[1] R. 535, 685, 1110, 1512, 1725, 1843 and 1849.

44 season for first-run exhibition in a Loew's theatre, to the extent of more than three features, the Loew's theatres' first-run exhibition being otherwise limited to its own features and those of non theatre-owning producers."

Further proof that there is no pattern or practice of reciprocal interchange of benefit among these five competing companies is the situation in Indianapolis, Louisville, St. Louis and Harrisburg. In those cities Loew's operates the only affiliated first-run theatres. All the competing first-run theatres are independent. (Appendices II and III.) It is of compelling significance that in every one of those four cities Loew's did not have the product of a single one of the other four producer-exhibitors. Instead, in each city, all four, Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner, license the independent first-run theatres to the exclusion of Loew's. (Appendices II and III.)

If there were any doubt as to the fact that Loew's is not engaged in any mutual interchange of benefits with the other four producers-exhibitors, it is conclusively determined by Loew's course of action over the past ten years. During that time Loew's has moved away steadily from the other producer-exhibitors' product toward that of non-theatre-owning distributors. The lower Court so found (R. 3686):

"132. Over the 10 years from 1935 to 1945, the total number of features licensed by the other four theatre-owning distributors to Loew's first-run houses, decreased from 1382 to 998 and the features of non theatre-owning distributors, increased from 1201 to 1879."

"133. In 1935, the other four theatre-owning distributors earned $2,611,986 from Loew's theatres and the non theatre-owning distributors earned $2,205,330 ($406,656 less). In 1944, the non theatre-owning distributors earned $5,261,116 in Loew's theatres, which was $419,477 more than the $4,841,639, earned in Loew's theatres in that year by the four other theatre-owning distributors."

In view of these facts disproving a mutual interchange of first-run benefits between Loew's and the other producer-exhibitor defendants, there is no basis whatever for the Government's use of aggregated statistics and inferring therefrom a collective monopoly in exhibition (Opinion, R. 3553).

(d) With the disproof of any basis for aggregating the first-run theatres of the five producer-exhibitors, any collective monopoly of distribution must likewise fail.

Proceeding on the basis of aggregating the first-run theatres of the five producer-exhibitors, a premise which we have shown to be false, the Government's theory for a collective monopoly of distribution is that since the first-run theatres of these five companies are to be treated as a unit, the film rentals paid by the theatres of each of them to the five companies, as distributors, should be viewed in the aggregate.

So far as the defendant Loew's is concerned, the effect of this latter aggregation is as follows: Loew's theatres pay 71% of their total film rental to Fox, to Loew's itself to Paramount, to RKO and to Warner (Find. 127, R. 3685). The crux of this situation, of course, is what Loew's pays to itself. Without including this portion, Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner, even in the aggregate, receive but a small portion of the total film rentals paid by Loew's theatres.

In view of the utter demolition of the Government's theory for aggregating the first-run theatres of these five companies, we submit that there can be no justification for lumping the film rentals which Loew's theatres pay to itself, with those that its theatres pay for licensing for exhibition the features of Fox, Paramount, RKO and Warner.

How illusory this method is for proving monopoly, is well demonstrated by the District Court's specific finding with respect to the film rentals paid by Loew's in the year 1944. The District Court found (R. 3687):

> "135. In the year 1944, of the total film rental paid by Loew's theatres, 47.9% was to Loew's itself for the exhibition of Loew's pictures, and 27.1% was to non theatre-owning distributors. Thus a total of 75% of all film rentals paid by Loew's theatres went to persons other than the four other defendant-producer-exhibitors."

Further indicating the absurdity of this method of establishing monopoly by mere addition, is the lower court's finding that Loew's theatres actually paid higher rentals in 1943-44 to the non-theatre-owning distributors than it did to Fox, RKO and Warner. The lower court found in this regard (R. 3686-7):

> "134. In 1944, the percentage of the total film rental paid by Loew's theatres to each of the non theatre-owning distributors, Columbia (8.8%), United Artists (8.3%) and Universal (7.4%), was higher than that paid to each of three producer-exhibitors, RKO (2.1%), Warner Bros. (2.1%) and Twentieth Century Fox (6.1%).

We submit that the District Court was entirely justified in finding that there is no collective monopoly of exhibition, and, as a consequence, refusing to find a collective monopoly of distribution. Under recognized authorities there is neither need nor justification for disturbing the lower court's decision in that regard. General Pictures Co. v. Electric Co., 304 U. S. 175, 182-3; Alabama Power Co. v. Ickes, 302 U. S. 464, 477; Adamson v. Gilliland, 242 U. S. 350, 353.

In the Alabama Power case, this Court said:

> "These findings were made, after hearing, by the district judge upon undisputed or conflicting evidence. The findings were not questioned by the court below; and since they are not without substantial support in the evidence, we accept them here as unassailable. Davis v. Schwartz, 155 U. S. 631, 636-637; Adamson v. Gilliland, 242 U. S. 350, 353."

Point II

THE DISTRICT COURT DID NOT ERR IN DENYING DIVESTITURE.

(On the Government's Appeal No. 79)

A. Absent Monopoly, Divestiture is Wholly Unwarranted.

We know of no case where a court has ever held that, absent monopoly, the Sherman Act required a completely autonomous company such as Loew's to cut off a major part of its integrated business.

Here in the case at bar, the District Court has affirmatively found that Loew's has no monopoly of exhibition individually, or collectively with the other producer-exhibitors.

As we have indicated previously, the Government in this Court has made a fundamental change in the theory of monopoly upon which it bases its claim to divorcement. Even if it were successful in establishing a collective monopoly of the five companies, the only appropriate relief, in view of the illegalities found by the District Court, would be a decree enjoining the illegal restraints found, but leaving each integrated company untouched. Apparently aware of this, counsel no longer argue for the collective theory, but only contend in this Court for the proposition that each integrated company is in and of itself an illegal monopolization.

We have shown that neither the Lehigh, Reading, Yellow Cab, Swift, nor any other case, supports this improvisation.

Divestiture, of course, is not a penalty specifically prescribed by statute for violations of the Sherman Law. Nor is there any justification for its use to reduce all participants in a given field of endeavor to a level of equal competitive strength. Its sole use as a tool of equity has been to dissolve the definite recognizable monopoly. Hence, the cases where divestiture has been decreed are limited to two types, the first, where companies or properties have been unlawfully combined to create a monopoly, and the second, where a single organization has legally attained what amounts to a monopoly of a given industry or a part of a given industry but is actively maintaining that position in violation of the Sherman Act. In the first situation divestiture means the breaking up of the illegally created organization and the return of its units to their former separate status. In the second situation divestiture means the fission of a single organization into several units which never have been separate.[1] In either circumstance, however, the application of divestiture is limited to dividing a unified organization, comprising the monopoly, into separate units.

Typical of the former class of cases is U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. There, it will be recalled, the Crescent Amusement Company and its subsidiary and affiliated theatre companies (none of which was related to any of the defendants at bar) were found to have created and maintained "an unreasonable monopoly of the business of operating theatres in the towns of Tennessee, northern

---

[1]The restricted scope of the remedy of divestiture, thus defined, was exactly that stated by the Government in its application to this Court to obtain the deletion of the sentence from the opinion in U. S. v. National Lead Company, 332 U. S. 319, which reads:

> "Existing precedents of divestiture provide examples of the restoration of a pre-existing separate status to companies or properties which have been unlawfully combined rather than to the fission of units which have never been separate."

Alabama, and central and western Kentucky" and to have followed the practice of insisting that a distributor give them monopoly rights in towns where they had competition or else they would not give the distributor any business in the closed towns where they had no competition. This Court, in referring to the evidence of the defendant circuit's predatory practices, stated, "The mere threat would at times be sufficient and cause the competitor to sell out to the combination 'because his mule was scared.' In that way some of the [Crescent] affiliates were born" (323 U. S. at 181).

Not only is there no such evidence in the case at bar, but in affirming the District Court's judgment of dissolution of the Crescent organization this Court specifically pointed out (323 U. S. at 189):

> "The Court has quite consistently recognized in this type of Sherman Act case that the government should not be confined to an injunction against further violations. Dissolution of the combination will be ordered where the creation of the combination is itself the violation."

Another case where the creation of the combination was itself the violation is Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1. There the subject organization was a corporation organized to acquire and hold the stock of operating companies controlling 90 per cent of the business of producing, shipping, refining and selling petroleum and its products. In affirming the lower court's decree granting dissolution, this Court pointed out at page 78:

> "It [the lower court decree] commanded the dissolution of the combination, and therefore in effect, directed the transfer by the New Jersey corporation back to the stockholders of the various subsidiary

B. Divestiture Is No Remedy For the Illegalities Found.

The gravamen of the illegalities found in the case at bar are not in the ownership of theatres but in methods of doing business, in trade practices engaged in by eight of the largest companies in the industry. There is here no proof of a nation-wide effort to take over all theatre operations, nor is there any indication in the case at bar that Loew's entered upon the business of production and exhibition of motion pictures for the purpose of monopolizing either of those fields or any particular locality in which it operates. In this regard the District Court specifically found (R. 3689-90):

> "152. There is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in production, distribution, or exhibition of motion pictures, except as found in findings 153 and 154 below.
>
> "153. In localities where there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres [1], there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of the competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from 'inherent vice' on the part of these defendants.
>
> "154. The illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited."

[1] In no place where Loew's operates, does it own or operate all the first-run theatres (Find. 119; R. 3684; Appendix III to this brief).

It is clear from these findings that the arbitrary severance of production from exhibition, sought by the Government, would not remedy the trade practices found illegal by the District Court. As that Court itself found (R. 3690);

"156. Total divestiture would not remedy the price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and the other practices which have been found unreasonably to restrict competition."

If, in equity, it still is "an object all sublime, to have the punishment fit the crime", there is no rational justification for the intransigent demand of Government counsel for the nation-wide breaking up of five of the principal units operating in an industry.[1]

---

[1]In relying upon the past history of litigation with respect to the motion picture industry, as the Government's brief does on pages 72-89, and in claiming that this demonstrates need for divorcement, the Government completely disregards the controlling fact that until the judgment in the present case, the conduct of the defendants has never been subject to such drastic prohibitions and mandates as are imposed by this decree. Never before were there any injunctions against the insertion in licenses

In view of the findings, above quoted, the opinion of this Court in U. S. v. National Lead Co., et al., 332 U. S. 319, 338, and 352-3, is of first importance.

> "This is a civil, not a criminal, proceeding. The purpose of the decree, therefore, is effective and fair enforcement, not punishment. An understanding of the findings of fact is essential to an appreciation of the reasons for the decree.
>
> * * * * *
>
> There is no showing that four major competing units would be preferable to two, or * * * that six would be better than four. Likewise, there is no showing of the necessity for this divestiture of plants or of its practicality and fairness. The findings of fact have shown vigorous and effective competition between National Lead and du Pont in this field. * * * Such competition suggests that the District Court would do well to remove unlawful handicaps from it but demonstrates no sufficient basis for weakening its force by divesting each of the two largest competitors of one of its principal plants. It is not for the courts to realign and redirect effective and lawful competition where it already exists and needs only to be released from restraints that violate the Anti-Trust Laws. To separate the operating units of going concerns without more supporting evidence than has been presented here to establish either the need for, or the feasibility of, such separation would amount to an abuse of discretion." of minimum admission prices or against the use of formula deals and master agreements. Nor has there ever been anything like the requirement of picture by picture and theatre by theatre licensing or the requirement of competitive bidding, or the injunction against arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor for the run demanded by him. None of these cases relied upon by the Government even purported to provide such remedies as the District Court has decreed in the present instance.

---

C. Prohibiting the Theatre of a Producer-Exhibitor from Exhibiting a Feature Distributed by Another Producer-Exhibitor is Divorcement by Indirection and was Properly Denied.

The Government makes the following assignment of error (R. 3721):

> "5. The Court erred in failing to prohibit the continued use by the major defendants of each other's theatres as exhibition outlets for each other's films."

This demand for an outright proscription against the theatre of a producer-exhibitor exhibiting a feature distributed by another producer-exhibitor, comes as a complete afterthought in the case at bar. It was not mentioned in the amended and supplemental complaint upon which the hearings in the District Court were held. It was not mentioned in the application for modification of the consent decree, which led to those hearings. It was not mentioned in the opening of Government's counsel in the District Court, nor during the hearings. Nor was it ever mentioned in any brief filed by the Government either before or after the hearings. It was raised by Government counsel for the first time during the closing arguments at R. 2568 and only after the District Court, following the completed trial and receipt of briefs, expressed the view (R. 2560):

> "Judge Hand: You seem really to aim at, I won't say nothing, because you are calling attention now to other wrongs, but your great aim is to upset all the ownership of theatres. Now that is an extremely drastic remedy that I should think was extremely unlikely for this court to give. But that is merely a first impression by myself, and I have got to study this thing very carefully in other ways than just by reading through the briefs once, of course."

The obvious purpose of this last-minute innovation was to accomplish indirectly what was proven so overwhelmingly to be unwarranted in this case; that is, divestiture. And Government counsel acknowledged as much, on being pressed by the court as follows (R. 2570):

> "Judge Hand: Now you are arguing for this different remedy and really not arguing for the situation where it might well be said, as they said about Agricola, he made a desert and called it peace.
>
> Mr. Wright: I am merely suggesting that as an alternative remedy. I do not think myself that it is as adequate a remedy of dissolution. But I point it out as simply another means of attempting to accomplish the same results; and I say there is nothing in the defendants' attitude to indicate that they would not regard restrictions of that character as any more desirable than the more traditional method of an actual dissolution of these combinations through stock divestiture."

The devastation which this arbitrary proscription would work on this industry cannot be exaggerated.

The Government concedes (Gov't. brief, p. 99) and the District Court found (R. 3689):

> "151. Except for a very limited number of theatres in the very largest cities, the 18,000 and more theatres in the United States exhibit the product of more than one distributor. Such theatres could not be operated on the product of only one distributor."

It is obvious, therefore, that this proposal means that Loew's will be obliged either to close up for long periods of time numerous of its theatres or to dispose of them in order to avoid bankruptcy.

The punitive effect of such a proscription is brought home with striking emphasis when it is recalled that in no place where Loew's operates does it have market control or anything approaching monopoly either of theatre holdings or of first-run product.

In those limited localities where such a directive would not compel divorcement on the part of the defendants it would have in addition a serious trade-restraining effect, that would virtually eliminate the competition which the Sherman Act is intended to promote.

In a typical town where an affiliated theatre would be competing with one or more independent theatres[1] the product of the other producer-exhibitors would be carved out of the competitive field and delivered to the independent protected by what would amount to a perpetual franchise. On the other hand, the product of the three non-theatre-owning defendants and non-defendant distributors would naturally be relegated to the theatre of the producer-exhibitor in such locality, again without any competition therefor from the independent exhibitor in that locality, for the simple reason that the independent exhibitor would have the perpetual franchise to which we have referred.

This "channelized" licensing would be nothing more than preserving the "evil" which the suit ostensibly was brought to destroy, and thus indicates the extremes to which Government's counsel are willing to go to obtain their only goal—divestiture.

---

[1]Of the 36 cities of over 100,000 population where Loew's operates first-run theatres there are 21 with competing independent first-run theatres (Find. 149; R. 3689).

In Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., et al., the District Court decreed a fixed-run position for tne theatres of the plaintiff, an independent exhibitor. In reversing, the Circuit Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit stated 162 F. (2) 520, 524:

> "Thus the plaintiffs seek by the decree a favored fixed position in the scheme which they have sought to destroy, and this on the ground not of the illegal conspiracy but on the ground that the court found they were at an economic disadvantage with the defendant Balaban & Katz Corporation, who owned and operated the Maryland Theatre, because of this defendant's bargaining power as the operator of a chain of theatres. The decree may very properly be used to destroy the conspiracy root, branch, and all its evil fruits, but it may not be used to redress the economic balance between the plaintiffs and the said defendant without a finding that that difference was related directly to the conspiracy. It has been the plaintiffs' contention, as we understand it, that no one has a vested right in a playing position. In this we agree with the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs have a right to compete for any playing position, but they have no right to be awarded and protected by decree in any certain position. If the plaintiffs find themselves at a disadvantage because the defendants are economically stronger inasmuch as they are a chain with large bargaining power, the plaintiffs may not, without any finding to support it, obtain a decree vesting them and protecting them in a privileged position ahead of the Maryland Theatre. This does not appear to us as using the decree to destroy the conspiracy, but rather to preserve the evil in the interest of the plaintiffs."

If this proscription against a theatre of a producer-exhibitor exhibiting a feature of another producer-exhibitor is demanded by Government's counsel for any other purpose than as a subterfuge for divestiture, it can only be to obtain Sherman Act compliance, i.e., to eliminate the conspiracy and restraints of trade which have been found, and to insure competition.

But Government's counsel cavalierly proceed in their argument in support of this new-found substitute for divorcement as though the District Court had entered no decree, where, in fact, it has imposed severe restrictions and curbs on the defendant's freedom of action carefully designed to cure every illegality found and to guarantee competition.[1]

---

[1]An indication of the tenuous basis upon which the Government argues for this drastic relief is given on pages 128 and 129 of their brief. In claiming that the alleged illegalities would continue, even without written agreements the Government refers to a particular incident where Paramount the distributor and Loew's the exhibitor came to a serious disagreement in their negotiations for the licensing of Paramount pictures in Loew's theatres in New York City. The Government claims that this dispute had the effect of delaying subsequent run exhibition even though there was no contract in existence. As a result of this deadlock Paramount refused to license to Loew's its pictures from sometime in January, 1945 to sometime in May, 1945, a period of four or five months. If this evidence shows anything it proves that the alleged conspirators were not conspirators at all, for the proof establishes that Paramount during this fight was making extensive surveys to procure other outlets (R. 813).

Similarly, the exhibits referred to on page 129 (Exhibits 243 and 250) as evidencing "net-profit-sharing license agreements"

The manner in which the District Court has completely eliminated the possibility of any illegality resulting from the licensing by one producer-exhibitor of its pictures for exhibition in a theatre of another and the Government's contentions to the contrary are considered in detail in the next point dealing with the adequacy of relief decreed by the District Court.

The District Court's judgment denying total divestiture should not be circumvented by the licensing prohibition now demanded. This judgment, providing injunctive remedies and denying the Government's demand for divestiture was only entered after weeks of hearings and days of argument directed both to the legality of the practices involved and to the appropriateness of the relief prescribed. Furthermore, the District Court has specifically reserved jurisdiction to modify at any time its decree (Judgment, VIII; R. 3701). In view of the care and attention which has been devoted by this District Court to the question of relief will on examination show that they were in fact not profit-sharing license agreements at all. In this connection, it is to be noted that Exhibit 243, as reproduced on page 59 of the Government's Appendix as "Master agreement for Paramount films in Loew theatres", under the heading "Examples of License used by Defendants in Dealing with Each Other" is absolutely incorrect because it is not a license agreement at all but merely represents an exchange of correspondence settling a dispute concerning license fees covering feature pictures previously exhibited. This settlement was arrived at after an extended audit which Paramount insisted upon and finally was successful in procuring (R. 809, 810).

---

This same Exhibit 243 is again summarized at page 91 of the Government Appendix. In designating this as a license agreement and so describing it, the summary is grossly misleading. It is not a license agreement. The Government does not refer to the two real license agreements which are in fact contained in Exhibit 243. Each such license agreement covers one feature picture only.

in the case at bar, this Court's recent opinion in International Salt Company v. United States (No. 46, this Term) is most apposite. There the Court said:

> "The framing of decrees should take place in the District rather than in Appellate Courts. They are invested with large discretion to model their judgments to fit the exigencies of the particular case. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 185; United States v. National Lead Co., U. S. . In an equity suit, the end to be served is not punishment of past transgression, nor is it merely to end specific illegal practices. A public interest served by such civil suits is that they effectively pry open to competition a market that has been closed by defendants' illegal restraints."

Point III

THE INJUNCTIVE RELIEF DECREED BY THE DISTRICT COURT IS ENTIRELY ADEQUATE TO ELIMINATE ANY ILLEGAL RESTRAINTS IN DISTRIBUTION OR EXHIBITION.

(On the Government's Appeal No. 79)

Loew's has appealed from the District Court's findings and conclusions of conspiracy and from most of the findings and conclusions as to unreasonable restraints. The argument in support thereof is set forth in the appellant's portion of this brief (Points IV et seq., p. 113). In presenting Loew's argument that the injunctive relief decreed by the District Court is entirely adequate to eliminate any restraints in distribution or exhibition, we do so entirely on the basis that, assuming the findings and conclusions are correct, the relief is entirely adequate to cure all the illegalities.

A. Any Violation of the Sherman Act With Respect to Theatre Admission Prices Has Been Eliminated by the Judgment.

The nature of the "illegality" as to theatre admission prices.

It has been the practice in the past for all defendants including the eight distributor defendants to agree with each of its respective licensees that the licensee should charge no less than a stated admission price during the exhibition of the feature licensed. (See Find. 62, R. 3670.) The lower court found that the minimum admission prices included in the licenses of each of the eight distributor defendants for any given theatre are in general uniform, "being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitor" (Find. 63, R. 3670).

The District Court concluded that this provision as to minimum admission prices, when included in thousands of license agreements, had the effect of creating a fixed rigid structure of admission prices, not only as between the distributors and their various exhibitors, but as between all exhibitors in the area and as between the distributors themselves (Find. 71, R. 3672).

The court also took the position that the purpose and effect of this requirement of minimum admission prices is to encourage as many patrons as possible to see a feature in the prior-run theatres where they will pay higher prices than in the subsequent runs (Finds. 66, 72; R. 3671, 3672-3).

The lower court's conclusions of law (Nos. 7(a); 8(a) and (b); 9(c) and (d); R. 3691-3), followed a similar pattern, holding that these agreements of the distributor-defendants with their respective licensees violate the Sherman Law.

It should be made clear that the situation created by agreements as to minimum admission price has no relation to whether the distributor defendants should or should not own theatres. While the lower court found that Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner had an interest in maintaining subsequent run minimum admission prices in the areas where they owned theatres (Find. 66; R. 3671), this interest exists on the part of any prior run exhibitor, no matter who might own or operate the theatre. The prior run always has the desire to attract the greatest number of admissions away from the subsequent and into the prior run. Thus the distributors' practice of including a provision as to minimum admission prices in license agreements is common to affiliated and independent theatres alike. As the District Court said in its opinion (R. 3518):

> "The agreements [as to minimum admission prices] are not only between the distributor-defendants and other defendants owning theatres, but also between the distributor-defendants and independent theatre owners."

It should be obvious therefore that the separation of distribution and exhibition would work no elimination of the rigid admission price structure. Assuming such a condition to exist, this can only come through a prohibition against agreement between distributor and licensee as to the admission price which the latter shall charge at the exhibition of the feature. In this way, even where a distributor owns a prior run theatre it would be impossible for that distributor to restrict any competition as to admission prices which a subsequent run theatre might desire to exercise against the prior run house of the distributor. And this is exactly the remedy which the lower court has applied.

The remedy prescribed with respect to theatre admission prices.

Section II, paragraph 1 of the judgment (R. 3695) enjoins "each of the defendant distributors"

> "From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means."

It is respectfully submitted that this prohibition not only dissolves any "fixed system" as to theatre admission prices, but effectively takes care of every restraint or combination predicated on theatre admission price fixing.[1] Thus, every finding of fact[2] and every conclusion of law,[3] holding that the defendants, including Loew's, have acted illegally with respect to theatre admission prices, have been met completely by the decree.

---

[1]The Government charges on page 67 of its brief that while the judgment prohibits price-fixing, clearance largely controls the ability to charge higher prices, and by the distributor's control of the clearance of the prior run the admission prices of the subsequent run can be indirectly controlled. The fallacy in this argument is that the distributor does not have uncontrolled discretion concerning clearance agreements. The judgment, as well as the opinion of the District Court, specify clearly the guideposts to reasonable clearance. The imposition by a distributor of unreasonclearance for the purpose of compelling a subsequent run exhibitor to lower his admission price, or for any other purpose, would clearly therefore be a violation of the decree.

[2]Findings of Fact, Nos. 64 to 72, 84 and 154 (R. 3670-3, 3674, 3690).

[3]Conclusions of Law, Nos. 7(a), 8(a) and (b), and 9(c) and (d) (R. 3691-3).

B. Any Violation of the Sherman Act With Respect to Clearance Has Been Eliminated by the Judgment.

The nature of the "illegality" as to clearance.

While the lower court sustained the legality of clearance per se (Opinion, R. 3530-2), it found that the distributor defendants have acquiesced in and formed a uniform system of clearances and "in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents" (Find. 79, R. 3674). The gravamen of the lower court's finding as to clearance is not unlike that with regard to admission prices; that is, the distributor defendants have utilized over-long periods of clearance, in the same manner as maintenance of minimum admission prices, to restrict the competition which subsequent runs might otherwise give to prior exhibitors. In other words, by holding back the later exhibition date and requiring the exhibitor to maintain its admission price, the District Court concluded that greater patronage is funnelled into the more profitable prior exhibition (R. 3533).

One of the principal factors which the lower court relied upon in its condemnation of unreasonable clearances was the methods of the licensing that prevent changes in clearances which are unreasonable in length.

As evidence of this the lower court pointed to distributors' franchises, master agreements and formula deals. In describing the stabilizing effect that these methods of licensing have upon clearances, the lower court said (Opinion, R. 3537):

> "Many of the franchises, master agreements, and so-called 'formula deals' which are in evidence provide that clearances shall be the same as those in effect on the date of the agreement. * * * Some of the agreements establish clearances for more than a season. * * * Others provide that the clearance is to be no less favorable to the exhibitor than that which had been granted by the distributor for the previous season or in the preceding agreement."

The remedy prescribed with respect to clearance.

In the first place, the judgment enjoins all defendants from making or further performing any franchises, formula deals or master agreements. (Judgment, II, pars. 5 and 6, R. 3696.) Henceforth, features cannot be licensed on a circuit basis or on the basis of the season's output of a distributor. Each feature must be separately licensed to each theatre, "theatre by theatre and picture by picture." (Judgment, II, Par. 8, d, R. 3698.) In other words, the fixed stabilized condition of clearances maintained by means of these long term, broad-coverage agreements is dissolved.

In the second place, the judgment specifically enjoins the distributor-defendants from agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances. (Judgment, II, Par. 2; R. 3695.)

In the third place, the lower court has prohibited the granting of any clearance "whatsoever between theatres not in substantial competition." (Judgment, II, Par. 3, R. 3695.)

The lower court prescribes a fourth remedy. It prohibits the distributor defendants from

> "granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted." (Judgment, II, par. 4, R. 3695-6.)

Finally, the lower court has provided that "Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof." (Judgment, II, par. 4, R. 3695-6).

It is respectfully submitted that the first four injunctions, from which Loew's has not appealed, not only dissolve contractual means whereby clearances were "frozen" but assure the elimination of any fixed system of clearance or of any unreasonable clearances. The final directive, however, is wholly unnecessary to correct any of the illegalities found with respect to clearance. The defendant Loew's has assigned as error (R. 3732) this shifting of the burden of proof, and its argument with respect thereto is presented in Point VII of this brief (p. 139).

Once more it might be noted that theatre ownership on the part of distributors is not the root of this problem. Every distributor is interested in "protecting" as much as possible the more lucrative prior run, regardless of whether the distributor owns or operates theatres, for it is from the prior run that the distributor derives its larger film rentals (which are essential, if great, high-cost pictures are to be produced).

Even if distributors were compelled to give up exhibition, this powerful incentive to limit the competition for the prior run theatre would still remain. Of course, the prior run exhibitor, whether or not it is affiliated with a distributor, has a similar interest.

In other words, the same forces which make for stabilized, uniform and unreasonable clearances would still exist, regardless of who owned or operated theatres. The only effective relief, therefore, is that which prevents distributors and exhibitors from giving vent to these forces—from making the license agreements which create the fixed system of clearances and the unreasonable clearances found by the court below. This is precisely the relief prescribed in the decree.

C. Competitive Bidding and the Injunction Against Arbitrary Refusal to License The Run Demanded by any Exhibitor Will Effectively Prevent any Violation of the Sherman Act with Respect to the Granting of Run.

The nature of the "illegality" as to runs.

A further area in which the Government claimed and the lower court found restraint of trade, is in the selection by distributors of the exhibitors to whom they license the prior runs of their feature pictures. Here again, so far as the court's conclusion is concerned, the fundamental evil lies in the stabilized, unchangeable condition with respect to the runs granted by the defendant distributors. As in the case of clearance, a factor contributing to the fixed condition as to runs has been the long-term licensing agreements, such as franchises, and licenses on a circuit basis (e.g. master agreements, formula deals), which preclude consideration of local situations.

Said the lower court in its opinion:

> "Much that has been said about clearances is applicable also to runs; the two are practically alike. Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent run, and the practice of clearance is so closely allied with that of run as to make comment on the one applicable to the other." (R. 3538).
>
> * * *
>
> "Arrangements whereby all the theatres of a circuit are included in a single agreement, and no opportunity is afforded for other theatre owners to bid for > the picture in their several areas, seriously and as we hold unreasonably restrain competition. These formula deals have been negotiated without, so far as we have informed, any competition on the part of independent theatre owners who would labor under a great disadvantage in attempting severally to match or outbid the offers of a circuit that was making offers for all of its theatres." (R. 3541)

Also making for the stabilized condition of runs is the distributors' practice of doing business on a given run with a satisfactory "old-customer" in preference to an exhibitor who may have a theatre more suitable for the run theretofore licensed to the old customer. Thus, the District Court held that exhibitors have no fair chance to license the runs to which they are entitled on the merits of the situation.

It was all of the foregoing which led the lower court to make the following findings (R. 3674):

> "82. The defendants have acted in concert in their grant of run and clearance."

> "84. Both independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with the defendants, have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatre or theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures."

The remedies prescribed with respect to run.

As it did in the case of admission prices and clearance, the lower court, in its decree, has eliminated completely every means which the lower court held had contributed in any manner to the fixed system of runs that it had found. In addition it has affirmatively provided the machinery which effectuates and guarantees competition in the granting of runs to all exhibitors.

To be specific, the court has prescribed four definite remedies. The first is the prohibition against further use of formula deals, franchises and master agreements. (Judgment, II, pars. 5-7; R. 3696). Not only that, but the decree compels distributors to license their pictures theatre by theatre and picture by picture. (Judgment, II, par. 8(d); R. 3698). Thus, contractual techniques, which in the past have precluded the opening up of the run situation are eliminated both by specific prohibition against their continued use and by affirmative direction that each theatre and each picture be handled individually so as to permit comparison on the merits.

The second remedy is a specific prohibition against favoring the "old customers" or "affiliates." Paragraph 8(b) of Section II of the judgment provides:

> "Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others;" (R. 3696-7)

These first two remedies open up the field by laying specific prohibitions on the distributor. The third remedy, while also operating as against the distributor, in actuality gives to every exhibitor the affirmative means for obtaining any run of a distributor's picture, to which the exhibitor as against its competitors is entitled on the merits; the only exception being that if a distributor happens to have its own theatre in the area, it can show its own pictures there without observing this requirement. Thus Paragraph 9 of Section II of the judgment enjoins each distributor,

> "From arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with another theatre not owned or operated by a defendant distributor, or its affiliate or subsidiary, made by registered mail, addressed to the home office of the distributor, to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor, instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. Such demand shall be deemed to have been refused either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of a refusal in writing or upon the expiration of ten days after the receipt of the exhibitor's demand." (R. 3698)

The effect of this provision is to compel a distributor, under penalty of contempt, to recognize the written demand of an exhibitor for a run to which the latter is entitled on the merits. The exhibitor, by offering terms for any run, which are superior to those offered by any other competing exhibitor will thereby get that run. Thus, Paragraph 9 of Section II of the judgment, in and of itself, accomplishes a fundamental change in the licensing practices of distributors. It imposes upon them the obligation to consider the relative merits of competing exhibitors and their theatres and to license the feature accordingly.

It is highly significant, we submit, that the Government has not offered a single argument against the adequacy of this paragraph of the judgment to prevent any discrimination with respect to the granting of run. Nowhere in its brief does it even refer to this paragraph.

In addition to all the foregoing the lower court has prescribed "competitive bidding."

It is the view of the defendant-appellee Loew's that the competitive bidding prescribed by the judgment is a machinery laid out by the court to assure further that runs be granted on the merits and that distributors do not arbitrarily determine, on a basis of "old customer", "affiliation" and the like, which theatre shall be licensed a particular run of a particular picture.

In other words, "competitive bidding" affords an optional means to an exhibitor, in addition to the written demand of Paragraph 9 of Section II, whereby he can make certain that he is not being discriminated against so far as his run position is concerned. The optional aspect, which we refer to, was specifically mentioned by the lower court in its supplementary memorandum of December 31, 1946, filed with the judgment (see R. 3702). There the court said:

> "In order to meet some of the objections raised at the hearing to the system of bidding for features described in the opinion of the court, we have modified the system there proposed so that competitive bidding will only be necessary within a competitive area and in such an area where it is desired by the exhibitors. In other words, the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so."

This machinery of competitive bidding probably is not perfect in every detail but behind it all is the clear cut principle inherent in Paragraph 9 of Section II of the judgment that the run of a feature must be granted to the exhibitor offering the best terms for it. With this in mind, it is believed that the methods prescribed by the judgment can be put into effect. After an experimental period, it will be possible to go back to the lower court and point out with facts derived from experience where the machinery is weak or requires clarification and wherein it should be changed. It is to be noted that the court has specifically reserved jurisdiction for such a purpose.[1]

At such time as may be appropriate, Loew's will be prepared to offer proof as to its experience with competitive bidding. Following the District Court's proposal of competitive bidding and even though the provisions of the judgment dealing with competitive bidding have been stayed pending the outcome of these appeals, Loew's has been conducting competitive bidding on an experimental basis. The type of proof which it will be prepared to offer is summarized below and the underlying detail is submitted in a schedule under separate cover.

Loew's is licensing its pictures by competitive bidding in 96 situations throughout the United States. This competitive bidding has been and is being conducted in accordance with the principle underlying Paragraph 8, Section II of the District Court Judgment (R. 3696-8), of awarding the feature picture to the exhibitor offering the best terms, without, however, following all the detailed procedure therein set forth. In this bidding, there are 281 theatres involved. The locations of each of these situations, the theatres involved, their seating capacities,

---

[1]Judgment Section VIII reads as follows (R. 3701):

"Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the judgment and no others, to apply to the court at any time for such orders or direction as may be necssary or appropriate for the construction, modification, or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief."

the names of their operators, the status of the operator (i.e., affiliated, independent circuit or small independent), and the number of pictures which each theatre has obtained by this method are included in this schedule submitted under separate cover.

In 40 of the 96 situations where Loew's is licensing its features by this method, a producer-exhibitor is involved. Theatres affiliated with Paramount (which opposes competitive bidding; Paramount's Assignment No. 27; R. 3745-6) are involved in 24 of these 40 situations. Theatres affiliated with Fox, are involved in 11 of these situations, with Warner in 7, and with RKO in 2. To date the affiliated theatres have obtained 293 pictures by competitive bidding and the competing independent theatres, 414.

In 24 of the 96 situations, where independent circuits and a small independent operator are involved, the independent circuits obtained 129 features by competitive bidding and the small independent operator, 212.

In the remaining 32 situations the bidding occurred between two small independents in 23 situations and between two independent circuits in 9.

None of the foregoing is in evidence in this case. It has all occurred since the date of the District Court's opinion. We emphasize, however, that it represents the kind of proof Loew's will be prepared to offer at such time as it may be appropriate for the District Court to amend or to modify the details or to consider the effectiveness of its decree.

We respectfully submit that this type of evidence, when offered, will be far more useful to a court in evaluating the adequacy of this relief than the untried theories now expounded by Government's counsel in their brief.

As this Court said recently in International Salt Company v. United States (No. 46, this Term):

> The District Court has retained jurisdiction, by the terms of its judgment, for the purpose of 'enabling any of the parties to apply to the court at any time for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the judgment' and 'for the amendment, modification or termination of any of its provisions . . .' We think it would not be good judicial administration to strike paragraph VI from the judgment to meet a hypothetical situation when the District Court has purposely left the way open to remedy any such situations if and when the need arises. The factual basis of the claim for modification should appear in evidentiary form before the District Court rather than in the argumentative form in which it is before us. Nor are we impressed that this will require a multitude of separate applications. Once the concrete problem is before the District Court it will no doubt be able to fashion a provision that will avoid repetitious applications which would be as vexatious to the Court as to the litigants. We leave the appellant to proper application to the court below and deny the relief here, upon the present state of the record, without prejudice."

There is strong indication that much of the intervenor-amici objection to the machinery of competitive bidding, and to the court's decree with regard thereto, arises more from the fundamental requirement that pictures should be licensed on a basis which makes them available to all comers, picture by picture and theatre by theatre, than it does to mere weaknesses in the machinery.

In the case of would-be intervenors this criticism of the machinery of competitive bidding—which in truth is an attack on the fundamental proposition of opening up the field of runs—arises from an admitted desire to continue the status quo.

As indication of this we respectfully refer the Court to the argument of Mr. Robert T. Barton, of counsel to some 2200 independent exhibitors located in the southern states (R. 2834).

Mr. Barton sought to intervene in the lower court on behalf of these exhibitors, W. C. Allred et al. (as he seeks to do in this court) and vigorously opposed the lower court's remedy of competitive bidding. After referring at some length to the problems of "auction-selling" (R. 2838 et seq.), which is not involved in any event,[1] Mr. Barton pointed out (R. 2841, 2847-8):

> "Under the present system, by the course of barter and trade and negotiation, the smaller houses do get first run pictures. They may have [built up], over a period of years, a course of dealing with some producer which has been beneficial to the producer and beneficial to the exhibitor."
>
> * * * *
>
> "Mr. Barton: As far as I know, no, sir, none of my clients have complained of the present system of doing business, and they feel that they can by

[1] Mr. Wright for the plaintiff (R. 2879-8): "We have not understood the Court's opinion as advocating the institution of an administered system of actual auction sales of motion pictures. We read it merely as advocating a competitive disposition of runs by which two or more competing exhibitors might seek to exclude each other in providing that in order to prevent discrimination in awarding such runs, that the high bid, or high offer, in financial terms, should prevail."

Judge Hand (R. 2897): "We never said it should be put on an auction block anyway."

barter and trade and the sense they may put in their transactions properly and efficiently conduct their negotiations with the distributors.

Judge Hand: Then fortunately or unfortunately you do not represent the class that objects to the status quo. They are well satisfied. But there seems to be a very large class that does.

Mr. Barton: As to those—and there may be among my clients—these 20 representatives of two or three thousand theatres, there may be a number of whom I do not know who do object. You asked me if I personally knew. But they have said in meetings that they believe that the other strictures which the Court proposes to impose will be adequate to take care of the situation. They think more harm will result to them from auction selling than will be gained by that."

In addition to speaking for the "old-customer" theory and expressing satisfaction with the "status quo", Mr. Barton disclosed that his clients had been and apparently still were, "violently opposed" to the requirement of picture by picture and theatre by theatre licensing and were in favor of block-booking (R. 2846).

Substantially similar criticism was advanced on behalf of The American Theatres Association, another would-be intervenor represented by Mr. Thurman Arnold (R. 2820-2833).

It is against this background of opposition to the fundamental principle of opening up the field of runs to all comers, that these vociferous criticisms to the inadequacies of the machinery should be viewed. While the defendant Loew's did not seek nor initiate the competitive bidding outlined in the decree of the court below, it contends that it will assure competitive licensing of pictures, and accordingly it is willing to try it. It is to be expected that after experience the mechanics can be altered, if necessary, to accomplish the fundamental purpose which the court had in mind, which is to open the field of run to competitive conditions.

In view of the outspoken criticism of "competitive bidding" it is interesting to note that it had its origin in paragraphs 113 and 122 of the Government's amended and supplemental complaint (R. 3173, 3177). In those paragraphs it is alleged:

> "The distributor ordinarily negotiates the rental terms to be paid without any competitive bidding and only if an agreement is not reached with the exhibitor with whom negotiations for a certain run are started are negotiations undertaken with a competing exhibitor for that run."
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> "By establishing the runs and protections with respect to all the theatres in the circuit, these franchises deny to other theatres, during their term, the opportunity to bid for or to license the runs of pictures covered by such a franchise in competition with the circuit theatres."

In other words, at the time this pleading was filed in 1940 it was the Government's view that the requirements of the Sherman Act demanded that all theatres have "opportunity to bid for or to license the runs of pictures." This relief has now been granted. Its efficacy, when taken with the other injunctive provisions of the decree, can best be determined after a period of experience.

Answering Specific Statements in the Government's Brief Re Competitive Bidding

While we believe that the appropriate time to refute the unsupported assertions included in the Government's brief in opposition to competitive bidding would be in the District Court by competent proof, we cannot permit certain of these contentions to go unchallenged. We shall consider them briefly below.

1.

> "The competitive bidding system has not been suggested or discussed by any of the parties." (Government's brief p. 40)

If the portions of the Government's amended and supplemental complaint quoted on the preceding page did not suggest competitive bidding, it defies the imagination as to what the pleader had in mind.

2.

> "* * * the affiliated exhibitor has the great advantage of the assured supply of its own distributor pictures. The independent has no assured supply and must compete with the affiliated exhibitor for the product of the other distributors." (Government's brief p. 62)

The Copyright Act which gives the right to the copyright owner to exhibit its own product to the exclusion of others is a sufficient answer to this point. Furthermore, the Government's argument is predicated upon an assumption that all competitors should be reduced to the same level. Certainly the Sherman Act was never intended to accomplish this purpose.

3.

"Independents are now in such a weakened bidding position due in large part to the defendants' long continued unlawful conduct that they cannot successfully compete with the major defendants for films." (Government's brief p. 50)

There is absolutely no proof whatsoever in this record even intimating that the independents lack the financial resources with which to bid. There is, on the contrary, affirmative proof in the record that the total number of theatres operating in the United States have increased by 5,471 in the thirteen years preceding the hearings in this case (Exh. L-12) of which approximately 4,800 were independents.[1] Furthermore, at the appropriate time, if it were necessary, Loew's would offer proof that the independent theatres have successfully bid for feature pictures against theatres affiliated with producer-exhibitors, as well as against large circuits.

4.

"'The independent will be attempting to break into a monopolized field against powerful corporations backed by great wealth and resources." (Government's brief p. 62)

In the first place, the characterization "a monopolized field" is contrary to the District Court's holding of no individual or collective monopolization and we have shown that any charges of monopolization against the defendant Loew's is wholly without support.

[1]Cf. Government's Brief, p. 17.

Secondly, the judgment specifically provides that features shall be licensed picture by picture and theatre by theatre and solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others. (Section II, 8 (b) and (d); R. 3697-8)

On the appropriate occasion, Loew's will be prepared to demonstrate by proof that the independent has been able to bid successfully for pictures.

5.

> "Finally, in many cities it will be difficult, if not impossible, for the independents to obtain theatres." (Government's brief p. 63)

Again, there is absolutely no proof in the record to sustain this assertion. Indeed, it is directly contradicted by the evidence of the vast increase in the number of operating theatres for over a decade preceding the hearings in this case. (Find. 145; R. 3688)

6.

> "But; undoubtedly, the majors will continue to do business with the same distributors as before and simply out-bid the independent, thereby preventing him from getting any pictures or at least any more than he formerly had. Having the pictures, the major defendants can continue with their clearance over subsequent runs and maintain the same pattern of protection and price control as was created by the conspiracy. (Government's brief, p. 68)

This charge unjustifiably assumes first that the producer-exhibitors will necessarily outbid the independent and secondly, that if a producer-exhibitor licenses pictures from other producer-exhibitors there will be continued the restraint found by the lower court.

As to the first asumption, the defendant Loew's is prepared to offer competent proof that this has not happened and is not likely to happen. As to the second assumption, the Government ignores completely the rigid injunctions imposed by the District Court against unreasonable clearances, admission price-fixing the use of formula deals, franchises and master agreements.

7.

"The competitive bidding system is unworkable." (Government's brief, p. 69)

Again, at the appropriate time Loew's is prepared to demonstrate with proof that competitive bidding is working and is workable. If the detailed procedure outlined by the District Court requires amendment or modification, the necessary adjustments can be made by the District Court on proof born of experience.

Moreover, if there is question about the workability of competitive bidding, that could readily be eliminated by continuing the arbitration system and by adapting it to settling disputes with respect to competitive bidding. The five major defendants have consented to the maintenance of the arbitration tribunals of which the District Court said: "These tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both Government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded." (District Court Memorandum in re Findings and Decree R. 3702). We submit that it was within the power of the District Court to continue the arbitration system and to amplify its jurisdiction at least insofar as those five defendants are concerned. (See Point IX of this brief p. 142)

D. Any Violation of the Sherman Act with respect to Theatre Operation has been Eliminated by the Judgment.

Certain of the District Court's findings of fact or parts thereof and certain of its conclusions of law set forth illegalities found against Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner, exclusively as exhibitors or theatre operators. This point D is directed to demonstrating how those illegalities have been eliminated either by the direct injunction of the judgment or by future prohibition of the distribution practices.

(1) "Pooling" agreements have been eliminated by the judgment.

The first of these illegalities had to do with "pooling" agreements and profit-sharing leases. Both types of these arrangements were exclusively local. By "pooling" agreements, theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition with each other, were jointly operated and their profits pooled and divided according to pre-agreed percentages. Profit-sharing leases, according to the District Court, accomplished the same results (Finds. 112-114; R. 3682). Both were found to violate the Sherman Act and have been henceforth prohibited (Concl. 9 (a); R. 3693; Judgment, III (2) and (3); R. 3698-9).

On December 31, 1946, when the judgment of the District Court was entered the defendant Loew's was not a party to any profit-sharing lease either with another defendant or with an independent. At the time it was a party to a pooling agreement in only two places in the United States. One was Pittsburgh, Pa., involving four theatres, and the other was Astoria, Long Island, involving five theatres.[1] (Gov't Exhs. 213, 220)

The pooling agreements in the two localities mentioned have now been dissolved and terminated in accordance with the requirement of the judgment, from which Loew's has not appealed.

(2) "Joint Ownerships" have been eliminated by the judgment.

A second form of theatre operation which the District Court has found illegal is the so-called "joint ownership" of theatres by two or more theatre operators, either affiliated or independent. With respect to this situation, the District Court found (R. 3682-3):

> "115. Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, together with another exhibitor-defendant, in some cases in conjunction with independents. These joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively. When a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, such an interest is de minimis and only to be treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition.

[1]The Government sets forth in the appendix to its brief at pages 208 to 255 the theatre interests of the producer-exhibitors and labels certain of them, "pools". We see no reason at this time to point out the inaccuracies of the Government in labeling certain theatre interests of Loew's as pools which under the District Court's clear cut definition are not, in fact, pools. Nor is there any need, at this time, to specify the erroneous designations at page 160, et seq. of the Government's appendix of certain agreements as "theatre operating agreements", most of which, as to Loew's, are not, in fact, operating agreements at all, but merely ordinary non-profit sharing leases.

116. When theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. The major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently."

A brief examination of the District Court's finding of fact No. 117 (R. 3683) will disclose that Loew's is a participant only to a very minor degree in "joint ownerships". The judgment directs that such relationships "shall be terminated within two years"[1] (R. 3699). The defendant

[1]The Government argues at pages 115 to 119 of its brief that the District Court erred in providing that a producer-exhibitor's joint interest with an independent may be dissolved either by a sale to the independent or a third party or by purchase from the independent and, if in the latter case, only after a showing to the satisfaction of the court that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. The Government argues that under United States v. Crescent, 323 U. S. 173 the defendants must be compelled to sell in every case because "only by such a sale may the defendants be deprived of the fruits of their unlawful conduct." The fallacy of this argument is supplied by the Government itself at page 116: "The Court made no inquiry into the precise circumstances under which any particular interest had been acquired * * *". Thus so far as this record is concerned every joint interest between Loew's and an independent should be assumed to have occurred in a perfectly lawful manner. The example referred to by the Government on page 116 of its brief: "For example, Loew's did not license its films for a first-run moreover to independent theatres in Atlanta, Georgia, and Providence, Rhode Island, until it had acquired a 50% interest in them (R. 578-579)", is no evidence whatever concerning the legality or illegality of the interest there involved. The only manner in which the legality of any joint interest can be determined is by competent evidence which could be supplied at the time when application may be made to the court for the Loew's has joint ownerships with defendants in only two places in the United States: Buffalo, N. Y., and Denver, Colorado. As to these joint ownerships with defendants Loew's presses no appeal. On the other hand, the defendant Loew's challenges the District Court's decision with regard to joint ownerships between a defendant and an independent, and it appeals from that part of the findings, conclusions and judgment below which hold such relations per se illegal. Its appeal in that regard is presented in Point VI of this brief (pp. 135-138).

(3) All trade practices wherein the defendants have been found to violate the Sherman Act as exhibitors have been eliminated by the prohibition against such practices on the part of distributors.

The trade practices wherein the defendants were found to have violated the Sherman Act, qua exhibitors, are the same trade practices wherein the eight defendants are held to have violated the Sherman Act, as distributors. Thus, Conclusion of Law No. 9 (R. 3693) holds:

> "The exhibitor-defendants, * * * have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures both before and after the entry of said consent decree, in violation of the Sherman Act by:
>
> * * *
>
> (c) Conspiring with each other and with the distributor-defendants to fix substantially uniform

---

purchase of the interest of the independent as provided in the decree. The requirement in the judgment for prior court approval is complete assurance that no illegality can result from the acquisition from an independent of any joint interest by any defendant.

minimum motion pictures theatre admission prices, runs, and clearances;

(d) Conspiring with the distributor-defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission price, run, clearance and other license terms."

We have heretofore shown how the District Court has eliminated all illegalities with respect to admission prices, clearance and run, by specific injunction against the distributors (Judgment, II; R. 3695). Since the eight distributor-defendants are thus prohibited from engaging in these trade practices, it naturally follows that it is impossible for the exhibitor-defendants to do so.

ARGUMENT AS APPELLANT ON APPEAL NO. 80

Point IV.

THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN FINDING AND CONCLUDING THAT LOEW'S AND THE OTHER DEFENDANTS COMBINED AND CONSPIRED TO RESTRAIN TRADE IN DISTRIBUTION AND EXHIBITION OF MOTION PICTURES.

The defendant-appellant Loew's assignments of errors, Nos. 3-13, 15-18, 20-24, 32, 36 and 37 (R. 3728-3736), challenge the findings, conclusions and portions of the judgment dealing with the District Court's decision that the eight defendants by certain trade practices conspired and combined to restrain trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

The District Court's findings of the existence of combination and conspiracy to restrain trade are not predicated upon any specific agreement among either the eight or the five defendants. The record is utterly barren of any such proof. Indeed, there is specific testimony to the contrary on the part of each defendant (R. 535, 1843, 1849, 1110, 685, 1725, 1512). The findings of combination and conspiracy to restrain trade rest entirely upon inferences, inferences which in turn rest solely on trade practices.

We must emphasize that there is in the case at bar no evidence that any of the defendants, individually or in combination, committed any predatory act against an independent. Indeed, the plaintiff did not offer the testimony of one single exhibitor that he had been injured by any activity of the defendants. The entire case of combination and conspiracy to restrain trade rests upon the licensing practices such as minimum admission prices in license contracts, clearances, runs, and methods of licensing, i.e. formula deals, master agreements and franchises.

It is Loew's position that none of these licensing practices or the conditions flowing therefrom warrant the drawing of an inference that the defendants have combined and conspired. Its argument with respect to each of these trade practices is briefly summarized below:

Minimum Admission Prices

The District Court drew the inference that the defendant distributors had combined and conspired with respect to admission prices from what it termed uniformity of action among the distributors. "Such uniformity of action spells a deliberately unlawful system," according to the District Court (Opinion, R. 3524).

In considering the question of admission prices it should be made clear at the outset that there is absolutely no proof of uniformity in theatre admission prices as between competing theatres. The uniformity exists only in the case of a single theatre. It occurs in the separate contracts made between a theatre operator and the various defendant-distributors who license their features for exhibition in that theatre. In each of these contracts there is set forth a minimum admission price which the theatre operator agrees to charge during the exhibition of the feature licensed (Find. 62; R. 3670). The court found, "There exists great similarity, and in many cases identity, in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatres in the licenses of all of the defendants" (Find. 66; R. 3671). However, there is not one particle of evidence that this similarity, identity or uniformity in the minimum admission price contained in the contracts of the various distributors licensing the same theatre is the result of agreement between the distributors.

In that regard, the case at bar differs decisively from the conventional price-fixing cases, such as United States v. Trenton Potteries, 273 U. S. 392, United States v. Masonite Corporation, 316 U. S. 265, or Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208. Here, the alleged price-fixing combination is predicated solely on an inference drawn from the fact of uniformity itself. But that uniformity occurs solely because the theatre operator, as a matter of good showmanship, continues a constant admission price from day to day no matter whose feature is being exhibited, and from the fact that it is he, the theatre operator, who sets the minimum admission price which he will charge and which appears in his license agreements with the various distributors. The District Court itself found (R. 3670):

> "63. The minimum admission prices included in licenses of each of the eight distributor-defendants for any given theatre are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitor."

This uniformity in the case at bar, therefore, does not establish the existence of a price-fixing system set up by the concerted action of the distributors. At most, it is evidence of exhibitors themselves catering to their steady customers to whom frequent changes in admission prices of a theatre are irritating and annoying.

While all distributors licensing a given theatre obviously know the admission price "currently charged by the exhibitor", it is the latter alone who, by the constancy of the price which he charges for admission to his theatre, is responsible for the uniformity in the minimum prices specified in his separate contracts with the respective distributors. Indeed, it is difficult to conceive how dissimilarity could be injected into the admission prices at which the various distributors' pictures are exhibited to the public without a distributor actually interfering with and determining the admission price policy of the exhibitor against his will.

In the past the only contractual deterrent to an exhibitor's changing the admission price of his theatre at relatively short intervals was the long term license agreement, i.e. the franchise or the former practice of licensing a season's product under a single agreement. It might be argued that a provision with respect to minimum admission prices when included in these methods of licensing introduced immutability in a single theatre's admission prices and in turn created, as to a larger number of theatres, what amounted to a fixed system of admission prices, as the District Court found (Find. 64; R. 3670-1). The facts are, however, that since the time of the consent decree in 1940 Loew's had made absolutely no franchises and has followed a practice of licensing pictures in small blocks (generally not more than five), (R. 426-427, 552; Find. 94; R. 3676). And the same is true as to the other four consenting defendants (Find. 94; R. 3676). Furthermore, at the time of the trial Loew's had outstanding no franchise agreements for any theatre in which it did not have an interest (Find. 90, R. 3675). It is entirely clear, therefore, that for the five years preceding the hearings in the lower court all exhibitors to whom Loew's licensed its pictures were entirely free to alter their admission prices at relatively short intervals as they saw fit.

Since we have demonstrated the reasons why uniformity has occurred in the minimum admission prices contained in the respective license agreements of the distributors licensing a given theatre and since Government's counsel offered no proof whatsoever to challenge these lawful business reasons, we submit that the District Court's inference or presumption, which rests solely on uniformity, was improperly drawn as a matter of law.

> "Presumptions are indulged to supply the place of facts; they are never allowed against ascertained and established facts. When these appear, presumptions disappear." Lincoln v. French, 105 U. S. 614, 617.

See also, Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. Chamberlain, Administratrix, 288 U. S. 333, 340-341; Fresh v. Gilson, et al., 41 U. S. 327, 331.

It was only upon the basis of this combination or conspiracy improperly inferred from uniformity, that the District Court henceforth enjoined the inclusion in license contracts of any provision with respect to minimum admission price (Judgment, II, 1; R. 3695; see Opinion, R. 3520-4). That injunction, we submit, is wholly unwarranted not only because the inference of combination and conspiracy was error, but because it is rendered unnecessary by the requirement of the judgment that henceforth all the defendant distributors must license on a picture by picture basis (Judgment, II, 1; R. 3695), a provision of the judgment to which the defendant Loew's has not assigned error.

This picture by picture licensing, unrestricted by long term agreements, will eliminate any possibility of a fixed system of prices from which the exhibitor cannot deviate.

Henceforth the inclusion of a minimum admission price in this form of license agreement will not be a fixing of the admission prices in any sense by the distributor. Its only effect will be to assure the distributor (particularly in the case of licenses based upon a percentage of the gross) of the film revenue under the license which was negotiated and granted on the basis of the admission price which the exhibitor determined to charge during the exhibition of the particular feature in question, a contractual protection to which the distributor is clearly entitled under the provisions of the Copyright Law, 17 U. S. C. Section 1; Appendix I, hereto. (As to this right of the distributor to insert a minimum admission price in a license agreement see Point VIII of this brief at pages 119-120.)

Clearance

The District Court held that "the distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they license their films and that the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system." (Opinion R. 3584) Findings and conclusions of law that the defendant-distributors have combined and conspired with respect to clearance were likewise made (Finds. 79-82 and 84; Concls. 7(b), 8(c) and 9(c); R. 3674, 3692-3). To these findings and conclusions the defendant Loew's has assigned error (Nos. 15-18 and 20-24; R. 3743-3745).

As in the case of minimum admission prices, the lower court's decision that the defendants have combined and conspired with respect to clearance rests solely upon infer- ence. This inference is drawn from the uniformity of the periods of clearance granted to a given theatre by the distributors licensing that theatre, and from the fact that the period of clearance for each such theatre remains constant for relatively long periods of time.

Here as in the case of admission prices there is a lawful business explanation of this uniformity and constancy, sufficient to rebut any inference of conspiracy.

The reason for uniformity as to clearance is, however, not the same as in the case of minimum admission prices. In the latter case it was due to the inclusion in an exhibitor's license agreements with his respective distributors of "the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitor" (Find. 63; R. 3670); in other words, the uniformity was due to the exhibitor's fixing a price for admission to his theatre and continuing that price no matter whose picture was exhibited.

Clearance, on the other hand, is not fixed by the exhibitor alone. It is determined as a result of negotiation between the prior-run operator and the distributor licensing him a feature. The theatre operator obviously seeks to obtain the maximum period over the competing subsequent runs. The distributor on his part, however, contemplates licensing his picture to other operators and for that reason negotiates with the prior-run the proper period that should elapse before the picture is again shown in that competitive area. That period is controlled by such factors as size, location, transit facilities, etc. relative to the theatres involved (Opinion, R. 3533-4). Those factors are the criteria of clearance no matter whose pictures are involved. Consequently whatever period is proper as to one distributor is proper as to others.

There are additional perfectly lawful reasons which also make for uniformity as to clearance. One of the important aspects in the operation of a theatre is the "booking" of pictures licensed. In booking his theatre, a subsequent run exhibitor finds it most difficult, if not impossible, to book his theatre if he is subject to varying clearances from different distributors. In the case of a subsequent run exhibitor playing double features and changing his program two or three times a week, there is involved the booking of two or three hundred pictures a year. Thus it is the exhibitor who insists upon being subject to the same clearance from all distributors from whom he licenses pictures so that his booking problem will be facilitated (R. 714). In the case of prior-run exhibitors, there is also an insistence upon the part of such exhibitor to obtain from every distributor the longest period of clearance which he has been able to negotiate from any of them (R. 711). It is thus clear that uniformity in clearance as to a particular theatre is not the result of any agreement or concerted action among distributors, but on the contrary, it is only the result of these practical considerations inherent in the business which impel exhibitors and not distributors to seek uniform clearances.

Cogent proof that these are the reasons for uniformity of clearance and not any conspiracy or combination among distributors, is found in the fact that of the hundreds of cases as to clearance tried and determined by the Arbitrators and the Appeal Board under the Arbitration System established by the consent decree, not one decision specifies a different clearance as applying to different distributors.

The action of the arbitrators and Appeal Board in making the same findings of clearance with respect to each of the consenting defendants is of particular significance.

Sitting as independent outside arbiters, over a period of years, and making their determinations only after listening to the witnesses and receiving detailed evidence underlying each situation, they have come to the conclusion in each instance that the same clearance should apply to each distributor.

Similarly the fact that clearance between two theatres remains constant over relatively long periods of time offers no basis for inferring combination or conspiracy among distributors. Because the factors or criteria determining clearance, such as size, location, transit facilities, etc., relative to the theatres in question, by their very nature usually remain constant, it is to be expected that the period of clearance once determined will not change. In this connection it should be noted that there has not been a single case since the inception of the Arbitration System under the consent decree in 1940 where an exhibitor because of changed conditions sought a modification of an award fixing the maximum clearance. This opportunity for modification of an award based upon change in conditions was afforded every exhibitor by section VIII of the consent decree (R. 3379-81).

The lower court placed reliance on the long term license agreements, i.e. franchises as well as the license agreements covering one season, as tending to impart permanency to periods of clearance (Opinion, R. 3537-8). However, in this connection it is again important to note that commencing with the consent decree in 1940, five years prior to the hearings in this case, the five major defendants discontinued granting either franchises or license agreements covering even one season (Consent Decree, IV; R. 3375). Since the consent decree Loew's practice has been to license pictures in relatively small blocks or individually as to special features (Find. 94; R. 3576; R. 552).

Further disproving any combination or conspiracy among the distributors as to clearance is the undertaking, embodied in the consent decree, by the five consenting defendants to permit the arbitration of the reasonableness of any clearance. Prior to the consent decree a distributor had entire discretion in the granting of clearance. The surrender of this prerogative in 1940 by the five consenting distributors is fundamentally inconsistent with a finding that Loew's was engaging in a conspiracy with these other four defendants to forward a uniform system of clearances.

Upon the foregoing we submit that the District Court erred in its findings and conclusions that Loew's together with the other defendants combined and conspired with respect to clearance.

Run

The District Court found that "The defendants have acted in concert in their grant of run" and that "Both independent distributors and exhibitors, when attempting to bargain with the defendants have been met by a fixed scale of clearance, runs, and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform, if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendant's theatre or theatres to which the latter had licensed their pictures." (Finds. 82, 84; R. 3674). Corresponding conclusions of law that the defendants had combined and conspired with respect to run were made (Concls. 7(b), 8(c) and 9(c) and (d); R. 3691-3693). The appellant Loew's has assigned error to these findings and conclusions (Nos. 17, 20-22; R. 3732-3733).

Whether or not Loew's has combined and conspired with the other defendants to create a fixed system of runs can only be determined by examining its activities as a distributor and as an exhibitor in the licensing of runs.

The defendant Loew's offered detailed, specific proof with respect to its activities as a distributor (R. 450-499), and this proof established that in licensing its product, Loew's was guided solely by the merits of the theatres involved and by the maximum revenue it could obtain from the theatres licensed. The witness Rodgers, who was the official responsible for setting the sales policy in connection with the licensing of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures testified that the theatres which received these pictures first-run in the 92 largest cities in the country, were the ones from which he anticipated greatest revenue (R. 476, 574). The Government offered not one jot of proof in rebuttal. We submit that the uncontradicted testimony in this regard rebuts any inference of conspiracy in the granting of run.

The Government's statistical presentation indicating that in the majority of the 92 largest cities Metro pictures are licensed first-run for exhibition in affiliated theatres is of no significance whatsoever to prove that these theatres were licensed pursuant to a conspiracy. In the first place, 36 of the 92 cities are accounted for by reason of the fact that Loew's operates its own first-run theatres there (Find. 149, R. 3689). As to the remaining cities, where Loew's has no theatres, Government counsel offered no proof whatsoever that any independent operator was entitled on the merits of the situation to the run that Loew's licensed to another producer-exhibitor. On the contrary, there is affirmative proof that the affiliated theatres so licensed by Loew's were better than or at least as good as any of the independent theatres (R. 450-499).

With respect to Loew's activities as an exhibitor, the District Court made specific factual findings which disprove any combination or conspiracy on its part with respect to the licensing of run. These findings, Nos. 131 to 135 (R. 3686-3687), show that the other four producer-exhibitor defendants licensed first-run of their respective pictures to Loew's competitors (including independents) to a far greater extent than to Loew's. As heretofore pointed out Loew's operates theatres in 36 of the 92 cities with over 100,000 population. In 21 of those 36 cities during the 1943-1944 season, every one of the other four producer-exhibitors regularly licensed their product first-run not to Loew's theatres, but to other theatres in direct competition with Loew's (Find. 131; R. 3686). These findings also establish that over the ten year period from 1935 to 1945, there was a decrease in the number of features licensed by the other four theatre-owning distributors to Loew's first-run theatres; and a corresponding increase in the use by Loew's theatres of the features of the non-theatre-owning distributors (Finds. 132, 133; R. 3686).

As to the District Court's finding of a fixed condition of runs, the same lawful business explanation applies as in the case of clearance. The factors which constitute the criteria for the selection of a given theatre as a first-run theatre do not change from day to day or from year to year. Thus, the factors which make the Radio City Music Hall in New York City the choice as a first-run theatre have not changed over the fifteen year period of its operation.

In view of the utter lack of proof as to any combination or conspiracy with respect to run and in view of the affirmative proof to the contrary offered by the defendant Loew's and other defendants it is respectfully submitted that the District Court erred in its finding and conclusion of combination and conspiracy.

Formula Deals, Master Agreements and Franchises.

The lower court made the following conclusion of law with respect to formula deals, master agreements and franchises:

> "The formula deals, master agreements and franchises referred to in Findings 86, 88 and 89 have tended to restrain trade and violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act." (Concl. 10; R. 3693)

The defendant Loew's has not assigned error to the findings referred to or to this conclusion of law or to the portions of the judgment prohibiting the future use of formula deals, master agreements (blanket deals) or franchises, for the reason that these trade practices have played a relatively small part in the distribution of Metro pictures. On the other hand, to the extent that the court may have inferred from these licensing practices a combination or conspiracy among the producer-exhibitor defendants to create a fixed system of runs, clearances and admission prices, the defendant Loew's urges its assignments of errors to the findings of fact and conclusions of law in that regard (Nos. 3-13, 15-18, 20-24, 32, 36 and 37; R. 3728-3736).

An analysis of the evidence relating to Loew's use of franchises, master agreements and formula deals, both as a distributor and as an exhibitor is absurdly insufficient to establish any conspiracy or combination by Loew's with the other producer-exhibitor defendants and equally demonstrates the insignificant use of these distribution practices in Loew's business.

As to formula deals the court found "Loew's is not and never has been a party, either as a distributor or as an exhibitor, to any 'formula deal' license agreements" (Find. 87; R. 3675).

With respect to franchises granted to Loew's theatres by other producer-exhibitors the evidence shows that Loew's theatres were never granted any franchise by RKO or Warner, only one franchise by Fox covering only one first-run situation in one city in the United States and only two franchises by Paramount, both of which expired over ten years ago (Gov't. Exh. 396).

With respect to franchises granted by Loew's as a distributor the undisputed facts are as follows. The consent decree in 1940 prohibited the future granting of franchises by requiring the licensing of features in blocks of no more than five pictures and the court found that "Loew's today has outstanding no franchise agreements for any theatre in which it does not have an interest and Loew's is not currently granting franchises * * *" (Find. No. 90; R. 3675).

Throughout its entire history Loew's as a distributor granted independent theatre operators more than twice as many franchises as it granted to the producer-exhibitor defendants (Find. 90; R. 3675). This proof completely defeats any inference of conspiracy or combination that might be drawn from the relatively small number of franchises granted to producer-exhibitor defendants (Find. 90; R. 3675).

So far as master agreements (blanket deals covering not more than a season's product, as distinguished from franchises covering a longer period) with other producer-exhibitors are concerned there is evidence of only one such agreement between Loew's as an exhibitor and another producer-exhibitor defendant (Gov't. Exh. 243). So far as Loew's use of master agreements as a distributor is concerned there is in evidence only one exhibit showing Loew's licensing on a master deal basis. This exhibit, (Gov't. Exh. 250), consists of eleven exhibition contracts covering in all the licensing of thirty-three pictures to a subsidiary of Paramount for exhibition in subsequent-run theatres all located in one city.

There is no evidence showing that Loew's either as a distributor or as an exhibitor made any master agreements whatsoever with RKO, Fox or Warner.

In considering these trade practices and the conditions flowing therefrom, we emphasize again how very tenuous and innocuous is the proof upon which the "combination and conspiracy" in the case at bar rest. We submit that the District Court erred in finding that Loew's combined and conspired in any respect to restrain trade in exhibition and distribution.

Point V.

THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN IMPOSING A PROHIBITION UPON LOEW'S EXPANDING ITS THEATRE HOLDINGS.

(On Loew's Appeal No. 80)

A. Loew's Exemplary Record in the Exhibition Field Warrants Particular Consideration.

Section III, Paragraph (6) of the judgment provides (R. 3698, 3700):

> "Each of the defendant exhibitors * * * is hereby enjoined and restrained:
>
> * * *
>
> (6) From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in the preceding paragraph."

The "preceding paragraph" enjoins the defendants from continuing to own any beneficial interest in a theatre in conjunction with another defendant or an independent. To terminate such a joint interest, the preceding paragraph permits a defendant to acquire the interest of the other defendant or of the independent, providing it is shown to the satisfaction of the Court, and "the Court shall first find that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures" (R. 3699).

After the entry of the judgment, the defendant Loew's and others moved in the District Court to amend Paragraph (6) of Section III of the judgment, which imposes the absolute prohibition on expansion, so as to read as follows (R. 3704):

"From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever, except as permitted in the preceding paragraph; or except for the purpose of acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field, if such defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Reasonable notice of the intention to make any such acquisition shall be served upon the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the Court."

This motion was denied without opinion (R. 3720).

Loew's assigned error to Section III, Paragraph (6) of the judgment as well as to the denial of the motion just mentioned (Assignments Nos. 30 and 31; R. 3735).

Loew's history as an operator of theatres presents an outstanding record of healthy anti-monopolistic development which there is no justification or reason for arresting.

These are the facts:

1) Loew's has no "closed town" and no first-run monopoly (Appendices II and III; Exh. L-15).

2) Loew's has competition from first-run theatres as well as subsequent-run theatres in every place where it operates (Appendices II and III; Exh. L-15).

3) There is independent first-run competition in 21 of the 36 cities with over 100,000 population where Loew's operates; and in the remaining 56 cities of over 100,000 population, Loew's operates no theatres whatsoever (Find. 149; R. 3689).

4) Loew's operates only 131 theatres, which constitute but 7/1000 of the total theatres operating in the United States (Exh. L-12; cf. Find. 118; R. 3684).

5) Loew's theatres are located in a total of 42 cities across the United States (Appendices II and III).

6) There has been an increase of only 9 theatres in the thirteen year period from 1932 to the date of the hearings below (Exh. L-12).

7) There has been no engrossing of the film supply by Loew's theatres (Finds. 131, 134; R. 3686).

8) There has been a consistent favoring by Loew's theatres of the product of non-theatre owning distributors over that of the other four producer-exhibitors (Finds. 132-133; R. 3684).

9) There is no evidence of Loew's buying out any competing exhibitor or of any competitor even going out of business or of any predatory practice whatsoever on the part of Loew's.

10) There is no evidence that any Loew's theatre was acquired in any other than a normal, lawful manner or that any such acquisition restrained competition in any manner.

This record, we submit, is so outstanding as to merit particular consideration being given to the defendant Loew's.

B. The Judgment Should Be Modified to Permit Loew's to Acquire Additional Theatres with Court Approval.

The District Court having recognized the fundamental right of those engaged in the production of motion pictures to operate theatres (Opinion, R. 3554), and having further found that Loew's did not have a monopoly of exhibition either individually or collectively (Find. 119; R. 3684), and that the illegalities here were in trade practices and not in theatre ownership (Find. 154; R. 3690), it defies the imagination to supply an explanation for the court's legislative action terminating all future growth of theatre operation by Loew's. Admitting, arguendo, every finding, every conclusion of law and every condemnatory statement of the opinion, there still is no support whatsoever in the record, or otherwise, for this arbitrary termination of development which has been the keystone of American industry and which in the case of Loew's has certainly never been abused.

The trade practices which the District Court found illegal consist of "admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals," etc. (Find. 154; R. 3690), and the court has now taken drastic action effectively designed to eliminate these trade practices. Loew's has taken no appeal from the prohibition against formula deals, master agreements and franchises (Judgment II, 5 and 6; R. 3696). Nor has it appealed from those provisions of the judgment requiring theatre by theatre and picture by picture licensing, or from the injunction against arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor for a run and the provision for competitive bidding (Judgment II, 8 and 9; R. 3696-7).

With these rigid controls in effect, it will be altogether impossible in the future operation of any theatre that Loew's might hereafter acquire to impair in any manner the competitive opportunities of independents owning theatres presently in existence or of independents who would build or acquire theatres in the future. With the additional requirement that any acquisition be subject to court approval, any law violation in connection with the acquisition itself is inconceivable.

Without permissive growth Loew's with the comparatively small number of theatres which it operates across the United States, to wit, 131, is faced with a static existence which is the very antithesis of the development that competition is designed to promote.

The present provision against normal growth, which prohibits Loew's from building or acquiring a theatre in a "closed town" of another exhibitor (independent or affiliated), or in a city where another exhibitor has a first-run monopoly, is fundamentally at variance with the underlying principle of the Sherman Act.

Moreover, in a locality where Loew's as a distributor is unable to obtain exhibition of its pictures by reason of the monopoly power exercised by the exhibitor operating in such locality, Loew's should be free, with court approval, to obtain or establish exhibition facilities of its own. This would not only afford Loew's an outlet for its product in that locality, but would make it possible for the public there to see Loew's pictures.

Finally, under the present prohibition, it will be altogether impossible for Loew's to meet changing economic trends and developments, such as shifts in population, major changes in transit facilities, etc., which are inevitable over the years.

It is thus clear that there is neither justification nor need for the absolute arrest of Loew's further theatre development now prescribed by the judgment.

The injunction, therefore, is wholly punitive. And its punitive character is particularly evident in the case of Loew's, where throughout its history its growth has been in only the most moderate manner. Even in U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 186, where, unlike the case at bar, predatory practices were found, this Court held:

> "Where the proclivity for unlawful activity has been as manifest as is here, the Decree should operate as an effective deterrent to the repetition of the unlawful conduct and yet not stand as a barrier to healthy growth on a competitive basis."

In its opinion in the case at bar the District Court recognized the principle enunciated in the Crescent opinion when it said (R. 3562):

> "Each of the defendants shall be enjoined from expanding its theatre holdings except for the purpose of acquiring a co-owner's interest in jointly owned theatres, and this only in cases where the Court shall permit such acquisition, instead of requiring an outright sale of the undivided interest of the defendant in question. The foregoing provision as to divestiture of partial interest in theatres shall apply both to interests held in fee and beneficially and to those represented by shares of stock. But it shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the latter case, this Court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor."

This written expression of opinion was carried over to the oral argument with respect to the proposed judgment. At R. 3057-58, the following exchange took place between counsel and the Court:

> "Mr. Seymour: Now I will pass on, if I may to section 5 at the top of page 5. That is the injunctive provision dealing with future acquisitions. We have tried in our language to follow the Court's opinion. Mr. Wright has suggested an absolute ban on any future acquisitions. He says 'from expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever.' Now, that is directly in the teeth of your Honor's opinion.
>
> Judge Hand: We are not going to have any such drastic provision as that. We considered that."

From the time the lower court rendered its opinion and from the time of the argument at which this colloquy took place to the date of the entry of the judgment, there was no additional evidence or even argument on this point to afford a basis for the change in the court's position.

We respectfully submit that the District Court was in error when it imposed against Loew's the absolute prohibition upon growth or development of theatre operation and that the judgment should be modified to provide for expansion subject to court approval.

Point VI.

THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN ENJOINING LOEW'S FROM OWNING ANY BENEFICIAL INTEREST IN A THEATRE WITH AN INDEPENDENT.

(On Loew's Appeal No. 803)

On this phase of the appeal, Loew's is not attacking that part of the District Court's judgment which prohibits Loew's from owning any beneficial interest in a theatre with a co-defendant. Its attack is directed exclusively upon the provision of the judgment whereby the defendants are directed to terminate all joint ownerships with an independent.

The judgment provides (Section III, R. 3698-9):

> "Each of the defendant exhibitors * * * is hereby enjoined and restrained:
>
> (5) From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, in conjunction with * * * an independent [meaning any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question,] where such interest shall be greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years."

The judgment further provides that the relationships between the defendants and independents shall be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendants (R. 3699). In the event a defendant desires to acquire the interest of the independent it must be shown to the satisfaction of the court, and the court must first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures (R. 3699).

This portion of the judgment requiring termination of joint interests with independents as well as defendants, was based on the following findings of the District Court (R. 3682-3):

> "115. Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, * * *, in some cases in conjunction with the independents. These joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively. When a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, such an interest is de minimis and only to be treated as inconsequential investment in exhibition.
>
> 116. When theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. The major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres, independently." (R. 3682-3).

With regard to these joint ownerships, the Court made the following conclusions of law (R. 3693):

> "9. The exhibitor-defendants, * * * have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures both before and after the entry of said consent decree, in violation of the Sherman Act by:

* * *

(b) Jointly owning motion picture theatres * * * with independents through stock interests in theatre buildings;"

The appellant Loew's assigned error to these findings, this conclusion of law and to the portion of the judgment which compels dissolution of these joint interests with independents (Nos. 25 and 26; R. 3733-4).

If these findings Nos. 115 and 116 cannot stand for lack of proof, the conclusion of law and injunction based thereon obviously must fall. Not only is there no proof whatever in this record to sustain these findings, but there was not even a scintilla of evidence tendered by either party with respect thereto. The Government on its part did not urge either in its pleadings, at the hearings or in argument the illegality of joint stock interests, and the defendants, having no knowledge that they were obliged to meet any such charge, were deprived of the opportunity to present facts to meet this phantom issue.

Consequently, the record is barren of any proof whatsoever as to how these joint ownerships with an independent came about.

It is wholly consistent with anything that appears in the record, that a defendant's joint interest in a theatre might be with an important employee who never had either the capital, the desire or the intent to operate independently in competition with the defendant, but who acquired his joint interest as a reward for prior years' services and as an incentive to future endeavor. Furthermore, for all that appears in this record, a defendant's joint interest in a theatre might be with a former operator who went out of the exhibition business not because of any law violation by the defendant, but rather solely by reason of his retirement from business on account of ill health. If an opportunity were afforded to the defendants to present facts on this issue, any number of perfectly lawful explanations could be given as to the manner in which these joint interests with independents came about.

Thus, the record is devoid of any basis for the court's gratuitous assumption in finding No. 116 that "both joint owners wish to participate * * * in the business of exhibiting motion pictures." Furthermore, the record is also lacking in proof that anyone such as a former operator who retired on account of ill health but retained his half-interest is "directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures" (Find. 116; R. 3683). It is equally wrong to assume that a joint owner, such as an important employee or an operator retiring on account of ill health, "otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres, independently" (Find. 116; R. 3683).

The foregoing also demonstrates the fallacy of the court's statement in finding No. 115 that these "joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively rather than competitively". If the joint owner were a former operator who retired because of ill health, or an important employee who was given a joint interest as described above, it defies logic to assume that this individual would be operating a theatre in competition with the defendant but for such joint interest.

We submit that every part of findings Nos. 115 and 116 are nothing but outright assumptions of facts, facts which were neither charged in the petition nor litigated at the trial. The conclusion of law and injunctive relief based on these findings must therefore be reversed.

Point VII.

THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN DECREEING THAT WHENEVER ANY CLEARANCE PROVISION IS ATTACKED AS NOT LEGAL UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THIS DECREE, THE BURDEN SHALL BE UPON THE DISTRIBUTOR TO SUSTAIN THE LEGALITY THEREOF.

(On Loew's Appeal No. 80.)

Loew's assigned error (No. 19; R. 3732) to Paragraph 4 of Section II of the judgment below (R. 3695-6) decreeing that

> "Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof."

It is Loew's position that this arbitrary transfer of the burden of proof alters one of the most fundamental principles of jurisprudence, is unwarranted and is an unconstitutional deprivation of its right to due process of law. National Labor Relations Board v. Whittier Mills Co., et al., 123 F. (2d) 725, 727 (C. C. A. 5th); National Labor Relations Board v. Knoxville Pub. Co., 124 F. (2d) 875, 879 (C. C. A. 6th); Reliance Life Ins. Co. v. Burgess, 112 F. (2d) 234, 238 (C. C. A. 8th), cert. den., 311 U. S. 699, rehearing den., 311 U. S. 730.

Point VIII.

THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN ENJOINING LOEW'S FROM AGREEING WITH A LICENSEE THAT THE LATTER SHOULD CHARGE A SPECIFIED MINIMUM ADMISSION PRICE DURING THE EXHIBITION OF THE FEATURE LICENSED.

(On Loew's Appeal No. 80.)

Loew's assignment of error No. 1 (R. 3728) challenges Section II, 1 of the judgment, which enjoins each of the distributor-defendants from granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties. Loew's assignment of error No. 2 (R. 3728) challenges the District Court's failure to conclude that a distributor-defendant has a lawful right under the Copyright Act and under the common law to agree with its licensee that the latter shall charge a price not less than that specified in the license agreement during the exhibition of the feature licensed. And, finally, Loew's by its assignment of error No. 14 (R. 3731) attacks the District Court's failure to find that the Copyright Act and the common law permit a provision as to minimum admission price in the license agreement during the exhibition of a feature as a "road-show".

It is Loew's position that it is essential in the conduct of its business and that it has a fundamental right under the Copyright Act and the common law to protect the value of its copyrighted motion pictures by the insertion of minimum admission prices in license agreements with its licensees. For the detailed argument with respect to this, we respectfully refer the Court to the "Brief For RKO Defendants" at pages 58-67.

As to features exhibited on a road-show basis, it is submitted that there is an even greater need to insure the film rentals from their exhibition in order to recoup the unusually large production costs, and thus, a fortiori, the right to provide for minimum admission prices in license agreements covering such exhibitions should be recognized. For the detailed argument with respect to this, we again respectfully refer the Court to the "Brief for RKO Defendants" at pages 68-71.

Point IX.

THE DISTRICT COURT ERRED IN FAILING TO CONCLUDE THAT IT HAD POWER TO CONTINUE THE ARBITRATION SYSTEM CREATED BY THE CONSENT DECREE AND TO PROVIDE FOR THE ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES BETWEEN EXHIBITORS AND DEFENDANTS ARISING UNDER THE PRESENT JUDGMENT.

(On Loew's Appeal No. 80.)

The appellant Loew's by its assignments of errors Nos. 34 and 35 (R. 3736) puts in issue the legal conclusion of the District Court that it did not have power to continue the arbitration system established by the consent decree of November 20, 1940, which system it found in the past has "dealt with trade disputes particularly those as to clearance and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government and counsel for other parties have conceded" (Memorandum in re Findings and Decree; R. 3702) and as to the future would be "effective and result in quick and expeditious decisions and a saving of time and money". (Find. 160, R. 3690-1).

It is Loew's position that the District Court had power to continue the arbitration system established by its decree of November 20, 1940, and to provide for the arbitration of disputes between exhibitors and defendants arising under the present judgment. Chrysler Corporation v. U. S., 316 U. S. 556; United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106; United States v. Radio Corporation of America, 46 F. Supp. 654 (D. C. Del.).

For further argument in support of this position we respectfully refer the Court to the brief for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation at pages 36-42.

CONCLUSION

The findings, conclusions and judgment of the District Court to the extent that they are appealed from by the Government on Appeal No. 79 should be affirmed.

The findings, conclusions and judgment of the District Court to the extent that they are appealed from by Loew's on Appeal No. 80 should be reversed.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN W. DAVIS
J. ROBERT RUBIN,
Attorneys for Loew's Incorporated.

S. HAZARD GILLESPIE, JR.
BENJAMIN MELNIKER,
Of Counsel

February 2, 1948.

APPENDIX I

Pertinent Provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2 and 4):

"Sec. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal; * * *

"Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; * * *"

"Sec. 4. The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1 to 7, inclusive, or section 15 of this chapter; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. * * *"

Pertinent Provisions of the Copyright Act (17 U. S. C. §§ 1 and 5):

"Sec. 1. That any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this Act, shall have the exclusive right:

(a) To print, reprint, publish, copy and vend the copyrighted work;

(b) To translate the copyrighted work into other languages or dialects, or make any other version thereof, if it be a literary work; to dramatize it if it be a non-dramatic work; * * *

(d) To perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama or; if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced in copies for sale, to vend any manuscript or any record whatsoever thereof; to make or to procure the making of any transcription or record thereof by or from which, in whole or in part, it may in any manner or by any method be exhibited, performed, represented, produced, or reproduced; and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever;

* * * * *

Sec. 5. That the application for registration shall specify to which the following classes the work in which copyright is claimed belongs: * * *

(l) Motion-picture photoplays;

(m) Motion pictures other than photoplays: * * *

APPENDIX II.

LOEW'S FIRST RUN THEATRES AND COMPETING FIRST-RUN THEATRES

in Cities of over 100,000 Population (36 in all)

AKRON, OHIO

Theatre[1]	Capacity[1]	Operator[1]	Affiliation[2]	Product[3]
Colonial	1750	Fiber & Shea	Independent	(Fox
				(RKO	⅓
Strand	1160	Warner Bros	War	War
Palace	2083	Katz & Chatkin	Independent	(Uni
				(Par	⅓
				(RKO	⅓
				(Col
*Loew's	2986			Loew's	29
				UA	19
				Par	16

ATLANTA, GA.

Fox	4661)			(Par
Paramount	2475)	Lucas & Jenkins	Par	(Fox
Roxy	2200)			(War
Capital	2100)			(Uni
				(RKO (except Goldwyn)
Rialto	983	Murray	Independent	(Col (Goldwyn
				(RKO)
Rhodes	723	Lucas & Jenkins	Loew's
Grand	2044			Loew's	28
				UA	9

Abbreviations

Loew's Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer	Loew's
20th Cent. Fox	Fox
Paramount	Par
RKO	RKO
Warner Bros.	War
Columbia	Col
Universal	Uni
United Artists	UA

Sources

1—Exh. L-13, L-17, 48
2—Exh. 156-163, 359-360
3—Exh. L-17, 44, 58, 84, 95, 129, 145, 147, 349. (Products listed are limited to those of 8 defendants)

*Throughout this table, theatres operated by Loew's are set forth in italics beneath the center line ———— . In the 1943-44 season Loew's distributed a total of 33 features.

BALTIMORE, MD.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Stanley	3250	War	War	(War (Par	½
Hippodrome	2205	Rappaport	Independent	(RKO (Col
New	1200	Mechanic	Independent	Fox
Keiths	2400	Shanberger	Independent	(Uni (Par	½
Century	2996			Loew's UA	29 7
Valencia	1460			Loew's UA	31 9

BOSTON, MASS.

Metropolitan Fenway Paramount	4278) 1873) 1798)	M & P	Par	(Fox (Par (War	⅓
Keiths Memorial	2907	RKO	RKO	(Uni (RKO
Keiths Boston	3223	RKO	RKO	(Fox	½
Majestic	1036	Brandt	Independent
State	3536			Loew's UA Col	29 10 20
Orpheum	2890			Loew's UA Col	27 10 18

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Warner	1332	Warner Bros	War	(Par (RKO (War	½
Merritt	1000	" "	"	UA part
Poli	3642			Loew's UA Col Uni Fox RKO	20 3 20 19 20 9

BRIDGEPORT, CONN. (Continued)

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Majestic	2252			Loew's	9
				UA	7
				Col	14
				Uni	25
				Fox	8
				RKO	8
Globe	1909			Loew's	20
				UA	4
				Col	17
				Uni	16
				Fox	22
				RKO	8
Lyric	2166			Loew's	14
				UA	11
				Col	7
				Uni	5
				Fox	9
				RKO	7

BUFFALO, N. Y.

Lafayette	2988	Basil Bros.	Independent	(Uni
				(Col
				(UA
				([Part]
Century	3042	20th Century Corp.	Independent	(RKO
				(War
				([Part]
Great Lakes	3028		Loew's-Par*-Ind	Loew's	9
				Par	9
				War	3
				UA	3
				Fox	7
Hipprodrome	2091		Loew's-Par*-Ind	Loew's	16
				Par	21
				War	11
				UA	5
				Fox	16
Buffalo	3488		Loew's-Par*-Ind	Loew's	17
				Par	17
				War	10
				UA	7
				Fox	19

*The joint interest of Loew's and Paramount in these theatres must be terminated pursuant to section III(5) of the judgment (R. 3698-9).

CANTON, OHIO

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Palace	1892	Interstate	Independent	(Fox (RKO (Col
Ohio	854	Warner Bros.	War	(War (Uni

Loew's	2126	Loew's	31
		UA	17
		Par	30

CLEVELAND, OHIO

Palace	3193	RKO	RKO	(Fox
Allen	3003	RKO	RKO	(Col
Hippodrome	3468	War	War	(RKO
Lake	800	War	War	(Uni (War

State	3436	Loew's	23
		UA	4
		Par	14
Stillman	1813	Loew's	25
		UA	7
		Par	11
Ohio	1305	Loew's	16
		UA	4
		Par	9

COLUMBUS, OHIO

RKO Palace	3013	RKO	RKO	(RKO (Fox ½ (Uni (War
" Grand	1200

Ohio	3079	Loew's	25
		UA	2
		Par	23
		Col	24
		Fox	9

COLUMBUS, OHIO (Continued)

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Broad	2393			Loew's	19
				UA	7
				Par	14
				Col	18
				Fox	7
				War	5

DAYTON, OHIO

Keith's	2698)			(Fox
RKO Colonial	1709)	RKO	RKO	(Col
State	1000)			(RKO
				(Par
				(Uni
Victory	1416	Wm. Keyes	Independent	War
Loew's	2305			Loew's	27
				UA	8

HARTFORD, CONN.

Allyn	1995	M & P	Par	Par
Strand	1520	Warner	War	(UA	⅓
Regal	928	Warner	War	(War
				(RKO	⅓
				(Uni	⅓
E. M. Loew's	1250	E. M. Loew	Independent	Col
				Uni	⅓
State	3908	Harris	Independent
Dow's	1293	Dow	Independent
Poli	3061			Loew's	31
				UA	3
				Fox	27
				RKO	20
				Col	2
				Uni	1
Palace	1719			Loew's	30
				UA	3
				Fox	26
				RKO	18
				Col	2

HOUSTON, TEXAS

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Metropolitan	2320)			(Par
Majestic	2250)	Interstate	Par	(RKO
Kirby	1464)			(Col
				(Uni
				(War
				(Fox
				(UA
State	2521			Loew's	27
				UA	8

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Circle	2624			(War
Indiana	3131	Dolle & Katz	Independent	(Par
Lyric	1850			(Fox
				(RKO
				(Uni
Keiths	1300	Keiths Op. Co.	Independent
Loew's	2446			Loew's	31
				UA	12
				Col	23

JERSEY CITY, N. J.

Stanley	4332	Warner	War	(RKO
				(War
State	2168	Skouras	Independent	(Fox
				(Col	⅓
				(Uni
				(Par
Loew's	3187			Loew's	32
				UA	14
				Col	20

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Orpheum	1538	RKO	RKO	(RKO (War	 ⅓
Newman	1800	Paramount	Par	Par War	 ⅓
Esquire Uptown Fairway Tower	800) 2043) 702) 2000)	Fox Midwest	Fox	(Uni (Fox
Midland	3573			Loew's UA Col RKO	32 11 31 1

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Rialto Strand	3063) 1865)	Dolle	Independent	(Uni (RKO (Par (Fox
Mary Anderson	1147	Peo. Th. Co.	Independent	War
Brown	1499	Dolle	Loew's*
National	2310	Ind.	Independent
State	3274			Loew's UA Col RKO	31 12 37 1

MEMPHIS, TENN.

Malco Strand	2900) 1200)	Lightman (Malco)	Par	(UA part (Par (Col (Uni (RKO part
Warner	2000	Warner Bros.	War	War

*Loew's interest in this theatre has terminated.

MEMPHIS, TENN. (Continued)

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
State	2550			Loew's	14
				UA	6
				Fox	11
				RKO	7
Palace	2154			Loew's	16
				UA	3
				Fox	12
				RKO	10

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Paramount	1862)			(Par
Knickerbocker	1100)	Sudekum	Independent	(War
Princess	1250)			(Fox
				(RKO
Vendome	1580			Loew's	27
				UA	7
				Col	6
				Uni	3
				RKO	6

NEWARK, N. J.

Branford	2966	Warner	War	(War
				(Uni
				(Col	½
Paramount	1996	Adams	Par	Par
Proctor's Palace	2233	RKO	RKO	(RKO
				(Fox
Adams	1900	Adams	Par
State	2589			Loew's	32
				UA	14
				Col	20

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Paramount	2353	M & P	Par	(Par
				(Uni	½
Roger Sherman	2060	Warners	War	(War
				(RKO	½
				(Uni	½
				(UA	½
Poli	3008			Loew's	24
				UA	4
				Col	22
				Fox	24
				RKO	16
College	1499			Loew's	21
				UA	3
				Col	17
				Fox	26
				RKO	8
Bijou	1429			Loew's	9
				Col	17
				Fox	5
				Par	2
				RKO	9
				UA	2
				Uni	3
				War	1

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

Saenger	3400)			(Par
Tudor	700)	Richards	Par	(Fox
Globe	532)			(War	½
Orpheum	2200	Singer	RKO	(RKO
Liberty	1250	Singer		(Col
				(War	½
				(Uni
State	3284			Loew's	27
				UA	4
				Fox	1
				Uni	2

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Music Hall	5945	Radio City Music Hall	Ind.	(RKO (Loew's (Col, Fox
Paramount	3664	Par	Par	Par
Roxy	5850	Roxy Theatre Inc.	Fox	Fox
Hollywood	1527	Warner	War	War
Strand	2699	Stanley Mark	War	War
Rivoli	2098	Biddle Realty Corp.	Par	(Par (Fox
Rialto	594	Arthur Mayer	Independent
Gotham	810	Brandt	"
Globe	4270	"	"	Loew's
Republic	1225	"	"
Victoria	705	City Ent. Corp.	"
Palace	1715	RKO	RKO	RKO
Ambassador	1118	Siritzky	Independent
Winter Garden	1250
Capitol	4560			Loew's	7
				Uni	2
				Col	1
				UA	3
				RKO	1
*Criterion	1626			Loew's	1
				Uni	13
				Col	3
				Par	1
				UA	1
*Astor	1135			Loew's	5

NORFOLK, VA.

Norva	1719)	Fabian	Loew's	Par
Granby	1173)			Fox
Newport	778	Wilder	Independent	(RKO
Center	1600	"	"	(Uni
				(Col
Colly	780	"	"	(War
State	2069			Loew's	27
				UA	9
				Par	1
				War	1

*Loew's interest in this theatre has terminated (L-13).

Loew's interest in these theatres was limited to a pooling agreement with the Independent, Fabian. This pooling agreement has terminated.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Stanley	3729)			(War
Warner	1919)	Warner Bros.	War-Loew's*	(Par	⅓
Ritz	783)			(RKO
Harris	2145)			(Col
Senator	1840)	Harris	Independent	(Fox	⅔
				(Uni	⅓
Fulton	1800	Shea	Independent	Uni	⅓
				Fox	⅔
Barry	1740	Varsity Amus. Co.	Independent

Penn	3487	Loew's	14
		UA	1
		Par	11
		RKO	7
		War	9

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Fay's Majestic	2258)			(Fox
Fay	1938)	Ed. Fay	Independent	(War
				(Uni	⅓
Albee	2239	RKO	RKO	(RKO
				(Uni	⅓
Strand	1500	Reed	Independent	Par
				Col part
Empire	1500	Independent
Carlton	1439	Ed. Fay	Loew's

State	3232	Loew's	30
		UA	9
		Col	21
		RKO	1
		Uni	3
		War	1

*Loew's interest in these three theatres was by way of pooling agreement. In accordance with the terms of the judgment of the District Court (Section III (2); R. 3698), this pooling agreement has been terminated. Of these three theatres Loew's today operates or has an interest in only the Ritz.

READING, PA.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Embassy	2446)	Fabian	Independent	(Fox
	)			(Par
Ritz	1228)			(Col
Warner's	1261	Warner	War	War
Astor	2476)	Jay Emanuel	Independent	(RKO
Park	1561)			(Uni

Colonial	1755	Loew's	27
		UA	10
		Col	1
		Fox	1

RICHMOND, VA.

Colonial	1514)			(Par
National	1528)	Fabian	Loew's*	(UA part
				(War
State	700)			(Col
Capitol	700)	Thalheimer	Independent	(RKO
Byrd	1396)			(Uni
				(Fox

Loew's	2197	Loew's	27
		UA	9
		War	3
		Par	1

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Keiths Palace	2951)			(War
Century	2135)	RKO	RKO	(Par
Temple	1495)	Comerford		(Fox
Regent	1592)			(Col

Loew's	3661	Loew's	29
		UA	8
		Col	34
		Uni	2

*Loew's interest in these theatres was limited to a pooling agreement with the Independent, Fabian. This pooling agreement has terminated.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Ambassador Fox Missouri St. Louis Shubert	3000) 5000) 3000) 3788) 1550)	Harry Arthur	Independent	(Par (Col (Fox (War (RKO (Uni	⅓
State	3162			Loew's UA Col RKO Uni	27 11 35 1 2
Orpheum	1904			Loew's UA Col Par	34 13 27 1

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Capitol Art	1765) 955)	Warners	War	(War (UA (Uni (RKO	½ ½ ½
Paramount	2800	Goldstein	Par	(RKO (Par	½
Bijou	1100	Independent	Independent	(Col (Uni	½
Poli	2611			Loew's UA Fox RKO	31 10 29 4

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

Keiths Paramount Eckel Empire	2514) 1493) 1446) 1171)	RKO-Schine	RKO	(Par (War (Uni (RKO (Fox
State	2902			Loew's UA Col RKO Uni	27 11 35 1 2
Strand	1600			Loew's UA Col RKO	38 8 33 1

TOLEDO, OHIO

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Paramount	3408)			(Par
Princess	940)	Balaban & Katz	Par	(Fox
				(War	⅓
Rivoli	2455)			(RKO
Pantheon	920)	Skirball	Independent	(Uni
Granada	1274)			(Col
				(War	⅓

Valentine	1459	Loew's	32
		UA	7
		Col	1
		RKO	2
Esquire	887	Loew's	36
		UA	14
		Col	1
		Fox	1
		RKO	1

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Earle	2218)			(War
Metropolitan	2000)	Warners	War	(Par	⅓
				(Col
Keiths	1500	RKO	RKO	(RKO
				(Uni

Capitol	3434	Loew's	19
		UA	5
		Par	5
		Fox	13
		RKO	1
		Uni	2
Palace	2403	Loew's	10
		UA	1
		Par	4
		Fox	9
Columbia	1210	Loew's	24
		Fox	13
		Par	6
		UA	4

WILMINGTON, DEL.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Warner Queen Grand	1785) 1449) 1314)	Warner	War	(Par (Col (Uni (War (RKO
Rialto	732	Belair	Independent	Fox
Aldine	1783			Loew's UA	28 9

WORCESTER, MASS.

Warners	1334	Warner Bros.	War	(UA (RKO (Uni (War	⅓ ⅓ ⅓
Capitol	1898	M & P	Par	(Par (RKO (Uni	¼ ½
Poli	3238			Loew's UA Col Fox RKO	33 5 28 22 8
Elm St.	2344			Loew's UA Col Fox RKO	26 3 27 26 10

YONKERS, N. Y.

Proctors	2043	RKO	RKO	(RKO (Fox- (War (Uni	½
Loew's	2616			Loew's Col Par Uni UA	36 37 28 27 15

APPENDIX III.

LOEW'S FIRST-RUN THEATRES AND COMPETING FIRST-RUN THEATRES

in Cities of under 100,000 Population (6 in all)

EVANSVILLE, IND.

Theatre[1]	Capacity[1]	Operator[1]	Affiliation[2]	Product[3]
Grand	Not in evid.	Fine Bros.	Independent	(RKO
Carlton	"			(War
American	"			(Col*

Victory	2279	Loew's	22
		UA	6
		Par	23
		Fox	16
		Uni	22
Majestic	980	Loew's	9
		UA	10
		Par	11
		Fox	17
		Uni	28
		War	6

HARRISBURG, PA.

Colonial	Not in evid.	Fabian	Independent	(War
State	"			(Par
Rio	"			(Fox
				(Col
Senate	"	Jay Emanuel	Independent	(RKO
				(Uni

Loew's	1530	Loew's	28
		UA	10
		War	1

Sources

1—Exh. L-17, 41, 42, 57, 82, 94, 126, 139, 365, 369.
2—Exh. 156-136, 359, 360.
3—Exh. L-17, 41, 42, 57, 82, 94, 126, 139, 365, 369.

*R. 2396.
R. 2397.

MERIDEN, CONN.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
Capitol	Not in evid.	Ricci	Independent	(RKO (War (Uni	½
Palace	1666			Loew's UA Col Fox RKO ½ Par	32 13 41 29 21 23
Poli	1035			Operated Weekends Winter & Fall

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

Strand Cataract	Not in evid.)	Hayman Estate	Independent	(Loew's (Col (RKO (Fox (Uni
Bellevue	1535			UA War Par RKO Loew's	14 24 31 2 2

NORWICH, CONN.

Palace	1251*	Warner	War	(Col (Uni (RKO (Par (War	½
Poli	822			Loew's Fox UA RKO	31 34 9 20

*Exh. RKO-11.

WATERBURY, CONN.

Theatre	Capacity	Operator	Affiliation	Product
State	1954*	Warner	War	(Col
				(Uni
				(UA
				(Par
				(RKO
				(War
Poli	3419			Loew's	28
				UA	5
				Fox	27
				RKO	11
				Col	2
Strand	1499			Loew's	25
				UA	11
				Fox	14
				RKO	5
				Col	4
				Par	1
				Uni	2

*Exh. RKO-11.

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
FEB 2 1948
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM—1947

No. 79

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellant,

vs.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al.

No. 81

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC. and PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, Appellants,

vs.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

On Direct Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York

BRIEF FOR PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC. AND PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION

WHITNEY NORTH SEYMOUR,
Counsel for Paramount Pictures, Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, 120 Broadway,
New York 5, N. Y.

SIMPSON THACHER & BARTLETT,
LOUIS PHILLIPS,
ALBERT C. BICKFORD,
Of counsel.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
Opinions Below	1
Jurisdiction and Statutes Involved	1
Proceedings in the Court Below	2
Statement	4
1. The Defendants	4
2. The Issues	5
A. The Charges and Prayer for Relief	5
B. The Consent Decree	6
C. The Government's Contentions at the Trial	9
D. The Trial Court's Findings and Conclusions	11
3. Distribution Practices	17
4. Summary statement as to reasons for and history of integration of exhibition and distribution by the exhibitor-defendants (including Paramount)	21
Specifications of Assigned Errors to be Urged	27
Summary of Points to be Argued as Appellants	31
Argument as Appellants	32
I. The court erred in Section III of the decree in enjoining the exhibitor-defendants from continuing to own or acquiring theatre interests with independents, and in enjoining them from expanding their theatre interests	32
A. The court was clearly right in denying the Government's demand for divestiture of the exhibitor-defendants' respective theatre interests	33
1. No monopoly	34

PAGE

2. No intent warranting divestiture..... 37

3. No conspiracy or agreement warranting divestiture 38

4. Divestiture unwarranted 39

B. The court erred in directing the termination of partial theatre interests held by defendants and independents, as defined by Section III (5) of the decree..... 40

1. The court below erred in holding 5% to 95% co-ownerships with independents illegal and in decreeing their dissolution, both without a hearing..... 43

2. The findings are inadequate to support Conclusion 9(b) 48

3. The blanket assumptions contained in Finding 116 are contradicted by the record 49

4. Joint ownerships of theatres are not illegal per se 54

5. The inadequacies of the Findings and the invalidity of Conclusion 9 (b) render insubstantial the purported basis for the drastic provisions of Section III (5) of the decree 56

C. The court erred in enjoining the exhibitor-defendants from engaging in new competition in exhibition as provided for in Section III (6) of the decree..... 63

II. The court erred in directing that licenses may be granted only after "competitive bidding" and in enjoining defendants from licensing their pictures in any manner other than that prescribed in Section II (8) of the decree..... 68

PAGE

Argument as Appellees 81

Comments upon the Government's statement of purported facts 86

The Government's reliance upon earlier litigation concerning the industry 104

The Government's theory that each integrated company constitutes an unlawful restraint and a monopolization of the pictures and exhibits in or licenses to its own theatres 109

The Government's contention that the Court in any event should have compelled defendants to sell their partial interests in theatres 123

The Government's contention that the Court should prohibit a theatre-owning defendant from licensing its pictures for exhibition in the theatres of any other theatre-owning defendant 126

Conclusion 129

TABLE OF CASES

PAGE

Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. U. S., 288 U. S. 344 (1933) 55, 117

Ball v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 67 F. Supp. 1 (W. D. Pa., 1946) 51, 53, 54, 84
Brinkerhoff-Faris Co. v. Hill, 281 U. S. 673 (1930) .. 48

Chesapeake and O. R. Co. v. Martin, 283 U. S. 209 (1930) 21

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 F. (2d) 994 (C. C. A. 2, 1925), aff'd 274 U. S. 619 (1927) 34

Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U. S. 441 (1922) 70
Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568 (1923) 70
Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation, 57 F. (2d) 152 (C. C. A. 2, 1932) 14
Federal Trade Commission v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565 (1924) 70
Federal Trade Commission v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U. S. 463, 475-6 (1923) 70

Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386 (1945) 70, 71, 86, 127
Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 324 U. S. 570, 571-575 (1945) 71, 86

International News Service v. Associated Press, 248 U. S. 215 (1918) 59

PAGE

International Salt Co. v. United States, 92 L. Ed. 55 (1947) 73, 74
International Shoe Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291 (1930) 21, 57
Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208 (1939) 64, 65, 123

Kelly v. Jackson, 31 U. S. 622 (1832) 21

Mackay v. Easton, 86 U. S. 619 (1873) 84
Maple Flooring Association v. United States, 268 U. S. 563 (1925) 97

Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 301 U. S. 292 (1937) 46, 48

Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30 (1930) 105
Paramount Pictures Inc. v. United Motion Picture Theatre Owners, 93 F. (2d) 714 (C. C. A. 3, 1937) 107
Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333 (1933) 21, 95
Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Interstate Commission, 66 F. (2d) 37, (C. C. A. 3, 1933), aff'd 291 U, S. 651 (1934) 57

Saunders v. Shaw, 244 U. S. 317 (1917) 47, 48
Schad v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, 136 Fed. (2d) 991, (C. C. A. 3rd, 1943) 95
Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163 (1931) 127
Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1 (1911) ... 58, 65, 71
Stuyvesant Fire Ins. Co. v. Sussex Fire Ins. Co., 90 F. (2d) 281 (C. C. A. 3, 1937), cert. den. 302 U. S. 742, (1937) 43

United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. (2d) 416 (Special Statutory Court, 1945) 54, 118

PAGE

United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707 (1944) 69, 76, 86
United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300 (1919) .69-70
United States v. Columbia Steel Co., C. C. H. Fed. Trade Reg. Serv. (9th Ed.) par. 57,639 (D. C. Del., Nov. 7, 1947) 55
United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944) 44, 58, 64, 70
United States v. E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., 188 Fed. 127 (C. C. Del., 1911) 65
United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 273 Fed. 869 (D. Del., 1921) 65, 71
United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., 282 U. S. 44, (1930) 105
United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255 (1920) 115, 116
United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319 (1947) 57, 58, 59, 71, 72, 121
United States v. Pullman Co., 55 F. Supp. 985 (E. D. Pa., 1944) 66
United States v. Pullman Co., 64 F. Supp. 108 (E. D. Pa., 1945) 75, 96
United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26 (1920) ... 112
United States v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 47 F. (2d) 288 (E. D. Mo., 1931) 34, 65, 71
United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106 (1932) .66, 119
United States v. United States Steel Corporation, 223 Fed. 55 (D. C. N. J., 1915), aff'd 251 U. S. 417 (1920) 34, 93, 117
United States v. Winslow, 227 U. S. 202 (1913) .34, 55, 117
United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218 (1947) 61, 87, 111

West Ohio Gas Co. v. Public Utilities Commission (No. 1), 294 U. S. 63 (1935) 47

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM—1947

No. 79

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellant,

vs.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC. PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al.

No. 81

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC. and PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, Appellants,

vs.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

BRIEF FOR PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC. AND PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION

Opinions Below

The opinion of the District Court (R. 3504) is reported in 66 F. Supp. 323 and the Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Decree and a supplemental opinion (R. 3659-3702) are reported in 70 F. Supp. 53.

Jurisdiction and Statutes Involved

This suit in equity was commenced by the United States on July 20, 1938, pursuant to Section 4 of the Sherman Act, for injunctions and other relief against agreements and acts alleged to violate Sections 1 and 2 of said Act.*

Final decree was entered December 31, 1946 (R. 3694). Petitions for appeal were filed by and allowed to all parties (R. 3725, 3737, 3751, 3762, 3767, 3804).

Jurisdiction is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act (15 U. S. C. 29; 32 Stat. 823) and Section 238 of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C. 345).

Probable jurisdiction was noted on June 23, 1947 (R. 3840).

Proceedings in the Court Below

Suit was commenced by the filing of a petition on July 20, 1938. Answers were filed and various preliminary proceedings were had and the case first went to trial in June, 1940 before a single District Judge. At the conclusion of the opening statements, the trial was adjourned for the purpose of enabling the parties to negotiate a consent decree. These negotiations continued without substantial interruption until November, 1940 with four representatives of the Department of Justice participating. A proposed decree was formulated and presented to the District Judge who ordered a public hearing upon notice to all interested persons representing every phase of the industry. Such a hearing was held in November, 1940 and following it, an amended and supplemental complaint was filed (R. 3137), and the defendants filed their answers denying all its material allegations (R. 3201-3372). On November 20, 1940, a Consent Decree was entered to which the Government and five of the eight groups of defendants were parties* (R. 3373). The trial was adjourned as to the three non-consenting groups of defendants, Columbia, Universal and United Artists.

*15 U. S. C. 1 and 2; Act of July 2, 1890, Ch. 647; 26 Stat. 209, printed in Appendix A hereto together with the pertinent provisions of the Copyright Act.

On August 7, 1944 the Government filed a motion for a modification of the Consent Decree (R. 3414) and on February 5, 1945, it filed a motion for a temporary injunction against continuance of certain trade practices (R. 3420). It then moved to have the case set for trial (R. 3448-9). While the motion for a temporary injunction, which was never decided, was sub judice, it filed an expediting certificate asking for the designation of a special court of three judges to hear and determine the case (R. 3502). Thereafter such a court was convened composed of Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand and District Judges Henry W. Goddard and John Bright. Trial was commenced on October 8, 1945 and was concluded November 20, 1945. The printed minutes of the trial consume some 2,500 pages, and in addition, the record consists of over 450 exhibits on behalf of the Government, and approximately 140 exhibits on behalf of the defendants.

The Government's case was entirely documentary, no witnesses being produced except two in rebuttal for the purpose of identifying compilations which they had made from exhibits. The defendants, on the other hand, produced in the aggregate 23 witnesses, among whom were their high-ranking executives expert in the production, distribution, and exhibition branches. With the Government's consent that they should be equivalent to oral testimony, the defendants supplemented the oral testimony with numerous affidavits of executives and other persons with personal knowledge of the facts (R. 1044, 1227, 1230, 1246, 1552, 1794, 1824, 1838, 1844, 1850, 1873, 1891, 1923, 1924, 1927, 1928, 1937, 1966-2146, 2147, 2149, 2153, 2486; Exs. P 24, 24A, 25, 25A).

*Paramount, Loew's, RKO, Warner and Twentieth Century-Fox.

The exhibits were so voluminous that, by stipulation of counsel, printing of them was omitted (R. 3825-29).

The trial court rendered its opinion on June 11, 1946 (R. 3504; 66 F. Supp. 323). Thereafter proposed findings of fact, conclusions of law and proposed decrees were submitted by the Government and by the defendants and a hearing was held with respect to the proposals. The minutes of this hearing are in the printed record (R. 2873-3090). The court entered its final decree and judgment on December 31, 1946 (R. 3694) on which day it also entered its findings of fact and conclusions of law (R. 3659) and rendered a supplemental opinion (R. 3702; 70 F. Supp. 53). Motions to amend the decree were made by defendants which the court denied, except that it did amend paragraphs III (2) and III (4) so as to postpone the effective dates of the prohibitions therein contained (R. 3719-20). On April 7, 1947, an order was signed by Mr. Justice Reed staying the operation of certain sections of the decree until further order of this Court.

STATEMENT

1. The Defendants

The defendants below consist of eight of the principal companies in the motion picture industry and some of their subsidiaries or affiliated companies. Five of them, namely, Paramount, Loew's, RKO, Warner and Twentieth Century-Fox, called by the Government and the court below "the major defendants", are each engaged in all three branches of the industry,—production, distribution and exhibition. They are also sometimes referred to as the "integrated" defendants, or the "producer-exhibitor" or "exhibitor"-defendants.* The so-called "minor defendants" Columbia and Universal, are engaged in production and distribution (Findings 44-52, R. 3667-9), and the other "minor defendant", United Artists, is a distributor only and distributes pictures produced by producers who are wholly independent of any defendant in the case (Finding 53, R. 3669).

2. The Issues

A. The Charges and Prayer for Relief

The defendants were charged in the amended complaint (R. 3137) with combining and conspiring to monopolize and unreasonably restrain trade in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, in various ways alleged.

The amended complaint demanded that each of the contracts, combinations and conspiracies, and each of the al-

---

*Paramount Pictures Inc. is a producer and distributor and owns stock interests ranging from 12½% to 100% in companies which directly or through subsidiaries own or lease and operate theatres (R. 824). Operation of the theatres is in the hands of employees of the operating companies, who generally own stock in the operating company or who, in cases where the operating company is wholly owned by Paramount, have management contracts giving them control over operations (R. 824-5, 827, 890-3). The operating companies conduct their unrelated businesses, such as, for example the licensing of pictures from all distributors, independently of each other and of Paramount (R. 824-5, 828-9, 966, 996, 1033-1034, Exs. P24 and P24A). Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Paramount Pictures, Inc., is engaged solely in the distribution of films in certain states (R. 665; Ex. 85).

leged attempts to monopolize, be declared illegal, and that the defendants each be enjoined from continuing them; that the integration of the production and exhibition branches of the industry by the producer-exhibitor defendants be declared unlawful as an instrumentality to monopolize and restrain trade; that the five "major" defendants be ordered to divest themselves of all interest in theatres and theatres holdings, or of all interest in production and distribution facilities, and be permanently enjoined from acquiring any interest in the branch of the industry thus divested; that the exhibitor-defendants be ordered to divest themselves of all interest in any particular theatres which the court should find had been used unreasonably to restrain or to monopolize trade in motion pictures; and finally, that the court establish a nationwide system of impartial arbitration tribunals in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nationwide prohibitions the decree might contain (R. 3199-3200).

B. The Consent Decree

The Consent Decree entered November 20, 1940 (R. 3373), effected several radical changes in the pre-existing methods of licensing motion pictures. It abolished certain trade practices of which the Government had complained, such as so-called "blind selling" (licensing before the picture was produced or the licensee had an opportunity to view it), conditioning of a license for feature pictures* on the licensing of short subjects or newsreels or other features, and licensing in blocks of more than five features, and contained a provision designed to protect independent exhibitors* from the arbitrary refusal of a distributor to license pictures on some run.

*A feature now is defined as any motion picture in excess of 4000 feet in length (Finding 1, R. 3660). Pictures of less length are short subjects or "shorts".

The Consent Decree recognized that certain other trade practices had in their operation given rise to a number of complaints and criticisms on the part of some exhibitors. One of these practices was the one whereby the distributor, in licensing a feature picture, agrees not to exhibit it or permit it to be exhibited in another's theatre in the licensee's competitive area until after the expiration of a designated number of days following the completion of exhibition by the licensee. This practice is known as the granting of "clearance" (Finding 1, R. 3660). Exhibitors do not complain of the practice as such, in fact most of them demand it, but there were disputes as to its length and the area it covered in some instances.

The Consent Decree recognized that clearance was essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures (R. 3380); that the factors necessary to be considered in determining what was and what was not a reasonable clearance period or area were complicated and not capable of precise determination, and that they rested primarily on the exercise of sound business judgment. The Consent Decree, therefore, in accordance with the prayer in the amended complaint (R. 3199-3200), established a nation-wide arbitration system designed to provide an inexpensive, speedy and fair remedy for an independent exhibitor who complained that the clearance granted to a competitor over his theatre unreasonably affected his business. The American Arbitration Association was appointed as administrator of the system and, to insure proper and complete impartiality and an opportunity to review the decision of the arbitrator, provision was made for the establishment of an Appeal Board appointed by the district court. Rules of procedure were made part of the Decree.

*An independent exhibitor is sometimes defined as one not a defendant or a subsidiary or affiliate of one (Finding 1, R. 3660). Cf. note to p. 27, infra.

At the public hearing prior to the entry of the Consent Decree, Government counsel stated what the parties had endeavored to do in formulating it. He said:

> "The approach on the part of all—on the part of the defendants filing the consent and on the part of the government, was an endeavor to meet through the terms of the decree a solution of the alleged evils and the alleged abuses in the motion picture industry, without resorting to the very drastic remedy of divorcement. That was arrived at rather early in the sessions." (p. 504)
>
> "Now as to the terms of the decree, I might say by way of preface that the problems of the motion picture industry are not identical to the problems of all other industries. They are peculiar, peculiar to the industry and its nature, and during the five months of negotiations every problem relating to the distribution of pictures was examined by the conferees in all its ramifications." (p. 505)
>
> "But I can say this much: that an honest endeavor has been made by those participating in the conferences to work out a method of business through prohibitions and a system of arbitration which should work and which should relieve a great many if not all of the complaints that are made against the existing operations of the industry." (p. 506)

"And I might say in that connection that it has long been felt, both by exhibitors and by distributors, that there is no fairer way to handle and dispose of complaints concerning clearance than to have the clearance fixed by some impartial arbitrator, and that is precisely what is accomplished by Section VIII." (pp. 524-525)

"I don't believe that anybody who has participated in the five months of worry and discussion and argument considers the decree a panacea or the dawn of utopia in the movie industry. At the same time I think it fair to say that both the defendants and the government honestly believe that it is infinitely to be preferred to years of litigation with the possibility at the end of the chaos that might result from divorcement. It is the hope and the desire of all that it will bring to the industry a degree of peace and good feeling. Every human safeguard that we could think of has been thrown about the operation of the arbitration system to keep it free, efficient and impartial." (pp. 537-538)

The Consent Decree reserved the right to the Government to seek other relief, including dissolution and divestiture after the lapse of three years.

Under the Consent Decree, there had been, at the time of the trial, 416 arbitrations and 122 appeals to the Appeal Board (R. 1859-61). As the court noted in its supplemental opinion, these tribunals have functioned "with rare efficiency" (R. 3702).

C. The Government's Contentions at the Trial

At the trial the Government contended that the primary issue was one of the relief to which it was entitled, contending that admissions and undisputed facts clearly indicated violations of law requiring the relief requested. It argued that the evidence showed collective control by defendants of the domestic film market, and that ownership and control of theatres by an important distributor of films was, in itself, a continuing unreasonable restraint upon competition in distribution and exhibition. It urged that the evidence showed that the required relief was (1) divestiture from the five major defendants of all their interests in theatres, and a prohibition against further acquisitions of theatre interests by them, and (2) injunctive relief against all the distributor defendants restraining them from various license practices.

The charge was made that the five integrated companies —those engaged in production, distribution and exhibition— collectively exercised arbitrary control over the industry through agreements between themselves and the three minor defendants, and that each of the five integrated units was, in itself, an illegal combination (R. 5).

It was asserted (R. 6) that operations under the Consent Decree left these defendants' collective control over the three phases of the business substantially untouched so that, after failure of new and prolonged negotiations for a new Consent Decree, the issue of divorcement (of exhibition from distribution and production) was again before the court. Accordingly, the Government sought modification of that Decree in its entirety, including the complete elimination of the arbitration system which had been established pursuant to the prayer of the amended complaint.

There was no proof of any monopolistic purpose, agreement or conspiracy in the acquisition of any theatres or of any interest in any company operating theatres by any of the defendants, or in the acquisition of the production or distribution facilities by those who began as exhibitors and then acquired production and distribution facilities—on the contrary, the proof was of competition in acquisitions (R. 954, 1555-6, 1826; Finding 42, R. 3667). Nor was there any proof or finding that any unlawful monopoly or monopolies resulted from integration, whether defendants' theatre holdings be treated individually or collectively. The findings are directly to the contrary.

D. The Trial Court's Findings and Conclusions

The court below affirmatively found and concluded that there had been no monopolization by the defendants, either individually or collectively, of either production or distribution or exhibition. These findings and conclusions are amply supported. As to production, the record disclosed without contradiction substantial and unrestrained competition (R. 626-32, 639, 641, 652, 1263-5, 1407-8, 1527-9, 1532-3, 1544, 1547, 1551, 1795-1806), and Government counsel conceded this fact (R. 386-8, 1949, 1952-3).*

The trial court found that there had been no violation of the Sherman Act with respect to production (Findings 59, 60, R. 3670), and that the Government had formally abandoned its charges with respect thereto (R. 3509). It

---

*In addition to the 7 defendant producers, there are numerous important so-called independent producers. Some of the best known are David Selznick, Samuel Goldwyn, Alfred Hitchcock, Preston Sturgis, Sam Wood, William Wellman, Allan Dwan, Frank Lloyd, Jean Renoir, Gregory Ratoff, International Pictures, Edward Small, Lester Cowan, Hunt Von Stromberg, Eddie Golden and Borgeaus Productions (R. 637-641, 652, 1407). There are many more independent producers than there were in 1940 before the Consent Decree (R. 640, 1551, 2733).

thereupon dismissed the complaint insofar as it charged violations of law with respect to production (Decree, Section I, R. 3695).

As to distribution, the trial court stated in its opinion (R. 3554; 66 F. Supp. 354) that there was general competition among all of the defendants, as well as between them and other distributors, for the exhibition of their various pictures, which the Government had conceded (R. 1062). It found that in excess of 600 features pictures are released for exhibition each year in the United States (Finding 106A, R. 3679).* Of these pictures, the defendants in the aggregate distributed in 1943-4 only 260 (Finding 99, R. 3677), or about 43 percent. No one defendant distributed more than 49 features or 8 percent of the total (Findings 99, 106A, R. 3677, 3679). Of the pictures distributed by defendants, many were produced by independent producers and distributed under contract by one of the defendants. Thus, 19.8 percent of RKO's releases were independently produced (Finding 101, R. 3678). All of United Artists' releases were independently produced (R. 1407-9, Finding 54, R. 3669). Some of the features released by

*In addition to the eight distributors who were made defendants, there were at the time of trial at least three other nation-wide distributors (Monogram, PRC and Republic) and a number of sectional distributors known as State's Rights distributors (R. 544-6, 659-61). No evidence was introduced to show the number of features released by the State's Rights distributors or by others than the eleven national distributors, so that no over-all industry figures are available. Since the trial, at least two other national distributors with their own exchanges have entered the field, Eagle-Lion (J. Arthur Rank) and Selznick Releasing Corporation.

RKO Exhibit 2 (R. 1611) indicates that there were 442 features distributed, so that even on this basis the defendants' aggregate releases would be only about 59%.

the other defendants were likewise independently produced (Paramount, R. 743-4; Loew's, Am. Compl. 36,* R. 3152; Warner's, R. 1825, Am. Compl. 51, R. 3156; Columbia, R. 1260-1, Ex. C-1; Universal, R. 1458-9; Twentieth Century-Fox, R. 1568). It was conceded, as the evidence established, that any producer making a good picture could be assured of adequate distribution (R. 1266, 1949).

The uncontradicted testimony was that the distributor defendants actively compete in distribution (R. 675-678, 701-2, 743-45, 1407-8, 1466-8, 1504, 1651-3, 1687-8, 1729). They license their films to exhibitors through their own respective film "exchanges" located in various parts of the country, and each distributor's exchange is maintained entirely independently of any other's (R. 543-5, 666-668, 1053-4, 1415, 1504, 1685). Familiar merchandising promotion schemes are used by each distributor in order to create interest in its product (R. 677-8). Regular meetings are held for the purpose of acquainting each distributor's salesmen with its product and of inspiring them to license as many films as possible. Such meetings are held by each distributor with its own staff and entirely independently of any other distributor (R. 674-676). "Sales" drives are also conducted by each distributor independently (R. 677, 1061, 1467-8) and there has been no joint advertising (R. 679), nor have distributors exchanged information as to the terms of the licenses granted by them (R. 742). In short, competition is "very keen", each distributor doing his utmost to fill as much as possible of the playing time and the preferred playing time of each exhibitor (R. 701-702, 904, 969, 970, 977-978, 998). Keen competition has also always existed among distributors in their attempts to obtain the right to distribute the product of independent producers, i.e., producers who do not have distribution facilities of their own (R. 743-744, 1651, 1687-1688). Each of the national distributors which does not have theatre interests (i.e., Columbia, United Artists, Universal, Republic, Monogram and PRC) has developed in financial strength and has been able to improve the quality of its pictures during the period when the integrated defendants are alleged to have acquired and maintained a monopoly (R. 906-8, 910-11, 1255, 1257, 1457-8; Exs. 408 and 409)*.

*Reference is to the paragraphs of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint (R. 3137).

Manifestly, therefore, the evidence points only to the conduct of separate businesses competitively and not collectively. New competitors have not been frozen out or hampered. The restraints found by the court below do not affect the essential qualities of this bitterly competitive business.

As to exhibition, the court found that the total theatre holdings of the five major defendants amounted to only 17.35 percent of the 18,076 theatres in the country (Finding 118, R. 3684). It concluded that, on the evidence, their holdings could not be aggregated for purposes of establishing a monopoly (R. 3553; 66 F. Supp. 354). Furthermore, it found that the theatre holdings of any one of the defend-

*In 1932 the Second Circuit Court of Appeals held that Paramount had no monopoly and no means of acquiring one. Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation, 57 F. (2d) 152 (C. C. A. 2, 1932). Since that time new competitors have appeared in the national distribution field and others have strengthened their positions. Paramount's income, while substantial, amounts to only about 16% of the aggregate income of the 8 defendant distributors (Ex. 425). It is an even smaller percentage of the income of all distributors in the field. It distributes about 31 features annually out of a national total of from 335 (Finding 99, R. 3677) to 600 (Finding 100 A, R. 3679).

ants alone, or, indeed, of all in the aggregate, did not and could not, constitute a monopoly (Finding 119, R. 3684). It likewise found that there was no proof that any of the defendants had been organized for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly (Finding 152, R. 3689-90) and no proof of any unlawful local monopolies (Finding 153, R. 3690). There was no community of officers or directors among the defendants and none owned any controlling stock or securities of another (Finding 57, R. 3670). Moreover, the percentage of features on the market which any of the five exhibitor defendants can play in its own theatres would be relatively small and would in no wise approximate a monopoly of exhibition (Finding 100, R. 3678). These findings are amply supported (Exs. RKO 11, L 2; R. 601-605, 609, 1554-1556, 1597-1599, 1838-1839, 1966 et seq.)

However, the trial court concluded that all defendants had unreasonably restrained trade in the businesses of distribution and exhibition, and had attempted to monopolize such trade, both before and after the Consent Decree, by acquiescing in the establishment of an admission price-fixing system by conspiring with each other to maintain theatre admission prices; and by conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of runs and clearances, which was substantially uniform in each local competitive area (Conclusions 7(a) and (b), R. 3692).

It likewise concluded that the distributor-defendants had similarly violated the Sherman Act by (1) agreeing individually with their respective licensees to fix minimum admission prices; (2) agreeing individually with their respective licensees to grant discriminatory license privileges to theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits; (3) agreeing individually with their licensees to grant them unreasonable clearance over their competitors; (4) making master agreements and franchises;* (5) individually conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films (except in the case of United Artists); and (6) as to Paramount and RKO, making formula deals* (Conclusions 8(a) to (h), R. 3692-3).

The court also concluded that the five exhibitor-defendants had unreasonably restrained trade in the distribution and exhibition fields, both before and after the Consent Decree, by (1) jointly operating theatres with each other and with independents through operating agreements or profit-sharing leases (i.e. "pooling" operations); (2) jointly owning theatres with each other and with independents through stock interests in theatre buildings; (3) conspiring with each other and with the distributor defendants to fix substantially uniform minimum theatre admission prices, runs and clearances; and (4) conspiring with the distributor-defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission prices, runs, clearances and other license terms (Conclusion 9(a) to (d), R. 3693). It also concluded that certain formula deals, master agreements, and franchises had tended to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act (Conclusion 10, R. 3693), and that conditioning a license of one or more copyrighted features upon the license of one or more other features, violated the Sherman Act (Conclusion 11, R. 3694).

---

*Defined in Finding 1 (R. 3660).

3. Distribution Practices

As the business of distribution and exhibition of motion pictures is largely sui generis, an understanding of its peculiar nature is essential background.

Films are not sold. The form and substance of the transaction which secures the reward to the owner of a feature picture is a limited license under copyright permitting the licensee to exhibit the picture (Finding 61, R. 3670), coupled with the bailment of a positive print of the picture to enable the licensee to project it upon his screen.

Since the early days of the industry, it has been the universal practice, dictated by necessities as well as experience as to the best and most profitable method of distribution, to license the exhibition of feature pictures, all of which are copyrighted (R. 529, 658, 1723), upon successive limited and often exclusive runs in each competitive area (R. 1894-5).* The first exhibition in a given area is called

---

*When motion pictures are photographed, a negative is developed from which a number of positive prints are made for distribution to theatres obtaining licenses to exhibit them (R. 1895). The cost of a print varies with its length. For example, a black and white print costs from about $150 to $300, while those in technicolor cost from $600 to $850 (R. 1895-6; Finding 74, R. 3673). Many licenses for features are for license fees which are considerably less than the cost of the print bailed to the exhibitor. In fact, the majority of exhibitors pay license fees amounting to but a small fraction of the cost of a single black and white print (R. 671, 1074-5, 1898-9). There are approximately 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States (Ex. L. 2; Finding 118, R. 3684). Paramount features, for example, are customarily licensed for exhibition in from 8,000 to 14,500 theatres annually (R. 668; Finding 130, R. 3686). Each feature which it produces and distributes costs from $200,000 to $3,000,000 or more to produce (R. 1895), and the number of positive prints which it makes of each feature varies from about 150 to 325, depending the first run, the second exhibition is called the second run, and so on. All features are so licensed, and each theatre obtaining a license on any run, the last as well as the first, exhibits the identical picture projected from such print as may be available.

Included in many licenses is an agreement, known as a "clearance" agreement, that a certain stated number of days shall elapse between the conclusion of the particular run licensed and the beginning of the next succeeding run of the picture licensed in the particular competitive area (R. 1894-5).

License fees are either an agreed and definite amount, sometimes called a "flat rental" (R. 694, 1722-3, 1905), or an agreed percentage of the gross box office receipts of the theatre during the exhibition of the particular feature licensed (R. 694, 815, 1082, 1905).

It has likewise been a common and ancient practice to incorporate in the license a provision that the exhibitor shall continue to charge not less than a specified minimum price for admission to his theatre during the exhibition of the particular feature or features licensed. These minimum prices which are thus specified in the license are the admission prices adopted by each exhibitor and customarily being charged currently by him, and the provision is merely to prevent unusual changes which would, among upon the popular appeal of the particular feature (R. 670, 1896). Ordinarily each positive print must serve from 45 to 60 theatres (R. 672, 1898).

---

This means that staggered exhibitions are essential (Finding 75, R. 3673) and that it is economically impossible for Paramount or any other distributor to make enough prints to enable it to license all customer theatres to show a feature simultaneously (R. 1898-9).

other things, seriously affect license fee calculations (R. 433, 439-40, 583, 717-8, 916, 1083-5, 1382-3).

The foregoing practices date from the early days of the industry and were adopted individually by those engaged in the industry before there was any integration of distribution and exhibition (R. 611-12, 717, 916-917, 1080-1, 1894-5, 1904; Exs. P 5 and P 6). They are not confined to the defendants but are used by all distributors (R. 544-5, 707, 918, 1506), and affiliated and unaffiliated theatres alike are licensed pictures on runs (R. 704-5) with clearance (R. 977, 1004-6, 1086, 1270, 1506), on flat rental or percentage terms (R. 697, 814-5), and at specified minimum admission prices (R. 1723). Thus these practices are entirely unrelated to ownership of theatres by a distributor. Before the court below condemned some of them, they were universally accepted major premises of the trade as essential in it, regardless of any question of theatre ownership.

The trial court found, upon uncontradicted evidence, that clearance which was reasonable as to time and area is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and that it was of proved utility in the industry and was necessary for the reasonable conduct of business (Finding 78, R. 3674). It found that licensing for successive exhibition dates, i.e. runs, or a license providing for clearance, benefited the public by permitting it to see a picture later in other theatres at lower prices (Finding 76, R. 3673), and it found that a proper clearance covenant afforded a fair protection to the interests of the licensor in the license fees to be derived from exhibition without unreasonable interference with the interests of the public (Finding 77, R. 3673). These findings are amply supported (R. 707-710; Consent Decree Sec. VIII, R. 3379-80).

While the court correctly appraised the imperative necessity of these practices of licensing on successive runs with clearance, it erroneously read the evidence of similarity of runs and clearances granted, and the provisions for minimum admission prices inserted in a given exhibitor's licenses by the distributors dealing with such exhibitor, and the relative stability of such provisions, as reflecting agreement and conspiracy among the defendants. The undisputed evidence amply demonstrated that the similarities in these respects were instead the natural result of independent competitive forces. We have assigned and specified this conclusion of the court as error, and maintain that it was wrong, but we shall not argue the error assigned at length, merely noting in the footnote some of the factors which emphasize the error, and relying on the arguments in the briefs of other defendants.*

---

*The court inferred concert and conspiracy merely from the fact that certain provisions in the licenses granted by each distributor to the same theatre, whether affiliateed or not, provided for similar runs and clearances and provided for similar minimum admission prices. The Government had called no witnesses on its direct case to show that the similarities arose out of unlawful agreement or conspiracy between any of the defendants. The defendants, on the other hand, called their top executives who explained that such similarities were in fact not the result of agreement or conspiracy (R. 422, 425, 710-11, 1708, 1715), but came about by reason of the fact that each exhibitor who dealt with two or more distributors desired the same run and clearance from each (R. 717, 1708-9), and that the similarity of minimum admission price provisions in the licenses resulted from the fact that the prices were the admission prices that the exhibitor himself fixed and was charging currently (R. 723-4; Finding 63, R. 3670), and that each exhibitor chose not-

The court also concluded that various other practices in distribution were illegal and should be enjoined. As to these, we argue in Point II of this brief that the court erred in its mandatory directions requiring competitive bidding in future licenses (Decree II(8)).

4. Summary statement as to reasons for and history of integration of exhibition and distribution by the exhibitor-defendants (including Paramount).

There were 18,076 motion picture theatres in this country in 1945, an increase of 4,790 over 1935 (Findings 118, 145, R. 3684, 3688) and of 12,000 from the period of 1908-1919 (Pet., 28).*

Originally theatres where motion pictures were shown were mostly remodeled stores with only a few hundred seats (R. 596), but with the advent of the feature picture, vaude-to vary those admission prices as between pictures of the various distributors as such a course would have injured his good will with his patrons (R. 722-3, 1382-3). The testimony was that competitive forces compelled similar provisions as to runs, clearance and minimum admission prices and that such similarity as appeared was inevitable (R. 711, 717, 725). The defendants' witnesses were experts in their field (R. 411, 665-6, 1684). If what they testified to was erroneous or untrue in any respect, there were many thousands of exhibitors available as witnesses to the Government to rebut the testimony, yet none were called. The testimony, not being irrelevant or contradicted or opposed to the probabilities or incredible, could not properly be disregarded. Kelly v. Jackson, 31 U. S. 622, 632 (1832); International Shoe Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291, 299 (1930); Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333, 340-1 (1932); Chesapeake and O. R. Co. v. Martin, 283 U. S. 209, 214 (1930).

---

*Reference is to the paragraphs of the original complaint, called Petition.

ville theatres showed pictures and new theatres were built for pictures exclusively (R. 600). Circuits of theatres under the same management grew up early in the business as existing circuits of vaudeville houses turned to pictures (R. 601). Motion picture theatre operation became a specialized business requiring skill in management, showmanship and the art of attracting patrons and establishing and maintaining a clientele (R. 828). Motion picture theatre average weekly attendance increased from 40,000,000 in 1922 (Pet. 54) to 95,000,000 in 1945 (R. 1611; Ex. RKO 2).

Prior to about 1917, with a few minor exceptions, there was no affiliation between production and distribution of motion pictures, on the one hand, and exhibition of them on the other (Pet. 40, 56). Producers and distributors, such as Paramount's predecessor (Pet. 43; Am. Compl. 18-26, R. 3146-9) owned no theatres, while certain exhibitor organizations, such as Loew's (Pet. 48; Am. Compl. 27-37, R. 3149-3152), and the theatre owning predecessors of RKO, owned no production or distribution facilities (Am. Compl. 56-66, R. 3158-61).

The evidence in this case, much of which is summarized in the findings below, established that integration in this industry began in about 1917. At that time a powerful group of exhibitors, ultimately comprising some 3,500 members representing as many or more theatres, formed First National Exhibitors' Circuit (R. 601-4).* This corporation was initially organized to function as a,

---

*The Petition alleges that there were only about 6000 theatres in the period from 1908-1919 (Pet. 28). If this figure is accepted as correct, First National represented about 58% of the then existing outlets for films.

film buying combine to exert its buying power toward getting lower license fees (R. 601). It evolved into a film producing company, first, by financing the production of pictures by others for exhibition in the theatres of its members and in those of their licensees, and finally, by producing its own motion pictures (R. 601-2; Finding 4, R. 3661).

First National soon began to negotiate for and obtain the services of well known stars and directors in the employ of other producers, including Famous Players Company, the predecessor of Paramount (R. 601-2; Finding 6, R. 3661-2). Members of First National refused to exhibit Paramount films (R. 602-3, 644-5) and the growth of First National gradually cut down the number of Paramount pictures exhibited in theatres belonging to the combine (R. 605).

By 1919 Paramount's predecessor, then the leading company in the industry (R. 904-5; Pet. 15; Am. Compl. 97, R. 3167), faced a situation where the owners of the best theatres in the leading cities of the United States, many of whom had been its customers in the past, had combined together for cooperative buying of pictures, and had grown into a strong organization which was distributing its own pictures and threatening to supply its members and licensees with enough pictures to permit them to operate without using those of Paramount or any outside producers (Am. Compl. 98-9, R. 3167; Finding 7, R. 3662). Paramount's markets were thus being seriously threatened and curtailed (R. 601-606, 642-5; Pet. 38).

In these circumstances Paramount determined, as a competitive measure, to acquire interests in theatres of its own to which its pictures could be licensed and where they could be shown in competition with those of the First National group as well as of others (R. 605-7). Between 1917 and 1919 it acquired interests in two theatres in New York City to insure the display of its pictures in that city as a medium of exploitation for the United States (R. 602-3), and it formed Southern Enterprises, Inc., which acquired various theatre interests in the south (R. 606, 643-645; Ex. 85). At about the same time Paramount acquired a 50% stock interest in a chain of theatres in New England (R. 606-7; Finding 8, R. 3662; Ex. 85).* A subsidiary was formed in 1920 to acquire a theatre in St. Louis to provide an outlet for Paramount pictures which had been lost because of the activities of First National (R. 607; Ex. 85). Meanwhile, other producers were acquiring theatres in competition with Paramount (R. 607-8).

The entry of Paramount into the exhibition field by the acquisition of theatres or interests in companies operating them was thus caused by competition and not by conspiracy or an attempt to monopolize. It created rather than restrained competition (R. 607-9). Many of its later acquisitions were in competition with others (R. 937-40).

In about 1920 Loew's, which was then a company owning a chain of vaudeville and motion picture theatres (Ex. 48; R. 1839), acquired Metro, a producing company, and later in 1924 Metro merged into Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, a subsidiary of Loew's (Ex. 48). This move was caused by competition (Pet. 48) and resulted in a stronger company to compete with Paramount's predecessor and other producers and exhibitors.

---

*The remaining 50% of the stock was later acquired by Paramount (R. 606-7; Ex. 85).

A predecessor of Twentieth Century-Fox, namely Fox Film Corporation, likewise acquired theatre interests in competition with Paramount's predecessor (R. 937-8, 2041-2).

In about 1928 Warner, which was pioneering sound pictures, needed outlets which could be equipped with the necessary and expensive installation to permit their exhibition (R. 953-4, 1554-5). As a means to this end it acquired in 1928 an interest in a number of theatres in Pennsylvania and New Jersey through the acquisition of the stock in an existing circuit, the Stanley Company of America (R. 1555-6; Findings 24-30, R. 3665). Warner was the first company to introduce sound pictures, and its entry into the exhibition field was likewise a competitive measure to enable it to exploit its sound pictures in competition with producers and distributors of silent pictures.

The Warner pictures were made and its theatres were equipped with sound equipment made by Western Electric Company. (R. 1554). A competing type of equipment was being developed by Radio Corporation of America. That company organized RKO in 1928 for the purpose of obtaining an effective means of developing the use of its sound equipment in the motion picture production and exhibition fields (R. 1597; Finding 18, R. 3664). At the time of its organization RKO obtained production and distribution facilities by merger with a small company, in which it invested substantial sums to modernize its facilities (Finding 19, R. 3664). It likewise acquired interests in a number of companies operating circuits of vaudeville theatres, which it equipped for its type of sound pictures (Finding 21, R. 3664). The formation of RKO produced a new and substantial competitive factor in the field and increased competition in each of the three branches of the industry (Findings 22, 23, 121, R. 3664, 3684-5).

Thus, the integration by each of the defendants of production and distribution on the one hand, and exhibition on the other, was caused by competition and resulted in increased competition. Each of the defendant companies which integrated its business did so for competitive reasons and not for monopolistic purposes. Each had its own compelling reasons for integrating. Some did so by entering the exhibition field, and others did so by entering the production and distribution fields (R. 601-5, 609, 642-5, 1554-5, 1556-8, 1597; Pet. 47-8; Exs. 48, 109). All resulted in increased competition with ensuing public benefits of better pictures and better theatres.

The ways in which the defendant-exhibitors individually integrated their business of exhibition and distribution were different in each case, and no pattern is discernible. Sometimes new theatres were erected to compete with existing ones; sometimes existing theatres were acquired in fee or by lease but continued to compete in their respective areas. In other instances existing circuits or interests therein were acquired through the acquisition of all or part of the stock of an operating company or of a holding company which owned all or part of the stock of an operating company (R. 601-9, 642-645, 890, 905-908, 988, 2038-40, 2078-9; Ex. 85; R. 1838-9; Ex. 48; R. 1597-1599; Exs. 91, 98, 101, 107, 109; R. 1247-8, 1250-3; Ex. 45, R. 1553-8).

The genesis of integration set out above strongly supports the conclusion below that such integration was and is lawful, and emphasizes the undesirability of removing the integrated defendants from competition in exhibition which the Government demands.

SPECIFICATIONS OF ASSIGNED ERRORS TO BE URGED

As to Exhibition and Distribution

Paramount assigns and will here urge error to so much of Section III of the decree (R. 3698) as enjoins it as an exhibitor

(1) from continuing to own or acquiring any interest in a theatre with an independent,* unless the defendant's interest be 5% or less, or 95% or more, Assignments 31-34, 45, 46, R. 3746-47, 3749-50; and

(2) from expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner except as permitted by Section III (5), Assignments 34-35, 45, 46, R. 3748-50.

Paramount likewise assigns, and will here urge, error to the failure and refusal of the court

(3) to decree that defendant Paramount Pictures Inc. might apply to the court for permission to retain any present partial interest in a theatre or group of theatres upon a showing to, and a finding by the court, that the retention thereof did not and would not unreasonably restrain competition, Assignment 39, R. 3749; and

(4) to decree that in any case where it is shown that a joint relationship between Paramount or a subsidiary thereof and another person resulted from the

---

*An independent here is defined by the decree as "any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question." Decree III (5) R. 3699-3700. Cf. Note to page 7, supra.

sale, transfer or other disposition by Paramount or its subsidiary (or by the trustee in bankruptcy or other legal representative of either of them) of the partial interest to such other person, Paramount might apply to the court for permission to continue such relationship to the extent to which, and in the place in which, the parties were not in competition at the time of such sale, transfer or other disposition of such partial interest, Assignment 40, R. 3749; and

(5) to decree that defendant Paramount Pictures Inc. might expand its present theatre holdings for the purposes of acquiring interests in theatres in order to protect its investments or in order to enter a competitive field upon a showing, as to each new theatre, that such acquisition would not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures in the competitive area where such theatre was to be acquired, Assignment 36, R. 3748; and

(6) to grant the motion of these defendants to amend and modify Paragraph (6) of Section III of the decree so as to permit the acquisition of new theatres for the purpose of protecting investments or entering a competitive field upon a showing to the satisfaction of the court, and a finding by the court, that such acquisition would not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures, Assignment 37, R. 3748.

The two Paramount defendants also assign error to

(7) the findings that they or either of them were parties to or engaged in or acquiesced in any system in violation of the Sherman Act, or that they or either of them conspired to violate the Sherman Act, and to so much of the conclusions and decree as are based upon such findings, Assignments 6-11, 13, 14, 16-19, 21, 22-24, 29, 30, 44-46, R. 3741-46, 3750.

These defendants also assign error to so much of Section II of the decree (R. 3695) as enjoins each of them as a distributor

(8) from granting any license in which minimum admission prices are fixed or agreed upon, Assignments 1-13,15, 45, 46, R. 3739-43, 3750;

(9) from performing or entering into any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee's taking one or more other features, Assignments 25, 26, 28, 45, 46, R. 3745-46, 3750; and

(10) from licensing their features in any way except as prescribed by Section II (8) of the decree which, among other things, requires the novel procedure sometimes referred to as "competitive bidding", Assignments 27, 45, 46, R. 3745-46, 3750;

(11) and also to so much of the decree as places the burden of proving reasonableness of a clearance agreement upon the distributor, Assignments 20-24, 45, 46, R. 3744-45, 3750.

In this brief we shall argue assigned errors (1) to (6) above, having to do with the trial court's injunction against the continued ownership by Paramount of joint interests in theatres with independents, and the injunction against future theatre acquisitions, together with the court's refusal to correct these errors when timely requests that it do so were made. We shall also argue in this brief that the court erred in enjoining the defendants from licensing their features in any other way except as prescribed by Section II (8) of the decree. (Assigned error (10), supra).

We shall rest our argument as to the other assignments upon the arguments made in the briefs of other defendants and thus will not attempt to cover in this brief our assigned errors relating to the finding of conspiracy, to the injunction against minimum admission prices, to the conditioning of a license for one feature upon the licensee's taking one or more other features, and as to that provision which places the burden of proof of reasonableness of clearance upon the distributor.

As to Arbitration

These defendants likewise assign error to Section V of the decree (R. 3700) in so far as it abolishes arbitration of disputes relating to runs and clearance substantially in the manner, and under a system such as that which was asked for in the amended complaint and which, with the Government's consent, was established and which functioned under the Consent Decree. (Assignments 41, 42, 45, 46, R. 3749-50). As to this error also, we shall avoid duplication and rely on the presentation of the matter in briefs of other defendants to which we respectfully refer.

SUMMARY OF POINTS TO BE ARGUED AS APPELLANTS

I. The court erred in Section III of the decree in enjoining the exhibitor-defendants from continuing to own or acquiring theatre interests with independents, and in enjoining them from expanding their theatre interests.

A. The court was clearly right in denying the Government's demand for divestiture of the exhibitor-defendants' respective theatre interests.

B. The court erred in directing the termination of partial theatre interests held by defendants with independents, as defined by Section III(5) of the decree.

C. The court erred in enjoining the exhibitor-defendants from expanding their theatre interests as provided for in Section III(6) of the decree.

II. The court erred in directing that licenses may be granted only after "competitive bidding" and in enjoining defendants from licensing their pictures in any manner other than that prescribed in Section II(8) of the decree.

ARGUMENT AS APPELLANTS

POINT I.

THE COURT ERRED IN SECTION III OF THE DECREE IN ENJOINING THE EXHIBITOR-DEFENDANTS FROM CONTINUING TO OWN OR ACQUIRING THEATRE INTERESTS WITH INDEPENDENTS, AND IN ENJOINING THEM FROM EXPANDING THEIR THEATRE INTERESTS.

The Government charged the defendants with obtaining and maintaining a collective monopoly of exhibition and also charged that the ownership and control of theatres by a defendant-distributor individually was unlawful. The court below correctly concluded that neither basis for the Government's intransigent demand for divorcement had been made out. On this record such relief would have been a grotesque non sequitur. The findings below, fully supported, preclude the existence of any collective or individual monopolies. They also fully support the court's view that nothing about the motion picture business puts defendants in a category which forbids them alone and individually from enjoying the advantages of integration permitted to business generally.

However, the court below did invent a new theory for stripping away certain partial interests in theatres, not embraced in the charges and not tried, viz., that there was necessarily some unlawful restraint where a defendant owned more than 5% but less than 95% of the beneficial interest in a theatre because it thought that then "putative" competition by the holders of the remaining interests was thereby somehow restrained. Our chief argument in this brief on this point is that this unprecedented conclusion was clearly legal error, aggravated by the court's refusal to permit an opportunity to be reserved to present facts to lay bare the error. These errors have an especially heavy impact upon Paramount as they may affect over one-half of all its theatre interests which are estimated to be valued at approximately $63,000,000 (R. 824).

But before discussing these errors, it seems desirable to outline the basis for the court's correct conclusion that it is lawful for a defendant individually to engage in the exhibition business in its own wholly-owned theatres. Against this background, the treatment of ownership of partial interests in theatres with non-defendants appears quite unjustified.

A. The court was clearly right in denying the Government's demand for divestiture of the exhibitor-defendants' respective theatre interests.

The court below rejected the Government's request for a judgment holding that it was unlawful per se for a distributor to own or operate theatres or to own stock in corporations owning, leasing or operating theatres, and decreeing divestiture of such ownership. Instead it expressly held that a distributor or owner of pictures was lawfully entitled to own theatres. The court said (R. 3554; 66 F. Supp. 354):

> "Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, * * *"

This conclusion was inescapable since there is nothing per se illegal in vertical integration of the manufacturing and selling functions of an industry. United States v. Winslow, 227 U. S. 202, 217 (1913); Eastman Kodak Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 F. (2d) 994 (C. C. A. 2, 1925), aff'd 274 U. S. 619 (1927), United States v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 47 F. (2d) 288 (E. D. Mo., 1931); see United States v. United States Steel Corporation, 223 Fed. 55 (D. C. N. J., 1915), aff'd 251 U. S. 417 (1920), and there was no proof to warrant findings and conclusions justifying a decree of divestiture.*

The court below made findings, supported by substantial proof, which conclusively negative the existence of any state of facts which would make divestiture a proper remedy. The major findings may be summarized as follows:

1. No monopoly.

In 1945 there were about 18,076 motion picture theatres in this country of which the five theatre-owning defendants altogether had interests in only 3,137 or about 17.35% (Finding 118, R. 3684). Nearly 15,000 theatres in the country, therefore, were wholly independent of any defendant. The court found:

> "119. The present theatre holdings of the five defendant-exhibitors, Paramount, Loew's, Fox, RKO and Warner, aggregate little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States, and by such theatre holdings alone the defendants do not and cannot, collectively or individually, have a monopoly of exhibition." (R. 3684)

*In the motion picture industry the right to integrate is given added support by the Copyright Law (17 U. S. C., quoted in part in Appendix A) which grants the exclusive right to exhibit to the copyright proprietor, which is ordinarily the producer or distributor of the picture. This necessarily includes the right to exhibit in the copyright proprietor's theatres and to license others to do so in their theatres.

It is, of course, apparent that the holdings of any defendant individually are relatively so small that they could not possibly be considered monopolistic on a national scale, which is the scale in question in this case. There was no showing of any unlawful monopoly in any individual locality and the court found none (R. 3554; Finding 153, R. 3690). Paramount, the largest single holder of theatre interests, has an interest in less than 9% of the theatres in the country and all the other defendants in the aggregate hold interests in less than 10%. Paramount's theatre interests are represented in only 516 out of 16,752 incorporated cities or towns (R. 1935).* Moreover, the evidence disclosed that there are at least 1,149 places in the country with populations of over 5,000 where all of the theatres are independent (Ex. P. 26).

The non-monopolistic character of Paramount's theatre holdings is further emphasized by the diverse nature of its holdings. It holds stock interests ranging from 12½% to 100% in various companies owning, leasing or operating about 1,550 theatres directly or through subsidiaries. Its stock interest amounts to control, (i.e. over 50%), of companies directly or indirectly owning, leasing or operating only about 500 of these theatres, (about 3% of the national total), and its interests in the balance are represented by 50% or less of the stock of the operating companies (R. 824). In fact, it operates only three theatres, the "Paramount" in New York, the "Paramount" in Brooklyn and the "Newman" in Kansas City, Missouri (R. 827), all of which are operated by wholly owned subsidiaries. As to all other theatres, local companies—over whose officers and employees Paramount exercises no control—conduct the actual operations of their respective theatres, including the negotiations for and the "buying" of all pictures from all distributors, as well as all matters of policy, problems concerning booking, license fees to be paid, and play dates (R. 828-9, 831-2, 964-6, 986-7). These local companies are operated completely independently of each other and of Paramount (R. 891-2).*

*In a large majority of the cities and towns throughout the country with populations of less than 25,000, all of the theatres are independent (R. 1180). There are 92 cities with a population of 100,000 or more (R. 751). There are independent theatres in all of them and independent first-run theatres in 54 of them (R. 752-762, 844-867; Ex. 428). There are 320 cities with a population of 25,000 to 100,000 (Ex. 82). In 196 of these the first-run theatres are all independent and in 71 there are independent and affiliated first-run theatres. (Exs. 41, 42, 57, 82, 94, 126, 127, 128). There are 1,630 cities with a population of 5,000 to 25,000. In 1,090 all the theatres are independent (cf. Ex. P. 26) and in 222 there are both affiliated and independent theatres, and in 108 there are no theatres at all. There are 4,627 towns with a population of 1,000 to 5,000. In 24 of these there are both affiliated and independent theatres, and in such of 4,483 as have any theatres at all they are all independent.

There is no evidence in the record as to the gross license fees received annually by all of the distributors in the field, since the Governments' proof was confined to showing the license fees received by the defendants in the case. As we have pointed out, there are important distributors who are not defendants, but even disregarding the license fees which they receive, and dealing only with license fees received by defendants, including Paramount, all of the theatres in which Paramount has any interest whatsoever pay to all of the eight defendant-distributors only about 16.8% of the license fees received by all of them. This is far short of a monopoly of exhibition.

*It will be recalled that the charge was that ownership and control of theatres restrained competition and that it was not claimed that mere ownership of an interest not amounting to control had that effect. In Paramount's case, as we have shown, it has stock control of no more than about 500 theatres or about 3% of the national total. There is no single "Paramount Circuit" which could, even if it would, exercise its "buying power", and there is no "cooperative buying" among the separate operating companies in which Paramount is either wholly or partially interested.

2. No intent warranting divestiture.

The court below found that there was no substantial proof that any of the defendants was organized or had been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures (Finding 152, R. 3689-90).

It concluded that even in those places where a single defendant owned all of the first-run theatres there was no sufficient proof that this situation had been brought about

> "* * * for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of the competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from 'inherent vice' on the part of these defendants." (Finding 153, R. 3690)

As the court below expressed it

> "* * * Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, and it takes greater proof than that each of them possessed great financial strength, many theatres, and exhibited the greater number of first-runs to deprive it of the ordinary rights of ownership. * * *" (R. 3554).

Paramount's intention in acquiring theatres in the first place was to obtain outlets, meet competition and market its pictures (supra, pp. 21-26).

3. No conspiracy or agreement warranting divestiture.

The court below was unable to find any substantial proof which would call for a finding that the defendants had entered into an agreement or conspiracy to monopolize production, distribution or exhibition. On the contrary it concluded, as to production, that there had been no violation of the Sherman Act whatsoever (Conclusions 3, 5 and 6, R. 3678, 3691). It determined, as to distribution, that with the exception of the trade practices and agreements which it disapproved, there was "general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures" (R. 1062, 3554; 66 F. Supp. 354).

It examined the exhibition field as well and saw that there too the defendants competed with each other and with independents for the patronage of the movie-going public. It had before it data respecting the 92 cities in the country having populations over 100,000, a fragment quite arbitrarily plucked from the national scene by the Government and stressed in an attempt to gerrymander the defendants into a monopoly of some segment of the market. Even there it found that in the majority of those cities, there was competition in exhibition between the defendants or between one or more of them and independents (Finding 146-150, R. 3688-89). The court noted that there was independent theatre competition in all of them on some run (Finding 147, R. 3688), and that in a few of those cities there are no affiliated theatres at all (Finding 148, R. 3688). In the 38 of the 92 cities (Finding 148, R. 3688-9), in which there were no independent first run theatres, the evidence showed that the affiliated theatres in those cities were the best theatres there (R. 751, 763).* There was no evidence and no finding that this situation had been brought about or was maintained unlawfully, or that independents had been unlawfully excluded from building or acquiring theatres suitable for first run in any of the cities.

The court below was well aware of the fact that during the ten-year period from 1935-1945, the number of theatres operated in the United States grew from 13,386 to 18,076 (Finding 145, R. 3688), an increase of 4,690 theatres, a very large majority of which were independent. The fact that there was such an increase in the number of independently operated theatres, is quite inconsistent with any suggestion that the defendants, alone or in conspiracy, sought to monopolize the exhibition field. The increases and decreases in the theatre holdings of the respective defendants show no pattern of consistent action which could even suggest monopolization; they strongly refute any such inference (Exs. 151, 153, L. 12; Findings 31 and 32, R. 3665; Finding 22, R. 3664; R. 1556-8; R. 1599-1600).

4. Divestiture unwarranted.

After its study of the industry, the court considered that divestiture would be injurious to the defendants and damaging to the public (Finding 155, R. 3690) and would only withdraw the defendants from competition in exhibition (R. 3551, 3556, 2559; 66 F. Supp. 353, 356, 357). It found that the practices of which it disapproved and which it held created the illegalities and unlawful restraints were not caused by, or the result of, ownership of theatres by the defendant distributors (Findings 154, R. 3690). It thus rejected the Government's claims that divestiture of theatres was necessary or appropriate.

*The Government's claim that each of the defendants received all of its first run revenue in these 38 cities from theatres affiliated with a defendant is wholly without significance. Of more significance is the fact that 69% of Paramount's film revenue (exclusive of that received from its own affiliated theatres) comes from independently operated theatres (Ex. P. 23). RKO receives 56.9% of its gross revenue and Warner 61.6% of its gross domestic revenue from independent theatres, (Finding 136, R. 3687; Finding 138, R. 3687). Independents pay Fox 60.8% of its film revenue (Finding 1144, R. 3688) and the eight defendant distributors in the aggregate receive 54.8% of their total film revenue from independents (Finding 128, R. 3686).

In the light of the obviously correct conclusion that it is not unlawful for a distributor to acquire and own theatres outright, and in the absence of proof of illegal acquisition, it was, however, inconsistent for the court to hold that less than complete ownership per se restrains competition unlawfully without any inquiry into the facts of each co-ownership to determine whether, in fact, competition between the parties has been eliminated or unreasonably restrained. The court made no such inquiry and, indeed, refused to provide in the decree for such an inquiry, at some future time. So, while the court was right in refusing the divestiture requested by the Government, it was, we maintain, wrong in creating a new theory which forbids partial interests in theatres, especially when it refused to provide any procedure by which the true facts as to the effect of such holdings could be established.

B. The Court Erred in Directing the Termination of Partial Theatre Interests Held by Defendants and Independents, as defined by Section III (5) of the Decree.*

The conclusion that co-ownership between an exhibitor defendant and an "independent" is, without more, illegal, and that such relationships should be enjoined, is contained

---

*The error of which we complain here, and in this brief, solely concerns the court's treatment of joint interests between a defendant and an "independent" as set forth in Section III (5) of the decree and in the findings and conclusion quoted in the text of this sub-point.

Our argument does not concern joint interests between defendants, nor does it concern the "pools" and profit-sharing arrangements which pools and arrangements were the subject matter of

in a few paragraphs of the Findings, Conclusions and Decree, which, so far as pertinent, are here quoted:

Findings

115. "* * * When a defendant or an independent* owns an interest of 5% or less, such an interest Findings 112, 113, 114 and the first two sentences of 115, and also of Conclusion 9(a) and Section III (2), (3) and (4) of the decree. Nor are we concerned with Section III (5) of the decree insofar as it relates to joint interests involving at least two defendants. Paramount does not attack the decree with respect to such arrangements and relationships because it had dissolved many of them long before trial, and has now dissolved all of the remainder of those with other defendants and with non-defendants to the full extent of its ability to do so, and does not intend to continue, or hereafter enter into, such arrangements. Accordingly Paramount does not object to the implementation by the decree of a policy which it has already adopted in connection with such arrangements and relationships.

This Court should know, however, as respects the arrangements the propriety of which, as above stated, will not be argued, that some of the relatively few agreements pooling the operation of theatres in specific cities stemmed from reorganization plans authorized by Bankruptcy Courts as a means of settling claims of one company against another, and others were entered into in the depression years as a means of effecting economies in operation to prevent bankruptcy. The evidence was that the agreements did not result in a decrease in the flow of films or have any other effect on interstate commerce, and that in no case did they result in increased admission prices, but that in fact, in some cases, admission prices were reduced (R. 989-91, 1037-9, 1930-3, 2114-7). As this evidence was not contradicted, we assert that there was no proof of intent to violate nor of violation of the antitrust laws.

While we believe that the distinction between the situations the legality of which we will argue, and those which we will not, is clear, the conjunction of the situations in the findings suggests that the court below did not perceive the distinction and, instead, assimilated joint interests between a defendant and non-defendants with the pools and joint interests between two or more defendants of whose banning by the decree we do not now complain, and thus swept lawful interests into the category of those which it condemned chiefly because they involved agreements between defendants.

*The term "independent" is defined in Finding 1 as "a producer, distributor or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendant in this action or a subsidiary or affiliate or a defendant". (R. 3660) is de minimis and only to be treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition."

116. "When theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. The major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently." (R. 3683)

Conclusions of Law

9. "The exhibitor-defendants * * * have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures * * * in violation of the Sherman Act by: * * *

(b) Jointly owning motion picture theatres with each other and with independents through stock interests in theatre buildings; * * *" (R. 3693)

Decree

III. "Each of the defendant-exhibitors * * * is hereby enjoined and restrained:

(5) From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interests in any theatre whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, * * * in conjunction with an independent* [meaning any former, present or putative motion picture operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in question,] where such interest will be greater than 5% unless such interest shall be 95%

*It is not clear whether the definition of "independent" as set forth in the bracketed material in the decree is intended to be coextensive with the definition of "independent" appearing in Finding 1.

> or more * * * the relationships between the defendants and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the other defendants. * * * (R. 3698-3699)

It is to be noted that, except for the finding of the simple fact that there are co-ownerships, Finding 116 is merely an argument or contention as to their effect and is not a genuine finding of fact. Cf. Stuyvesant Fire Ins. Co. v. Sussex Fire Ins. Co., 90 F. (2d) 281, 283 (C. C. A. 3, 1937), cert. den. 302 U. S. 742 (1937).

We believe that the court below erred in at least the following respects: in decreeing the termination of 5% to 95% partial interests without a hearing; in reaching Conclusion 9(b) (R. 3693) without findings adequate to support it; in indulging in and relying upon the blanket assumptions set forth in Finding 116 (R. 3683) the validity of which is contradicted by the record; and in concluding, in substance, that joint ownerships of motion picture theatres between an exhibitor-defendant and independents, through stock interests in theatre buildings, are illegal per se. In the light of those errors, the drastic injunction imposed by Section III(5) against the continuance and creation of such co-ownerships is incongruous and unjustified.

1. The court below erred in holding 5% to 95% co-ownerships with independents illegal and in decreeing their dissolution, both without a hearing

The complaint did not charge, and the proof was not directed to a showing that the ownership by any defendant with an independent of a partial interest had any unlawful purpose or any effect upon competition between the co-owners, much less that any "putative" competition of the other co-owners was thereby illegally eliminated.* Since the issue was not raised at the trial and not mentioned during its course, the defendants had no occasion or opportunity to offer evidence to meet it.

The first intimation that defendants had of the wholly new line which the court below was to take in condemnation of their respective partial interests in theatres was when the court handed down its opinion on June 11, 1946, more than six months after the close of the trial. Then, for the first time, it appeared that the ownership by a distributor of a partial interest in a theatre or in a company operating theatres was considered unlawful because it was thought to restrain competition in exhibition between the defendant owner and "independent" co-owners.

On being confronted with the court's opinion, the defendants promptly submitted proposed findings of fact and a proposed decree to the court and directed its attention to its manifest error. A decree was proposed by defendants which, while conforming to the opinion in respect to the injunction against continuing to hold partial interests with an independent or with another defendant, would have permitted a defendant in any case to apply to the court for permission to retain a given interest, if, after hearing, the court should find that its retention would not result in an unreasonable restraint of competition in exhibition within the particular competitive area in which the theatres affected were situated (Defendants' Proposed Decree R. 3610).*

---

*The complaint did not charge that mere co-ownership of theatres by an exhibitor-defendant and a non-defendant was illegal per se. Section D of the complaint, which contains numbered paragraphs 170 to 177 (R. 3196-7) concerns "Combinations of Which Each Producer-Exhibitor Defendant is a Member Which are Illegal Per Se." There appears to be no suggestion of a claim that such co-ownership is illegal per se. There is a charge in paragraph 176 that the producer-exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries used coercion in acquiring interests in some theatres, but this charge was abandoned and not pressed or proved at the trial and there is no finding which lends it support.

The proof in U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944) of predatory acquisition by Crescent and its subsidiaries is wholly lacking here.

These proposals would have enabled a defendant to show to the court situations where its ownership of a partial interest with another person in fact did not have the effect upon competition which the court assumed was inherent in these less than total ownerships, and would have enabled defendants to show the reasonableness of and justification for a given partial interest. The court below, however, rejected the proposals and thus deprived the defendants of any opportunity to present the facts in any particular situation. It entered a decree containing the blanket injunction in Section III (5) (R. 3699-3700).

Defendants promptly moved to amend the decree to permit applications to the court similar to those provided for in their proposed decree (R. 3704). The court below denied the motions (R. 3719-20).

The action of the court in granting this injunctive relief upon an unpleaded and unlitigated issue, long after the *Defendants also suggested in their proposed decree, as a facet of the more general right of application, that they also be permitted to apply to the court for permission to retain certain partial interests where the existing relationship had resulted not from the purchase by a defendant of its partial interest, but by a sale of a partial interest in a previously wholly owned operating company, and where the sale had occurred as a result of and during bankruptcy or reorganization proceedings (Defendants' Proposed Decree, R. 3619-20). This would enable a defendant to show that there was no restraint in any such relationship.

proofs had been closed, does not comport with the court's usual standards of fair hearing and procedure. Even a court naturally anxious to close its part in a long case conducted under an expediting certificate, should have made some provision in its decree to provide an opportunity for hearing of particular applications on particular facts after the need for a three-judge court had expired.

This was not unlike the action that was condemned by this Court in Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 301 U. S. 292 (1937) where an order declaring appellant's rates excessive was reversed as being a denial of due process. At the hearings, the issue had been the value of the company's property as of a date certain, June 30, 1925. "Without warning or even the hint of warning that the case would be considered or determined upon any other basis than the evidence submitted," the Commission, in its decision and report some years later, in 1934, fixed a valuation for the property for each year from 1926 to 1933, inclusive, relying upon judicial notice of price trends to supply the deficiencies in the record. "The company protested. It asked disclosure of the documents indicative of price trends, and an opportunity to examine them, to analyze them, to explain and rebut them. The response was a curt refusal." Mr. Justice Cardozo for a unanimous Court, held (301 U. S. at 300):

> "The fundamentals of a trial were denied to the appellant when rates previously collected were ordered to be refunded upon the strength of evidential facts not spread upon the record.
>
> "* * * This is not the fair hearing essential to due process. It is condemnation without trial."

Paraphrasing from West Ohio Gas Co. v. Public Utilities Commission (No. 1), 294 U. S. 63, 70 (1935), Mr. Justice Cardozo said (301 U. S. at 306):

> "There was no suitable opportunity through evidence and argument . . . to challenge the results."

To the same effect, see Saunders v. Shaw, 244 U. S. 317 (1917), wherein the Louisiana Supreme Court on rehearing had reversed a judgment, relying on evidence which had been offered by the plaintiff, but which the defendant had not had an opportunity to rebut because of its rejection by the trial court. The defendant successfully raised in this Court his claim that due process had been denied him. Mr. Justice Holmes said for the Court, at page 319:

> "He [defendant] now presents his writ of error and says that he has been deprived of due process of law contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment, because the case has been decided against him without his ever having had the proper opportunity to present his evidence. Technically this is true, for when the trial court ruled that it was not open to the plaintiff to show that his land was not benefited, the defendant was not bound to go on and offer evidence that he contended was inadmissible, in order to rebut the testimony already ruled to be inadmissible in accordance with his view."

In the present case there was no intimation, up to the time that the court handed down its opinion, that the ownership of a partial, rather than a total, interest in a theatre or operating company was considered unlawful. Accordingly, the defendants were not called upon to produce evidence on this question not in issue. They took advantage of the first available opportunity, that is when they submitted their proposed decree, to assert that they had been deprived of their right to present evidence which would refute the court's conclusions as to the effect of partial ownership. The trial court exceeded its powers when it denied defendants the right to make such a showing. Ohio Bell Tel. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission (supra); Saunders v. Shaw (supra); Brinkerhoff-Faris Co. v. Hill, 281 U. S. 673 (1930).

The procedure proposed by defendants would have involved no delay in the termination of the decisive phase of the litigation. They asked merely that they be afforded a later opportunity to apply to the court to be relieved in specific situations. As the court was reserving jurisdiction, this was a procedure which would have given the defendants the very minimum of protection and, without regard to its precise form, it was certainly grave error to deny this or any other opportunity to present evidence on a subject of such importance to defendants.

Quite aside from considerations of a fair hearing, the court below reached a wholly unwarranted conclusion, as we now show.

2. The Findings are Inadequate to Support Conclusion 9(b)

Conclusion 9(b) brands as violative of Section 1 of the Sherman Act all situations wherein an exhibitor-defendant and an "independent" jointly own motion picture theatres through stock interests in corporations owning the buildings. Such a broad conclusion requires, to support it, findings that in all, or even in enough to justify an inference that in all, of those situations the co-owners had entered into agreements or understandings to do or refrain from doing something, the purpose or effect of which was to restrain trade unreasonably. That is the factual substance of a violation of Section 1. Yet, there was no such finding.

3. The blanket assumptions contained in Finding 116 are contradicted by the record

Finding 116 is in essence nothing more than a series of conclusory assumptions based upon the single fact shown that the major defendants owned interests in theatres jointly with non-defendants. The court assumed from that fact alone that "both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures"; then assumed that "the major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner", and finally further assumed that each such joint owner "otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently." It will be noted that the last assumption is based upon the further assumption that by owning a more than 5% interest in a theatre in which Paramount, for example, is interested, a non-defendant is thereby necessarily precluded from operating theatres independently, and that such a result is necessarily a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act as a matter of law. None of these assumptions was supported by any proof whatever. There was no testimony as to the effect on competition of such co-ownerships. There was no proof that but for such co-ownership the parties would have competed in exhibition. The evidential basis for such broad assumptions was wholly lacking.

Furthermore, the conclusion implicit in the decision, that in each instance of co-ownership, competition is necessarily unreasonably restrained, is inconsistent with the facts and the evidence as to the genesis of Paramount's joint interests, for the record does show that certain existing co-ownerships had such diverse origins that there are no factual common denominators present upon which such overall assumptions could have been rightly predicated.

Paramount owns stock interests amounting to between 12½% and 95% with non-defendants in companies directly or through subsidiaries owning, leasing or operating about 975 theatres. In many cases where it now owns less than all of the stock of an operating company, it once owned it all, but was forced by financial difficulties, which resulted in its bankruptcy and reorganization and the bankruptcy or reorganization of some of the operating companies during the period between 1933 and 1935, to dispose of a portion of its interest in an operating company. This disposition of part of the stock of the operating company, in accordance with a plan of reorganization under the Bankruptcy Act which was approved by the District Court for the Southern District of New York, resulted in the present division of the stock between Paramount and its co-owner in a number of instances (Findings 9-11, R. 3662-3). For example, in 1929 Paramount owned all of the stock of the A. H. Blank Circuit of about 19 theatres. As a result of reorganization and in those proceedings Tri-State Theatre Corporation was formed which was owned 50% by A. H. Blank interests and 50% by Paramount (Ex. 85; R. 898). Paramount once owned all of the stock of the Saenger Circuit of about 104 theatres and in 1935 it sold a 50% stock interest therein to E. V. Richards (Ex. 85; R. 894-5, 898). In its reorganization proceedings Paramount was forced to return 50% of its original 100% interest in the Comerford Circuit of about 60 theatres to the original owners, as it also did in the cases of the Interstate Circuit and Texas Consolidated Circuit, involving together about 90 theatres (Ex.

85; R. 898).* Paramount's 100% interest in the G. B. Circuit of about 15 theatres in western Massachusetts was reduced to about 52% (Ex. 85; R. 898). Its partial interests in Dominion Theatres, Inc. in Virginia and in Pennware Theatres in Pennsylvania were created by sale of a part of the stock to their present co-owners. It has been held in the last mentioned instance that the sale did not result in an unreasonable restraint of trade. Ball v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 67 F. Supp. 1 (W. D. Pa. 1946).

Details of this kind point up the incongruity and error of the conclusion below that partial interests are unlawful per se. If Paramount had not had financial difficulties, its 100% ownership in these various theatre circuits would have been lawful under the court's conclusion that a distributor may lawfully own theatres if the interest exceeds 95%. When Paramount was constrained to sell a portion of its interest, what possible restraint on competition or other illegality was introduced? No considerations that appeal to reason suggest that this is a logical penalty for the consequences of financial distress. Not only did the court refuse to give defendants a general opportunity to present evidence to show that such transactions involved no unlawful restraints, but it rejected a paragraph in their proposed decree which would have permitted consideration of just such cases of post-reorganization partial interests (R. 3619-20).

Furthermore, there was no finding as to the purpose for which, or the manner in which many of Paramount's

*Paramount had originally bought the entire interest in the Comerford Circuit. When it was unable to meet its payments and was in default, a settlement of its obligations was made under which the Comerford interests re-acquired a 50% interest represented by prior preferred stock giving them control of the management of the theatres (Ex. 58).

other partial interests were created except those findings that it had acquired interests in theatres in order to obtain outlets for Paramount pictures which were being frozen out of the market by the activities of First National, referred to above (Findings 4-8, R. 3661-62). It had no policy of acquiring partial rather than complete ownership when it made these acquisitions, each one being determined according to the merits of the particular situation (R. 608). Paramount's theatre interests are all represented by stock in operating companies. Theatres operated by these companies are scattered over the country in large cities and in small ones (Ex. 161). In the majority of places there are competing theatres, but some places are too small to support more theatres (R. 870-1). Many of the theatres were constructed by the operating company or its predecessors, others were existing theatres acquired in fee or by lease (Ex. 85). Some old theatres have been completely remodeled, enlarged and modernized (Ex. P. 25). Since the time when Paramount originally obtained its present partial interest, or it was created by a sale by Paramount of part of its holdings, many changes have occurred in the theatre holdings of particular operating companies. Theatres have been destroyed or sold, or leases have been lost and not renewed, and new theatres have been built or acquired by the operating companies (Exs. 8, 65). Some of the original co-owners of stock in the operating companies have died and their interests have devolved upon their widows or heirs who now own the stock of their decedents as investments. Other former co-owners have voluntarily sold their stock to Paramount so that it now owns it all (R. 606-7, 871, 890; Ex. 85). Changes have presumably occurred in the competitive situation in towns where the theatres were situated when Paramount acquired its interest or the joint interest was created. New independent theatres have been built or old ones have been modernized (Ex. P 25). Despite these indications that the origins of co-ownership are so diverse that generalizations are impossible and each co-ownership must be examined on its own facts before any conclusion as to its legality can rightly be drawn, there was no finding as to what the actual competitive situation was in the large majority of the cities or towns where Paramount's affiliates or any other defendants have theatres or theatre interests. It was expressly found that Paramount was not a monopoly and that no monopolies had been shown even in any locality where Paramount or some other defendants owned all of the theatres or all of the first run theatres.

Not only do the absence of relevant findings, the evidence as to the diverse origins of co-ownerships, and the deficiencies in proof point to the incorrectness of the assumptions indulged by the court below, but additional facts can be pointed out which flatly contradict certain of those assumptions.

In Ball v. Paramount Pictures Inc., 67 F. Supp. 1 (W. D. Pa. 1946) a private anti-trust case involving a theatre in Pennsylvania which had been operated by a wholly owned subsidiary of Paramount and in which subsidiary it had sold a 50% interest to a non-defendant, the court held, after hearing, and after the opinion below had been rendered, that such sale did not result in an unreasonable restraint of trade. Yet, under the decree in this case, it appears that that very joint ownership would be subject to dissolution on the theory that, contrary to the actual facts, such sale created an unreasonable restraint of trade as a contract, combination or conspiracy in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. All this the court below has concluded upon a record which shows nothing more than that Paramount owns 50% of the stock of the company operating that theatre and that the balance of the stock is owned by a non-defendant. The result reached in the Ball case shows that the assumption of the court below with respect to that particular situation was wrong, or at least ill considered, since if it had had before it all of the facts which were before the court in Pennsylvania, or analogous facts with respect to similar situations it might well have reached the same conclusion that that court reached.

4. Joint ownerships of theatres are not illegal per se.

Even if Paramount and a present part owner of a present operating company had been in competition in exhibition prior to the creation of the co-interest, the resulting co-ownership would not per se be unlawful any more than would be the ordinary creation of a partnership, or the creation of a corporation to carry on as a unit the businesses of two former competitors.

This is clear from United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. (2d) 416 (Special Statutory Court, 1945) in which Alcoa had purchased a 50% share in the stock of a corporation formed by the combination of five of Alcoa's competitors in the manufacture of aluminum castings. The corporation later leased all its property to Alcoa for 25 years. Nevertheless, the Court held that the transactions did not violate either section 1 or 2 of the Sherman Act. It said (at p. 435):

> "We cannot see that in all this the plaintiff has proved anything relevant to the action. If it means that there was a monopoly of the castings market as such, there is no support whatever in the record for such an assertion. If it means that 'Alcoa's' inter> vention in the castings business helps to support its claim that 'Alcoa' monopolized the ingot market, the inference is extremely weak. Finally, there was nothing in the transactions themselves which indicated that they were independently unlawful, or that they served to make 'Alcoa's' legal position as to the ingot industry less vulnerable than it would otherwise have been."

And see similar comments made by Judge Learned Hand with respect to Alcoa's 31% ownership in a combination of three corporations engaged in the aluminum cooking utensil business. Such ownership was held to be no support whatever for "the conclusion that here was a practice or manoeuvre merely to suppress or exclude competitors" (148 F. (2d) at 435-6).

Since Alcoa, which had an unlawful monopoly in aluminum ingot, could, without further violation of the Sherman Act, acquire a part interest in a group of corporations which had been its competitors in the manufacture of a finished aluminum product, then a fortiori, the defendants here, which have no monopoly of production, distribution or exhibition, had the right to acquire part interests in theatres not even shown to have been their competitors and, likewise, to sell part interests in theatres, without running afoul of the Act. This is merely corollary to the well established rule that the Sherman Act interdicts neither integration per se nor merger per se. United States v. Winslow, and other cases cited supra, p. 34. See, also United States v. Columbia Steel Co., C. C. H. Fed. Trade Reg. Serv. (9th Ed.) par. 57,639 (D. C. Del., Nov. 7, 1947), not yet officially reported.

As Mr. Chief Justice Hughes wrote for this Court in Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. U. S., 288 U. S. 344 (1933):

(p. 360) "The mere fact that the parties to an agreement eliminate competition between themselves is not enough to condemn it. 'The legality of an agreement or regulation cannot be determined by so simple a test, as whether it restrains competition. Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains'. Chicago Board of Trade v. U. S., supra (246 U. S. 231). The familiar illustration of partnerships, and enterprises fairly integrated in the interest of the promotion of commerce at once occur. The question of the application of the statute is one of intent and effect, and is not to be determined by arbitrary assumptions. * * * (p. 377) The Anti-Trust Act aims at substance. Nothing in theory or experience indicates that the selection of a common selling agent to represent a number of producers should be deemed to be more abnormal than the formation of a huge corporation bringing various independent units into one ownership. Either may be permitted by business exigencies and the statute gives to neither a special privilege. The question in either case is whether there is an unreasonable restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize".

5. The inadequacies of the Findings and the invalidity of Conclusion 9 (b) render insubstantial the purported basis for the drastic provisions of Section III (5) of the decree.

In spite of the absence of any claim or finding that the creation of the interests ordered dissolved was itself violative of the Sherman Act, or of any finding of unlawful agreement or conspiracy between the companies the fission of whose affiliation is decreed,* and despite the invalidity of

*It should be noted that no claim was made by the Government that ownership by a defendant of stock in a theatre operating company constituted a violation of those provisions of the Clayton Conclusion 9 (b), the court below entered a decree which, in Section III (5), is far more drastic than any heretofore approved by this Court.

In United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319 (1947), this Court refused a request by the Government to add a provision to the decree requiring divestiture of a plant by each of the principal defendants found guilty of unlawful patent pooling and of making agreements restraining interstate and foreign commerce. This Court said:

> "We believe there is neither precedent nor good reason for such a requirement. The violation of the Sherman Act is found in these cases in the patent pooling and in the related agreements restraining interstate and foreign commerce. There is neither allegation in the complaint nor finding of fact by the District Court that the physical properties of either National Lead or du Pont have been acquired or used in a manner violative of the Sherman Act, except as such acquisition or use may have been incidental or related to the agreements above mentioned. The cancellation of such agree-Act relating to acquisitions of stock of competing corporations (15 U. S. C. 18). If such a charge were made, it would, of course, have been necessary for the Government to allege and prove that the acquisition unreasonably and substantially lessened competition. International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291 (1930); Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Interstate Commission, 66 F. (2d) 37, (C. C. A. 3, 1933), aff'd 291 U. S. 651 (1934)). And even in a Sherman Act case there must be allegation and proof that a combination unreasonably restrains trade. It should not be conclusively assumed, as it was by the court below, that in every case where a defendant holds more than 5% of the stock of a theatre operating company this ipso facto unreasonably restrains competition.

---

ments and the injunction against the performance of them by the appellant companies eliminate them.

* * *

* * * It is not for the courts to realign and redirect effective and lawful competition where it already exists and needs only to be released from restraints that violate the antitrust laws. To separate the operating units of going concerns without more supporting evidence than has been presented here to establish either the need for, or the feasibility of, such separation would amount to an abuse of discretion."

U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944), and Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, (1911) each involved judicial restoration of a pre-existing separate status to properties whose combination was found to have been the unlawful act, and where it was found that the continuation of the combination of properties would result in the continuation of the unlawful condition, thus making necessary the separation of the properties in order to restore competition and insure its continuance. But in each of those cases there were findings as to the unlawful purpose of combining the properties and of the unlawful effect of continuance of their combination. Where such findings are absent, as in the case at bar, there is neither need nor warrant for a dissolution of property rights.

Here, as in National Lead, there was no allegation, proof or finding (1), that any theatre interest, or any interest in any theatre operating company of more than 5% but less than 95% had been acquired or was maintained to prevent competition between the defendant and the co-owner or anyone else, or (2) that specific theatres or companies in which a defendant presently owned more than 5% but less than 95% had been separately owned or operated, or (3) that the co-owners, if bought out under the decree, would re-enter the exhibition business in any place in competition with the defendant purchasing the interest. Divestiture, as the court observed, would simply "withdraw the defendant-distributors from competition in the exhibition field and at the same time would create a new set of theatre owners * * *" (R. 3551; 66 F. Supp. 353).

Likewise, as in National Lead, there was "no showing of the necessity for this divestiture * * * or of its practicability and fairness", no complaint or showing having been made as to the effect of the co-ownership per se, or the result of the dissolution which the court directs.

Also, as in National Lead, the opinion and findings showed the existence of competition except in so far as the court thought it was restrained by the licensing practices of which it disapproved, and which have been adequately dealt with by specific injunction in the decree. (Findings 18, 20, 23, 59, 121, 146-8, R. 3664, 3670, 3684-5, 3688-9).

No factual justification is present for the dividing line adopted by the court between what theatre interests may be retained and what must be divested. Why 95% instead of 90%, or 80% or 50% or less? None was suggested by the Government, and none is supported by the evidence or findings.

The right to acquire property and to engage in business is a property right, International News Service v. Associated Press, 248 U. S. 215, 236 (1918), and there is no requirement that a business must be 100% or 95% or 50% owned, or that the right to engage in business exists only if the business is owned 95% or more. Paramount, in investing in less than 95% of stock in a theatre operating company is exercising a lawful right to profit from a lawful enterprise, and it has not been charged or found to have been guilty of unlawful conduct with independents owning more than 5% of any theatre enterprise in which it is also financially interested.

The court below has simply adopted an arbitrary line to which it seeks to compel defendants to hew if they are to continue to be interested in the exhibition business.

The Government urged in its argument for divestiture based upon the claim that ownership and control of theatres by a defendant-distributor was unlawful per se that Paramount's corporate structure, that is, its ownership of stock of various companies operating theatres in different parts of the country, permitted it to control competition between the operating companies. However, it offered no proof from which this fact could be inferred, and there was no finding, that any of these companies would have competed with each other but for their common ownership or but for the fact that Paramount owned a part of their stock. There could be no inference that competition would have existed, for example, between the North Carolina Theatres, Inc. operating in North Carolina and the Minnesota circuit operating in Minnesota and North Dakota, or between the New England Theatre Circuit, operating in the New England states, and the Tri-States theatre operations in Iowa and Nebraska. The undisputed testimony was to the effect that each of these circuits was operated independently of any of the others in the licensing of films from all defendants including Paramount, and none of them combined their "buying power" with that of any other circuit, and none of them in any way conditioned its licensing of films from any distributor upon what deals any other circuit made with that distributor (R. 832-3, 966, 996; 1034-5).

This charge as to the effect of Paramount's structure was wholly unproved. Certainly since Paramount is permitted by the decree to retain interests in scattered groups of theatres where it owns them completely, the court below rejected this whole theory. It would be fanciful to try to justify dissolution of partial ownerships by assuming competition and its restraint, where geography, like the proof, clearly refutes the possibility of it.

The evidence does not disclose any agreements between affiliated operating companies such as those present in the Crescent case, supra, and those alleged in United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218 (1947). In the Crescent case, it was expressly found that the violations of law were in part effected by agreements between the theatre operating subsidiaries, pursuant to which they had divided territories in which theatres might be operated by any of them, and agreements pursuant to which they had combined with each other for the purpose and with the effect of eliminating, suppressing and preventing independents from competing in the territory in which each of the operating subsidiaries had theatres (323 U. S. at 179). In the Yellow Cab case it was alleged that the operating subsidiaries had agreed with each other not to compete, and that there were contracts and understandings between the common owner of their stock and the subsidiaries which prevented them from competing with each other and, in addition, prevented them from purchasing cabs from manufacturers other than the common owner.

Neither of these elements is present in the case at bar. There was no finding that there had been any agreements between Paramount, for example, and any operating company owned less than 95% by it which prevented the operating company from licensing films from any other distributors, or which prevented the operating company from competing with any other theatre operator. In fact, each operating company deals separately in licensing its films from all distributors, and without dictation from Paramount (R. 828-29, 833, 891-92, 966, 996, 1035).

No operating company is at all concerned with what deals any other operating company may make with any distributor nor with its failure to make any deal at all. No deal is conditioned upon the making of any other deal between a distributor and any other operating company. Each operating company is desirous of making the best deal it can for itself for its is concerned only with the success of its own operation. There is therefore no business inter-relationship between one operating company and another. Each of them is separate, distinct and entirely independent of one another (R. 824-5, 828-9, 966, 996, 1033-4, Exs. P24 and P24A).

While the court below was correct in refusing complete divestiture and divorcement, it erred in decreeing compulsory sale or purchase of partial interests held with independents without any inquiry into the purpose and effect of the acquisition or retention of interests falling within the banned percentages. As we have shown, when this error was pointed out upon the settlement of the decree and motions to amend, the court erred, and, indeed, departed seriously from traditional conceptions of fair procedure, in not giving them an opportunity to present evidence as to the true competitive situation created and continued by particular partial interests. Such evidence, when offered on such application as might be made under a right reserved, would, it must be assumed, destroy any basis for the court's unsupported assumption that these partial interests have per se unreasonably restrained competition between co-owners.

C. The Court erred in Enjoining the exhibitor-defendants from engaging in new competition in exhibition as Provided for in Section III(6) of the Decree.

Section III(6) of the decree enjoins each of the five defendant-exhibitors forever from "* * * expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in the preceding paragraph". The only acquisition referred to in the preceding paragraph, namely, Section III(5), is the acquisition with court approval of a present co-owner's partial interest. The effect of the two sections, therefore, seems to be a complete ban upon the acquisition of additional interests in theatres and, therefore, upon fresh competition by these defendants.

In this respect the decree departs from the decree ordered in the opinion of the court below. It was there stated (R. 3562; 66 F. Supp. 359) that the decree to be entered should not > "* * * prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the latter case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor."

The decree thus directed by the opinion was more in harmony with the analogous provision in the Consent Decree wherein it was provided (Consent Decree, Section XI, R. 3387) that

> "Nothing herein shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purposes of its business."

In the proposed decree which the defendants submitted, a provision was inserted to carry out the directive contained in the opinion which would have permitted future acquisitions upon a showing that they were to enter new competitive fields or to protect existing investments, and the court indicated that it would not accept the Government's counter-proposal which would have enjoined the defendants from acquiring new theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever (R. 3057-8). When the court came to enter the final decree, however, it appears to have adopted without comment or finding or conclusion to support it, substantially what the Government had proposed.

In its opinion (R. 3558; 66 F. Supp. 356-7), the court stated that it thought that the remedy it was giving against the infractions found was much less drastic than that granted by this Court in Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208 (1939) and less severe than this Court imposed in U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944). On the contrary, the relief finally granted was, as we have shown, far more drastic in restricting competition than this Court has sanctioned. Even in the Crescent case, the decree permitted the defendants individually to acquire new theatres upon a proper showing to a court that the acquisition would not unduly restrain competition.* This Court said (323 U. S. 186) that the decree should "not stand as a barrier to healthy growth on a competitive basis", and

*The Government in the Crescent case argued that the effect of an acquisition upon competition should be the test of its legality (R. 2553). The decree in the case at bar gives the defendants no opportunity to show the effect upon competition of any of its theatre holdings or proposed acquisitions. The Government did not appeal from a decree in Schine Chain Theatres Inc. v. U. S. (argued Dec. 15, 1947 in this Court) which was analogous to the decree in the Crescent case in this respect.

the decree on the mandate of this Court permits the defendants to acquire theatre interests upon a showing that no unreasonable restraint will result.

The Interstate Circuit case involved no divestiture or divorcement, but merely the simple remedy of injunction against the specific conduct held to be unlawful.

Here the decree appealed from, in its provision enjoining future acquisitions, is far more drastic than any heretofore approved by this Court. Even in Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1 (1911), there was no provision in the final decree against future acquisitions of properties by the companies found to have violated the law. The decree was subsequently construed as not preventing the acquisition by one of the companies of the assets and properties of another by a merger when, upon application to the court for approval, it was shown that the merger would not unreasonably restrain competition either between the parties to the proposed merger or between the combination and others. United States v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 47 F. (2d) 288 (E. D. Mo., 1931). So, too, the decree in United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 188 Fed. 127 (C. C. Del., 1911) has been construed so as to permit Hercules Powder Co.—one of the corporations created by that decree—to acquire the physical assets and other properties of Aetna Explosives Company. United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 273 Fed. 869 (D. Del., 1921).*

*More recent decrees, like the Crescent decree, have expressly reserved to defendants the right to acquire additional properties upon approval of the District Court, granted after a showing by the defendant that the acquisition does not and is not intended to have the effect of unreasonably restraining trade or of creating a monopoly. See, for example, paragraph 27 of the decree in

In no case have we found a litigated decree containing a blanket perpetual injunction against future acquisitions such as was entered below. Even in United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106 (1932) where the defendant packers agreed in a consent decree to be enjoined permanently from owning retail stores, etc., this Court recognized that the court might, in a proper case, permit such acquisitions, but such relief was not directed because of the failure of the packers to prove that the conditions which led to the prohibition had so changed at the time the application for relief from it was made as to make the prohibition no longer necessary to insure free competition.

On the argument of the motion to amend the decree, the trial court suggested with respect to this injunctive provision, that the provision retaining jurisdiction to amend would protect defendants sufficiently (R. 3102). But, obviously, this is not so. In the light of the Swift case, it would be almost an insuperable task for the defendants to succeed in amending the decree at some future time, whereas they might very well, on an application to the court under an express provision providing for such application, be able to convince it that a particular acquisition should be permitted in order to enable the defendant to enter a competitive field or to protect an existing investment, while at the same time being under a general injunction against undue general expansion of its theatre holdings.

Not only is the present injunction without precedent and inconsistent with the court's own opinion, but it is inconsistent with the policy of the Sherman Act. That Act contemplates that decrees under it shall remove illegal fetters on competition, not that they shall themselves shackle competition. It has been contended that the effect of this injunction is to prevent a defendant from acquiring any interest in any theatre in which it is not presently interested and thus to deny to the public the benefits of theatre competition by the defendants in any area where they do not now own theatres. Yet it is there that their competition would be most stimulating. And, in the absence of an opportunity to satisfy the court that some new acquisition might merit its approval, the court below certainly erred in confining defendants' theatres arbitrarily to their present locations. If, as it correctly held, they are lawfully entitled to own theatres, they should not be alone denied the right to protect an investment in a theatre or to exercise their lawful right in some new locale where to do so would promote rather than restrain competition.

---

United States v. Pullman Co., 55 F. Supp. 985 (E. D. Pa., 1944); for full text of decree, see C. C. H. Fed. Trade Reg. Serv. (9th Ed.) par. 57, 242, at p. 57, 374.

To decree that under no circumstances or conditions may a defendant-distributor acquire a new theatre is equivalent to slow strangulation and ultimate destruction and loss of those theatre interests which the decree permits a defendant to retain. Being permitted to retain interests in wholly owned theatres, a defendant must be permitted to exist as a going concern and to acquire new theatres where it can establish to the satisfaction of the court that the acquisition would not unduly restrain competition in the place where the theatre is located.

POINT II.

THE COURT ERRED IN DIRECTING THAT LICENSES MAY BE GRANTED ONLY AFTER "COMPETITIVE BIDDING" AND IN ENJOINING DEFENDANTS FROM LICENSING THEIR PICTURES IN ANY MANNER OTHER THAN THAT PRESCRIBED IN SECTION II(8) OF THE DECREE.

Section II(8) of the decree (R. 3696-7) enjoins each of the defendant-distributors from licensing any of its features for exhibition in any theatre not its own in any manner except as therein prescribed. This section contains the so-called "competitive bidding" directive.

It will at once be noted that by this provision of the decree the court below prescribes the sole method by which the defendants are mandatorily and perpetually enjoined to do business with all other theatre operators with whom they deal, and restrains defendants from dealing with their customers in any other manner, however lawful it may otherwise be. Under 8(a) each distributor is mandatorily enjoined to make its respective features available to all who desire to exhibit them upon any run which the theatre operator may select. All offers must be on "uniform" terms.* 8(b) requires that each license shall be granted "solely on the merits" and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others.

8(c) requires notification to all exhibitors in a competitive area of the distributor's willingness to receive bids,

*If "uniform" terms means that a distributor must offer a picture to everyone for the same license fee, then this means that each theatre operator must pay the same amount regardless of his ability to do so, and regardless of the size, location, attractiveness and potential drawing power of his theatre.

requires that the offer shall stipulate a minimum flat rental acceptable to the distributor, and shall state the number of days of exhibition, the time when it is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each run, and compels licensing to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a "reasonable return" to the licensor. After the distributor has made the offer in these terms, any exhibitor desiring an exclusive run may bid, and in his bid, is allowed to set out his own terms as to license fees, run, clearance time and days of exhibition and any other terms which he wants to make.

As the defendants are enjoined from doing business in any other way, the impact of this provision of the decree upon the right of each of them to exercise the ordinary attributes of ownership of property and to control its disposition as well as the right of each to choose its customers and its right, and the right of its customers, to bargain for mutually satisfactory terms, is obvious and severe. Although the distributor is the owner and copyright proprietor of the picture, under the decree as it now stands, it has neither right of selection nor right to fix the terms upon which its property is to be used. The decree in effect makes the distributor a public utility where by statute its copyrights are supposed to assure it of exclusive rights and the right to share in those exclusive rights on such lawful terms as it as the owner may demand. Such a result appears to be properly a legislative, not a judicial function.

The right to choose customers and to state the terms on which sales will or will not be made has long been recognized by this Court. U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707 (1944); United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300, 307 (1919); Federal Trade Commission v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565, 573 (1924); Federal Trade Commission v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U. S. 441, 452-3 (1922); Federal Trade Commission v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U. S. 463, 475-6 (1923); Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568, 582 (1923).

These rights are of particular importance in the motion picture industry because of the influence which exhibition in some theatres has on subsequent exhibitions of the picture in the area as well as throughout the country.*

Regardless of the question of the power of a district court to prescribe an exclusive method under which several (although by no means all) of an industry must "sell" their respective products, and all must "buy" their products, the question of the permissible scope of the exercise of the court's discretion at once arises.

There can be no doubt that the trial court has a wide discretion to mold its decree to the needs of the case. U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra. It may, in a proper case, "* * * prohibit acts which in another setting would be unobjectionable". Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386, 409 (1945). But its discretion is not unlimited, and this Court may, and on many occasions has, modified a decree of a lower court where the terms of the relief exceeded the limits imposed by law or amount to an abuse of discretion. Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., supra and 324 U. S. 570, 571-575 (1945). Modifications or deletions are made where the decree goes further than is needed to prevent future violations. A decree in a civil anti-trust suit must not be punitive in nature or create "* * * new duties, prescription of which is the function of Congress, or place defendants, for the future 'in a different class than other people', * * *" (323 U. S. 409). "The purpose of the decree, therefore, is effective and fair enforcement, not punishment". United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319 (1947). And in attempting to frame a decree adequate to prevent violations of the statute, the court must have in mind that "one of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property." Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, 78, (1911).*

*An initial exhibition in Radio City Music Hall or one of the large Broadway houses, for example, is worth infinitely more in prestige, publicity value, word of mouth advertising, etc. than an initial exhibition in a smaller, less well-known theatre (R. 1296). And even though the latter might be able to outbid the larger houses on some pictures, and pay more by playing the picture longer or at higher prices, the ultimate revenue of the distributor would suffer from loss of the prestige and advertising that the Radio City or Broadway showing affords.

In Hartford-Empire, this Court held that the trial court had gone beyond what was required to dissolve the illegal combination and prevent future combinations of like character, by forbidding any disposition or transfer of possession of machinery by any means other than an outright sale, and by requiring Hartford-Empire to offer to sell all machinery presently under lease and to continue to offer to

---

*This Court in Standard Oil took pains to construe the decree as permitting defendants to make normal and lawful contracts and agreements, and not as depriving them of the "right to live under the law of the land" (221 U. S. at 80-81). The decree was subsequently construed as not prohibiting the subsequent merger of two of the companies which it separated, where the merger was found by the court not to threaten to restrain competition unreasonably. United States v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 47 F. (2d) 288 (E. D. Mo., 1931). See, also, United States v. E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., 273 Fed. 869 (D. Del., 1921).

sell machinery to any manufacturer of glassware. The decree was modified by this Court to permit disposal of machinery in other ways than sale, i.e., by leases and patent licenses. This Court held that the decree, as drawn, amounted to a confiscation of patent rights and forfeiture of the patents.

In National Lead, this Court held that to compel the issuance of licenses on a royalty free basis, or to issue a permanent injunction prohibiting the patentees from enforcing their patent rights, was not necessary in that case in order to enforce the antitrust laws effectively. It likewise refused a request by the Government to require the defendants to furnish to any applicant technical information desired by the applicant relating to the methods or processes for manufacture, holding that such a provision, which would, in effect, have thrown open to the world the field of technical knowledge in the industry, would discourage rather than encourage competitive research and would be contrary to, rather than in conformity with, the policies of the patent law.

Similarly, the present decree in effect confiscates, in important respects, rights given to the defendants under the copyright laws, the policy of which is similar to that of the patent laws. The copyright laws give to the proprietor of the copyright (in the case of a motion picture) the exclusive right to exhibit the copyrighted picture (17 U. S. C. 1, quoted in Appendix A). Co-existent with the right to exhibit is the right to prohibit others from doing so or to permit them to exhibit the copyright feature upon payment for such fees and terms as may be bargained for and which will give the copyright proprietor his reward. A requirement that he must offer every picture released by him for exhibition to everyone who applies for it on such run as the applicant selects, and must license it to the highest bidder for each run, effectively curtails his right to prohibit exhibition, and takes away from the copyright proprietor the exclusive right to exhibit or permit exhibition which he is given by the law. His right to exercise the common attributes of ownership and to choose his customers is effectively curtailed because, if he wants to license the picture at all, he must offer it to every applicant and is compelled to accept the highest bid for each picture on each run, regardless of any consideration other than the amount of the particular bid.

The proper reward of the copyright may depend upon a great many factors other than the amount of a particular bid for a particular feature upon a particular run. All these considerations, however, are banned by the decree. The distributor, for example, is not permitted to license a feature to the operator of a theatre with whom it has had long-established and satisfactory business relations and who experience has taught the distributor can, over the years, pay completely satisfactory film rentals. Nor can the distributor take into account the fact that a showing of a particular picture or series of pictures in a particular theatre, with the prestige that such a showing or showings gives to the product, will prove more advantageous in enabling the distributor to get better rentals upon subsequent runs than if the initial showing is in an obscure and inferior theatre which happens to submit the highest bid.

Nothing in the recent decision in International Salt Co. v. United States, 92 L. Ed. 55 (1947) would have justified the mandatory injunction here under consideration. There the decree dealt with certain patented machines; the patentee had abused its patent monopoly by entering into lease agreements which were unreasonable per se in that they tied unpatented salt products to patented machines and thus foreclosed competitors from a substantial market in salt products. Here the decree applies to licenses under copyrights on works not yet conceived, the licensing of which is already effectively regulated by various negative injunctions in the decree. The future copyrights affected by the mandatory provisions would no longer be subject to abuse in the light of these injunctions.*

The violations of law which the trial court found, and toward which this provision was presumably directed, was a conspiracy and concert among the defendants to maintain a substantially uniform system of runs, clearances and minimum admission prices (Conclusions 7, 8(a), (c) and 9(c), R. 3691-3), and among the defendants and their licensees to discriminate against small independent operators (Conclusions 8(b), (d), (e) and 9(c), R. 3692-3).

---

*Moreover, in International Salt, the Court recognized that the sixth paragraph of the decree was properly subject to amendment and limitation and, therefore, its denial of relief from it was without prejudice. It was thought that under the District Court's general reservation of jurisdiction, any amendment of the decree in the light of a concrete problem would necessarily lead to "a provision that will avoid repetitious applications." But, here, the problem is quite different. To suggest an instance which is not only obvious but which, in the nature of things, would have to occur frequently under this decree: suppose two bids for a given picture proposed terms as to license fees, clearance, length and time of run, and other particulars which were so different as to make it impossible for a defendant to determine who would be "the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor." Even assuming that, in such a case a sufficiently expeditious decision interpreting the decree could be obtained from the court below, it is obvious that such decision would be sui generis, would not avoid repetitious applications, and, therefore, would not meet the test of the International Salt case.

The court felt that in the situation which it believed was shown by the evidence, some theatre operators found it difficult to negotiate for and obtain desired pictures upon desired runs, that non-defendant distributors were obliged to conform to the "system" if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs, and that non-defendant exhibitors were obliged to conform in order to compete with the theatres to which the defendants licensed their pictures (Finding 84, R. 3674). Here we confine the argument to the question of the necessity or propriety of mandatorily prescribing an exclusive method of "selling" to prevent continuation of the conspiracy thought to exist.

If the facts are as found by the court, it would seem obvious that the violations of law could be terminated and effectively prevented by the usual injunctions prohibiting the continuation of the unlawful conduct in the future. Such injunctions, in the most sweeping forms, are included in the decree. Furthermore, Section II(9) of the decree (R. 3698) (from which we do not appeal) is sufficient in itself for this purpose as it prohibits the arbitrary refusal to license features to an exhibitor who wants them and believes he, rather than his competitor, should have them on a particular run.

The following language of this Court in National Lead, supra, is applicable here:

> "It is not for the courts to realign and redirect effective and lawful competition where it already exists and needs only to be released from restraints that violate the antitrust laws. * * *"

See also United States v. Pullman Co., 64 F. Supp. 108, 110 (E. D. Pa. 1945).

In U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707 (1944) this Court refused to direct defendant Soft-Lite to sell its product in the future to anyone offering to pay cash for it, on the ground that it would unreasonably interfere with that company's right to select customers. It was pointed out that such a right might be the "most essential factor in the maintenance of the highest standards of service" (321 U. S. 728-9). This consideration applies with even more force in the motion picture business, since the proper selection of theatres to exhibit a picture can make or break the picture (R. 1621-4, 1634-5). Also in Bausch & Lomb this Court refused to enjoin Soft-Lite permanently from suggesting re-sale prices and executing re-sale price maintenance contracts under the Miller-Tydings Act, the rationale being that after a reasonable interim to dissipate the illegal practices, Soft-Lite should be permitted to attempt to act lawfully by use of methods expressly permitted by Congress. And so the defendants here should be permitted to attempt to act lawfully under the sweeping injunctions granted and not also be permanently enjoined from doing business in any other way than by the untried, complex and undeniably confusing system devised by the lower court.

Section II(8), in addition to placing defendants in a class by themselves vis-a-vis other present and future distributor competitors not bound by the decree, in fact restrains competition between them as it requires each to follow the same course, and prohibits each of them from gaining or attempting to gain a legitimate competitive advantage over any of the others by superior service, reasonable assurance of a supply of product and other proper business methods. It seems likely that if the defendants had agreed among themselves to license their pictures only to the highest bidder in accordance with the method prescribed by the decree, such agreement would have been attacked under the anti-trust laws. Yet the court enjoins each to follow the same method as is prescribed for each of the others. It is submitted that the method devised bears no relation to the supposed evil and that it is unnecessary and impracticable for that purpose.

With respect to the merits of the licensing system devised by the court, it has been strongly urged by exhibitors (R. 2820-48), that its burdens will fall most heavily on the operator of a small theatre who is in competition with a larger one. It is said that the theatre able to produce the largest revenue will normally be able to make the highest bid for each of the pictures of each of the distributors which it wants to exhibit. If this is true, it is asserted, the theoretical right of the small operator to bid is illusory. The small theatre operator might be tempted to overreach himself on occasions and to outbid his larger rival. If he does this, he might find that he could profit on a particular picture or he might find that he has bid so high that his prospective profits disappear. He can not expect consistently to be able to pay more than the larger theatre can and he, therefore, loses the assurance of a supply of product. While such considerations are necessarily speculative and the court below apparently did not find them persuasive, they are not so extreme as not to merit consideration. In any event it seems unwarranted and unwise for the court to attempt to prescribe an exclusive system of doing business which it is claimed may well have such an adverse impact on the exhibitors whom the suit was ostensibly designed to protect.

The differences of opinion reflected upon these appeals among the defendants subjected to the competitive bidding requirements emphasize the undesirability of any such shackling requirements for the future. None of the exhibitor-defendants other than Paramount assigned these provisions of the decree as error. It may be assumed that this action reflects a belief that the consequences envisioned by many exhibitors are not certain to ensue and confidence that the lower court will revise the provisions as experience may require. But the possibility that the exhibitors' prognosis may prove to be correct may well suggest the desirability of eliminating the present provision.

It is submitted that the injunctions contained in Section II(8) of the decree, are wholly unnecessary to accomplish what the court below thought that it was necessary to accomplish. That was to prevent the continuance of what the court felt was a system under which theatres competing with theatres which were part of a large circuit (whether or not the circuit was affiliated with a defendant) found it difficult to negotiate for and obtain desired films upon desired runs, and found that they were subjected to terms and conditions which discriminated against them in favor of the circuit theatres. Section II(9), (R. 3698) will, it is submitted, accomplish this purpose. That section enjoins defendants, as distributors, from arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor to license a feature to him on a run selected by him instead of licensing it to a competing exhibitor. This in itself is a drastic curtailment of the right of a trader to choose his own customer and exercise the ordinary incident of the ownership of his property. Thus, in every competitive situation, an exhibitor would be assured of a fair opportunity to negotiate for a license of a desired feature on a desired run, and any arbitrary refusal by a distributor to license under those conditions would constitute a violation of the decree, subjecting the defendant distributor to punishment for contempt.

To implement further this portion of the decree, and to give exhibitors an additional and speedy remedy in the case of a claim of an arbitrary refusal to negotiate with him, the defendants submitted with their proposed decree a proposal under which claims by an exhibitor that he had been arbitrarily refused a license could be arbitrated. (R. 2971-5, 2985-7.) The remedy of arbitration was not offered as an exclusive remedy, but it was proposed as an alternative and additional remedy so that the complaining exhibitor could, at his option, avail himself of the arbitration procedure or of the remedies afforded him at law (R. 2974, 2992, 2998-9). Nor was the arbitration procedure suggested as a means of insulating the defendants against contempt proceedings; it was expressly conceded that the Government would still have this remedy should there be a violation of the decree by the arbitrary refusal of a demand of an exhibitor for a license (R. 2895, 2974, 2980). The proposal of the defendants which, if accepted by the court would have taken the place of the present Sections II(8) and (9), is set forth in full in Appendix B hereto annexed.

Although this proposal of the defendants was acceptable to the same exhibitor groups who were heard by the court at the time of the settlement of the decree (R. 3032-3), as being preferable to the provisions of Section II(8), it was not adopted by the court. It is submitted that the court erred in this respect and that Section II(9) or defendants' proposal, either with or without the additional remedy of arbitration, is all that is necessary or proper to accomplish the result desired by the trial court. Section II(8) of the decree should be stricken. Section II(9) is sufficient to insure adequate opportunity to compete, but if it thought that this is in doubt, something like the defendants' proposal might well be substituted in lieu of the present Sections II(8), and (9).

While it may be difficult for this Court to attempt any detailed revision of the decree in these respects, it is evident that there were areas for the exercise of the lower court's discretion which did not involve the possibility of unfortunate consequences with which its own competitive bidding requirement is fraught. Since that requirement exceeded the bounds of its proper discretion, this Court should, at the very least, remand this portion of the decree for consideration of alternatives which do not involve (a) a permanent restraint on the method of doing business which precludes normal competitive activity, and (b) possible injury to small independent exhibitors who should be free to negotiate upon the best terms that they can get, having their past record as good customers an element not to be overlooked in the course of negotiations.

This is not an argument for the retention of the status quo. It is safe to assume that the court below will be able to find some acceptable alternative which will further change the status quo in material respects without depriving reputable former customers of the right to use their reputation as one argument in their favor. The balance of the decree already insures that substantial changes in the status quo are inevitable, but the desirability of change does not indicate that the appropriate remedy is unalterable rigidity.

ARGUMENT AS APPELLEES

In No. 79 the Government appeals from the decree and urges (1) that it is so inadequate as to constitute an abuse of discretion; (2) that the court below should have ordered divorcement by compelling divestiture of the defendants' respective theatre holdings; and (3) that pending divestiture the court should have prohibited each major defendant distributor from licensing its pictures for exhibition in any other defendant's theatres.

These contentions rest, in large measure, upon the Government's misinterpretation of facts and findings of fact, not supported by the record. We regret to note that in its statement of purported facts appearing in the brief at pages 11 to 34, many of the facts as there stated are distorted, and that the brief contains many inaccuracies and omissions, so that the statement cannot be accepted as a basis for this Court's decision of the issues. In the course of this reply, we will point out some of these errors and omissions but it would unduly extend this brief to deal with all of them.

While protesting that they "do not challenge any of what we consider to be the evidentiary findings" and asserting that they will "rely largely" on the facts found by the district court, except to refer to facts about which they believe there is no dispute. (Br. 11-12), the writers ignore some basic findings, directly attack others and proceed as though they had not been made, and base arguments on assumptions of fact nowhere to be found in this record. By rearrangement, or quotations of only part of findings, and constant repetition of findings out of context, the writers of the Government brief attempt to portray a situation not disclosed by the record or found by the court.

The brief as a whole reflects a determination to wreck the defendants and the industry regardless of any other consequences. The brief subordinates everything else in favor of a fixation for stripping defendants of their theatre interests and destroying their value in the course of that major surgical operation.

An attack is made (Br. 119-125) upon the court's conclusion and finding that divestiture would serve no useful purpose (R. 3559) and would, in fact, be injurious to the public as well as to the defendants (R. 3551, 3554-5). This attack is based upon the erroneous premise that the court thought theatre ownership was an evil but that the cure would be worse for the public and the defendants than the disease. But it is plain that this was not the rationale of the court's refusal to direct complete divestiture. The court had found that the supposed injury to the public came from the effect of trade practices in distribution which it ordered enjoined, and not from theatre ownership by defendants, and it pointed out clearly that divestiture would not remedy or alleviate the situation which it supposed was created by the existence and continuation of those distribution practices, but would leave the public, as well as the defendants, at the mercy of powerful independent circuits or of distributors controlling most of the best pictures and not competing in distribution (R. 3554-5). Thus the basis of the court's denial of the extreme relief sought by the Government was quite different from that upon which the present attack on its action seems to be predicated.

The court's conclusions are clearly sound in the light of past events. The inability of Paramount to market its films in the face of the powerful First National combine was alleged in the complaint (R. 3167) and found by the court (R. 3661-2). The proclivities of large independent circuits to monopolize and restrain competition by their smaller competitors was noted (R. 3555), and the correct conclusion was reached that divestiture and divorcement would only remove defendants (found to have been skilled operators of the best equipped theatres), from competition (R. 3551) which they had created and maintained by their entry into the field of exhibition (R. 3661-2; Findings 20 and 23, R. 3664).

It is said, in an attempt to answer the court's conclusion, that there was nothing in the record to suggest that independent interests could not give the public as good service as the defendants, (Br. 120), and, of course, they can, and we do not urge the contrary, but defendants are not to be deprived of lawful property interests merely because someone else wishes to and is qualified to own them. The other provisions of the decree assure that no qualified independent operator will be deprived of films; it should not also insulate him from competition from defendants with its resulting benefits to the public.

The findings are that there are nearly fifteen thousand independently operated theatres, and that they have increased in number more rapidly than affiliated theatres have (Finding 145, R. 3668); that independents actively compete in all places where a defendant operates except in a relatively few towns where all the theatres are affiliated (Findings 146-150, R. 3688-9), and that in those few situations, there was nothing inherent in theatre ownership by a defendant which prevented independent theatres from operating, and that the proof did not show that those situations had been brought about or maintained by wrongful action on the part of defendants (Finding 153, R. 3690).

The paradox which the Government sees in the court's conclusion (Br. 121-2) is unreal. The argument rests on the premise, held to be erroneous, that the distribution practices enjoined by the decree flow from the integration of distribution with exhibition, and that they cannot be eliminated except by wholesale punitive and confiscatory disintegration. The court, on substantial evidence, found to the contrary, and held that these practices did not flow from integration, (Findings 154-156, R. 3690). This premising of argument upon factual contentions found erroneous below hardly comports with a claim that the writers have accepted evidentiary findings and rely only on undisputed facts.

An attempt to create a prejudicial setting is made by the Government in its argument that experience, as purportedly shown by past litigation, shows that "No judgment which merely regulates defendants' trade practices can give adequate relief" (Br. 72-89). Aside from the obvious impropriety of attempting to lead this Court to determine issues framed by this record upon opinions based on entirely different records,* even the past cases and the administrative rulings referred to in the Government's brief (which by no means represent a fair cross-section of past cases) do not add up to the desired conclusion—that the restraints found in some of those cases are inherent in ownership of theatres by these defendants, whether their holdings be considered individually or in the aggregate, and therefore that this Court should disregard the findings below and conclude that the courts cannot give effective relief without divorcement. Indeed the argument suggests an almost unprecedented departure from proper conceptions of due process.

Mackey v. Easton, 86 U. S. 619 (1873); Ball v. Paramount Pictures, Inc., 67 F. Supp. 1 (W. D. Pa. 1946).

The Government's argument here, as in most of its brief, depends upon the assumption that the defendants' businesses can be aggregated, which the court below has expressly held cannot be done (R. 3553). In spite of its failure of proof justifying a contrary conclusion, the Government seeks to accomplish and justify aggregation by showing the licensing of some of each defendant's pictures for exhibition in some of the theatres of the other defendants, (which the Government erroneously calls "cross-licensing"), and the joint operation in the past of some theatres by two defendants, i.e., the few "pools". But the Government fails to show why, if these circumstances have led to abuses, a decree enjoining the abuses would not be all that is necessary, and why the only remedy appropriate for a court of equity is to destroy the ability of able competitors to compete, by permanently enjoining them from the exhibition field and making it impossible for them to operate pending forced sales of their present holdings. The Government concedes—indeed openly declares—the fact that the relief asked, of a ban on licensing between defendants, would result in forced sales of some theatres (Br. 131-2). Such relief is concededly without precedent (Br. 132-3) and is clearly of a punitive, and, in fact, vindictive nature.*

*"Pools" between defendants are, of course, effectively banned by the decree. Their existence in the past cannot form a basis for divestiture of all theatre holdings, and there appears to be no valid basis for a claim that the injunction granted against them is not adequate.

Since nothing in the findings or record warrants either the interim or final relief demanded, the Government resorts to an unrepresentative sampling of past cases against the industry in an attempt to justify it. But even if those cases in fact showed a past proclivity to violate the law, in certain particulars, which could properly be considered here, and past ineffective attempts to dispel the proclivity (which they do not, as we shall demonstrate), this Court will, of course, act only upon the proof before it, and not act on suspicion or facts found in other cases, and it will consider relief accordingly without prejudice and without undue injury, permitting the defendants to live under the law of the land. Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386; 324 U. S. 570 (1945); U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707 (1944).

Comments Upon the Government's Statement of Purported Facts

Under the heading "The theatre acquisitions of the five major defendants" (Br. 14), the Government states that in 1919 Paramount decided to acquire theatres of its own so that it might assure itself of outlets for Paramount productions. Later the Government urges that these acquisitions were "in order to have non-competitive market outlets for their films" (Br. 91). Such statements and conclusions are a distortion of the findings and ignore undisputed evidence in the record. As we have pointed out, at pages 22 to 24, supra, Paramount's initial acquisitions were competitive measures and were entirely lawful in purpose. We do not attempt to justify them on the ground that the members of the First National combine were violating the Anti-Trust Laws, as the Government suggests (Br. 103-4), and they were not in any way analogous to the "deliberate, calculated purchase for control" condemned in the Reading cases and the Yellow Cab case (Br. 104).* They constituted a legitimate and lawful method of enabling Paramount to sell its products when potential customers, lawfully or unlawfully, refused to buy them, and the exercise of the right to go into a business open to all. Since the initial acquisitions, Paramount or its subsdiaries have built new theatres, thus creating markets where none before existed, and Paramount has not confined itself to the acquisition of existing theatres or circuits (R. 608; Exs. P. 25 and P. 25A).

The omission of the actual facts disclosed by this record cannot serve to strengthen the current Government argument that integration in this industry is unlawful because it enables a defendant to monopolize and restrain trade in that alleged segment of business represented by its own copyrighted pictures (Br. 90 et seq.). We will expose the fallacy of this contention at a later point. When all of the facts are considered, the emptiness of the argument appears clear.

Again under the heading "Geographical Pattern of the Major Defendants' Theatre Holdings" (Br. 15-17), the Government seeks to create the impression that the defendants have agreed not to compete with each other in exhibition, except possibly in some forty-seven cities, most of which have populations of 100,000 or more, and that even in those cities the defendants who "nominally" compete in theatre operations do not compete with each other in the licensing of films (Br. 17-19). The facts do not support the claim.

*Anyone who purchases property does so with the intent to control it, but that does not make him a law-breaker. There was no showing that Paramount had any intent or power to exclude competitors, as in the cases which the Government cites.

The undisputed testimony establishes that there were no agreements among defendants to divide territory or not to compete generally with each other in exhibition (R. 608, 1601, 1826); and the court below failed to find any such agreements. Nor was there any evidence of, nor is there in fact, any "pattern" of theatre holdings, geographical or otherwise. Some theatres or circuits were acquired by one defendant in competition with another (R. 607-8, 937-40, 2041-2). Some theatres formerly owned by one defendant were acquired by another in the former's bankruptcy proceedings (R. 2090).

There was no proof that cities and towns, where one or more of the defendants had theatres, were capable of supporting more theatres or more theatres capable of operating as first run theatres. The Government makes a point of the fact that the downtown theatrical districts in large cities are already well supplied with theatres (Br. 63, 103).

Different policies governing the theatre operations of each defendant explain in good measure why they are not all found in the same places. Loew's, for example, apparently likes to operate a large theatre in a limited number of large cities. It started as an exhibitor after converting its existing large vaudeville houses into motion picture theatres when the vaudeville entertainment they were supplying lost its public appeal, and it thereafter acquired a production and distribution business competing with Paramount and others. Paramount, on the other hand, believes in operating in smaller places as well. It is not strange, therefore, that Loew's is not found in more places in competition with Paramount. Warner acquired many of its theatres through acquisition of an existing localized circuit (as of course some others did also). Warner, having no policy of general expansion, it is not strange that it, (or any defendant), is not found in competition with other defendants in places remote from its main operations where another defendant by a prior acquisition had obtained theatres.

RKO's predecessor, like Loew's, already had theatres in certain cities in which it was offering vaudeville which were converted for the exhibition of pictures, and the formation of RKO and its acquisition of production and distribution facilities created new competition for Paramount and others in all branches of the industry (Findings 20, 23, R. 3664).

Fox, in some cases, likewise acquired theatres already in existence in certain cities, sometimes in competition with Paramount or other defendants, who, when defeated by Fox in their efforts to acquire the circuit, were able to get other theatres in other cities. These circumstances account for the present geographical locations of many of defendants' theatres.

The facts show that Paramount competes in exhibition with one or more of the defendants in at least forty-five cities, and there was a complete lack of proof that it had agreed with anyone to stay out of a single town or area where another defendant operated.

The Government's comment that expansion by defendants has been subject to control by their respective home offices (Br. 17), if intended to raise a suspicion that there were agreements, is not substantiated by the proof. In Paramount's case that "control" was only the result of the fact that Paramount, as a stockholder in a subsidiary, required that it be consulted when the subsidiary desired to make a substantial capital expenditure such as, but not being limited to, the acquisition of a new theatre (R. 829, 886). Such a requirement is only a normal and prudent one to protect an investment. There was positive testimony that there were no agreements between defendants to stay out of areas where another defendant had theatres (R. 608, 1601, 1826). This case shows a pattern of such diversity as to be completely inconsistent with any claim of pattern or agreement with respect to theatre locations.

In support of its argument that the defendants, when operating in the same city, do not compete with each other for products (Br. 17-19), the Government asserts that in the ninety-two cities of more than 100,000 population, during the period 1937-1944 the product of the defendant distributors "continued to flow" to the defendant exhibitors with virtually no shift from one to the other, and it is asserted that defendants offered no evidence to prove such competition (Br. 19). Here again, by not disclosing the complete facts, the Government seeks to draw unwarranted inferences of agreements not to compete in licensing films. It ignores for example the finding by the court, amply supported, that in some cases Paramount theatres, though desirous of doing so, were unable to get licenses to exhibit another defendant's pictures, because they were licensed to competitors of the Paramount theatres (Finding 129, R. 3686). In some cases, the competitor was another defendant which had succeeded in licensing the desired product.

In a limited number of cases where two or more defendants have theatres, each theatre is able to fill its screen time with only its own or its parent company's pictures, and there is no occasion for it to compete for those of other distributors. In other places, the theatres can get along with a few other pictures or the products of one other distributor. The success of that one distributor in licensing its pictures to such a theatre necessarily excludes other distributors from doing so to the extent that the needs of the theatre are satisfied. The other distributors, as a result of the first one's successful competition for the available screen time of the theatre, naturally seek and obtain another licensee, who may or may not be one of the defendants. "Switches" thereafter do not occur frequently, simply because the circumstances which cause the original selection of licensee or product do not change frequently.

The Government's argument also ignores the findings that the defendant distributors, other than Loew's, in twenty-one out of the thirty-six large cities where Loew's operates theatres, licensed their pictures to competitors of the Loew's theatre, and that over the years they have licensed less and less products to the Loew's theatres (Findings 131-2, R. 3686). It ignores the findings and proof as to the great fluctuations year to year in the amount of film rentals paid by the theatres of one defendant to each of the other defendants, indicating variations in number of pictures licensed (Findings 134-44, R. 3686-8).*

Furthermore, if in some places there was little or no shifting of product from one defendant's theatre to an-

*It is true that where defendant has a theatre, it usually exhibits its pictures there first, and to that extent does not put those pictures on the market for competing exhibitors until it has run the picture in its own theatres or decided not to do so, and this is all that the witness Rodgers was referring to when he testified, (R. 572, Government Brief 18-19), that defendants did not compete for the licensing of Loew's products. It cannot be blown up into a concession of a general lack of competition as the Government's brief attempts to do.

other defendant's theatre, that fact alone is not indicative of anything unlawful, and certainly is no proof of a general conspiracy among defendants to obtain a monopoly for one or all. There was no showing, for example, that conditions had changed in any of those cities so as to make a Paramount theatre dissatisfied with the product of Loew's, and desire to replace it with Warner product and, therefore, to induce the Paramount theatre to compete against an RKO theatre for that product. Many reasons more consistent with legitimate business considerations than unlawful conspiracy suggest themselves and appear in the record as to why theatres, whether affiliated or not, continue to show the pictures of the same producers rather than to change producers frequently and constantly. And there are equally valid reasons why a distributor does not try to "peddle" its product, but prefers a more steady customer (R. 735-6, 823, 1391, 1701). Theatres, whether affiliated or not, need a steady flow of product, and naturally can be assured of such a steady flow better by continuing to deal with a given distributor than by shopping around among all.

Clearly there is no law which brands unlawful per se normal continuance of business relations between a buyer and seller or a principal and agent, and the fact that these relations continue is not a suspicious circumstance justifying an inference of unlawful agreement. An illustration makes the matter clearer. Suppose exhibitor A for years has had satisfactory results from playing the pictures of distributors X and Y. These pictures supply A with enough product to operate his theatre. He does not need more pictures and he cannot do with less. His competitors, exhibitors B and C, need and deal for the product of the remaining distributing companies and succeed in obtaining their respective needs. They likewise need no more pictures and cannot do with less. If A should then also license the product of one of the distributors theretofore supplying B or C, he would have available more pictures than he could use, and his competitors, B and C, or one of them, would have less than needed and would be forced to attempt to get a product away from A. With this prospect in mind, A concludes that he would not benefit from trying to acquire products other than those distributed by X and Y, and is therefore content to deal with those distributors and not raid the suppliers of B and C. Distributors X and Y, on the other hand, enjoying satisfactory business relations with A, are content to deal with him so long as he continues to have a good theatre, pay reasonable license fees and meet his obligations. There is no reason in business, law or morals to expect that there would be frequent changes under these circumstances and that exhibitors A, B or C or the distributors would seek to create destructive competition in such circumstances. The Sherman Act does not compel competition—it only outlaws unreasonable restraints of it. U. S. v. United States Steel Corporation, 251 U. S. 417, 451 (1920). Neither independent operators nor these defendants as exhibitors are required by the Sherman Act to disregard normal self-interest.

The fact that Ford sells its cars to or through the same distributor from year to year and may not offer distributorships to competing distributors frequently, or the fact that General Motors may not try to solicit Ford's dealers to give up selling its cars in favor of those of General Motors, are not circumstances which require an inference of an agreement between Ford and General Motors not to compete, or of an agreement between the dealers to divide the market rather than to compete for a product to sell. Nor does the fact that a retailer of Firestone and Goodrich tires continues as such, and does not frequently give up those brands or try to take the product of Goodyear away from his neighbor, mean that he and his neighbor have agreed not to compete in obtaining products to sell. There is no more reason on this record for construing any absence of shifts of product between defendants' theatres as itself indicative of conspiracy, than in the above illustrations.

Furthermore, if and to the extent that normal shifts have been impeded by long-term contracts or by master agreements, these impediments will be removed by the injunctions in the decree against the making of franchises and master agreements, from which we do not appeal.

Under the heading "The Defendants' Position in the Industry" (Br. 19-22), the Government gives statistics intended to show the aggregate theatre holdings of the separate defendants and the aggregate license fees received by all of them as distributors. Aggregation is resorted to because it has been necessary for the Government to concede that if each defendant is considered individually, the statistics are not significant. They are clearly irrelevant in the absence of some legal justification for treating defendants as one theatre operating combination. The defendants collectively have no "position" in the industry—each has its own position and strives to better it. The Government conceded below that "1. Individually considered, each distributor defendant directly controls only a fraction of the entire domestic distribution business" and "2. Individually considered, each producer-exhibitor directly controls only a fraction of the entire domestic exhibition business * * *." (Government's Trial Brief, p. 2). In the absence of evidence and finding of some vast national agreement not to compete in the licensing of products, a conclusion that there was one rests solely on inference from the bare fact that one defendant distributor over a given period of time has licensed its product to a certain exhibitor defendant and not to another defendant operating a theatre in the same city, an inference which was for the trial court and which it refused to draw. The inference cannot be drawn here since many lawful considerations are at least equally probable and the Government failed to sustain its burden of proof. Schad v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, 136 F. (2d) 991, (CCA 3, 1943); Pennsylvania Railroad Co. v. Chamberlin, 288 U. S. 333, 339 (1933).

Since there is no proper basis for treating defendants in the aggregate, the statistics as to their aggregate theatre holdings and aggregate film rentals are mere exercises in arithmetic. When Paramount's individual business is examined, its "position" in the industry presents an entirely different picture.* It owns interests in only about 1550 theatres or about 9% of those in operation. Those theatres pay no more than 11% of the total domestic film rental received by each of the 7 distributor defendants other than Paramount, and no more than 16.8% of such film rental received by all (Ex. 425). Its theatre holdings are not confined to large cities of the United States, but it has theatres in smaller places as well, and its theatres are the only ones supplying motion picture entertainment to the inhabitants of some of those smaller places. It has first run theatres in only 47 of the 92 cities with populations of over 100,000, and it owns interests in all of the currently operating first-run theatres in only 11 of those cities.* It has no monopoly or "virtual monopoly" of first run theatres in the legal sense in any of these cities, as the court below found (Finding 153, R. 3690) and has competitors in all of these cities. It has theatre interests in only 139 of the 320 cities with populations of 25,000 to 100,000. It has no monopoly in the legal sense of the exhibition business in any of the towns where it has the only theatre or theatres. As the court below pointed out, unlawful monopolization cannot be shown merely by proof of ownership of the only theatre or store in a town (R. 3554, 3556).

*Compare its present position with the allegation that in 1916 it was the dominating influence in the industry (Compl. par. 97, R. 3167).

Paramount annually distributes not more than about 9% of the features distributed in the aggregate by the 8

*The term "first-run theatre" is really a misnomer. Any theatre obtaining a license for the first showing of any picture in any competitive area is a "first-run theatre" as to that picture in that area (R. 23). As a convenient descriptive phrase, however, it generally denotes the best theatre in an area. Paramount theatres are generally the best or comparable to the best in their respective areas (R. 751, 869, 1926, Exs. P-24 and P-24A) and distributors license them for the first showing of their pictures because of that fact and not because they belong to Paramount (R. 1514, 1699, 1973, 2043). Similarly, Paramount as a distributor attempts to license the first showing of its pictures to the best theatres regardless of who owns them (R. 763), although sometimes where Paramount has no theatre it is not successful because its distributor competitors have succeeded in filling the needs of the best theatres (R. 704-5, 753).

See United States v. Pullman Co., 64 F. Supp. 108, 112 (E. D. Pa. 1945) where it was said "If there is only one store in the town at which everyone trades, that fact does not itself constitute a monopoly in the legal sense. It is only when the merchant maintains his position by the devices which compel everyone to trade with him exclusively that the situation becomes legally objectionable."

defendants and 3 of the other national distributors, Republic, Monogram and PRC (Finding 99, R. 3677). It receives no more than 15.6% of the annual film licensing revenue paid to the 8 defendants distributors and, of course, a much smaller percentage of the film revenue received by all distributors.

Statistics for the other defendants, individually, will undoubtedly be found in their separate briefs, and will indicate, as do the above, that the statistics used by the Government, when properly viewed, show the absence of monopoly or the ability to monopolize in any of the defendants. The trial court's findings, that there is no basis for treating the defendant's separate businesses as one, require that the elaborate statistics put together on an opposite basis be treated as irrelevant. Maple Flooring Association v. United States, 268 U. S. 563, 577 (1925).

Under the heading "The Conspiracy to Fix Prices, Clearances, and Runs" (Br. 22-29), we find the Government seeking to convert the actual agreements found below into agreements justifying aggregation of the defendants contrary to the interpretation of those findings by the court which made them. Here the Government sets out the findings of the lower court with respect to the licensing practices pursuant to which films have been licensed to all theatres, whether affiliated or not, and the findings that in general the runs and clearances granted, and the minimum admission prices inserted in the licenses of all the defendants individually with all their licensees, have been substantially similar. From this similarity the court below inferred a conspiracy between the defendant distributors and all of their licensees, independent and defendants, to maintain a fixed system of runs, clearances and minimum admission prices. The Government asserts (Br. 24) that "this conspiracy has been effectuated mainly by means of film-licensing agreements between all eight defendants as distributors and the five major defendants as exhibitors" (Citing Finding 64 at R. 3670). But that finding does not support the statement. It is a general finding that the defendants' licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all of the distributor defendants as well as between the distributor defendants individually and all their various exhibitors, and that they show a general price fixing arrangement in which both the distributors and all their licensees were involved.* The finding shows on its face that it has nothing to do with the ownership or operation of theatres by the defendant distributors, and there is no justification in the record for treating the erroneous conclusion of conspiracy based only on similarity of licensing practices used by all distributors with all exhibitors, as stemming from theatre ownership by defendants. The court found to the contrary (Finding 154, R. 3690), and the Government points to no evidence to justify disregard of that finding. Continued repetition of the simple fact that in many instances each of the five major defendants as an exhibitor has been licensed by other defendants as distributor under license agreements providing for runs, clearance and minimum admission prices cannot serve to change the character of the conspiracy as found or obscure its application to all situations. The findings show that these practices have been followed by all distributors, whether defendants or not, with all licensees whether affiliated or not, and there is no basis to conclude that the conspiracy was effectuated mainly by the licenses of one defendant to another defendant's theatres, or that ownership of theatres by defendants was its root. And, if the licenses contain matters which are objectionable, or their terms are imposed by unlawful conspiracy, the remedy is by injunction against all who participated, not amputation of some upon a complete misdiagnosis of the ailment.

*Of course, the number of licenses which Paramount (and other defendants as well) makes with independents far outnumber those which it makes with defendants' theatres (R. 668, 1072, 1266, 1416).

Reciting findings out of context in an effort to develop its thesis, the Government finally arrives at its conclusion, entirely synthetic, that the "obvious purpose and effect of this system was to increase the profits of the major defendants, both as distributors and exhibitors and to produce greater profits for the non-exhibitor defendants in their capacity as distributors" (Br. 26). Of course, there is nothing heinous in the pursuit by an American business concern of a policy which has the purpose and effect of increasing its profits. It is unlawful only if an illegal agreement or combination is involved or the motive or effect is to monopolize.

The evidence shows that the licensing practices were designed and followed by all distributors to enhance their revenue and adopted by all exhibitors, whether affiliated or independent, to further their respective businesses. Legitimate self-interest of all members of the industry induced the practices prior to and regardless of integration by defendants (R. 423, 439-40, 665, 705, 717, 916-8, 934, 1080-1, 1269, 1506, 1904).* Accordingly, relief (if appropriate

*The Government fails in its attempt to show that the supposed conspiracy to fix runs, clearances and minimum admission prices which were substantially uniform in each competitive area originated only after integration (Br. 28-9). The proof showed that these practices originated with the feature picture before even Paramount acquired theatres (R. 423, 439-40, 665, 705, 717, 916-8, 934, 1080-1, 1269, 1506, 1904). They, of course, at all) was properly addressed to the practices and it would have been an abuse of discretion to strike at unrelated lawful activities.

If it is unlawful for a distributor to stipulate minimum admission prices in areas where it operates theatres for the purpose of safe-guarding the box office receipts of these theatres, or if the distributors have conspired to fix prices or otherwise unreasonably restrained competition they should be enjoined, but they should not be dismembered.

The Government relies heavily upon Finding 72 (R. 3672-3) to the effect that admission price differentials between runs in competitive areas heretofore prevailing in licenses were calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see pictures at the higher priced first-run theatres, and that in effect the distributors, in fixing minimum prices, attempt to give the prior run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible (Br. 26-27). But if such a view of motive be accepted, this record shows that the attempt never approaches success, nor is it expected to.

---

existed long before Twentieth Century-Fox acquired theatres in 1925 and before Warner and RKO did so in 1926 and 1928 respectively. To the extent that the current licenses evidence a "steadily increasing control by the distributor over the exhibitor's business" (Br. 28), the statement, if true, is not shown to be due to integration. One would suppose, on the contrary, that the defendant exhibitors, if obsessed with the motives which the Government ascribes to them, would have seen to it that those controls would be relaxed, not extended, and, the evidence shows that all distributors limit their licenses to all theatres whether they belong to a distributor or not (R. 697, 707, 715, 1483, 1506). Similarity in detail in the contracts is accounted for by the fact that a more or less standard form of contract was evolved at the request of independent exhibitors, and when NRA was functioning, which has been continued by the individual distributors with variations since these times (R. 923, 925, 927, 929, 931).

The fact is that the minimum admission price provisions have not been confined to subsequent licenses; these provisions have also been inserted in the licenses of all prior runs (affiliated or not) in order to protect the value of the subsequent run (affiliated or not), and to protect his patronage in the lower priced theatre.* Thus the conception of motive contained in Finding 72 is more extreme than the facts warrant. Price differentials likewise reflect the depreciated value of the picture resulting from its prior exhibition, and the lower price is the inducement used by the subsequent run operator to attract patronage to his theatre. If, contrary to the uncontradicted evidence that the price is the theatre's normal price at the time (Finding 63, R. 3670), it can properly be said that the distributor fixes the price, and if it can be said that it does so to attract patronage to the theatre, then logically it should be said that the distributor fixes the differentials and the lower prices in subsequent run theatres in order to attract patronage away from the higher priced earlier run theatres. The plain fact is that the distributor's revenue depends on exhibition in as many theatres as possible, on as many runs as possible and to as many theatre patrons as possible. There is little room for inferring a motive to monopolize in such a projected market. It is well known that the greater the business done by a picture on earlier runs the better it does on subsequent ones (R. 817-8; 1387-8). In the light of the foregoing, Finding 72, if true, is only a half-truth, and cannot have any of the sinister implications which the Government sees in it.

*The Government's position with respect to minimum admission prices is subject to wide variations. In United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. (No. 10 this Term), in discussing the run clearance and minimum admission terms and licenses, Government counsel said "That is it [a distributor] will fix a run and give a clearance protection and provide admission prices which will to a great extent directly determine the terms on which the film can be played by the competitor. And, as I say, each contract that is made, of course, does restrain competition in that sense. Now, we do not here attack those restraints as such. Whatever may have been the position originally this method of licensing films through clearance and minimum admission prices has been established in the industry and it is the way in which the industry operates and so long as those restraints are reasonable, as far as we are concerned, there clearly is no conflict with the Sherman Act." (Schine Record, 493-94).

At page 27 of its brief the Government concludes that "as a result of the control over both distribution and exhibition exercised by the defendants the conspiracy has been so successful * * *" that exhibitors and distributors have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs and admission prices, if they wish to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition (citing Finding 84, R. 3674). But that Finding shows that the situation which the court supposed existed, had nothing to do with ownership of theatres by defendants. The "fixed scale" was found to exist throughout the industry, and the supposed effect was upon competition by all distributors and exhibitors to compete with all of defendants licensees, or to get their pictures shown in theatres of all licensees, whether affiliated or not. Citation of Finding 84 to support the Government's conclusion is misleading, and to accept the conclusion requires the ignoring of Finding 154 (R. 3690) that the illegalities and restraints found by the court were not due to ownership of theatres by the defendants, but were in the trade practices and pooling agreements, and the court's conclusion in its opinion that outside of the trade practices and agreements which it thought violated the anti-trust laws and which it abolished by the decree, there was competition among the defendants and between them and independents for the exhibition of their pictures (R. 3554). These views as to the wide areas of competition and the narrow areas of restraint ought not to be disregarded in appraising so complicated an industry.

Under the heading "Theatre Pooling Arrangements" (Br. 29-31), the Government, unjustifiably assimilates partial ownership of theatres with pools and percentage leases, and treats them all as "pools of theatres which otherwise would be independent". The two types of relationship are easily distinguishable, and, as we have shown in Point I supra, they merit separate treatment. There is certainly a difference between an agreement between two competitors for the joint operation and sharing of profits of separately owned theatres in the same competitive area, and the ownership of stock in a company owning, leasing or operating theatres in several places in which no competitor is involved. As we have shown in Point I supra, neither the Government in its proof nor the court considered the facts in any of the partial ownership situations. The Government did not assert that they had the effect which a pooling by competitors of competing theatres had on competition between the parties, to fix prices, etc., upon which the court found and concluded that pools were unlawful (Finding 112, R. 3682; Conclusion 9(a), R. 3693). In Point I supra, we have adequately demonstrated that the court's disposition of partial interests, virtually without giving us an opportunity to be heard, was erroneous and the Government's reliance on that portion of the decision is, therefore, misplaced.

At pages 31 to 34 of its brief the Government refers to other trade practices such as "block-booking," "blind selling," master agreements, formula deals and franchises, and to certain discriminations in licenses between small theatre operators and large ones, affiliated and independent. Their use bears no relationship to theatre ownership by defendants. Furthermore, master agreements, franchises, formula deals and unlawful discriminations are adequately eliminated by the decree. "Block booking" and "blind selling" are simply bogeys disposed of in the briefs of other defendants.

The Government's Reliance Upon Earlier Litigation Concerning the Industry

About 13% of the Government's brief is consumed by a dissertation on a few selected cases brought against defendants in this industry under the anti-trust laws, and a statement with respect to prior administrative attempts under the NRA and under the Consent Decree to regulate industry practices (Br. 72-90). There is no claim that the decrees in these suits were not followed to the letter, except perhaps for the recitation of the contempt proceedings brought in Chicago in the Balaban & Katz matter, but there, as the footnote at page 79 of the brief shows, the violation of the consent decree ultimately found by the Master was of "a general provision against monopolization in the terms of Section 2 of the Sherman Act" and "none of the defendants were found guilty of violating the more specific provisions of the decree * * *". The Government neglects to add that the pleas of nolo to dispose of the matter were made as part of the agreement resulting in Consent Decree of November 19, 1940 in the present case (R. 2763-4).

These earlier cases are apparently relied upon by the Government as showing their ineffectiveness to prevent all law violations. Of course, if a court could (and would) depart far enough from the normal judicial function as to make a decree which would thereafter prevent all law violations by the members of an industry so that the industry would be entirely governed by the court on citations for contempt, we might have a more simple form of government—certainly it would be a different one. But that is not our system, and courts properly limit themselves to dealing with issues tendered by pleadings and competent evidence presented to them. The suits brought by the Government against local circuits (West Coast Theatres, Inc. and Balaban & Katz Corporation, (Br. 78-9)) involved local issues (R. 5). There is no evidence that the decrees were ineffective, and the Government was satisfied in 1940 to have them amended to conform to the Consent Decree in this case (R. 2763-4).

In the two suits brought in 1928 (Br. 79-80), the Government chose to present very narrow issues as to the legality of contract terms (R. 5) concededly adopted openly by the distributors by agreement in an effort to find ways to prevent fraud against distributors (United States v. First National Pictures Inc., 282 U. S. 44) and to provide fair and inexpensive methods of determining disputes by arbitration. (Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation v. United States, 282 U. S. 30.) The distributors were held to have violated the law because of their joint action, but the courts did not condemn their motives. In fact the Court conceded that the purpose and the effect was to benefit the industry, but held the joint action made them unlawful. There is no suggestion that the decrees were not honored or that they were ineffective to accomplish what the Government asked for. They have no bearing on any issue involved in this appeal or to the relief that the Government is here demanding.

The Youngclaus case discloses nothing sinister. It involved an effort to reduce clearances by formulating a uniform maximum clearance scale which was openly arrived at by a Film Board of Trade and adopted by the distributors and all exhibitors in the area except Youngclaus, in the belief that their action was lawful. When it was discovered that they were in error, that ended the matter, and the Government's possible preference for the pre-Youngclaus clearances over those granted individually by the distributors at the time of this trial is hardly significant. There is no finding here that any of those particular clearances were unlawful.

The Interstate case presented another narrow local issue of a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. The situation disclosed by the record was an unusual one as this Court noted in its opinion (306 U. S. 208, 222). The decree terminated the practices to which the Government had confined its complaint, and this Court could hardly be criticized for not providing a universal nostrum.

The Government's suggestion that Paramount disregarded a part of the Federal Trade Commission order in 1927 is unfounded. The Commission apparently felt so unsure of its grounds with respect to Paramount's theatre acquisitions that it decided not to attempt to make its order effective and, therefore, did not ask the Circuit Court for the necessary enforcement order.* The Government's quotation from the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals at page 75 of its brief is completely out of context. The court was referring only to block booking in combination among distributors and was not discussing anything else. It expressly found that Paramount had not combined with others to do the things charged as unlawful.

---

*At that time orders of the Commission were not effective unless it obtained an enforcement order from the court. Now, of course, its orders are effective unless set aside by the Circuit Court of Appeals. The Federal Trade Commission Act was amended by the Walter-Lea Act (52 Stat. 111) in 1938.

The complaint that the NRA Code was only partially successful in mitigating discrimination (Br. 85-7) is not based on any evidence in the record, and we would have supposed that the place to meet that ghost, if anywhere, was on the record. It apparently rests on hearsay information of writers for the Government, many of whose statements of fact were gleaned from the complaint in this suit prior to a trial of the issues.* The court found that arbitration under the Consent Decree was of real benefit to this complex industry and recommended its continuance (R. 3558, 3702).

Finally, the Government cites three private damage suits won by theatre operators (Br. 87-8). It seems clear that these suits are no more relevant to the questions presented here than would be an exposition by us of the numerous private anti-trust suits which have been won by the defendant distributors and exhibitors. In every such suit the questions of conspiracy and monopolistic action have been closely contested, and the triers of the facts have sometimes resolved the questions against defendants and sometimes in their favor. Here the court below has, from similarities, inferred conspiracy to fix runs, clearances and minimum admission prices, and has found that partial ownerships of theatres restrained competition between the co-owners. We think both conclusions are wrong, but we are here simply pointing out that defendants should be judged upon this record and not upon another one. Past history indicates that defendants will win a fair share of the pending suits referred to in the footnote at page 72 of the Government's brief—the mere pendency of these suits cannot be taken as proof of guilt demanding that the defendants be barred from the exhibition business.*

*See, for example, the reliance of the T. N. E. C. Monograph 43 (Br. 16) on the amended complaint in this action.

Equally irrelevant would be reliance upon suits won by a distributor against unlawful conduct of a large number of exhibitors who combine to boycott its films to force the distributor to grant them concessions, such as in Paramount Pictures Inc. v. United Motion Picture Theatre Owners, 93 F. (2d) 714, (C. C. A. 3, 1937).

The statement at pages 37 to 38 of the Government's brief that the court "said nothing concerning the Government's claim of a collective distribution monopoly, or its contention that each vertically integrated combination between a major distributor and its theatres violated both Sections 1 and 2," (of the Sherman Act), is hardly fair. The fact is that the court refused to hold that there was any distribution or exhibition monopoly, individual or collective, as the Government recognizes, (Br. 11), and held that outside of the trade practices which it thought were illegal there was competition in distribution (R. 1554). The court had no occasion to consider and reject the argument now made as to why the Government now urges that integration is unlawful for its present argument is made here for the first time. It was conceded that a distributor had the right to show its own pictures (R. 1945) and it was not asserted that licensing films to or exhibiting them in a wholly or partially owned theatre necessarily resulted in a continuing restraint and monopolization with respect to "that important segment of trade represented by the pictures it distributes to its own treatres" (Br. 90-1).

*Some of the private anti-trust cases successfully defended by one or more of the defendants are as follows: Westway Theatres, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, 30 F. Supp. 830, 113 F. (2d) 932; Rembusch v. MPPDA, Inc.; D. C. N. Y.; Quittner v. MPPDA, D. C. N. Y.; Colonial Theatrical Enterprises, Inc. v. Cooperative Theatres of Michigan, Inc., E. D. Mich.; Frels v. Jefferson Amusement Company, et al., D. C. Tex.; Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia, D. C. N. D. Ill.; E. M. Loew's v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film, et al., D. C. Mass.; Miami Drive In v. Loew's, D. C. Mass.; Winchester Theatre Co. v. Twentieth Century-Fox, et al., D. C. Mass.; Schad v. Twentieth Century-Fox, D. C. Pa.; Ball v. Paramount Pictures Inc., 67 F. Supp. 1 (W. D. Pa., 1946); Schubert v. Metro, D. C. Minn. There are many others.

A change of the forum and of the lance-bearers has brought a change in front, and we now find ideas advanced for the first time which were not presented, and perhaps not even shared, by the counsel who prepared the case before 1938, lived with it in the interim and presented it to the court in 1945. We will now discuss the new theory that ownership of a place to exhibit his picture is per se a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act because it enables the owner of property or the holder of a monopoly guaranteed by a statute designed to carry out a mandate of the Constitution (the Copyright Law) to restrain competition in and to monopolize his own property, and that therefore the court should have ordered ultimate divorcement (Br. 90 et seq.).*

The Government's Theory That Each Integrated Company Constitutes an Unlawful Restraint and a Monopolization of the Pictures it Exhibits in or Licenses to its Own Theatres

The Government rests this novel proposition on the following statements (Br. 90-1):

---

*Paramount's position with respect to the mandate of Section II(8) of the Decree enjoining any method of licensing except by the so-called competitive bidding system devised sua sponte by the trial court is sufficiently set forth above in Point II and need not be repeated. We, of course, disagree that the conclusion of the Government, namely, that since the method devised by the court is no good that ergo divestiture is the only remedy open to a court of equity.

> "It is not our contention that each major defendant has a national monopoly of distribution, or that its film product alone would give its theatres a national monopoly of exhibition. We contend that each vertical affiliation between a major distributor and its theatres necessarily results in a continuing restraint and a monopolization with respect to that important segment of trade represented by the pictures it distributes to its own theatres".

and (Br. 91-2):

> "Each vertical relationship thus has two serious trade-restraining consequences. First, to the extent that the motion picture requirements of each group of affiliated theatres are satisfied by the pictures of its distributor, all other distributors are excluded from that important segment of the market. Second, wherever a distributor has theatres, the other exhibitors are excluded from the opportunity of licensing the exclusive runs reserved for the distributor's own theatres."

The Government's argument appears to be that integration is unlawful because, for example, Paramount pictures preempt some of the playing time in Paramount's theatres, but for which fact competing distributors' pictures might be shown at that very time in the Paramount theatre, and competing theatres might be showing those Paramount pictures at that time. It is claimed that this is an illegal restraint of trade requiring dismemberment as a matter of law.

The record shows that Paramount's theatres do not show Paramount pictures exclusively, and, in fact, that only a few of them could not exist on them alone. Pictures of other distributors must be and are regularly shown by Paramount's theatres. There was no evidence that because and while Paramount pictures were shown in Paramount's theatres, competing distributors did not have an adequate theatre market outside of Paramount's theatres, or that theatres competing with Paramount's theatres had not sufficient other product to show at that time or were forced to shut their doors or even limit their programs.

The practice of showing Paramount pictures in Paramount's theatres is hardly exclusionary in any legal sense, and it certainly serves as no basis for holding that it involves an unreasonable or substantial restraint of trade. The findings show that Paramount pictures are shown in 8,000 to 14,500 of the 18,000 theatres in the United States (Finding 130, R. 3686) and that intense sales efforts are made to license as many theatres as possible (supra, pp. 13-14). This wide distribution of Paramount features is the antithesis of exclusion. The simple fact is that two pictures can not be shown at the same time on one screen in one theatre and whatever consequences arise from that fact will arise whether or not the theatre is owned by a distributor. It involves no more than the common experience that while any property is being enjoyed, there is ordinarily no room for duplication. But the consequences of that elementary fact can hardly offend the Sherman Act while it remains lawful to own and enjoy private property.

The Government relies for the novel proposition now advanced chiefly on the recent decision in United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218 (1947). It, of course, does not say explicitly that integration per se is unlawful, and no such conclusion would find support in the Yellow Cab decision, but its argument, amounts to that, as we shall presently demonstrate.

The Yellow Cab case tested the sufficiency of a complaint which alleged in paragraph 20 (Yellow Cab Record, p. 8) that defendant Markin and others had commenced negotiations to merge certain cab operating companies. According to the complaint: "One of the principal purposes of the proposed merger was to insure that these cab operating companies would thereafter purchase all of their motor vehicles for use as cabs from CCM and would not buy them from competitors of CCM." The brief of the Government relied heavily on this allegation as to the purpose of the merger (Govt. Yellow Cab brief, pp. 6, 28), stating that the elimination of competitors from the market there in question "was not only effected by combination but was the direct object of the combination. Defendants obtained their 'dominating power' over the cab companies 'by deliberate, calculated purchase for control.' See United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57."

In reversing, this Court adopted this argument of the Government and emphasized the fact that: "The complaint charges that the restraint of interstate trade was not only effected by the combination of the appellees but was the primary object of the combination. The theory of the complaint, to borrow language from United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26, 57, is that 'dominating power' over the cab operating companies 'was not obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management, but by deliberate, calculated purchase for control.'"

One may well ask what findings there are in this record which can be considered comparable to the allegations in the Yellow Cab complaint. The Government suggests (Br. 90), that it is somewhat surprised by the absence of any "explicit" findings on this subject in view of the claim—asserted without record references—that it has "consistently maintained" the position which is now developed in its Point II A. Without further controversy on that score it suffices to note that the findings of the court are complete and are directly contrary to the facts alleged and assumed to be true in the Yellow Cab case.

The court found on uncontroverted evidence that in 1916 or 1917, a group of exhibitors which controlled many of the then best theatres throughout the country organized First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc. as a film buying combine. Shortly thereafter, First National, then in control of 3500 or more theatres, including the largest and best ones in the principal cities, entered the production and distribution fields, and embarked on a two-pronged campaign to entice away Paramount's acting and directing talent, and to bar its theatres to Paramount's productions (Findings 4-7, R. 3661-62). "In these circumstances Paramount determined to acquire interests in theatres of its own so that it might assure itself of outlets for Paramount productions" (Finding 8, R. 3662). The purpose thus was to compete and not, as the Government says, to acquire market control which would assure it of outlets regardless of the merits of its pictures.

These findings are, of course, a far cry from the charge in the Yellow Cab case, and rather exemplify what this Court meant when it suggested in the Reading case and reaffirmed in the Yellow Cab case that integration "obtained by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management," would not violate the Sherman Act.

Paramount's integration, far from constituting "deliberate, calculated purchase for control", of exhibition, was in fact dictated by the growth of its enterprising production and distribution business which had found itself deprived of an outlet for its product. It was confronted with the Hobson's choice of either (1) continuing to produce without a substantial number of customers to whom to sell; or (2) permitting its business to continue to grow by purchasing theatres where it might place its pictures in competition with those of other producers. (See Complaint par. 99, R. 3167).

The Government says that Paramount was guilty of "unlawful conduct" when it chose the latter course and yet it characterizes First National's exclusionary policies as "honest competition" (Br. 104). We know of no authoritative interpretation of the Sherman Act which sanctions a deliberate campaign—such as First National's—to deprive a competitor of its raw materials, its personnel, and to exclude it from the market; and yet makes it unlawful for that competitor to acquire its own outlets in order to survive. But however First National's tactics be described, unless the Court is prepared to hold that integration is unlawful per se, the conclusion below must be affirmed.

The "necessary consequence" (Br. 91) or the "natural consequence" (Br. 95) or the "necessary effect" (Br. 103) which the Government seems to find simply from the fact of the integrations now before the Court are common to all integrations in the sense that subsidiary corporations tend to purchase the product of their parents. But even if that natural tendency raised questions—which it does not, the defendants here could still not be found guilty of having monopolized any appreciable segment of the market.

Except for a very limited number of theatres in the very largest cities, no theatre can be operated on the product of only one distributor (Finding 151, R. 3689). Paramount, during the typical 1943-1944 season produced 31 features (Finding 99, R. 3677) and it is evident on the face of it that Paramount therefore could not fully supply even a theatre which changed features only once a week and played on only a single-feature policy. Necessarily the great bulk of the nation's theatres in general, including Paramount's theatres, are in the market for the many additional features necessary to keep operating. They have not been withdrawn from the market as were the subsidiaries in the Yellow Cab case. By the same token, Paramount, by licensing or showing its features for exhibition in its own theatres did not take them out of the market as were the cabs manufactured by CCM. In order to stay in business and to operate profitably, Paramount must license its features to many others and as the court below said (R. 3554):

> "Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures." (Emphasis supplied.)

These considerations, which show the sharp distinction which must be drawn between the Yellow Cab case and the case at bar, a fortiori effectively destroy the basis for finding any analogy in United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. and United States v. Reading Co. on which the Government also relies. At the outset of the opinion in the Reading case, the Court emphasized the necessity for determining the intent and purpose with which the combinations assailed had been formed (253 U. S. 43-44). It then reviewed the annual reports of the Reading Railroad Company which showed that it had embarked on a policy of attempting to control the anthracite tonnage of the Schuylkill anthracite field by acquiring extensive ownership of coal lands. Such acquisitions were followed by the purchase of competing railroads and by the utilization of the Holding Company to take control of a vast network of properties "solely because the creditors and stockholders of the former Reading Railroad Company and of the Reading Coal Company desired to establish the proposed scheme for control of the properties formerly owned by the two companies" (id., at p. 47, emphasis supplied). Considerations like these led the Court to characterize the process by which the integration was accomplished as "deliberate, calculated purchase for control" (id., at p. 57).

In both the Reading and Lehigh Valley cases, the chief object of the effort at control was a large area of coal-producing land, control of which by its very nature led to monopoly, in the light of the fact that the known coal-producing lands in the United States were extremely limited in area. On the other hand, there is no natural limit to the number of feature motion pictures which can be produced; and certainly "control" of less than 10% of them is not comparable to the control which was achieved in those two railroad cases.*

It is thus clear that the attempt to find an analogy in the Yellow Cab, Lehigh Valley and Reading cases must fail for two major reasons: (1) There is here no proof or finding that the integration of the theatre-owning defendants was the result of "deliberate, calculated purchase for control" within the meaning of those words as used in the cited cases; the proof and findings are to the contrary and that failure of proof cannot be supplied by the surprising statement by the party with the burden of proof, that: "The court made no inquiry into the precise circumstances under which any particular interest was acquired * * *" (Br. 116). And (2) the relationship between these defendants and their subsidiaries does not lead to control of a "appreciable segment" of interstate commerce in motion pictures.

*The Lehigh Valley case, like the Reading case, involved an avowed plan to monopolize a large share of the anthracite-producing territory of the United States and revealed a 25-year history which "cast an illuminating light upon the intent and purpose with which the combination * * * was formed and continued" (254 U. S. at 269).

As we have pointed out supra, pp. 33-34, United States v. Winslow, 227 U. S. 202 (1913) and United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U. S. 417 (1920) are still unquestioned authority for the proposition that there is nothing per se illegal in vertical integration of the manufacturing and selling functions of an industry.

The Government has not distinguished those cases here, as it tried to do at page 38 of its Yellow Cab brief, simply by calling them "merger cases." Instead it here cites Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. U. S., 288 U. S. 344, 376-377 (1933) for the statement that "restraints which are unlawful when accompanied by a horizontal conspiracy must be equally unlawful when they follow as a natural consequence of a vertically integrated combination" (Br. 95). But the specious nature of this argument springs from the fact that what the Government is really urging is that unlawful restraints always follow from the mere existence, without more, of a vertically integrated business. The Appalachian case, of course, supports the directly opposite conclusion. It was there said (at p. 377):

> "The Anti-Trust Act aims at substance. Nothing in theory or experience indicates that the selection of a common selling agency to represent a number of producers should be deemed to be more abnormal than the foundation of a huge corporation bringing various independent units into one ownership. Either may be prompted by business exigencies, and the statute gives to neither a special privilege. The question in either case is whether there is an unreasonable restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize. * * * As we stated at the outset, the question under the Act is not simply whether the parties have restrained competition between themselves but as to the nature and effect of that restraint." (Emphasis supplied).

The "natural consequence" or "necessary effect" argument was rejected specifically and explicitly in the Steel case* and inferentially in the Winslow case when this Court noted (227 U. S. at 217) that: "On the face of it the combination was simply an effort after greater efficiency." Our discussion supra (pp. 54-55) of United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. (2d) 416 (Special Statutory Court, 1945) shows that that decision is to the same effect. And

*251 U. S. at 450; "The Government, therefore, is reduced to the assertion that the size of the Corporation, the power it may have, not the exertion of the power, is an abhorrence to the law, or as the Government says, "the combination embodied in the Corporation unduly restrains competition by its necessary effect, [the italics are the emphasis of the Government] and therefore is unlawful regardless of purpose." "A wrongful purpose," the Government adds, is "matter of aggravation." The illegality is statical, purpose or movement of any kind only its emphasis. To assent to that, to what extremes should we be led? Competition consists of business activities and ability—they make its life; but there may be fatalities in it. Are the activities to be encouraged when militant, and suppressed or regulated when triumphant because of the dominance attained? To such paternalism the Government's contention, which regards power rather than its use the determining consideration, seems to conduct. Certainly conducts we may say, for it is the inevitable logic of the Government's contention that competition must not only be free, but that it must not be pressed to the ascendancy of a competitor, for in ascendancy there is the menace of monopoly."

there is nothing in the Government's brief which shows any reason, or indeed any desire, that those cases should now be overruled.

Certainly, nothing in United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106 (1932) which the Government cites and so elaborately discusses (Br. 109-13), suggests a basis for such a conclusion. The basic distinction between that case and this is, of course, the very one that the Government so lightly brushes aside (Br. 109), i.e., that the Swift case involved a consent decree. That decree was based on a complaint "that by concert of action the defendants had succeeded in suppressing competition both in the purchase of live stock and in the sale of dressed meats, and were even spreading their monopoly in other fields of trade. They had attained this evil eminence through agreements apportioning the percentages of live stock to which the members of the combinations were severally entitled; through the acquisition and control of stockyards and stockyard terminal railroads; through the purchase of trade papers and journals whereby cattle raisers were deprived of accurate and unbiased reports of the demand for live stock; and through other devices directed to unified control" (286 U. S. at 110). They had already "set about controlling the supply" of many other foods (ibid).

This Court expressly refused "to inquire whether some of these restraints upon separate as distinguished from joint action could have been opposed with success if the defendants had offered opposition. Instead, they [the defendants] chose to consent, and the injunction, right or wrong, became the judgment of the court" (id., at 116-117).

The question before this Court was not whether these allegations of the complaint had been proved, but whether the Court "should leave the defendants where we find them, especially since the place where we find them is the one where they agreed to be" (id., at 119). It was held that defendants had failed to make "a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions" and that therefore the consent decree could not be changed (ibid).*

In short, in the Swift case, the burden of proof was on the defendants and they failed to sustain it. Here, the burden of proof was on the Government and nothing has been proved which was comparable to the facts alleged there.

The difficulty in the Government's position becomes apparent when it is finally compelled to concede (Br. 103), that:

> "Any manufacturer has the right to use his own product in his own outlets, so long as he does not use the advantage resulting from integration to restrain unreasonably the competition of others or to monopolize."

If the Court is to assume that this is a correct statement of the law, it will then wish to examine the findings below to determine whether there is to be found in them any warrant for the conclusion that Paramount or any other defendant used "the advantage resulting from integration to restrain unreasonably the competition of others or to monopolize." The findings of course are directly to the contrary. The court did find violations in license agree-

---

*Contrary to what the Government says (Br. 110), the defendants failed to prove their main thesis, i.e, that A & P and others of defendants' competitors had become vertically integrated and therefore fully able to compete (286 U. S. at 118). In the case at bar, each of the integrated companies actually does compete with every other in every branch of the industry.

ments which included stipulations as to minimum prices and in other practices which it thought ran afoul of the Sherman Act. But these violations did not spring from the fact of integration and the court's finding is specific in this respect:

> "154. The illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producers-exhibitors, but in admission price-fixing, [etc.] * * *. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which defendants' pictures have been exhibited" (R. 3690).

The opinion stated that "there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures" (R. 3554).

We do not understand the Government to contend that these findings are erroneous, and the recent decision in United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319 (1947) is a definitive holding that they preclude divestiture here. It was there said (at pp. 352-353):

> "The findings of fact have shown vigorous and effective competition between National Lead and du Pont in this field. The general manager of the pigments department of du Pont characterized the competition with Zirconium and Virginia Chemical as 'tough' and that with National Lead as 'plenty tough.' Such competition suggests that the District Court would do well to remove unlawful handicaps from it but demonstrates no sufficient basis for weakening its force by divesting each of the two largest competitors of one of its principal plants. It is not for the courts to realign and redirect effective and lawful competition where it already exists and needs only to be released from restraints that violate the antitrust laws. To separate the operating units of going concerns without more supporting evidence than has been presented here to establish either the need for, or the feasibility of, such separation would amount to an abuse of discretion."

The Government concedes the axiom that "under the Copyright Act the copyright owner has the right to exhibit its own pictures and to prevent their exhibition by others" (Br. 97). Since, as we have demonstrated, the defendants have the right to own theatres, it must follow that they—both as copyright owners and under general law—have the right to exhibit pictures in their own theatres. The Government contrives an elaborate argument upon the premises that the defendants are here claiming some additional "special privilege" arising out of copyright ownership and that the trial court "assumed that such a privilege was granted by the Copyright Act" (Br. 98).

Nothing in this record supports the conclusion that the court labored under any such impression. From a reading of the court's opinion (R. 3528-29), the contrary would seem to be the fact. Nor have the defendants ever made any such claim. Our position is simply that the defendants have the right to own theatres and to exercise their rights as copyright owners by exhibiting pictures in them.

Section IV of the decree (R. 3700), with which the Government takes issue, grants no special privilege and there is no warrant for suggesting that it is founded solely on the Copyright Law.* The court concluded, entirely correctly as we have demonstrated, that the defendants had the right to own theatres. That conclusion was based upon the absence of any proof which could properly justify divestiture or any other deprivation of defendants' right to treat their own theatres as their own, although that right continues to be subject to the anti-trust laws. The court therefore directed that "Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit" that right. Such a provision was entirely proper and necessary and does not deprive the rest of the decree of any of its force or effect.

The Government's Contention that the Court in Any Event Should Have Compelled Defendants to Sell Their Partial Interests in Theatres.

At pages 115 et seq. of its brief, the Government emphasizes the unreasonableness of its whole position, when it argues that the trial court should have ordered compulsory sale of defendants' partial interests and not have left it open for them to apply for permission to buy out the other interests upon a proper showing to the court that competition would not thereby be unreasonably restrained.

---

*Section IV of the present decree was derived from Section XVII of the Consent Decree (R. 3392-93). The Government originally assigned error to its inclusion in the decree (Assignment 9, R. 3722) but that assignment is not included in the Government's specification of the errors to be urged (Br. 46).

The suggestion that the decree in Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208 (1939) will somehow be diluted by Section IV (Br. 98) deserves no additional comment. Section IV limits only "this Decree" and approves nothing which was disapproved in the Interstate case. The defendants must still obey the law of the land, whether that law is to be found in statutes or in decrees of courts of competent jurisdiction.

Using a finding of the lower court which has to do only with "pools" of competing theatres as a fulcrum, the Government attempts to excuse its failure to prove the illegality of partial ownerships, and tries to assimilate them all to pools of competing theatres (Br. 115-116); thus falling into the same error as did the trial court elsewhere.

The fact is, as we have stressed in Point I, supra, that the Government offered no proof of the origin and effect of partial interests in theatres and, therefore, the court "made no inquiry" with respect thereto. The Government apparently thought such proof immaterial but, as we have shown, if it had presented it the court below might properly have reached the conclusion that many, if not all, of the situations involved no restraint of competition. The error which we claim the court made, as shown in Point I, is that it erred in its assumptions that all of these situations were unlawful, and in its failure to provide any opportunity to have the facts as to their purpose and effect examined.

The extent to which (if at all) the joint interests of any defendant were held with an actual or putative competitor was never shown by the Government, and even if it be assumed that all Paramount's partial ownerships were with actual or putative competitors, Paramount's total partial ownerships—816 out of 18,076 theatres—about 4½% (Finding 117, R. 3683-4) of the country's total—can hardly be said to be so significant as to be a consequence of extraordinary control of feature pictures, especially when it is remembered that Paramount's features amount to only about 9% of those released by all distributors annually. Since, under the decree, all purchases by a defendant of the outstanding interests are subject to the control of the court and are dependent upon a proper showing, there can be no fear that more serious consequences will result in a purchase than a sale.

As the Government argued in the Crescent case, the test of legality of an acquisition should be its effect upon competition (R. 2553), and this is the test which this Court approved in that case and the statutory court here has followed in requiring applications in connection with proposed purchasers of the balance of partial interests.

The Government urges that retention of control by the court over acquisitions of the outstanding stock in these partial ownerships does not cure the decree's deficiency because, it says, "If joint operation or ownership is illegal per se, as the trial court found, that illegality can, under no circumstances, be terminated by a defendant's acquisition of its partner's interest. * * *" (Br. 118). But, as we have shown, the error of the court was in considering all partial ownerships unlawful per se, without proof of their origin, purpose or effect. There is no justification for the Government's statement (Br. 119) that "* * * any proposal to buy or sell at a fixed price would result in the purchase by the defendants instead of by the non-defendant", since the district court under the decree would have to inquire as to whether a proposed purchase would unduly restrain competition in the area where it would occur.

As far as deadlocks are concerned—the supposititious situations where neither the defendant nor the independent desires to sell (Br. 119)—a proposal made by the defendants in their suggested decree that they be permitted to divide assets in such an event (R. 3618-9), was designed to, and would, obviate this supposed impasse. The remedy in such situations should be left to the lower court, if any part of the decree relating to partial interests is allowed to stand. Certainly it would be a strange result to deny all discretion to it because some of the problems may involve ingenuity in its exercise.

At pages 123-126 of the brief the Government somewhat belatedly makes an extremely tenuous argument that complete divestiture should have been granted on the theory that an integrated manufacturer of films could deprive the public of its constitutional right to freedom of thought, expression and opinion. The production and distribution fields, being open to all, as the Government conceded (R. 1949) and as the court found (R. 3554, 3559), this argument has no relevancy to Judge Hand's remark in the Associated Press case quoted at page 125 of the brief or to any other issue here. And Mr. Justice Frankfurter's remarks in the same case clearly apply to a situation not found in the present record. Where, as in this industry, anyone can produce any picture and procure distribution for it, and where there is no proof that any defendant's theatre refused to play any particular picture, the supposed restraints on freedom of expression are chimerical.

The Government's Contention That the Court Should Prohibit a Theatre Owning Defendant From Licensing Its Pictures For Exhibition in the Theatres of Any Other Theatre Owning Defendant

This relief is asked by the Government as interim relief pending divorcement and is based upon the assertion that there is unlawful "cross-licensing" between the integrated defendants. In the trial court the Government explained what it meant by cross-licensing as follows (Gov't Trial Brief, 21):

> "By cross-licensing we do not mean the execution of a single agreement by two distributor members of these combinations with two or more exhibitor members. What happens is that Loew, for example, as a distributor, licenses its films to Paramount, as an exhibitor, by agreements which are generally separately executed by nominally different corporate entities than those involved in the license agreements made by Paramount as a distributor with the theatres controlled by Loew. However, the competitive effect of these arrangements is the same as though all parties involved had made a single agreement, in view of the unified control of the distributing and theatre operating members of each combination." (Emphasis supplied).

The fallacy of this claim arises from the fact that there is no proof in the record of any interchange of mutual benefits or of any conditioning of one license agreement upon the granting of another. The evidence is all directly to the contrary (R. 436, 535, 539, 543, 685, 687, 1110, 1041, 1659, 1843, 1852).

A true case of "cross-licensing" is that exemplified by Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 283 U. S. 163 (1931), as an interchange of rights. Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386 is also an example of true cross-licensing. No such practices were established here.

Furthermore, in its trial brief the Government likewise admitted that negotiations between a Paramount theatre, for example, and Loew as a distributor were not conditioned upon similar negotiations by Loew as an exhibitor and Paramount as a distributor (Gov't Trial Brief, 20). The evidence showed that in cities where one defendant had no theatre of its own and was thus required to make a choice of customers, it chose its first-run account on the basis of the ability of the theatre to pay the highest revenue among all the theatres in the city which were willing and able to "buy". In some of those cities some defendants selected theatres belonging to another defendant, and in others they selected independents as their first-run accounts. There is no discernible pattern for the selections made by any two defendants in those cities of their first-run accounts. This absence of pattern is fatal to the entire conception.

The argument for the interim relief is quite frankly for relief which does not provide divestiture in terms but does so in effect. The trial court having rejected its prayer for divorcement, the Government then devised this method of accomplishing the same result in many cases, immediately and by instant strangulation, without even a vestige of hope of salvaging even their fair value. There is no precedent whatever under the Sherman Act for outright confiscation.* Of course, if dismemberment had been decreed and competition in the exhibition business by the defendants had been banned, the question of this relief would be academic. And, since that relief is tantamount to divestiture at least of some theatres, as the Government acknowledges, it is equally academic in the absence of a basis for that drastic relief. The prohibition asked is not, as the Government would have this Court believe, simply "directed at the very agreements by which the defendants effectuated their conspiracy" (Br. 127), because any objectionable terms of the agreements, can be, and are, banned by the decree. The relief asked is directed toward enforced sale of theatres, as counsel for the Government stated in court (R. 2574-5, 3001, 3007) and admit in the brief (Br. 131).

*Even in the Hartford-Empire cases, the receivership (which this Court later held to have been an abuse of discretion) was a device to conserve, not destroy, property values.

In short, the Government's conclusion that this Court should reverse, as an abuse of discretion, the decree of the court below, and direct a decree of divorcement with immediate consequences designed to kill,—not cure, should be rejected in toto.

Conclusion

The decree below should be reversed to the extent set forth in our specification of errors and argument as appellants, and otherwise affirmed.

Dated, January 30, 1948.

Respectfully submitted,

WHITNEY NORTH SEYMOUR,
Counsel for Paramount Pictures Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, 120 Broadway,
New York 5, N. Y.

SIMPSON THACHER & BARTLETT
LOUIS PHILLIPS
ALBERT C. BICKFORD,
Of Counsel.

APPENDIX A

Pertinent Portions of the Sherman Act.

SECTION 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: . . . Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy hereby declared to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SECTION 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court, 26 Stat. 209 (1890), as amended 50 Stat. 693 (1937); 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2 (1940).

Pertinent Portions of the Copyright Act.

"SECTION 1. Any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this title, shall have the exclusive right:

(a) To print, reprint, publish, copy, and vend the copyrighted work;

(b) To translate the copyrighted work into other languages or dialects, or make any other version thereof, if it be a literary work; to dramatize it if it be a nondramatic work; to convert it into a novel or other nondramatic work if it be a drama; to arrange or adapt it if it be a musical work; to complete, execute, and finish it if it be a model or design for a work of art;

(c) * * *.

(d) To perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama or, if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced in copies for sale, to vend any manuscript or any record whatsoever thereof; to make or to procure the making of any transcription or record thereof by or from which, in whole or in part, it may in any manner or by any method be exhibited, performed, represented, produced, or reproduced; and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce, or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever; * * *" (35 Stat. 1088).

APPENDIX B

Provisions of Decree Proposed by Defendants in Lieu of Section II (8) and (9).

7 (a) From arbitrarily refusing the request* of an exhibitor that the distributor defendant license a feature to him for exhibition in his theatre on any run licensed by the distributor instead of licensing it to another exhibitor for exhibition in his competing theatre on such run. A distributor defendant shall not be deemed to have arbitrarily refused any such request if it has granted the license for the feature for such run theatre by theatre; feature by feature; solely upon the merits, and without discrimination as between the competing theatres, whether in favor of a theatre in which any other defendant has an interest; of a circuit theatre; of an old customer, or of any person whatsoever. In determining which of two competing exhibitors is entitled on the merits to the license for a particular feature for his theatre, the distributor defendant shall take into consideration the following factors, among others, and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled regardless of the order in which they are listed.

(1) The film revenue which the distributor defendant will derive from each theatre for the exhibition of such feature on the run in question, and upon the terms offered by the exhibitor. In estimating such film revenue, the distributor defendant should take into consideration, among other things:

---

*For the purposes of this subdivision a request by an exhibitor must be made in writing to the distributor defendant at its home office, by registered mail and such demand shall be deemed to have been refused by the distributor defendant either upon the receipt by the exhibitor of the distributor defendant's refusal in writing, or upon the expiration of days after such mailing of the exhibitor's request.

The number of days for which and the particular days of the week or year or other playing arrangements upon which each exhibitor plans to play the feature; the character, location and size of each theatre; the type of entertainment which each exhibitor intends to present with the feature involved and which the exhibitor in the past has customarily offered the public; the appointments and equipment of each theatre; transit facilities; the admission prices of each theatre as set by each exhibitor for the period of the exhibition of the feature; the distributor defendant's actual experience with each of the exhibitors in fulfilling its obligations in past contracts; each exhibitor's reputation generally in the industry and in the community for honesty, fair dealing and showmanship; and the financial responsibility of the exhibitor operating each of the theatres involved;

(2) The comparative suitability of the theatres for the advantageous exhibition of the distributor defendant's feature on the run in question; and

(3) The effect which the exhibition of the feature in each of the theatres would have upon other exhibitions of the feature.

7 (b) From refusing to license its features for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run (to be designated by the distributor) upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor defendant which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of this subdivision 7 (b), if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and .. reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms to such exhibitor for said theatre will have the effect of reducing the defendant distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located.

C. Arbitration Under Section II 7 (a)

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has failed to comply with the provisions of Subdivision 7 (a) of Section II of this Decree shall be subject to arbitration in the manner provided in the Rules of Arbitration.

If the arbitrator finds in favor of the distributor defendant, he shall dismiss the complaint.

If the arbitrator finds that the distributor defendant has arbitrarily refused to license the feature or features to the complainant on the run requested, and has instead licensed it or them to a competitor of the complainant on such run, he shall make an award against the distributor defendant, which award shall not affect any license to exhibit any features then under license to the complainant's competitor, but shall direct the distributor defendant thereafter in good faith to afford the complainant as well as such competitor the opportunity to negotiate for such run of any features thereafter released by the distributor defendant, for exhibition on such run, for which they desire to negotiate, and the arbitrator may in addition, in his discretion, direct the distributor defendant to pay to the complainant his actual pecuniary loss resulting from the distributor defendant's failure to comply with subdivision 7 (a) of this Section II, which damages shall be in the sum of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000.

After a final award in favor of a complaining exhibitor has been made under this section, such exhibitor may institute a further arbitration proceeding (to be held before the arbitrator who made the original award, if available) upon the ground that such award has not been complied with in good faith by the distributor defendant against which it was entered, and in any such proceeding, if the arbitrator shall find that the distributor defendant has not complied in good faith with the original award, he may award further damages to the complaining exhibitor for his actual pecuniary loss resulting from the defendant distributor's failure to comply with the original award, which damages shall not be less than $100 nor more than $5,000.

An exhibitor shall have no right to assert such claim unless the arbitration shall be commenced within thirty (30) days after the refusal constituting the claimed non-compliance with Subdivision 7 (a) of this Section II.

D. Arbitration Under Section II 7 (b)

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has not complied with the provisions of subdivision 7 (b) of this Section II, shall be subject to arbitration in the manner provided in the Rules of Arbitration.

If the Arbitrator finds in favor of the distributor defendant, he shall enter an award dismissing the complaint.

If the Arbitrator finds in favor of the complainant, he shall make an award directing the distributor defendant thereafter in good faith to offer its features for license to the complainant for exhibition in said theatre on a run to be designated by the distributor and upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor defendant which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of said subdivision 7 (b) of this Section II. The burden of showing that granting a run on any terms to the complainant will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the complainant's theatre is located shall be upon the distributor.

Any distributor defendant affected by such an award may institute a further arbitration proceeding to be relieved therefrom on the ground that since the making of the award the granting of a run in compliance therewith has had the effect of reducing the distributor defendant's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the complainant's theatre is located, and, in the event that the Arbitrator finds that the granting of a run in compliance with the award has had the effect of reducing the distributor defendant's total film revenue in said area, he shall vacate the award.

E. Election of Remedies

Any exhibitor shall be free to avail himself of the right (1) to file a complaint under the arbitration provisions of this subdivision 9 of this Section II of this Decree or (2) to pursue remedies at law or in equity, but his election of one remedy or the other as a particular controversy shall be final.

10. Nothing contained in this Decree, affording to exhibitors the right to proceed by Arbitration, as in this Decree provided, shall impair or affect the right of the plaintiff to take any proceedings which it otherwise could to enforce the provisions of this Decree or to punish wilful violation.

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
FEB 4 1948
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947.

No. 79.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant,

vs.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al.

No. 80.

LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., et al., Appellants,

vs.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

ON DIRECT APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

BRIEF OF THE WARNER DEFENDANTS.

JOSEPH M. PROSKAUER,
ROBERT W. PERKINS,
Attorneys for the Warner Defendants.

JOSEPH M. PROSKAUER,
ROBERT W. PERKINS,
J. ALVIN VAN BERGH,
HOWARD LEVINSON,
HAROLD BERKOWITZ,
Of Counsel.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Opinion Below	1
Jurisdiction	1
The Appeals	2
This is primarily a respondent's brief	2
Specification of assigned errors to be urged	3
Short description of Warner companies	5
Effect of decree below	7
Holdings below	8
Comment on plaintiff's brief	9
Our position	10
POINT I—The decree destroys the trade practices found illegal. These trade practices are wholly unrelated to integration, making it impossible for this Court to hold that divorcement, which the Court below found would be "injurious to the corporations concerned and damaging to the public", is required	11
Nature of Alleged Illegalities	11
(a) Block booking enjoined	13
(b) Formula deals, master agreements and franchises enjoined	15
(c) Unreasonable clearance enjoined	18
(d) Admission price-fixing enjoined	21
(e) Discrimination among licensees	23
(f) Remedy as to runs	24
(g) In the two instances where the court found restraints in exhibition, not related to integration ("pools" and joint ownership of theatres), more than adequate relief was granted	25
(1) Joint operation ("Pools") enjoined	25

PAGE

(2) Partial ownership of theatres enjoined 26

(h) The additional sweeping injunction against theatre expansion was far more drastic than warranted 31

No basis for claiming that "extensive experience shows" decree below inadequate. None of its remedies against industry-wide trade practices had ever before been tried and found ineffective 34

Summary of Point I 40

POINT II—A more fluid method of marketing by competitive bidding decreed as an additional remedy. 41

A. Plaintiff urged competitive bidding as an appropriate remedy consistent with the Act 41

B. Opposition thereto merely emphasizes that the practices criticized below were industry-wide, not the consequence of integration, and that disintegration would not inject additional competition into the industry's methods of distribution 44

C. Facts found below which prompted the court to try out competitive bidding 46

D. Hyphotheses and argumentation no substitute for facts found and a pragmatic test . . 47

E. Such hypotheses and arguments without substance 48

POINT III—There was no monopolization of production, distribution or exhibition by any or all of the defendants 57

A. No monopolization of production 57

B. No monopolization of distribution 57

PAGE

C. Warner alone did not monopolize exhibition 61

D. Warner's integrated business does not constitute monopolization 64

E. Warner cannot be treated collectively with other defendants to establish monopolization of exhibition 73

1.) Differences between the theatres of each separate company (the manner of, reasons for, number of, times of acquisition, amounts paid for film, and sums collected at the box office) all negative collective treatment.... 75

2.) Differences in the percentages of the the business of each separate company with independents negative collective treatment 77

3.) Differences in Warner's business as licensor and as licensee with each of the other separate companies (from year to year, nationally, and in 92 large cities first run) negative collective treatment 80

4.) There is nothing which compels collective treatment of separate companies (or a finding of illegality) in the fact that a theatre-owning defendant licenses some of its features to a co-defendant and that said co-defendant licenses some of its own features to said defendant's theatres. "Cross" or "diagonal" licensing considered 88

(a) Such licensing has not the faintest resemblance to cross-licensing in patent pools 88

PAGE

(b) Such licensing merely means that two theatre-owning distribution companies do business with each other 89

(c) Why they must do business with each other 89

(d) Such business is not illegal and involves no illegal price-fixing 90

F. Assuming arguendo the possibility of collective treatment, there is no evidence of collective monopolization (or the possibility thereof under the decree below) sufficient to justify divestiture of theatres 96

(a) None of theatres 96

(b) None of theatre patronage ... 97

(c) None of film rentals paid ... 98

(d) None in the 92 cities 100

(e) No propriety in segregating these 92 cities 101

POINT IV—The Court properly exercised its discretion in refusing to decree relief inappropriate under the circumstances 104

POINT V.—II, 4 of the decree, properly construed, is not objectionable 123

Conclusion 124

Appendix (Indexed separately) 125

Table of Cases Cited:

PAGE

Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, 162 F. (2d) 520 . . . 35, 37

Federal Trade Com'n v. Paramount etc. Corp., 57 F. (2d) 152 . . . . . 14, 34, 37

General Motors v. United States, 121 F. (2d) 376 71

Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. (2d) 738 . . . . . 35, 37

Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, 324 U. S. 575 . . . . . 89, 112

International Salt Co. v. United States, No. 40, this Term 7, 45, 47

Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 17, 19, 23, 34, 39

Paramount etc. Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30 . . 38

Schine Chain Theatres v. United States, 63 F. Supp. 229 . . . . . 35, 39, 51

Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 . . . 112, 119

Theatre Investment Co. v. RKO Radio Pictures, 72 F. Supp. 650 37

United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106 . 112

United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 . . . . . 17, 35, 39, 51

United States v. First National Pictures, 282 U. S. 44 . 38

United States v. Griffith etc., this Term 39

United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255 . . . . . 66-67, 70

United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319, 7, 112, 114-118

United States v. Pullman Co., 330 U. S. 806 112

United States v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324 113

United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26 113

United States v. Standard Oil Co., 47 F. (2d) 288 119

PAGE

United States v. Swift & Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106... 72
United States v. U. S. Steel Co., 251 U. S. 417 118
United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218...70, 78, 79
Vitagraph v. Perelman, 95 F. (2d) 142 38
Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board, 60 F. (2d) 538.... 38

OTHER AUTHORITIES CITED:

Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended, Section 2 (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 572; 15 USC, Sec. 29) 1
Judicial Code, as amended, Section 238 (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938; 28 USC, Sec. 345).... 1, 2

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947.

No. 79.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant,

vs.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al.

No. 80.

LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., et al., Appellants,

vs,

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BRIEF OF THE WARNER DEFENDANTS.

Opinion Below.

The main opinion below is reported in 66 F. Supp. 323, and the findings, decree and memo. thereon in 70 F. Supp. 53.

Jurisdiction.

Jurisdiction of this Court to review by direct appeal the judgment and decree entered in this case is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 572; 15 USC, Sec. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938; 28 USC, Sec. 345).

Probable jurisdiction was noted by this Court on June 23, 1947.

The Appeals.

Cross appeals (on a record consolidated by stipulation, R. 3823) by plaintiff and each of the defendants from a judgment of a statutory court for the Southern District of New York (Augustus Hand, Ct. J., Goddard and Bright, Dt. JJ.) in an action under the Sherman Act for injunctive relief against certain allegedly illegal trade practices and against ownership or operation of motion picture theatres by the five theatre owning or operating defendants, i. e., Paramount, Fox, Loew's, RKO and Warner. Warner's petition for appeal is found at R. 3726. The other petitions for appeal are at R. 3726, 3738, 3751, 3766, 3788.

This is primarily a respondent's brief.

Since Warner appellants' arguments involve practices common to the industry as a whole, therefore the convenience of this Court may best be served by simple cross-references here to pertinent arguments in such other briefs as it has been our privilege to read. Such cross-references are found in connection with the specifications of error which follow.

By our failure to repeat pertinent arguments in this brief, we do not waive any assignment of error.

Specification of Assigned Errors to Be Urged.

Our specifications of error are:

1.) The injunction against theatre expansion in the Decree, III (6) [R. 3700] (Error no. 30, R. 3735) and the failure to modify said injunction so as to permit such expansion if the Court shall first find that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in exhibition (Error no. 31, R. 3735). See Point Second of Twentieth Century-Fox Brief; Point I of RKO Brief; and Point I (h) of this Brief, p. 31, infra.

2.) The injunction against part ownership of theatres or an interest therein in the Decree, III (5) [R. 3699] (Errors nos. 29, 33, R. 3734), and the findings and conclusions on which it is based (Errors nos. 25-27, R. 3733). See Point First of Twentieth Century-Fox Brief; Point II of RKO Brief; and Point I, (g) (2) of this Brief, p. 26, infra.

3.) The termination of the arbitration proceeding and machinery as in V of the Decree provided [R. 3700] (Error no. 34, R. 3736) and the failure to provide for arbitration of disputes (Error no. 35, R. 3736). See Point Third of Twentieth Century-Fox Brief.

4.) The injunction against granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties in the Decree, II (1) [R. 3695] (Error no. 1, R. 3728), and the findings and conclusions on which it is based relating to fixing of minimum admission prices (Errors nos. 2-5, 8, 10, 13-14, 22, 37-38; R. 3729, et seq.) and relating to price-fixing (Errors, nos. 6, 8-12, 20, 37-38; R. 3729, et seq.). See Points III and IV of RKO Brief and Point IV of Loew's Brief.

5.) The injunction "from agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances" in the Decree, II (2) [R. 3695] (Error no. 18, R. 3732) and the provision that "Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof" [R. 3696] (Error no. 19, R. 3732), and the findings and conclusions on which they are based relating to a system of clearance and run (Errors nos. 15-18, 20-22, 37-38; R. 3731, et seq.). See Loew's Brief, Point IV and Point V of this Brief, p. 123, infra.

6.) The finding that various contract provisions set forth in finding no. 110 (R. 3681) discriminated in favor of large circuits and against small independent exhibitors (Error no. 23, R. 3733) and the conclusion of law no. 8 (d) [R. 3692], based thereon that this was a violation of the Sherman Act (Error no. 24, R. 3733).

7.) The failure to grant the Warner defendants' motion to modify conclusion of law no. 9 (d) [R. 3693] by limiting it to the "discriminatory license privileges as found in Finding No. 110 above" (Error no. 32, R. 3735), and the holding in said conclusion insofar as it may be broader (Error no. 22, R. 3733).

8.) The denial and failure to grant the Warner defendants' motions to strike exhibits and evidence upon the grounds set forth in Error no. 36, R. 3736.

9.) The finding and conclusion that the Warner defendants or any of them violated the Sherman Act in any of the respects hereinabove assigned as error (Error no. 38, R. 3736).

10.) The injunction against continuing to perform existing "pooling" agreements as defined in the Decree, III (2) [R. 3698] (Error no. 28, R. 3734). See Point I (g) (1) of this Brief, p. 25, infra.

Short description of the Warner companies.

The brothers Warner started in this business as exhibitors of motion pictures (R. 1553). In 1906 the brothers Warner operated a theatre (R. 1553). Subsequently, they went into the business of distributing motion pictures (R. 1553). By 1916 they were in the business of producing pictures, distributing pictures and operating a few theatres (R. 1553). This business was incorporated in 1923 as Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. (Finding 25, R. 3665). This company successfully pioneered the development of the talking motion picture (Finding 26, R. 3665). By 1928 it became necessary rapidly to acquire a large number of theatres in order to have those talking pictures exhibited (R. 1555). The minimum cost of installing talking equipment in theatres at that time was $25,000, and very few theatre owners were willing to make such investment on such a gamble (R. 1555). The initial acquisition of Warner was the Stanley Company of America, with 250 theatres situated principally in and around Pennsylvania and New Jersey. This transaction, consummated late in 1928, gave Warner 250 theatres which could be immediately equipped with sound installation (Findings 27-29, R. 3665). Warner acquired several other circuits of theatres, and by 1931 had an interest in 591 theatres (Findings 30-31, R. 3665).

Since 1931 there has been no policy by Warner for the expansion of theatre holdings (R. 1557, 1826).

Today the Warner companies have an interest in 547 theatres, a net reduction of 44 from its peak holdings in 1931 (Finding 32, R. 3665).

During this same period the total number of theatres in the U. S. grew from 13,386 in 1935 to 18,076 in 1945 (Finding 145, R. 3688).

Warner as an exhibitor now operates less than 3% of all of the theatres in the United States (Finding 118, R. 3684).

Warner, as a producer and distributor, produces and distributes approximately 19 pictures a year, or less than 5% of the total pictures produced and distributed in the United States (Finding 99, R. 3677).

30% of the revenue received from the licensing of these pictures came from the foreign market. The Court found (R. 3687):

> "139. Of its total domestic and foreign rentals Warner received about 30% from abroad, about 43% from theatres in which none of the defendants had an interest, about 10% from Warner's own American theatres, and the balance, about 16%, from American theatres in which one or more of the defendants had an interest."

As to the domestic revenue, the court found that (R. 3687):

"138. In the 4 pre-war seasons of 1937-1940, Warner derived about 61 6/10% of its domestic gross rentals from theatres not affiliated with any of the defendants, about 14% from theatres in which it had an interest, about 4% from theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox had an interest, about 6% from theatres in which RKO had an interest, and less than 1% from theatres in which Loew had an interest."

Effect of decree below.

The effect of the judgment below may prevent five defendants from owning or operating 1,292 theatres presently partially owned by any of the five of them, the court having found such partial ownerships to be in restraint of trade (Finding 117, R. 3683). It, moreover, enjoined each of them from further expanding its theatre holdings, although Warner had had no policy of expanding its theatre holdings in the last 17 years.

It also decreed injunctions against the trade practices held to be illegal, and directed competitive bidding as an additional remedy against defendants' tendency to favor "old customers", but retained jurisdiction to decree different remedies, should the remedies directed prove inadequate (as in United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319; and in International Salt Co. v. United States, No. 46, this Term).

2) That the courts lack ingenuity to fashion adequate relief short of amputation even by and after a pragmatic test of remedies ordered (Pltff.'s Br., Point I, B);

3) That "extensive experience" shows that any adequate relief short of amputation must be ineffective, and that the courts will be helpless to deal with inevitable violations when they occur (Pltff.'s Br., Point I, C);

4) That amputation is a necessary and inevitable remedy where Warner's 3% of this nation's theatres pay approximately 8% of the total film rentals paid to all of the distributor defendants and collect approximately 6% of the total dollars paid at the box offices for admission to the nation's theatres (Pltff.'s Br., Point II, A);

5) That the prospective injury to the public by the relief of amputation (or its equivalent of an injunction against so-called cross-licensing [Pltff.'s Br., Point III]) is a factor which may not influence the exercise of discretion as to the form and extent of relief (Pltff.'s Br., Point II, C).

Our position.

Each of these assumptions and arguments will be answered in detail in the Points that follow.

Our position is simply:

1.) That no arithmetic computations are substitutes for a finding of conspiracy to monopolize;

2.) That no finding of conspiracy to restrain relating to trade practices is a substitute for a finding of conspiracy to monopolize, when the only relief sought is amputation;

3.) That on the findings (and the supporting evidence) here there is no basis for amputation, either from the conspiracy found or the alleged effect thereof; and 4.) That the remedies prescribed below are so far-reaching in their probable effect on the entire industry as to preclude the possibility of a holding that the statutory court abused discretion in directing a pragmatic test of its remedies.

POINT I.

The decree destroys the trade practices found illegal. These trade practices are wholly unrelated to integration, making it impossible for this Court to hold that divorcement, which the Court below found would be "injurious to the corporations concerned and damaging to the public", is required.

Nature of Alleged Illegalities.

The Court found: "The illegalities and restraints herein found are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in" the trade practices held to be in restraint of trade (Finding 154, R. 3690).

"Total divestiture would not remedy the * * * practices which have been found unreasonably to restrict competition" (Finding 156, R. 3690).

"Total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned and would be damaging to the public" (Finding 155, R. 3690).

The Court then proceeded to strike at the very root of these trade practices and decreed basic and drastic changes in the method of distributing motion pictures.

It decided that divestiture would not cure the evils which the Court found (Finding 154, R. 3690):

> "The illegalities and restraint herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited."

On the basis of this finding it squarely enjoined every one of these trade practices.

To make assurance doubly sure, it did two other things:

a) Required a system of competitive bidding which would further make these trade practices impossible and would tend to make more fluid the distribution of features; and

b) reserved jurisdiction to follow up, on the basis of the experience in this complicated industry, the effectuation of its purpose to abolish these practices and to render distribution more fluid.

The Court will note in the following discussion of these trade practices:

a) Their origin ante-dated theatre ownership by Warner and were common throughout the industry;

b) Warner did not impose illegal trade practices on the industry; and

c) Thus the Court was abundantly right in holding that there was no basis in these practices for an inference of combination or conspiracy to monopolize the exhibition business, or for a finding that the theatre-owning defendants had monopolized the exhibition business.

It appropriately defined the illegalities and required the entire industry to change basically and drastically its trade practices which we now take up seriatim.

(a) Block booking enjoined.

Block-booking, the licensing of a season's product (Finding 1, R. 3659), is a practice older than the feature motion picture. Indeed, the complaint alleges that the practice existed "in the early stages of motion picture distribution" before the feature was first produced (Par. 106, R. 3170).

It was held valid in 1932 by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals (Augustus N. Hand, Ct. J., participating) in Federal Trade Com'n. v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. (2d) 152).

It was held illegal below. (Decree II, 7, R. 3696) "particularly because of recent decisions of the Supreme Court" (66 F. Supp. at 349 [R. 3545]), which we claim were improperly applied to the facts of this case.

The five defendants who signed the consent decree of 1940 have since licensed in blocks of no more than five features (66 F. Supp. at 348 [R. 3543]; see also R. 2753).

Most producers who had no theatres continued, however, to block-book (R. 2717).

Warner discontinued the practice entirely soon after said consent decree, voluntarily selling feature by feature (R. 1504).

The practice did not flow from a producer's ownership of theatres, but from the desire of any theatre owner to be assured of continuity of product. This is a natural inference from plaintiff's counsel's statement (R. 2754): "I concede that as far as exhibitors are concerned, many of them, or perhaps most of them, want the security that comes from having as many pictures as they can, tied up with a maximum privilege of elimination."

Obviously, this allegedly illegal restraint is not related to theatre ownership, did not grow out of theatre ownership, and was not an intentional violation of the Act.

Finally, in any event, whatever the illegality of the practice or its effect, it has been made academic as a result of the injunction below (Decree II, 7, R. 3696).

(b) Formula deals, master agreements and franchises enjoined.

These practices are defined in the footnote.*

The Court found that (Finding 87, R. 3675):

> "Loew's is not, and never has been, a party either as a distributor or as an exhibitor, to any 'formula deal' license agreements".

Moreover, the Court found that only Paramount and RKO had as distributors made formula deals (Finding 86, R. 3675; Conclusion 8 [h], R. 3693).

It is thus obvious that such deals had no relation to integration.

Similarly franchises (licenses for more than a year's product) had no relation to integration. There is no evidence which limits franchises to the theatre

---

* Formula deal defined (Finding 1, R. 3660):

"A licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross."

Master agreement defined (Finding 1, R. 3660):

"A licensing agreement, also known as a 'blanket deal', covering the exhibition of features in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit."

Franchise defined (Finding 1, R. 3660):

"A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as a part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of features released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement."

owning defendants; the evidence is to the contrary. The amended complaint itself alleges that long-term franchises were made with both unaffiliated and affiliated circuits (Par. 121, R. 3176), and the opinion below recognized that divestiture would not remedy the alleged evil as to the many independent circuits (Finding 154, R. 3690; 66 F. Supp. at 355 [R. 3555]) such as the Schine circuit which the amended complaint alleges to have come into being when after 1929 Universal divested itself of its theatres (Par. 78, R. 3163).

That franchises have no relation to integration appears further from the fact that whenever a distributor, affiliated or not affiliated, granted franchises, it granted those to both affiliated and non-affiliated theatres, and when a distributor discontinued its practice of granting franchises it discontinued as to both affiliated and non-affiliated theatres. Thus, the Court found that "Fox has not granted any franchises since June 6, 1940" (Finding 91, R. 3675), that "Loew's is not currently granting franchises" (Finding 90, R. 3675), and that most of the franchises were granted to independents, by Loew's during its entire history (Finding 90), by Universal during the period in question (Finding 92, R. 3676), and by Fox in 1938-39, the season in which it had most franchises outstanding (Finding 91, R. 3675). Plaintiff offered no evidence that Warner had granted any franchises which existed at the time of the trial.

That the making of franchises could not have been an intentional violation of the Act is conclusively established by the fact that plaintiff insisted, as late as 1936, that 10-year franchises be granted in St.

Louis as a condition to discontinuance of a local suit by plaintiff in equity under the Act (R. 936-937).

Master agreements were found to "allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion" and therefore held to be unreasonable restraints (Finding 88, R. 3675). They are patently not related to integration. Not even the harsh and destructive divestiture sought would remedy the alleged evil as to the many independent circuits (Finding 154, R. 3690; 66 F. Supp. at 355 [R. 3554-3555]).

In any event, any illegality or restraint arising from the misuse of combined purchasing power of several theatres is not something arising out of theatre ownership by a producer-distributor, but out of misuse by anybody of more than a single theatre.

Formula deals and master agreements were not condemned per se in the Crescent (323 U. S. 173) or Interstate (306 U. S. 208) cases. If they have now become illegal, they can hardly be condemned as evidence of intentional violation of the Act.

But whatever the legality of such agreements or their effect, they have now become academic as a result of the specific injunctions below (Decree, II, 5 and 6, R. 3696) and the additional requirement of the decree that each theatre must bid separately for each feature (Decree, II, 8, d, R. 3698).

(c) Unreasonable clearance enjoined.

That clearance is a practice as old as the feature motion picture* is alleged in the amended complaint (Par. 114, R. 3173):

> "Prior to the advent of the feature picture, films were licensed generally on the basis of age * * *. There was evolved during this period the concept of 'run' * * *. From about 1915 or 1916 * * * exhibitors * * * sought to obtain and frequently did obtain long periods of protection [later called clearance] over all other theatres in the city and surrounding territory where they were located.
>
> 115. From about 1915 to about 1931 it was frankly conceded by distributors and exhibitors generally that uniform runs and clearances were desirable * * *."

The beneficial effect of clearance or a license for successive dates to the public was found by the Court (R. 3673):

> "76. Either a license for successive dates, or one providing for clearance, permits the public to see the picture in a later exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates.
>
> "77. A grant of clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum admission prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration affords a fair protection of the interest of the licensor in the rental to be derived from the exhibition of the feature licensed, without unreasonably interfering with the interest of the public."

* See also R. 1080-1081, 1894-1895, Ex. P-5, part of which is printed on page 22 of plaintiff's Appendix.

In the Consent Decree plaintiff recognized clearance as "essential" if reasonable as to time and area (66 F. Supp. at 342 [R. 3531]). Indeed, plaintiff's brief on a motion to modify the consent decree so as to extend the scope of arbitration and to effect total divestiture of theatres, filed only 8 months before the trial, recognized that "reasonable" clearance does not violate the Act under decisions of this Court (R. 3423):

> "As the agreement is one which restrains interstate commerce in films it is a violation of Section I of the Sherman Act unless the restraint is a reasonable one. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 209." (Italics by plaintiff's counsel.)

Divestiture of theatre ownership would not solve the problem of whether any particular clearance was or was not reasonable. That, as the Court pointed out, "should be left to local suits in the area concerned, or, even more appropriately, to litigation before an Arbitration Board composed of men versed in the complexities of this industry" (66 F. Supp. at 342 [R. 3533]).

The Court below wrote "we cannot find sufficient evidence to support an inference that the major defendants * * * have either collectively or severally entered upon a general policy of discriminating against independents in their grants of clearances" (66 F. Supp. at 342 [R. 3532]). There is nothing to support an inference that, but for theatre ownership by producer-distributors, the clearances would have been different from what they were.

The history of this case shows that the theatre-owning defendants did not intend to use unreasonable clearance as an attempt to monopolize. By the Consent Decree, they consented to have the clearances of their own theatres and of the clearances which they granted independent theatres reviewed and fixed by disinterested parties. On the trial, they offered to continue arbitration of clearance and to extend it to run. They repeat that offer here.

The Court below held existing clearance practices illegal solely because defendants had "acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances" (66 F. Supp. at 342 [R. 3532]) and enjoined such uniformity.

If such uniformity be illegal, it was not due to theatre ownership by a producing defendant.

It was due to the insistence by the owner of the theatre—independent or defendant alike—that each of the distributors grant the longest period of clearance which any one of the distributors was willing to grant the theatre owner—independent or defendant alike.

Competition, not conspiracy, was the cause of uniformity.

Such uniformity has no relation whatsoever to integration.

Divestiture of theatres from distributors could not, however, affect this tendency toward uniform pressure on distributors, even though they owned no theatres, as in the case of Universal, Columbia, United Artists, or such other distributors as were not made parties defendant.

However, to the extent that uniformity may have been the result of conspiracy, it has been rectified by injunction (Decree, II, 2-4, R. 3695).

(d) Admission price-fixing enjoined.

The practice of inserting a minimum admission price restriction in each license dates back to the origin of feature motion pictures (R. 717, 917, Ex. P-6) and was believed justified by the Copyright Law.*

The uniformity of such restrictions by each defendant as to any particular theatre was the result, as defendants contended, merely of inserting in the license the price actually charged by the exhibitor. As plaintiff's counsel stated, "the testimony * * * is that

* Plaintiff's brief (on a motion to amend the consent decree by extending the scope of arbitration and to effect total divestiture) recognized this in discussing provisions for minimum admission prices, clearance and run (R. 3423):

> "Clearance restrictions have traditionally been imposed by distributors in this industry on the theory that their ownership of copyrights on the films distributed entitled them to impose such restrictions on the exhibition of the films in theatres as are necessary and appropriate to realize maximum revenue from the exploitation of the copyright. Upon this theory, distributors have customarily undertaken to fix the minimum admission prices at which their films should be exhibited to the public in all of the theatres they license * * * Obviously the first-run exhibitors would not ordinarily be expected to pay film rentals based upon the receipt of the highest admission price in a competitive area unless there were some assurance that the films they exhibited would not be exhibited elsewhere in the area at substantially lower prices until after the lapse of some reasonable period of time." (Italics ours.)

Holdings below.

Apart from certain industry-wide trade practices, all of which antedated Warner's theatre acquisitions, the Court below completely acquitted us of charges of basic conspiracy or combination to monopolize. It found (R. 3689-3690):

"Finding 152. There is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in production, distribution, or exhibition of motion pictures, except as found in findings 153 and 154 below.

"Finding 153. In localities where there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of the competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from 'inherent vice' on the part of these defendants.

"Finding 154. The illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. * * *"

It further found (R. 3690):

> "Finding 155. Total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned, and would be damaging to the public."

It adjudged us guilty only of industry-wide trade practices set forth in this finding 154. We shall show

a) that every one of these industry-wide trade practices was utterly uprooted by the decree below;

b) that every one of these industry-wide trade practices was wholly unrelated to and not caused by theatre ownership by producer-distributors, or integration, and therefore

c) that the Government's claim that this industry should be destroyed by divorcement is baseless both in fact and in law.

Comment on plaintiff's brief.

Plaintiff's brief is essentially based on the following fallacious assumptions and arguments:

1) That amputation is a necessary and inevitable remedy for any concerted violation of the Act, even though "There is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in production, distribution or exhibition" (Finding 152, R. 3689) and even though they "cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition" (66 F. Supp. at 354 [R. 3553] (Pltff.'s Br., Point I, A);

the distributor merely inserts the going admission price of the exhibitor or a price suggested by the exhibitor" (R. 2583) and the Court found (R. 3670):

> "63. The minimum admission prices included in licenses of each of the eight distributor-defendants for any given theatre are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitor."

Any uniformity in such price restrictions obviously arose in the same way as in the case of uniform clearance, i. e., out of the acceptance by the distributor of the exhibitor's price which by the exhibitor's own choice was the same for all pictures which he exhibited.

Any uniformity in this negligible area* was not the result of an intentional violation of the Act, even if its effect should now be held illegal.

The appropriate remedy is a simple injunction against such price-fixing, not divestiture.

The prices were not fixed because theatres were owned. They were fixed in what may have been a mistaken belief that the owner of a copyrighted feature

---

* There was no evidence that the minimum admission prices sometimes specified in Warner licenses did in fact hamper any exhibitor in his free choice of the admission price which any exhibitor chose to charge for the exhibition of a Warner feature.

The only evidence (Exhibit W-22, summarized in a footnote on p. 108, infra) showed marked variations of the actual admission prices charged from the minimum admission prices sometimes stipulated in Warner licenses.

There is no evidence whatsoever that any exhibitor was threatened or coerced for such variations from the stipulated minimum, or that the sanctions in some of the licenses against violation of the stipulated minimums were ever enforced.

had such a right when the minimum price restriction was not for some ulterior purpose. That such a provision was not an intentional violation of the Act and that such a belief might well have been held is inescapable from the Interstate case (306 U. S. 208) where the type of price restriction there used was condemned solely because used for ulterior purposes.

In any event, such price-fixing will become academic by the injunction below (Decree, II, 1, R. 3695).

(c) Discrimination among licensees.

The Court below stated (R. 3550) that provisions most frequently found in franchises and master agreements made with the larger circuits, affiliated or unaffiliated, accorded these circuits certain advantages over the small independents (66 F. Supp. at 352 [R. 3550]). It was careful to add (66 F. Supp. at 353 [R. 3551]):

> "The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices."

What in effect it held was that the small independent exhibitor suffered certain contractual disadvantages as against the circuits, either affiliated or nonaffiliated.

It may fairly be questioned whether any such discrimination, based on purely business considerations, and not tending to unreasonable restraint and monopoly, was in any sense a violation of the Sherman Law.

But assuming arguendo that it was, the injunction against franchises and master agreements destroyed any such discrimination.

Surely, such discrimination was not inherent in theatre ownership by producing companies or even in the ownership of a circuit of theatres.

And surely there is no reasonable answer to the position taken by the Court below that, by the abolition of formula deals, master agreements and franchises and under the new selling system decreed, these discriminations have become academic. In the words of the opinion below (66 F. Supp. at 353 [R. 3551]):

> "* * * we believe will not exist in future licenses under the bidding system for which we are providing."

(f) Remedy as to runs.

The Court below sought to decree some remedy more specifically directed against that portion of the "fixed scale of clearances, runs and admission prices" which related to runs, in order to promote freer bargaining (Finding 84, R. 3674).

In its opinion, it had indicated that the plaintiff's suggestion of competitive bidding (R. 2556) was a proper solution, in one sentence over-stating that such bidding was "the only way competition may be introduced into the present system" (R. 3540).

After hearing the protests of amici and plaintiff's shift of position so as to approve competitive licensing only as between independents and then in some more general form, the Court carefully omitted the word "only" in its findings of fact (R. 3674):

> "85. Competition can be introduced into the present system of fixed admission prices, clearances, and runs, by requiring" licenses to be granted "to the highest bidder."

and inserting supplementary injunctive provisions in its decree to accomplish that result.

II (9) enjoined defendants (R. 3698):

> "From arbitrarily refusing the demand of an [independent] exhibitor, who operates a theatre in competition with another [independent] theatre * * * to license a feature to him for exhibition on a run selected by the exhibitor * * *" and II (8) of the Decree (R. 3696) required competitive bidding limited to whoever desires such an opportunity in a competitive area (R. 3702).

This additional remedy directed to so much of the system as related to runs is fully considered in Point II (p. 41, infra).

(g) In the two instances where the court below found restraints in the exhibition business, not related to integration ("pools" and joint ownership of theatres), more than adequate relief was granted.

(1) Joint operation ("Pools") enjoined.

The Court found that in those instances in which the exhibitor defendants pooled their theatres with those of other exhibitors, the result was to eliminate competition between those theatres in such situations. The Court directed the termination of all such pooling agreements and enjoined the making of any others (Decree, III, 2-4, R. 3698).

Compared with the total number of theatres and competitive situations in this country, Warner was in a negligible number of "pools". These "pools", now terminated, were only 22 in number,* of which four involved Warner and a defendant; one Warner, a defendant and an independent; and seventeen Warner and an independent. Only 9 of these pools involved any first run theatres in the 92 largest cities.

As a result of the decree below, all 22 Warner "Pools" have been terminated and the injunction against their revivor, not assigned as error by Warner, renders the whole subject academic.

"Pools" obviously had no relation to integration, since theatre owners have "pooled" their theatres from time immemorial, regardless of whether they produced or distributed pictures or plays.

(2) Partial ownership of theatres enjoined.

The Court found that many theatres were held jointly by an exhibitor defendant together with another exhibitor and that in those situations the "de-

---

* We have no means of ascertaining the total number of pools in the country. Page 255 of plaintiff's appendix lists the total pooled theatres in which any defendant was involved at 437.

 Warner has assigned as error the injunction against performing existing pooling agreements with exhibitors who are not defendants in this action (Error no. 28, R. 3734). As to those exhibitors, the court below said "While our decision will not be res adjudicata as to those not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily bound, and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the questions of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce" (66 F. Supp. at 347 [R. 3541-2]). Warner has been sued by one and is threatened with suit by another exhibitor to compel Warner to perform in violation of this injunction.

fendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently" (Finding 116, R. 3683).

The Court enjoined each defendant from owning an interest in any theatres of less than 95% (Decree, III, 5, R. 3699).

Each defendant is required to divest itself of any such interest unless "such defendant desiring to acquire such interest shall show to the satisfaction of the court, and the court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures" (Decree, III, 5, R. 3699).

This finding and injunction are assigned as error (Errors, nos. 25-27, 29, 33, 37, R. 3733 et seq.).

The fallacy of this holding is discussed in Point First of Twentieth Century-Fox Brief and Point II of RKO Brief.

Obviously, ownership of less than 95% of a theatre has no relation to integration, i. e., where the part owner may also be producing and distributing pictures.

Except to the extent that the Court expressly permits on a proper showing the purchase of these outstanding interests, the incidental effect of this portion of the decree will be to deprive defendants of the right to operate approximately 1,292 theatres (Finding 117, R. 3683) which will be added to the 14,578 theatres already independently owned (Finding 118, R. 3684).

On such an assumption* there would thus be 15,780 theatres independently owned as against 2,206 operated by all of the defendants together, an aggregate of only 12% of the total,—a result which would unjustifiably deprive defendants in the aggregate of about ⅓rd of their theatres.

Yet the holding with such disastrous consequences has no relation to any specific evils found below other than the erroneous conclusion that partial ownership was ipso facto a restraint of trade.

If this erroneous holding should be sustained, the radical changes resulting in the exhibition business and the first run theatre market in the 92 cities with populations of over 100,000 make obsolete the statistical information relied upon by the plaintiff.

The following statistical information makes abundantly clear the radical consequences which its enforcement might have industry-wide.

These statistics show only a possibility of the effect of the decree because it may well be that if either this portion of the decree is reversed or if the Court should permit defendants to purchase outstanding partial interests, the results set forth would not necessarily follow. They are given, however, to show the possible extreme effects of adverse rulings of the statutory court on its reservation of control of this part of the decree.

* All calculations relating to the possible effect of that portion of the Decree relating to partial ownerships of theatres are based on RKO exhibit 11 on which the Court based its Finding 117 relating to partial ownerships. Any calculations based thereon are necessarily approximate and subject to possible error, since that exhibit, prepared hastily at the request of the Court, was no more than an attempt to give the Court a composite picture and was not vouched for as mathematically accurate. Error is also possible because of honest differences of opinion as to what constitutes partial ownership in certain situations.

A.

Heretofore the five defendants had in the aggregate interests in 3,114 theatres located in 942 cities in 48 states.

This holding may affect 710 of these 942 cities (75.2%), including 66 of the 92 large cities (71.7%).

Every state in the Union may be affected.

In 10 states, including one with 243 affiliated theatres, every theatre in which a defendant has an interest may be affected. In 10 other states, there might be left only 1, 2, or 3 theatres in which any defendant had an interest. In 7 additional states, including many populous states, there might be lost 80 to 90% of the theatres in which any defendant had an interest.

B.

Not counting "pools" terminated, the defendants might lose first run theatres in all but 22 of the 88 large cities where any defendant has an interest in any first run theatre.

C.

The dollar volume of business done by the defendants with each other might be substantially affected nationally and in the 92 large cities first run.

Under the new decree such dollar volume will be substantially affected if each of the defendants lose their less than 95% owned theatres to independents.

D.

A graphic illustration of this is to recast Warner's revenue first run in the 92 large cities, from the picture "Princess O'Rourke" (taken by plaintiff as a typical picture at the trial) on the assumption that defendants were not permitted to acquire the outstanding interests in partially owned theatres.

Exclusive of the business which Warner as distributor did with its own theatres, the amount of business first run in the 92 large cities which Warner would do on the assumption that defendants were not permitted to acquire the outstanding interests in partially owned theatres is (Appendix, p. 135, infra):

Independents	$264,275	74%
Loews	0	0%
Fox	0	0%
RKO	31,894	9%
Paramount	59,428	16%

On the assumption that defendants were not permitted to acquire the outstanding interests in partially owned theatres, independent theatres (not the other four theatre owning defendants) would become our chief market first run in the 92 cities.

With such a drastic change, where Warners had heretofore licensed Loew's theatres or Fox theatres in any of these 92 large cities, those theatres would be in the hands of independents. In 5 of those 6 cities where Warner licensed theatres in which RKO had an interest, those theatres would be in the hands of independents. In 4 of the 15 cities where Warner licensed theatres in which Paramount had an interest, those theatres would be in the hands of independents. In 3 other of these 15 cities, the theatres of other defendants would compete with the Paramount theatres as a result of the termination of "pools".

E.

A similar result would follow with respect to Warner as a theatre owning exhibitor.

As a result of the termination of pools and loss of all theatres less than 95% owned in these 92 cities, Warner theatres would have substantial competition from independent theatres in 21 of the 28 cities where there are Warner theatres and from one or more of the other defendants in the others.

In every one of the 92 cities Warner theatres has competition first run.*

(h) The additional sweeping injunction against theatre expansion was far more drastic than warranted.

The unqualified injunction against theatre expansion would so disastrously and vitally affect our business that Warner assigns it as error (Nos. 30-31, R. 3735).

* The situation in Philadelphia and Albany has changed since the trial, as a result of termination of a pool in Albany and the opening of a newly built Goldman theatre in Philadelphia.

Our objection against an unqualified injunction against expansion should be evaluated against the background of Warner's theatres since 1931:

a) In the last 16 years, Warner has not increased the number of its theatres. It now owns 44 less than it did in 1931 (Findings 31-32, R. 3665).

b) Since the consent decree which enjoined a program of general expansion, Warner has not increased the number of its theatres, has filed reports of any changes in its theatre ownership with the plaintiff, and at no time did plaintiff object to any replacement or acquisition which Warner made.

The reason why an injunction against expansion requires some limitation within reason appears from the testimony of Bernhardt in connection with his statement that Warner has "had no policy for the expansion of theatre holdings" (R. 1826):

> "Any theatres acquired * * * were to protect our business and meet the varying economic conditions, shifts of populations or needs caused by obsolescence which had arisen with the changes over the years."

The ban upon expansion departs from the decree ordered in the opinion below which stated that the decree to be entered should not (66 F. Supp. at 359 [R. 3562]):

> "* * * prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the latter case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor."

This went much further than the Consent Decree (XI, [5], R. 3387) which had merely forbidden "a general program of" expansion with the unrestricted qualification that "Nothing herein shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purpose of its business."

Such a sweeping injunction as ultimately granted below would be the equivalent of slow strangulation or divorcement.

Such a sweeping injunction was not granted by this Court against a circuit found to have grown largely as a result of "predatory practices" (United States v. Crescent, 323 U. S. 173, 186):

> "Where the proclivity for unlawful activity has been as manifest as here, the decree should operate as an effective deterrent to a repetition of the unlawful conduct and yet not stand as a barrier to healthy growth on a competitive basis."

The Court is respectfully referred, for a fuller discussion of this question, to Point Second of the Twentieth Century-Fox Brief and to Point I of the RKO Brief.

The intent to prevent undue growth can adequately be achieved without destruction of Warner's business by an injunction against expansion unless permission be granted on an application at the foot of the decree and after a finding that the proposed acquisition does not unduly restrict or restrain competition.

No basis for claiming that "extensive experience shows" decree below inadequate. None of its remedies against industry-wide trade practices had ever before been tried and found ineffective.

There is no truth in plaintiff's claim that the decree below bears "resemblance in impact and method to past systems of regulation which have been already tried and found wanting" (Pltff.'s Br., p. 89), and that therefore no decree short of amputation can give adequate relief.

None of the remedies decreed below against industry-wide trade practices had ever before been tried:

1.) Block-booking had actual judicial sanction (Fed. Trade Com'n. v. Paramount, etc. Co., 57 F. 2d 152) until the decree below. The consent decree of 1940 left three of the distributor defendants free to continue block-booking as to all theatres, affiliated and independent, and sanctioned the other defendants as distributors to book in blocks of five after trade showing.

2.) Formula deals, master agreements and franchises had never been enjoined or regulated, except that the consent decree enjoined the consenting defendants as distributors from granting franchises.

3.) Fixing minimum admission prices had never been enjoined or regulated. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, merely held illegal a conspiracy to cause some subsequent-run exhibitors in Texas "to increase their admission price to 25 cents." The consent decree of 1940 in no way affected the then existing practice of inserting minimum admission prices in the licenses.

4.) Joint operation of theatres ("pools") had never been enjoined or regulated. The consent decree of 1940 left unaffected this industry-wide practice.

5.) Partial ownership of theatres had never been enjoined or regulated. The consent decree of 1940 left unaffected this industry-wide method of ownership.

6.) Theatre expansion had never been prohibited or regulated. The consent decree of 1940 prohibited the consenting defendants from "a general program of" theatre expansion; and in the cases of Crescent (323 U. S. 173) and Schine (63 F. Supp. 229) the United States was content with injunctions against theatre acquisition without consent of the court.

7.) Competitive bidding had never been decreed. Two decisions since the decree below have, however, adopted a modified form of competitive bidding to remedy local grievances. (Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, 162 F. 2d 520, 524; unreported decree in Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc., 150 F. 2d 738).

8.) Clearance: Whether a particular clearance was reasonable or unreasonable has always been a subject of dispute, no matter who owned the theatres involved. Industry boards sought to set up clearance schedules in local areas under the NRA. The United States does not purport to show that where such clearances went into operation, they were unreasonable.

The consent decree of 1940 made clearance arbitrable, but sanctioned as a criterion of reasonableness the "old customer" and certain other criteria (Pltff.'s Appendix, pp. 373-374) abolished by the decree below (R. 3533-3534).

Disputes as to clearance are bound to exist even if every theatre in the country were owned by a separate and different individual. Amputation of theatres from production is no panacea for clearance disputes.

Plaintiff's admission that the very limited relief of the consent decree mitigated "the discriminations inherent in the major defendants' ownership of theatres" (Pltff.'s Br., p. 86) merely serves to underline the probable efficacy of the present decree.

Never has a decree so drastically and radically changed the sales practices of an entire industry.

Never has a decree established a method to resolve disputes over run, as this decree does by competitive bidding.

Never has a decree or code required each license to be "offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture" (Decree II, 8(d), R. 3698), "solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others" (Decree II, 8 (b), R. 3697).

That the decree provides no simple and direct method of enforcement is not the fault of the Court (which urged a continuance of an expanded system of arbitration) or of the theatre-owning defendants (which offered to consent to such an expanded system as a remedy in addition to contempt proceedings and private anti-trust litigation). We hope that plaintiff's failure to consent to an expanded arbitration system may have been influenced by its desire to have a declaration by this Court as to whether there should be amputation, and that, if the decree below be affirmed in that respect, plaintiff will reconsider its present position.

None of the cases cited remotely tend to show "extensive experience" of the inadequacy of any remedy short of amputation.

Plaintiff's reference, at page 72 of its brief, to the numerous pending private anti-trust suits is disingenuous. No analysis is presented to show, as plaintiff would have this Court believe, that the restraints there alleged will not be prevented by this decree. These private suits, in the main, involve differences of opinion between exhibitors as to which theatre was entitled to a designated run. In some suits, an affiliated exhibitor is the defendant exhibitor. In other suits, an independent exhibitor is the defendant exhibitor. In all suits, those distributors which had licensed the desired run to the defendant exhibitor are of course made parties defendant. The Bigelow, Goldman, and Theatre Investment cases, described at pages 87 and 88 of plaintiff's brief, involved such disputes over run. No litigation would have been necessary, had the decree below been in effect. The surprising thing is, not that 40 odd suits have been brought, but that so few have been fomented by the sweeping nature of the decision below.

All that Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount, etc., Co., 57 F. 2d 152 (Pltff.'s Br., pp. 73-75) held was the validity of block-booking by Paramount in 1926. The Commission sought to make no other order enforcible as the opinion states.

All that Paramount, etc. Co. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30, and United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., 282 U. S. 44 (Pltff.'s Br., p. 80) held was the illegality of an agreement among distributors to insert in all licenses requirements for compulsory arbitration and for assumption of debts of prior theatre owners.

Vitagraph, Inc. v. Perelman, 95 F. 2d 142 (Pltff.'s Br., pp. 84-85), involved a conspiracy by distributors to refuse to license pictures on a double feature program in Philadelphia. It was decided in 1938. The consent decree of 1940, however, specifically recognized as a factor in determining the reasonableness of a clearance "The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features" (R. 3534). Thus, the United States itself recognized a clear distinction between the impropriety of a refusal to license for a double bill and the propriety of taking double billing into consideration in determining proper clearance. It therefore comes with ill grace for the plaintiff to suggest that the Perelman case was disregarded because clearance in Cleveland, Ohio, was "graduated in length according to the * * * double feature policy of the" subsequent run theatre (Pltff.'s Br., p. 85).

Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, 60 F. 2d 538 (Pltff.'s Br., p. 80), held invalid a Board of Trade clearance schedule as against an exhibitor at Norfolk, Neb. Plaintiff's lengthy footnote 10, pages 81-82, fails to show the subsequent clearance over Norfolk and hence fails to show that the relief was inadequate. Nor does it in our opinion show any basis for comparing the clearance set forth in the schedule with the clearance existing in the 1943-44 season. In no event did that case pass upon the propriety of the clearance fixed, merely holding improper clearance fixed by express agreement among distributors. The case obviously does not show that an injunction against unreasonable clearance will be ineffective.

Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, merely held invalid an agreement between distributors and dominant exhibitor which fixed the admission price of subsequent-run theatres at 25 cents and forbade double billing.

This, and the West Coast Theatres case (Pltff.'s Br., pp. 76-79) merely involved local circuits' activities of a kind similar to those in the Schine, Griffith and Crescent suits. The complete absence of any reference to the Schine, Griffith and Crescent litigations is significant. For, to disprove the Court's finding that the evils found lie in industry-wide trade practices and not in theatre ownership by producers, plaintiff must distinguish between the conduct of affiliated circuits and independent circuits.

If plaintiff seeks divorcement because of integration, it must at least show that the restraints found below were a result of integration.

It does not show this by mentioning only cases involving affiliated circuits and ignoring all those cases involving individual circuits.

The cases described by plaintiff, show, at most, the necessity for a decree which must have its initial impact upon the distributors if it is to be effective in preventing the undue advantages which the trade practices have been held to give to the circuits or the old customers; that integration was not the cause of these trade practices; that before integration occurred circuits and old customers were receiving these undue advantages; and that outlawing integration will not prevent circuits and old customers from continuing to secure these undue advantages.

Summary of Point I.

The following has been demonstrated:

The trade practices held illegal arose from no attempt to monopolize.

They grew up historically from the complicated nature of this business and bore no relation to integration of production, distribution and exhibition.

They evidenced no moral turpitude and no intent to violate the law.

They are adequately cured by the basic and drastic changes in the marketing of motion pictures, as required by the provisions of the decree.

They have no logical relationship to the drastic remedy of divestiture.

In themselves they constitute no reason at all for inviting what we shall hereafter show are the dire consequences to all of these defendants, to the owners of the now independently owned 14,578 theatres out of the 18,076 theatres of the country, and to the public.

POINT II.

A more fluid method of marketing by competitive bidding decreed as an additional remedy.

A.

Plaintiff urged competitive bidding as an appropriate remedy consistent with the Act.

The initial suggestion of competitive bidding came from the United States when its amended complaint criticized the absence of competitive bidding in this industry (Par. 113, R. 3173; Par. 122, R. 3177; Par. 124, R. 3178).

In summation, plaintiff's counsel, in response to questioning by all three judges, said (R. 2556):

> "Mr. Wright: I see no reason why they [pictures] should not be sold competitively.
>
> Judge Bright: What do you mean by that?
>
> Mr. Wright: Well, putting pictures on the auction block does not appeal to me as anything which is inconsistent with the purposes of the Sherman Act. I do not see why they should not go on the auction block."

This was merely a repetition of the Government's position in response to exhibitor objections to the consent decree. Mr. Sher then said for the Government (pp. 468, 469 of the printed transcript of that hearing):

> "One of the objectives of the anti-trust law, as I see it, is to bring about competition. Now competition in the motion picture industry, the ideal competitive system, would be to have every picture individually sold to the highest bidder. * * * We did not quite get there, but we approached it, and it seems to me what most of the objections that have been presented here today involve is the objection to competition, and not an objection to the decree."

"It does hurt him if he doesn't want to compete for pictures, but we are as much anxious to have exhibitors compete as we are in having distributors compete."

After the opinion herein had been filed and the amici had vigorously protested the relief suggested to inject additional competition into the existing "fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices" which it had found a deterrent to free bargaining (Finding 84, R. 3674), plaintiff's counsel modified his position so as to limit his approval of competitive bidding among and between independents (R. 3009):

"Judge Hand: * * * I don't know quite what your own position is—but about everybody more or less mildly or strongly objects to—

"Mr. Wright: Well, we believe in it as a method of solving controversies between people of relatively equal bargaining strength such as the independent elements of the industry. If two independents want to exhibit the same pictures on the same run which excludes the other one, I don't know any better way to settle that problem than by saying that the one who bids the most money for the run gets the picture, gets the run. Now that, it seems to me, is implicit in any kind of system of competitive distribution that I envisage."

Accordingly, the Court below in a subsequent "Memorandum in re Findings and Decree," interpreted the decree as merely affording "an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so" (R. 3702), thereby affording the independent theatres the option of whether to invoke competitive bidding in any competitive area.

But plaintiff's counsel's admission that such bidding would be a good way of settling disputes between independents carries with it an implied admission that competitive bidding is workable,—or to paraphrase Judge Hand's words, "the technical administrative objections" urged "might be troublesome. I do not imagine that they are insuperable" (R. 2897).

Nor does the decree place unduly burdensome regulations on the Southern District of New York.

Certainly, the statutory court would not have done as it did, if it felt it was assuming too burdensome a duty.

It knew that it could, if requisite, appoint a standing master to decide such controversies as the Department of Justice thought of sufficient merit to require contempt proceedings.

And any exhibitor, dissatisfied with the Department's decision, retains the undoubted right to prosecute a private antitrust suit in which it could urge violation of the decree.

Moreover, there is always the remedy of arbitration as an alternative remedy, if, as and when the Court or the Department of Justice finds existing remedies too cumbersome. The excuse for the Department's failure to negotiate a broadened arbitration system that the non-theatre owning defendants refused their assent to arbitration, has little force when the Department's primary objection to competitive bidding is that the theatre-owning defendants may have an undue advantage by such bidding.

B.

Opposition thereto merely emphasizes that the practices criticized below were industry-wide, not the consequence of integration, and that disintegration would not inject additional competition into the industry's methods of distribution.

The opposition to competitive bidding voiced here by such divergent units of the industry is the most eloquent proof that the illegalities found below are not inherent in integration, but are industry-wide and require an industry-wide remedy if it be desirable to inject greater competition into the industry's methods of distribution.

The effort of the statutory court to inject greater competition into the existing industry-wide methods of distribution appears to be resisted equally by:

1.) A distributor which neither produces nor exhibits pictures, defendant United Artists.

2.) Distributor-producers who do not exhibit pictures, like defendants Universal and Columbia, and an amicus curiae allegedly representing certain self-styled independent producers.

3.) An integrated company with circuits, some of which are 50% or more independently owned, defendant Paramount.

4.) Circuits and individual theatres independently owned, represented here by associations whose membership may include affiliated circuits and other independent circuits.

The straight-forward attempt of the statutory court to "pry open to competition a market that has been closed by * * * illegal restraints" (International Salt Co. v. United States, No. 46, this Term) is not resisted by four of the theatre-owning defendants (part of whose theatres may be lost by the decree) who are willing to try the new marketing method (even though some of their remaining theatres may be adversely affected).

Plaintiff, after urging it on the court (p. 41, supra), now seeks to straddle, recognizing its propriety for every one except the five theatre-owning defendants (Plaintiff's assignment of error, no. 10, R. 3722).

The very nature of the opposition to even a trial of competitive bidding serves again to emphasize:

1.) The industry-wide nature of the distribution practices criticized below;

2.) That such industry-wide practices were not created by integration and are not inherently bound up with integration; and

3.) That separation of exhibition from production and distribution would not tend to inject into the existing industry-wide marketing practices that additional competition which it was the aim of the court to promote.

C.

Facts found below which prompted the court to try out competitive bidding.

The statutory court found (R. 3674):

> "85. Competition can be introduced into the present system of fixed admission prices, clearances, and runs, by requiring a defendant-distributor when licensing its features to grant the license for each run at a reasonable clearance (if clearance is involved) to the highest bidder, if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable, the one offering the best terms shall receive the license."

There were no facts which compelled any other finding in the record, although in making this finding the Court below had in mind specifically the pressure of "independent" circuits on distributors (Finding 154, R. 3690), the failure of plaintiff in this case which has been pending since 1938 to adduce similar evidence as to any affiliated circuit, and the obvious fact that self-interest would be a greater deterrent of maltreatment of prospective customers to an integrated company than to an independent circuit.

D.

Hypotheses and argumentation no substitute for facts found and provision for modification after trial.

The statutory court, having found as a fact that competition "can be introduced into the present system" by the provisions of the decree below (Finding 85, R. 3674), reserved jurisdiction to modify its decree (Decree, VIII, R. 3701) if actual trial should prove its finding incorrect.

Those who resist such a trial—whatever their motives—merely ask this Court to substitute their fears, hopes, or arguments for the facts found below and the pragmatic device decreed to prove the correctness of those facts.

As so recently said by a majority of this very Court in International Salt Co. v. United States, No. 46, this Term, (reiterating a statement of a majority thereof in an earlier case, hereinafter quoted, p. 115, infra):

> "We think it would not be good judicial administration to strike paragraph VI from the judgment to meet a hypothetical situation when the District Court has purposely left the way open to remedy any such situations if and when the need arises. The factual basis of the claim for modification should appear in evidentiary form before the District Court rather than in the argumentative form in which it comes before us."

E.

Such hypotheses and arguments without substance.

The gravamen of the opposition to a trial of competitive bidding, both below and here, was and is that competitive marketing would leave a large circuit with some competitive advantage over a smaller circuit (or any unit of more than one theatre with such advantage over a single theatre).

The essence of these hypotheses is that—

1.) The statutory court ignored the possibility that competitive bidding might be abused by a larger circuit and that

2.) Despite the deliberate reservation of power to modify its provisions to meet conditions as they developed, the statutory court would be helpless to remedy any abuse which might develop.

We need not discuss—as not here directly involved—the question as to whether this Court should hold that the Act intended to level all industrial units so that no unit more favorably situated could possibly have any advantage over a less favorably situated unit.*

The statutory court, however, did not ignore the possibility of such abuse of competitive bidding. Indeed, in its Opinion (66 F. Supp. at 346 [R. 3540]),

* This in effect is what certain amici urge when they protest that an independent theatre which has no money invested in a film produced will bid at a competitive disadvantage against a theatre owned by Warner, for example, which has first call on its own 19 features in which Warner has invested 19 × $1,350,000.

repeated in Finding 85 just quoted, it emphasized that "if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable the one offering the best terms shall receive the license". Not only is that philosophy repeated in II, 8 (c) of the decree (R. 3697): subdivision (d) of that section provides specifically that (R. 3698):

> "(d) Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture".

and subdivision (b) thereof provides specifically that (R. 3697):

> "(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others."

The requirement of offer and acceptance picture by picture and theatre by theatre, without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others, coupled with its reservation of jurisdiction to amend the decree, was fair warning to the entire industry that it intended to enforce fair competitive bidding.

That independent circuits and theatres had no illusion on that score is amply shown by the opposition to any interference with the "old customer" practice. Heretofore, as the defendant distributors testified, when there was competition for the grant of a run, and all competitive factors were deemed equal, the distributor granted the run to its old customer when that old customer was a satisfactory customer. The decree below upsets the prevalent view that a satisfactory old customer was entitled to such consideration.

Much of the objections to competitive bidding is basically no more than the wolf of the "old customer" theory dressed in sheep's clothing of impracticality* and alleged fear of abuse thereof by those who wish to remain as favored customers.

There is however no substance to the fear that defendants will abuse the new marketing system.

The Court below pointed out that "we cannot find sufficient evidence to support an inference that the major defendants here, though controlling some of the largest circuits of theatres in the country and thus possessing potential weapons of great strength, have either collectively or severally entered upon a general policy of discriminating against independents in their grants of clearances" (66 F. Supp. at 342 [R. 3532]), "film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices" (66 F. Supp. at 353 [R. 3551]).

That defendants did not voluntarily heretofore resort to this method of marketing is the best evidence that it will not be used oppressively now that it has been directed by a court. Warner has been free to require competitive bidding during the last 19 years since Warner first acquired theatres and in all of the 24 years since Warner's incorporation. During all this time Warner received about 60% of their domestic film revenue from independent theatres when it could have resorted to competitive bidding, had it so chosen.

A distributor's own self-interest, now buttressed by authoritative judicial decision, will prevent abuse of the new marketing method prescribed.

---

* The reservation of the power to amend takes care of the possibility that actual operation may require some modification in the technique of competitive bidding in order to make it more fluently workable.

And that same self-interest, now reinforced by the sanctions of the decision below, will tend to restrain its abuse by independent circuits at the expense of individual theatres. Indeed, the real fear of the independents is not of the defendants who must do business with them, but of the large independent circuits that have in the past attempted coercive measures against both independents and the defendants, as the opinion below indicated. The decision below for the first time offers defendants a sanction for resisting such sporadic attempts at oppression by independent circuits, as were found in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, and United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, 63 F. Supp. 229, argued here this Term.

Thus, the claim of some exhibitor organizations that the defendant exhibitors will overbid in order to keep a picture from a competitor is merely their opinion without factual basis. The record is barren of any such evidence. The same arguments were made to the lower Court, and after due consideration the lower Court nevertheless inserted provisions for competitive bidding in the decree, including the prohibition against "discrimination in favor of affiliates", and the retention of jurisdiction to take any action required in the event that it be demonstrated in the future that the competitive bidding system is being abused.

The competitive bidding system will also throw on the five defendant-exhibitors the necessity of open competition for first run licenses in the 92 cities of the United States with population of more than 100,000.

Plaintiff has charged that in 38 of the 92 cities, one or more of the defendants operated all of the first run theatres, and that this was true of more than 100 cities of between 25,000 and 100,000. With the injection of the competitive bidding system into the marketing of film, no independent theatre owner desiring a first run in those cities and operating a theatre suitable for first run exhibition will be excluded from that first run market. No circuit, whether affiliated or independent, can use its buying power to secure the privilege of an unjustified first run.

A few additional comments will serve to answer such additional arguments against competitive bidding as are raised by the alleged Petitioners-Appellants, American Theatres Association, Inc. et al., in appeal No. 85.

These Associations object to competitive bidding as ineffectual to accomplish the relief sought by the Court, because such increased competition may tend to raise the prices of film rentals. They thereby incorrectly assume that the Court sought to control the prices of film rental.

Whatever the incidental effect of increased competition on the prices of film rentals, competitive bidding will remedy the primary evil of which the plaintiff complained and which the Court sought to remedy. This had nothing to do with the price of film rentals as is obvious from the "Conclusion" of the brief of these Associations, which describes (p. 28):

> "The evils found to exist are a combination by the defendants to exclude independent exhibitors from preferred runs * * *. To meet that situation, the Court has devised an assumed remedy by competitive bidding."

More accurately stated, the primary evil sought to be remedied was the dificulty of any theatre, actual or potential, to break into or change the existing system of run and clearance. That evil will be cured by competitive bidding, whatever the incidental effect of increased competition for film and preferred runs on rentals paid. If the result of additional competition for film of theatres, actual and potential, has an incidental effect on the prices of the rentals paid, it is merely an incidental result of the greater competition which the Sherman Act was designed to promote.

The philosophy of the Sherman Act is based on a price structure which is the result of competition.

Where competition is keen,—as here, for the very best of the pictures on preferred runs,—the price in a free market will be what the traffic will bear, no matter what form the selling takes.

The only new element which competitive bidding injects into the situation is the opportunity of a theatre to secure something better than its competitor if it thinks the risk worth the gamble.

It is true that in the long run "Auction bidding does not in any way remove the handicap of those bidders who are in an inferior bargaining position" (Br., p. 13). In the long run, the inferior theatre will not—and should not—be preferred to the superior. All that competitive bidding—and the Sherman Act—seek to accomplish is so to release the forces of competition that each of the 18,000 odd theatres in this country may reach its own competitive level, "in fair mercantile battle",—to borrow a phrase from page 11 of the brief of these Associations.

Throughout their brief, there is implicit and explicit insistence upon "stability", "continuous supply of products", "assurance of a continued supply" (Br., p. 16). Unfortunately, however, neither the Court, plaintiff nor the Sherman Act can assure both "stability" of product and freedom of competition. Theatres cannot have their cake and eat it too.

The suggestion that anything in the decree sanctions defendant's theatres engrossing the market (Br., pp. 15-17) is indeed an argument of desperation. An injunction against licensing except on competitive bidding is not a sanction that competitive bids may be so used as to violate the Act. If Warner should engross the market in Lawrence, Massachusetts, for example (Br., p. 19), the independent Capital Theatre would have the same rights whether or not it were afforded the privilege of competitive bidding. However, despite the alleged conspiracy, the brief concedes that "At the present time, the Capital Theatre is able to obtain sufficient quality product to operate" (Br., p. 19). It is idle to speculate that the Capital would fare worse after than before the injunctions contained in the decree below.

The same comment applies to the claim that "The decree gives the defendants a further advantage by allowing them to preempt their own pictures" (Br., p. 17). The decree "gives" defendants nothing. It merely fails to compel defendants to bid competitively for their own pictures in their own theatres. The decree "gives" them neither their pictures nor their theatres: They paid for both in the hope and expectation of profit.

A good portion of the brief (and especially pages 20-24) purports to show that no objective criteria of the best bidder are possible in this industry, and that, therefore, competitive bidding is unworkable. Plaintiff's counsel did not think so (p. 41, supra). And it cannot be seriously claimed that the theatres of these Associations have been licensed their films on the runs they now enjoy with no objective criteria establishing their right thereto. For that would be an implied admission that their present successful operation is solely the "result of well established business relationships", the "old customer" theory.

The claim that bidding is "unworkable" and "will create substantial unnecessary difficulties in operations" (Br., pp. 24-27), should also be appraised against protests of unworkability, when it was suggested at the time of the formulation of the consent decree that licenses be limited to blocks of five features after trade showing.* Actual operation in that way in the eight years since 1940 exploded that myth. Indeed neither Warner nor its customers have experienced difficulty or hardship in selling picture by picture subsequent to 1940.

It is obviously true that it is easier and simpler for "those who have" if they can be assured from year

* Mr. Sher said for the Government, in response to the fears voiced at the hearing on the consent decree (p. 474 of the printed transcript of the hearing):

> "But these dire predictions as to what will come before the new method of selling has had a chance, do not seem to be justified."

to year of "a continuous supply of product sufficient to operate their theatres" (Br., p. 17) presumably on a run satisfactory to them. But if it be desirable to have greater fluidity instead of the alleged existing "stability", some slight additional inconvenience to both theatres and distributors should not be too big a price to have to pay for increased competition.

It is not, we submit, too much to ask the industry to suffer some slight additional inconvenience in making an honest attempt to secure that greater degree of competition which the Court below and the Sherman Act sought to promote.

If, in fact, any of the competitive bidding provisions create too great confusion or hardship where they are invoked, the Court has reserved jurisdiction to make appropriate modifications; and our thousands of clients throughout the country such as members of these Associations may rest assured that, if undue inconvenience or hardship ensues, Warner will make appropriate representations to the Court to remedy any such result.

POINT III.

There was no monopolization of production, distribution or exhibition by any or all of the defendants.

A.

No monopolization of production.

The Court found there was no monopolization or restraint of trade in production (R. 3670):

> "59. There exists active competition among the defendants and others in the production of motion pictures.
>
> 60. None of the defendants has monopolized or attempted to monopolize or contracted or combined or conspired to monopolize or to restrain trade or commerce in any part of the business of producing motion pictures."

Indeed, not only was this conceded below (R. 1952, quoted on pp. 104-105, infra): plaintiff's counsel conceded that any feature suitable for first run exhibition was assured of and secured adequate distribution (R. 387, 388, 1949, quoted on pp. 104-106, infra).

B.

No monopolization of distribution.

The Court found no monopolization of distribution (Finding 152, R. 3689):

> "There is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in * * * distribution * * * except as found in findings 153 and 154 below."

Finding 153 related to alleged first-run monopolies in a single locality, as to which the Court found "there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly" (R. 3690).

Finding 154 referred to the industry-wide trade practices found as "illegalities and restraints", including "admission price-fixing" and "non-competitive granting of runs and clearances", heretofore quoted on page 8, supra.

Thus, the Court below obviously did not find or intend to find monopolization by "an exclusionary conspiracy" as plaintiff claims (Br., p. 56).

It merely found that certain uniform trade practices were restraints such as the Act condemned and such as might simply be remedied by declarations of illegality and injunctions.

It found merely a conspiracy as to "a price-fixing system" (Finding 70, R. 3672), concert of action in "a uniform system of clearance and run" (Findings 81-83, R. 3674), and a resultant "fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices" which was a deterrent to free bargaining (Finding 84, R. 3674).

That the conspiracy found was in no sense exclusionary is obvious from the fact that the system affected all theatres, independent or affiliated, as the Court found (66 F. Supp. at 346 [R. 3539]).

Indeed, in discussing discrimination among licensees, the Court specifically stated (66 F. Supp. at 353 [R. 3551]):

> "The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices."

Moreover, the Court found the necessity and desirability of run and clearance (Findings 74-78, 83, R. 3673) and the advantage to the public of such a system (Findings 74-76), even though run and clearance by definition involve some measure of exclusivity, just as every contract of purchase necessarily excludes the possibility of someone else buying the very same article.

And it was only because the result was uniform as to all pictures in any given theatre that the Court found concert of action and a uniform system (Findings 81-83, R. 3674).

The Court therefore did not find that the system of runs and clearances was "an exclusionary conspiracy".

It merely found that the "fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices" was a deterrent to free bargaining (Finding 84, R. 3674), and that (R. 3674):

> "85. Competition can be introduced into the present system * * *."

by competitive bidding.

Restrictions as to minimum admission prices (Findings 62-72, R. 3670), were found illegal despite the finding that those included in licenses were "the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitor" (Finding 63, R. 3670). With block-booking and franchises covering long periods, this may well have been such a restraint as to have caused the Court to find the intent to maintain prices at artificial levels (Finding 67, R. 3671), "an effective system of price control" (Finding 71, R. 3672) and an attempt to channel patronage into prior-run theatres by such "differentials in admission price" (Finding 72, R. 3672).

But with bulk licensing prohibited, no such consequences could flow from inserting in each separate license for a single picture "the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitor" (Finding 63, R. 3670), and in any event even the remote possibility thereof no longer survives the injunction against minimum admission prices.

There is thus nothing in the conspiracy found remotely resembling "an exclusionary conspiracy".

Nor is there any reason why such evils as have been found to exist may not be simply and adequately cured by the injunction against uniformity and price fixing.

That the effect of the conspiracy found has been negligible is obvious from the fact that the Warner theatres have only taken in 6% of the total dollars paid at the box offices of this country (p. 138, infra), a small enough percentage for 3% of the total theatres to collect when it is remembered that Warner's total investment was $89,369,896 in theatre properties (Ex. W-14) and approximately $26,000,000 for the 19 features produced in 1945 (Ex. W-10).

C.

Warner alone did not monopolize exhibition.

In 30 states with 1,429 cities of over 2,500 population, Warner has no theatres.

In the remaining 15 states with 1,933 such cities, Warner has theatres in only 178, as follows:

State	Number of Cities where Warner has one or more theatres	Number of Cities where Warner has no theatres
Oklahoma	1	74
Tennessee	1	56
Oregon	1	33
Illinois	1	210
Indiana	1	98
Delaware	1	7
Washington	2	38
Maryland	4	21
Virginia	5	48
West Virginia	6	39
California	6	159
Wisconsin	8	85
Massachusetts	10	177
New York	12	189
Connecticut	16	16
Ohio	16	168
New Jersey	43	132
Pennsylvania	43	206
District of Columbia	1	0
	178	1,756

The Court found no monopolization of exhibition (Finding 152, R. 3689):

> "There is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in * * *, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, except as found in findings 153 and 154 below."

The exception in finding 154 related to the restraints in distribution by trade practices heretofore discussed, "not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres" (Finding 154, R. 3690).

Finding 153 related to "localities where there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres", as to which the Court found "there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly" (R. 3690).

At the present time Warner does not own all of the first run theatres in any of the 92 cities with populations exceeding 100,000, nor did plaintiff claim that Warner had the only theatre or all of the theatres in any one of the 320 towns of population between 25,000 and 100,000.

Plaintiff did contend that Warner had the only theatre or all of the theatres in 58 of the 6,257 towns with populations of less than 25,000 (R. 359). Of the 58 towns which plaintiff listed as having only Warner theatres:

> 7 are suburbs of Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Boston (Ambler, Pa.; Bala Cynwyd, Pa.; Elkins Park, Pa.; Etna, Pa.; Jenkintown, Pa.; Prospect Park, Pa.; Willow Grove, Pa.) (R. 378).

6—By reason of lease, contract, and pool termination, Warner no longer has any interest in theatres in Amesbury, Mass.; Newburyport, Mass.; Waverly, Mass.; Lansdowne, Pa.; Lake Geneva, Wisc.; Delavan, Wisc.

10 will be subject to the order for disposal under court supervision as joint interest theatres (Beverly, Bordentown, Bridgeton, Clementon, Moorestown, Pennsgrove, Riverside, Swedesboro, Woodbury, and Mt. Holly, all in N. J.) (R. 378-379).

There is now operating an independent first run theatre in Batavia. There is no town of Collin, N. J. (R. 378).

As to the remaining 33 of these towns in which Warner has the only theatre or theatres, the plaintiff did not contend that those theatres were illegally acquired to stifle competition or that the operation of those theatres resulted in driving competitors out of business or that those theatres were operated in a manner to prevent competitors from entering those towns. The plaintiff merely introduced a list of towns in which Warner had the only theatre or theatres.

In any event, plaintiff asked no relief as to any such specific locality (R. 2769, 2777-8).*

---

* "Mr. Wright: * * * I agree that the mere fact of sole possession of physical facilities in any location does not mean a monopoly" (R. 2769).

"Judge Hand: * * * you do not seem to pay any attention to local situations except as evidence of something larger. I do not know whether you do or not. I do not know whether you make any real complaint about Albany and other places, or whether you merely think they are sort of malignant symptoms.

"Mr. Wright: I think that the latter is a more correct description" (R. 2777-8).

D.

The Warner defendants, as an integrated unit, do and did not constitute a restraint or monopolization of trade.

As we have heretofore shown, the activities of Warner as producer, distributor and exhibitor did not and do not result in any restraints or monopolizations of trade, other than in conformance to trade practices, 21 pooling agreements and the joint interests banned by the decree below.

Plaintiff, at page 91 of its brief, claims that even under the decree there will remain a restraint of trade and monopolization "with respect to that important segment of trade represented by the pictures it distributes to its own theatres". Plaintiff then proceeds to attempt to establish this conclusion by charging that other companies (and stating without evidence that Warner similarly), acquired theatres for an illegal purpose, i. e., that other companies (and Q. E. D. Warner) "integrated theatre operations with film distribution in order to have non-competitive market outlets for their films"; that "such integrations were in no sense an effort to meet an expanding business demand resulting from superior skill in film production or distribution"; that such integration was "a deliberate creation of a market control" which would assure "retail outlets regardless of the merits of product". Then, at page 104, plaintiff concludes that theatres were acquired "by deliberate, calculated purchase for control".

Plaintiff refers to no evidence or no findings as to Warner to support these statements of fact. The evidence is to the contrary.

Warner started as an exhibitor of motion pictures and by 1916 was in the business of producing pictures, distributing pictures and operating a few theatres (R. 1553).

When Warner had successfully pioneered the development of the talking motion picture and was unable to find theatres equipped to play those pictures, because the minimum cost of installing talking equipment in theatres was $25,000, and very few theatre owners were willing to make such investment on such gamble, Warner was able to acquire in 1928 a circuit of 250 theatres (Finding 26, R. 3665; R. 1555), largely because the principal manager of the circuit had died and the circuit needed trained management (R. 1555). This transaction gave Warner 250 theatres which could be immediately equipped with sound installation (Findings 27-29, R. 3665). The talking motion picture was here to stay, but theatre owners either did not have the money to equip their theatres for talking motion picture exhibition, or did not want to take the gamble, or did not want to invest where the supply of talking motion pictures was so small as not to permit of a full year's program. Warner had the alternative of either abandoning the talking motion picture,—that it did not is the only reason why there is today any such business,—or acquiring theatres and equipping theatres for the exhibition of those pictures.

Clearly these theatre acquisitions were "an effort to meet an expanding business demand resulting from superior skill in film production" and were in no sense "a deliberate creation of market control which would assure them of retail outlets regardless of the merits of their product" (Br., p. 91).

Since 1931 there has been no policy by Warner for the expansion of its theatre holdings, so that today it has an interest in 44 less theatres than it had in 1931, although the total number of theatres in the United States grew from 13,386 in 1935 to 18,076 in 1945 (R. 1557, 1826; Findings 32, 145, R. 3665, 3688). This further negates plaintiff's implied innuendo that Warner sought theatres to insure an outlet for its talking pictures regardless of their merit. Indeed, any such express claim would be so palpably incredible that it has not even been attempted.

Plaintiff next contends that the use given Warner pictures in Warner theatres constitutes monopolization and restraint of trade because "all other distributors are excluded from that important segment of the market" and other exhibitors "are excluded from the opportunity of licensing the exclusive runs" (p. 92). In plain Anglo-Saxon, this means that Warner by licensing its own theatres to exhibit its own pictures unduly engrosses the market.

Plaintiff, since it must, recognizes "the right [of a manufacturer] to use his own product in his own outlets, so long as he does not use the advantage resulting from integration to restrain unreasonably the competition of others or to monopolize" (p. 103), and hence concedes that integration per se is legal though necessarily resulting in some restraint of trade, but that in determining whether such restraint is in violation of the Sherman Act, the test of reasonableness is to be applied.

Contrast the facts of the Lehigh case (254 U. S. 255) upon which plaintiff so heavily relies, where there had been deliberate monopolization of all the anthracite coal which it was humanly possible to produce from the field adjacent to this and other railroads, both in transportation and resale of about 20% of the entire country's supply, actual or potential, with the case of Warner as an alleged integrated monopoly:

1.) Unlike Lehigh, Warner does not monopolize the supply. Warner has no control whatsoever over the potential supply, and produces only 5% of the present supply of the very best pictures.

2.) Unlike Lehigh, Warner does not monopolize the distribution of a monopolied supply. Warner distributes its 19 pictures to any of the 18,000 odd theatres now in successful operation and to any more that are building or may be built. It uses its own theatres as an outlet for its 5% of the present supply in only 3% of the national total of theatres (5% of 3% is 15/100 of 1%), and continues to license those pictures on the next run to competitors of its own theatres.

These statistics already reflect any restraint assumed to flow from the illegalities found below.

3.) Unlike Lehigh, Warner does not monopolize the sale of a supply, monopolized in production and distribution. The Warner theatres in exhibiting their own 19 pictures and any other pictures which it is desirable and feasible to exhibit merely collect 6% of the admissions paid at the box offices of this country (p. 138, infra).

Warner theatres are not claimed to be the sole outlet today (either first run or on all runs) anywhere other than in approximately 60 small towns as to which there is no evidence that any of them could have supported other theatres.

With regard to the effect on exhibitors of the preference given Warner pictures in Warner theatres, only the exhibitor in competition with a Warner theatre can possibly be affected. Warner distributes 19 pictures or about 5% of the total number of pictures distributed. Exhibitors who compete with those Warner theatres are free to license these 19 pictures on the next run.

There is no showing that any exhibitor who competes with a Warner theatre reasonably requires the 19 Warner pictures, in addition to the remaining 240 or more pictures available, in order to operate successfully. In the absence of such showing, plaintiff can not contend that Warner as an integrated unit unreasonably restrains the trade of exhibitors.

With regard to the effect upon distributors of the use made of Warner pictures in Warner theatres, the so-called "important segment of the market" is 3% of the theatres in the United States (Finding 118, R. 3684). There is no showing that any distributor whose pictures are available to a Warner theatre has been excluded from that theatre because of its use of Warner pictures. "Except for a very limited number of theatres in the very largest cities, the 18,000 and more theatres in the United States exhibit the product of more than one distributor. Such theatres could not be operated on the product of only one distributor" (Finding 151; R. 3689). It follows that all Warner theatres (except one or two in the very largest cities) require more than the 19 Warner pictures in order to operate. How then can it be contended that other distributors are excluded from the Warner theatres? In exceptional areas, such as New York City and Los Angeles, Warner operates with Warner pictures alone. There has been no showing of any scarcity of first run Broadway or Los Angeles outlets which would warrant plaintiff in claiming that thereby other distributors are excluded from securing first run Broadway or Los Angeles exhibitions.

In the few towns where Warner has the only theatre or all the theatres (discussed at pages 62-63, supra), there has been no showing that only Warner pictures are exhibited, or that the Warner pictures exhibited constitute so large a segment of all pictures exhibited as to lead to the conclusion that other distributors have been excluded.

To recapitulate. Warner did not acquire its theatres to secure an exclusive outlet for its pictures. Nor were those theatres acquired to achieve a market control of retail outlets. As an integrated unit, its pictures are preferred in exhibition at its own theatres. There has been a complete failure of proof that competing exhibitors or competing distributors are thereby unreasonably restrained.

With regard to plaintiff's claims of monopolization of trade by reason of integration, there has been no showing that exhibitors have been driven out of business or have been prevented from successfully operating theatres because Warner pictures are given prior runs in Warner theatres. There has been no showing that distributors have been driven out of business or have been prevented from successfully engaging in business because Warner pictures are given preference in Warner theatres. There can be no monopolization where the Warner pictures constitute at most 5% of all pictures distributed, and where Warner theatres constitute 3% of all theatres in the United States.

The entry of about 5,000 more theatres into the field since 1935; the decrease of Warner theatre holdings by 44 since 1931; the entry of many more independent pictures (R. 2797); the entry of more distributors and the success of smaller distributors (discussed at pages 83, 106, infra); and the decrease in the number of pictures distributed by Warner from 58 in 1936-37 (R. 3156) to 19 in 1943-44 (Finding 99, R. 3677), completely negative any claim that the integration by Warner as a distributor and exhibitor constitutes monopolization.

The inter-company payments by Warner theatres to Warner as a distributor are of no import, since they do not represent substantial exclusion, as in the Lehigh Valley or Yellow Cab cases where exclusive dealing arrangements were made for all of the anthracite coal along a line exclusively serving 20% of all anthracite coal, or where taxicab monopolies in three large cities agreed to deal only with one taxi manufacturer.

The complete inability of outsiders to get any of the business in those areas, and not the money involved, was the factor.

Here no exclusive dealing arrangements are involved, and there is no evidence and can be no evidence that the integration of Warner as distributor and exhibitor rendered it impossible for any distributor to have its picture shown in a Warner theatre, or rendered it impossible for any exhibitor to secure sufficient product to operate successfully on the run desired.

Integration does permit Warner as a distributor and Warner as an exhibitor to agree as to the admission prices which Warner will charge as an exhibitor when showing Warner pictures. The public and the forces of competition make that determination. However, as plaintiff admits, a single trader always has the right to fix the price which it will charge absent an agreement with competitors, so long as others are not excluded from the market (Br., p. 103).

The General Motors case (121 F. 2d 376) does not hold otherwise. Nothing in that opinion held it illegal for General Motors to operate its own retail outlets and use the services of its own finance affiliate company. What was held illegal was General Motors' coercion of its 15,000 independent dealers by insisting that those dealers choose the General Motors finance affiliate in preference to independent finance companies. "In the instant case the coercion practised upon General Motors dealers assumed the form of various restrictions in the nature of tying limitations" (121 F. 2d at 398). Tying contracts are always illegal unless satisfactorily justified as reasonable.

Although plaintiff admits that integration is not per se illegal, it argues that there is "no economic justification for the integration here involved" (p. 105). Plaintiff produced no evidence in proof of this conclusion. Its arguments that these defendants have used their integrated positions to conspire with each other and that integration therefore has provided the means for the accomplishment of those conspiracies is directly contrary to the finding below, that the trade practices of the defendant distributors and not theatre ownership were the cause of the illegalities.

The Swift case (286 U. S. 106) does not even remotely support plaintiff's position. The limits of that decision are twice stated, at the beginning and near the end of the discussion:

> "The defendants, controlled by experienced business men, renounced the privilege of trading in groceries, whether in concert or independently, and did this with their eyes open. * * * Whatever persuasiveness the reasons then had, is their with undiminished force today" (p. 115).
>
> "There is need to keep in mind steadily the limits of inquiry proper to the case before us. We are not framing a decree. We are asking ourselves whether anything has happened that will justify us now in changing a decree. The injunction, right or wrong, is not subject to impeachment in its application to the conditions that existed at its making. * * * Nothing less than a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforseen conditions should lead us to change what was decreed after years of litigation with the consent of all concerned."

That consent decree involved five companies alleged to have achieved "an unlawful monopoly of a large part of the food supply of the nation" (p. 111), suppressing competition in the purchase of live stock and in the sale of dressed meats "* * * through agreements apportioning the percentages of live stock to which the members of the combinations were severally entitled" (p. 110).

E.

Warner cannot be treated collectively with other defendants to establish monopolization of exhibition.

The opinion below states that (66 F. Supp. at 354 [R. 3553]):

> "The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition" and the Court found that (R. 3684):

> "119. The present theatre holdings of the five defendant-exhibitors * * * aggregate little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States, and by such theatre holdings alone the defendants do not and cannot collectively or individually have a monopoly of exhibition."

These findings are too amply supported by undisputed facts for this Court to be able to hold, as a matter of law, that defendants' theatres may be treated collectively.

The heart of plaintiff's claim below was that because defendants individually do business with each other and because the arithmetic sum of all their business is large, a conspiracy or combination to monopolize exhibition must be inferred (by arithmetic) sufficient to compel divestiture.

We marshal the evidence which caused the Court to reject this alleged mathematical monopoly.

Collective treatment of separate companies would be improper where, as here:

1.) Each separate company acquired differing numbers of theatres for varying reasons at different times, paid varying sums for film exhibited, and collected divergent sums at the box office;

2.) Each separate company did a different percentage of its business with independent theatres in any one year and from year to year; and

3.) Warner's business, as licensor and licensee, with each of the other defendants differed in each year, from year to year, both nationally and in the 92 large cities first run, and there was no relationship between what Warner licensed to and licensed from any other defendants.

Nor is there anything which compels collective treatment of separate companies (or a finding of illegality) in the fact that one theatre-owning defendant licenses some of its features to a co-defendant's theatres for exhibition and that said co-defendant licenses some of its own features for exhibition in said theatre-owning defendant's theatres (so called "cross" or "diagonal" licensing).

We urge that the divergence in business practice among the defendants, the complete absence of any backscratching (accommodating licenses from a defendant for licenses to a defendant), and the sharp competitive character of the business, dispel any possibility that Warner could be arbitrarily lumped together with other defendants as a monopoly.

1.) Differences between the theatres of each separate company (the manner of, reasons for, number of, times of acquisition, amounts paid for film, and sums collected at the box office) all negative collective treatment.

Columbia and United Artists have never had theatres.

Universal disposed of its theatres in 1926, that voluntary divestiture resulting in the independent Schine and Griffith circuits (Amended Complaint, Par. 78, p. 3163).

Loew's theatres were vaudeville houses many years before nickelodeon films were first shown (R. 1838-9), probably 20 years before Warner first acquired theatres from the Stanley Company in 1928 (Findings 27-29, R. 3665). Loew's now has 135 theatres or less than 1% (0.74%) of all theatres in the country (Finding 118, R. 3684).

RKO's theatres were the Keith-Orpheum theatre circuit for a generation before they were acquired by RKO in 1928 (Findings 18, 21, 121, R. 3664, 3684) for the purpose of obtaining an effective means of developing the use of its motion picture sound recording and reproduction devices (Finding 18, R. 3664). RKO now has interests in 109 theatres or less than 1% (0.60%) thereof (Finding 118, R. 3684).

Paramount began to acquire theatres between 1917 and 1919 in order to find an outlet for its features which had been closed by a group of theatres which had gone into production under the name of First National (Findings 5-8, R. 3661). Before the decree below becomes effective, it and its affiliates had 1,395, a little less than half of all the theatres owned by defendants and 7.72% of all theatres in the nation. (Finding 118, R. 3684).

Warner acquired its theatres in 1928-1931 in order to realize on its development of talking motion pictures (Finding 25, R. 1555-6). "Today the Warner Companies have an interest in 547 theatres,—a net reduction of 44 from its peak holdings of 591 in 1931" (Finding 26, R. 3665; and R. 1557-8). This is only 2.77% of the theatres in this country (Finding 118, R. 3684).

While Warner thus effected a net reduction of its theatre holdings, "some of the independent competitors of Warner [not defendants here] have increased their theatre holdings * * * and have acquired theatres which Warner had formerly operated" (R. 1558).

While the total number of theatres in the United States grew from 13,386 in 1935 to 18,076 in 1945 (Finding 145, R. 3688),* Warner effected a net reduction in its theatre holdings.

Compared to the phenomenal growth of theatres in the country,—from 13,386 in 1935 to 18,076 in 1945 (Finding 145, R. 3688), the growth of theatres affiliated with all of the defendants since 1935 has been negligible.

---

* "Mr. Wright: * * * There have been 5,000 more theatres in the last ten years, and of course there are many more independent pictures * * *" (R. 2797).

 These actually had fewer theatres in 1945 than in 1935:
Warner (Finding 32, R. 3665)
RKO (Finding 22, R. 3664)
Loew's (Findings 120, 118, R. 3684)

All of the defendants account for only 3,137 out of the 18,076 theatres in the country (Findings 117-119, R. 3683).

The number of new independent theatres since 1935 is thus 4,690—1,553 more new independent theatres than the total of defendants' theatres.

The amount each theatre-owning defendant collects at the box offices of its theatres likewise differs. The five theatre-owning defendants collected varying percentages of the gross theatre admissions of the 18,076 theatres in the country in the 1945 season, ranging from Paramount's 13.74% to RKO's 3.01%. Warner theatres collected 6.19% (Appendix, p. 138, infra).

Similar divergences appear in that part of the cost of theatre operation represented by film rentals paid (Pltff.'s Appendix, p. 256).

2.) Differences in the percentages of the business of each separate company with independents negative collective treatment.

In such a conspiracy or combination as is claimed to justify collective treatment, there would be probability of some uniformity of pattern with respect to the volume of business done by each separate defendant with independent theatres.

There is no such uniformity of pattern here.

According to plaintiff's own exhibit 425 relating to the 1943/44 season, the percentage of total domestic film rentals received from independent theatres varied from Columbia's and Fox's 65% to Paramount's 46%.

Warner's percentage varied from year to year in every one of the last 16 seasons, ranging from a low of 52% to a high of 66% (Ex. W-4).

Excluding Warner intercompany payments to Warner, the percentage of Warner's total domestic film rentals received from independent theatres also varied from year to year in the last 16 seasons, ranging from approximately 65% to 77% (computed from Ex. W-4, reprinted in part on page 126, infra).

It is inconceivable that Warner would engage in a conspiracy or combination to destroy the independent theatres whose patronage is its life blood and to secure whose patronage it spends millions in distribution costs in competition with its alleged conspirators (p. 109, infra).

These percentages would, of course, be substantially increased by the effect of the decree below, Contrast these facts with allegations in a complaint on a demurrer of a deliberate and intentional conspiracy to monopolize the taxicab manufacturing business through a monopoly of the taxicab business (86% in Chicago; 100% in Pittsburgh), the Yellow Cab case (332 U. S. 218), where a group of monopolist taxicab companies agreed not to buy their cabs from any manufacturer other than one manufacturer which was a party to the conspiracy.

We deal here with motion pictures which anyone may produce and market, which are copyrighted mainly to prevent piracy, not with any device to throttle production. Furthermore, we deal here with 5 theatre-owning distributors which sell and license their pictures to all exhibitors and have not entered into a conspiracy to license only each other and boycott all other exhibitors.

In the Yellow Cab case, this court, had to decide the validity of a demurrer against allegations of conspiracy in restraint of trade and to monopolize where a group of conspirators, each engaging in the taxicab business in some city, and most of the conspirators having a monopoly of the taxicab business in their respective cities, agreed that they would boycott the taxicab manufacturing industry and buy their taxicabs only from a party conspirator. There it was charged that the monopoly was acquired by the "dominating power" of a single family of companies, secured "by deliberate, calculated purchase for control" and not "by normal expansion". The conspiracy, it was alleged, had been effected by causing subsidiaries to secure a monopoly of cab operating licenses in these various cities and then purchasing their cabs only from the parent manufacturer.

Here, any exhibitor is eligible to purchase from the theatre-owning distributors, the other distributors and any prospective distributor, and the theatres of any single defendant buy not only from the theatre-owning distributors but from all other distributors. There is no monopolistic restraint on production or on theatre ownership: purchases or lack of purchases result from business considerations, not from necessity, as in the Yellow Cab case. And no single family of companies acquired its fraction of control of theatres (Warner 3%), as in the Yellow Cab case, "by calculated purchase for control", but "by normal expansion to meet the demands of a business growing as a result of superior and enterprising management" (Findings 26-30 [R. 3665], 152-154 [R. 3689], quoted on p. 8, supra).

3.) Differences in Warner's business as licensor and as licensee with each of the other separate companies (from year to year, nationally, and in the 92 large cities first run) negative collective treatment.

To sustain any inference that the business which Warner did with each of the defendants and which each of them did with Warner was an incident of a confederacy to monopolize exhibition, one would expect some showing that the defendants gave and took on the basis of a pattern from which a reasonable man could infer that they had impliedly agreed on monopolizing exhibition or that a concerted attempt to monopolize exhibition had been effectuated.

The evidence shows no discernible pattern of Warner's dealings with each of the other defendants either in terms of dollars or percentages in any year or from year to year in the last 16 years; no similarity in the length of the terms of licenses; and no uniformity in the business done both as distributor and exhibitor in the so-called first-run market in the 92 large cities.

(1)

The Court made the only finding conceivable under the evidence, that (Finding 141, R. 3688):

> "The dollars paid by Warner to each of the other defendants and by each of the other defendants to Warner show no uniformity of pattern from company to company from year to year."

Thus, just as an example, the Warner theatres were paying rentals for Loew's features of $4,574,114 in 1939/40, though the Loew's theatres were paying rentals for Warner features of only $179,204 (Ex. W-6), or less than 4% of what the Warner theatres had paid Loew's in the same season.

Again, the rentals paid by Warner theatres for Paramount features ranged from $916,000 in 1930/31 to $3,477,000 in 1944/45, while the theatres affiliated with Paramount paid rentals for Warner features ranging from $2,600,000 in 1935/36 to $6,993,000 in 1944/45 (Ex. W-7).

In each of four seasons (1936/37, 1940/41, 1941/42, 1944/45), theatres affiliated with Paramount paid as rentals for Warner features over $1,000,000 more than in the season immediately preceding, although in not one of those same seasons did the Warner theatres pay Paramount rentals which even remotely approximated the tremendous increases which theatres affiliated with Paramount had paid Warner (Ex. W-7).

The same startling variations appear between each company in any particular season or between Warner and any other company in the last sixteen seasons (Appendix, pp. 128-134, infra).

(2)

In the exhibits and appendix, we have anticipated a possible claim that dollar comparisons might not tell the whole story, and for that reason have also made comparisons percentage-wise.

Thus, we have shown the striking divergences in the 1943/44 season (chosen by plaintiff as illustrative) in terms of what percentage of each of the producer-exhibitors' total film distribution revenue was received from each of the other producer-exhibitors and what percentage of each of the producer-exhibitors' total payments for film was made to each of the other producer-exhibitors (pp. 142-143 of Appendix).

The variances are too striking to be ignored.

(3)

The Court also found marked variances in the business which Warner did with the three non-theatre owning defendants (R. 3688):

> "142. There were marked variances from year to year in the sums paid as rental by the theatres in which Warner had an interest to United Artists, Universal, and Columbia, the non-theatre owning defendants."

and the record shows the growth of these three non-theatre owning defendants at the expense of the five theatre owning defendants, as we shall show.

The possibility of a conspiracy or combination is negatived by the growth of and variances of Warner's business with each of these three non-theatre owning defendants.

Thus, the Warner theatres paid Universal as little as $742,352 in 1937, and as much as $2,518,722 in 1944, in which year Warner's payments to Universal were greater than its payments to Fox, RKO, United Artists or Columbia (Ex. W-3). Such figures refute the insinuation that theatre ownership results in "back-scratching".

Indeed, the three non-theatre owning defendants have grown from 1937 to 1944 at the expense of the theatre owning distributors. The percentage of the total rentals paid by Warner theatres to these three non-theatre owning defendants and to each of the theatre owning defendant distributors is (Ex. W-3):

	Universal United Artists Columbia	Paramount	Loew's	Fox	RKO	Warner
1937	13.94%	15.33%	19.88%	10.94%	9.19%	28.00%
1944	19.46%	12.93%	17.25%	10.08%	9.94%	26.50%

Thus, while the three non-theatre owning defendants substantially increased their business with Warner theatres, the Warner theatres did less business with Paramount, Loew's, and Fox; and Warner did about the same percentage with RKO (Finding 143, R. 3688).

(4)

Any inference of conspiracy between Warner and the other defendants is further dispelled by the undisputed fact that the Warner theatres made agreements to license features from the other defendants as distributors for different periods of time than the periods of time Warner as distributor made agreements to license its own features to theatres of other defendants.

The length of the terms of the licenses in any season which the Warner theatre department made for the features of each of the other distributors which also operated theatres and which the Warner distribution department made with each of the other theatre owning defendants show no uniformity of pattern (Appendix, pp. 140-141, infra).. The appendix just mentioned shows how Warner used to license its features to the Loew's New York theatres and the reason why Warner shifted to the RKO New York theatres, based not on any business or lack of business of Loew's or RKO with Warner theatres, but on the increasingly small revenue which Warner received for its features from those Loew's theatres and the increasingly large revenue which Warner received for its features from those RKO theatres to which Warner shifted its product.

In some seasons, 1930/31 for example, Warner licensed the theatres affiliated with Paramount, though most of the Warner theatres did not exhibit Paramount pictures (Ex. W-15); whereas in other seasons, 1939/40 for example, Warner did not license many theatres affiliated with Paramount, though the Warner theatres exhibited Paramount pictures (Appendix, p. 141, infra).

Again, in the 1934/35 and 1936/37 seasons Warner theatres entered into contracts to exhibit Fox pictures for two or three years though the Fox theatres were contemporaneously agreeing to exhibit the Warner pictures for only one year (Appendix, pp. 140-141, infra).

(5)

To bolster its claim of a monopoly of exhibition, plaintiff carved out of the 18,076 theatres in this country a special category which it felt would more readily support its claim of an exhibition monopoly, i. e., plaintiff first limited itself to the 92 cities with populations of over 100,000, and then limited itself further to the first run exhibitions of the very best features in those cities.

The artificiality of such a category (the 92 largest cities with populations of over 100,000) appears from the fact that such a category excludes 40 metropolitan districts with populations of over 101,000 whose aggregate metropolitan district populations total over 7,661,000,—while it includes 47 cities which have aggregate metropolitan district populations of only 6,506,000. Wilkes-Barre, Pa., with 629,000 is for example thereby excluded, while Somerville, Mass., with 102,000 is included. The average of the population of these 40 metropolitan districts excluded is thus 191,525 as against 138,425 of the 47 cities included.*

The amended complaint alleges that defendants "established first-run outlets" by 1930 because they were "necessary to make the production of such features [at a cost of more than $250,000] profitable" (Par. 101, R. 3168). A fortiori, are such first run outlets "necessary" for profitable production today when such a feature costs over $1,300,000 to produce (Ex. W-10).

The facts, however, disprove any possibility of a Warner theatre monopoly in this limited market,

---

* In the 15 largest of these 40 excluded metropolitan districts, each with a population of over 170,000 and with average populations of over 300,000 (total populations of 4,525,000), Warner has theatres in only 3 such districts, the New Britain district (Conn.), the Schenectady-Troy district (N. Y.), and the Haverhill-Lawrence district (Mass.).

Similarly in the remaining 25 of these metropolitan districts, Warner has theatres in only five; Waterbury, Conn.; Johnstown, Pa.; Lancaster, Pa.; Charleston, W. Va.; and Kenosha, Wis.

These figures as to metropolitan districts are from the World Almanac.

and the lack of uniformity of Warner's business with each of the other defendants even in this limited market negatives any inference of such joint conduct as to constitute a conspiracy or combination.

Warner had no first-run theatres in approximately 70% of these 92 large cities, operating theatres in only 28 of the 92 cities.

In all these 28 cities (30%), Warner theatres have competition first run (Finding 147, R. 3688).*

Warner theatres did not exhibit first run, in equal or relative proportions, the features of the other distributor defendants in these 28 cities in the 1943/44 season, the season chosen by plaintiff as illustrative (Ex. 428).

Of the features of the other defendants which the Warner theatres exhibited first run, almost half were those of the non-theatre owning defendants. Thus in 20 cities, a Warner theatre exhibited the product of Universal, United Artists or Columbia, and in 18 others a Warner theatre exhibited one-half of the product of these non-theatre owning defendants.

Truly, a queer conspiracy or combination to monopolize first-run exhibition in the 92 cities where Warner operated first run in only 30% of said cities, where in the 30% of said cities in which it operated first-run theatres approximately half of the product of other defendants came from the non-theatre owning defendants (Universal, United Artists, and Columbia), and where the remainder of the product of the theatre-owning defendants was licensed in approximately equal proportions from Fox, Loew's, Paramount and RKO,* although the theatres of said four companies used strikingly different amounts of Warner product (Appendix, p. 126, infra).

* Just before the trial, Warner had no competition first run in Philadelphia and Albany.

Warner as distributor in the 1943/44 season licensed first run in these 92 cities (Ex. 428):

To no Loew's theatre in the 39 cities where Loew's operated (Finding 140, R. 3687).

To RKO as its regular account in only 4 RKO theatres and ½ of its product in 13 other RKO theatres.

To Fox as its regular account in only 4 Fox theatres and ½ its product in 6 other Fox theatres.

To Paramount as its regular account in 20 theatres affiliated with Paramount and ½ its product in 13 other theatres affiliated with Paramount.

The absence of pattern in the 92 cities first run is further evidenced by contrasting the film rentals received from "Princess O'Rourke" (the feature which plaintiff chose as representative) first run from theatres other than Warner's own in these 92 cities (calculated in Appendix, p. 135, infra).

The significance of these figures is this: Exclusive of Warner's intercompany business, Warner as distributor got almost as much from independents

* All of the Fox product was exhibited in only 3 such Warner theatres, one-half of the Fox product in 5 others. All of the Loew's product was exhibited in only 5 such Warner theatres, one-half of the Loew's product in 5 others. All of the Paramount product was exhibited in only 6 such Warner theatres, one-half of the Paramount product in 7 others. And all of the RKO product was exhibited in only 6 Warner theatres, one-half of the RKO product in 13 others (Ex. 428, printed on page 299 of plaintiff's Appendix).

(28.6%) as it did from RKO, Fox and Loew's combined (38.3%) from first run in the 92 large cities. Warner's revenue from independent theatres was greater than its revenue from Fox, greater than its revenue from RKO, and of course greater than its absence of revenue from Loew's; and was but slightly less than its revenue from Paramount's affiliates (See Appendix, p. 135, infra). This was not a picture which gave the slightest basis for an inference of conspiracy.

Therefore the Court below found that the separate companies could not be collectively treated and that there was no monopolization (Finding 119, R. 3684; Finding 152, R. 3689).

4.) There is nothing which compels collective treatment of separate companies (or a finding of illegality) in the fact that a theatre-owning defendant licenses some of its features to a co-defendant and that said co-defendant licenses some of its own features to said defendant's theatres. "Cross" or "diagonal" licensing considered.

(a) Such licensing has not the faintest resemblance to cross-licensing in patent pools.

Plaintiff's catchwords to describe such licensing, namely "cross licensing" or "diagonal licensing", serve no function but to suggest to the unwary that such licensing has something in common with patent pools.

This is exactly what such licensing is not and in no wise resembles.

In the cases which condemn cross-licensing, there has usually been a "pool" of all patents, present and prospective, which "pool" controls from a single common guiding source all licenses to manufacture similar goods, and through such licenses usually directly dictates the resale price of all such manufactured goods (see for example, the Hartford-Empire case, 323 U. S. 386, 406). In other cases cross-licensing is condemned where the parties to the cross-licensing agreement dictate the resale price of all such manufactured goods and agree to license no one other than the parties to the cross-licensing agreement.

Nothing is further from the facts at bar. Here, none of the five (or eight) defendants has "pooled" any of its features or entered into any agreements as to features which anyone (or any of them) may hereafter produce. And concession and evidence here show that anyone may (and that many others do) produce good features which have no trouble in getting distribution, i. e., a market (p. 105, infra).

(b) Such licensing as plaintiff labels as "cross-licensing" merely means that two theatre-owning distribution companies do business with each other.

The simple business fact on which plaintiff seeks to cast opprobrium by the use of these catchwords is no more than this: defendant B exhibits in its theatres some of A's features and defendant A exhibits in its theatres some of B's features.

The perfect normality, and necessity, of such simple business intercourse between competitors in an industry will become even clearer as we proceed.

(c) Why they must do business with each other.

The public taste was such as to force exhibitors generally to require the product of several distributors. Accordingly, the court found that generally theatres "could not be operated on the product of only one distributor" (Finding 151, R. 3689):

> "Except for a very limited number of theatres in the very largest cities, the 18,000 and more theatres in the United States exhibit the product of more than one distributor. Such theatres could not be operated on the product of only one distributor." (See also Finding 102, R. 3678).

(d) Such business is not illegal and involves no illegal price-fixing.

The Court below made no finding of fact or conclusion of law that such licensing was illegal, and recognized that an attack on such licensing was either no more than relief pendente divorcement (as plaintiffs argued at times below and in a brief to this Court) or a substitute remedy for divorcement itself.

The provisions of the decree below against any restriction as to minimum admission price (Decree, II, 1 [R. 3695]) and as to agreements as to a system of clearness (Decree, II, 2 [R. 3695]) make untenable even a colorable argument that such licensing will involve illegal price-fixing.

The price-fixing illegality enjoined below cannot be claimed to have anything to do with the simple business fact of doing business with a co-defendant wherever that happens to be necessary and desirable.

Since under the decree, each theatre is free to charge whatever admission price it chooses, no matter who owns the theatre or whose picture it is exhibiting, all that is left of plaintiff's claim of illegal price-fixing in "cross" or "diagonal" licensing is simply this.

Any theatre which exhibits a feature necessarily has to—and will—fix its own admission price.

Plaintiff's brief on a motion to amend the consent decree so as to effect divestiture of all theatres correctly stated this obvious necessity (R. 3425):

> "The exhibitor, who possesses the theatre, determines the program of entertainment to be offered and collects the admission fees which make the exhibition of the film profitable, would normally determine independently the price at which that entertainment should be made available to the public."

If a Loew's theatre in Boston exhibits Warner's "Gold Dust Twins", that Loew's theatre necessarily fixes its own admission price. Similarly, if a Warner theatre in Youngstown exhibits Loew's "Moonbeams", that Warner theatre necessarily fixes its own admission price.

The situation finds many analogies in business.

Thus, the Washington Baseball Club sends its "Senators" team to play in the Yankee Stadium in New York (where the New York Baseball Club fixes admission prices), while the New York Baseball Club sends its "Yankee" team to play in the Washington baseball park (where the Washington Baseball Club fixes admission prices).

Similarly, [before the publisher was authorized by statute to fix resale prices] Scribner's New York bookshop fixed the retail resale price of Gunther's "Inside Europe" which it had bought from its Boston publisher Harpers, while Harpers' Boston bookshop fixed the retail resale price of Pyle's "Pacific War" which it had bought from its New York publisher Scribners.

No case has intimated that it is illegal for the buyer of a patented article to determine the resale price of that article merely because the seller has bought a different patented article from the buyer of said other article and will accordingly have to determine the resale price of that different article.

Hence, even if a license for limited exhibition of a copyrighted feature be assimilated to a sale for the purposes of the Sherman Law, it cannot be illegal for Loew's to fix the admission price at Loew's Arcadia Theatre in New York during the exhibition of Warner's "Yankee Doodle Dandy", merely because Warner's Stanley Theatre in Youngstown fixes its own admission price while it exhibits Loew's "Scarlet Lady".

There can be no price fixing under the Sherman Act where an exhibitor of motion pictures is under no restraint with regard to the admission price which that exhibitor charges. Where there is no restraint placed upon the exhibitor by the distributor, and where there is no restraint placed upon himself by the exhibitor in concert with his competitors, any price charged by that exhibitor is legal.

Therefore, where a distributor has placed no restraint upon the exhibitor in the latter's determination of an admission price, there can result no price fixing and hence no violation of the Sherman Act, where at another time and place the exhibitor's affiliated distributor licenses the distributor's affiliated exhibitor.

The Act does not prohibit a man from licensing to X for limited exhibition a copyrighted motion picture because he may at some other time and place license from X for limited exhibition some other copyrighted motion picture from that same person.

This is a fortiori true, where, as here under the decree, each copyrighted feature must be offered to any putative licensee under competitive bidding, and no licensor may, directly or indirectly, prescribe the price which the successful licensee may charge for admission thereto.

Indeed, even before the decree below, such "diagonal" or "cross" licensing as existed could not have been per se a violation of the Act.

Where Warner operates a theatre on a particular run, Warner does not license its own features to another theatre on the same run, whether the theatre is owned by a defendant or an independent; and similarly no other defendant licenses its features to a Warner theatre on a particular run on which such other defendant operates a theatre.

This makes it mathematically impossible to have so-called "cross licensing" in direct competition on the same run.

This leaves the high-sounding phrase "cross" or "diagonal" licensing with no more content than this: that a Warner theatre may be licensed to exhibit a feature of another defendant where such other defendant is not exhibiting said feature on the same run, and that some other defendant's theatre may be licensed to exhibit a Warner feature where Warner is not exhibiting said feature on the same run.

Thus, there is nothing remotely resembling illegal price-fixing by such business between defendants.

That the remedy sought of limiting defendants' theatres to their own films and those of non-theatre owning producers is no more than a means to compel self-amputation of theatres is obvious from the very first paragraph of plaintiff's Point III, which ingenuously states (p. 127):

> "This relief is also required independently of divorcement as a means of inducing a prompt divestiture of theatres in those towns where the defendants have a monopoly position."

Moreover, the reasons stated for a "one-year waiting period" before the prohibition takes effect reveal the certainty that such a prohibition would compel self-amputation. The waiting period is merely stated "to permit the defendants to make necessary adjustments" (p. 126):

(a) "through increased film production or"

(b) "through selling theatres in areas where they could not operate all of their theatres with their own product plus that of the three non-exhibitor defendants."

It cost Warner approximately $26,000,000 to produce 19 pictures in 1945. Unless it substantially cuts the quality of its product (and thereby decreases the revenue-producing capacity of its pictures), it is obviously impossible for Warner sufficiently to increase its film production for profitable operation of its theatres, especially if it were unable to license such films to those theatres having the greater grossing potentiality.

And it is equally obvious that, except in rare instances, the Warner theatres could not operate profitably on the lesser quality pictures produced by those who own no theatres plus Warner's own pictures which, for lack of proper outlets (R. 3015), would also tend to become of inferior quality.

In a city where among a number of theatres, the Warner theatre is operating on first run, it will be unable to continue on its own product or the product of the "little three". Yet it cannot operate on second or even last run, because of the insufficient number of pictures available. The net result would be to deprive the public of an additional run in that city.

Or take a town which can support only two theatres, a Warner first run and a subsequent run. If the Warner theatre is enjoined from showing most of the best product, it must operate (if at all) on second run product of the "little three" and first run Warner product. The net result would be that the public would be deprived of seeing the product of the "big five" on a subsequent (and cheaper) run.

The Court below apprehended these and other consequences of this alternative method of amputation.

Thus, it pointed out on argument, for example, that in many of the smaller towns unable to support more than one theatre the result might be that the public would be deprived of seeing the product of four of the best companies unless Warner sold its theatre (R. 2886-7).

> "Judge Hand: Of course if Paramount had the only theatre in a place and that was all that was necessary to supply the demand, it would really prevent that place from having any of the shows, the good shows, of Warner, Loew's—any of these people.
>
> Mr. Wright: * * * There would be another theatre there in very short order * * *.
>
> Judge Hand: * * * On my hypothesis, * * * I said one theatre was enough for the town. * * * I am by no means clear that the mere inability to see some shows would build up another business if there wasn't material for it in the population to make it pay."

The Sherman Act was surely not designed to have the courts deprive a community of the privilege of seeing the best pictures.

F.

Assuming arguendo the possibility of collective treatment, there is no evidence of collective monopolization (or the possibility thereof under the decree below) sufficient to justify divestiture of theatres.

(a) None of theatres.

There can be no claim of a monopoly of the bricks, mortar and land which constitutes a theatre or of operating theatres, because of the defendants' interest in only 3,137 of the 18,076 theatres in the country or 17.35% thereof (Finding 118, R. 3684), which may be reduced by another 1,292 by the divestiture provisions of the decree,—especially when set against the phenomenal growth of theatres from 13,386 in 1935 to 18,076 in 1945 (Finding 118, R. 3684; Finding 145, R. 3688).

4,690 new independent theatres do not spring up in 10 years if 3,137 of defendants' theatres have been monopolizing exhibition at the expense of the already operating 13,386 independent theatres.

(b) None of theatre patronage.

There can be no claim that defendants' theatres monopolized theatre patronage, because plaintiff offered no evidence of the box office receipts of the 14,939 independent theatres which reflect theatre patronage.

Though its amended complaint charged a theatre monopoly based on engrossing theatre patronage,* a claim inconsistent with the healthy and phenomenal growth of successfully operating independent theatres, plaintiff made no attempt to show what percentage of the annual patronage (or box office dollars paid as admissions) of all 18,076 theatres was collected by defendants' theatres.

The evidence was available to plaintiff in the form of the monthly amusement tax returns of each theatre, independent or affiliated. But the only evidence which the plaintiff offered was that furnished by the defendants as to their own theatres.

* The amended complaint charged exhibition monopoly through "total theatre admissions" collected (Par. 130, R. 3180; par. 132, R. 3181), alleging for example that in 73 of the 92 largest cities the defendants received "a substantial majority of the total theatre admissions paid" (Par. 2, R. 3181).

Defendants offered the best evidence available to them of the admissions collected by all the theatres, including the 14,578 independent theatres. This was an estimate of total admissions from the Film Daily Year Book (Ex. RKO-2).*

Defendants' theatres took in only 34.27% of the dollar total of all theatres in the country, based on this estimated total gross in the 1943/44 season and defendants' actual grosses for the same season (Appendix, p. 138, infra).

34% of the exhibition done in the country is no monopoly thereof.

(c) None of film rentals paid.

There is no other evidence from which a national monopoly of exhibition can be inferred, or on which to lay the basis for a claim of nation-wide divestiture.

The only other nation-wide evidence on which plaintiff relied was on that part of the cost of theatre operation reflected by film rentals paid.

Plaintiff showed no more than that defendants'

---

* Though plaintiff questioned its accuracy (R. 1608), Exhibit RKO-2 was received as the only evidence of industry totals offered (R. 1609), since the Film Daily Year Book was "used constantly in your industry and regarded as a reliable book" (R. 1610). That its estimate of total admissions paid in the 1943/44 season is reasonably accurate appears from the note appended in the 1945 Year Book (p. 47):

"Note: Annual U. S. theatre gross was formerly based on a Treasury Department estimate that 90 percent of admission tax collections were from theatres. Recently, however, the Treasury reduced that estimate to 87 per cent and the above annual grosses are based on that estimate with allowances for taxes collected on passes and for 'breakage'".

theatres paid to all eight defendants 45.2% of the total rentals thus paid by all theatres (Findings 126 and 128; R. 3685).

To pay 45% of the film rentals paid in the country does not show a monopoly of the theatre business thereof.

Moreover, that 45% has no relevance to prove a monopoly of the theatre business, because it represents nothing more than a part of the cost of operation of defendants' theatres as against a similar partial cost of operation of independent theatres. Since many of defendants' theatres are among the largest and most expensive in the country, with huge overhead charges, operated in part as "show-cases" for the promotion and advertisement of new features, it is understandable if they pay a larger film rental than many independent theatres.

Plaintiff claimed that film rentals reflected admissions collected at the box office, since films are often licensed on a percentage of their gross receipts.

Though true of most of defendants' first run theatres in the very largest cities, it is definitely false when it is sought to be applied to most of the theatres in this country. Most of them license film on a flat fee, presumably because it is more profitable for them to pay a flat rental. Thus, of the 14,090 bookings of Princess O'Rourke, in 12,926 theatres the average film rental per booking was $78 (Ex. W-12), a return so small as not to have been based on a percentage of their gross.

The independent theatres paid a dollar film rental which consisted of a much smaller percentage of their box office receipts than the percentage paid by the theatres affiliated with defendants.

Whereas the affiliated theatres paid 27.33% of their theatre admissions to the eight distributor-defendants as film rental for their features, independent theatres paid only 15.51% of their theatre admissions to the eight distributor-defendants as film rental for their features (Appendix, p. 138, infra).

Monopoly of theatre operation is not proved by showing what percentage of a part of the cost of operating theatres was paid by defendants' theatres, especially when that percentage is only 45%.

Nor can any claim of nation-wide exclusion be validly based on an averaging of the film rentals received by defendants. Even under such collective treatment, the defendants in the 1943/44 season in the aggregate received 54.8% of their total domestic film revenue from independents (Finding 128, R. 3686).

(d) None in the 92 cities.

The evidence adduced as to the first run theatres in the 92 cities with populations of over 100,000 failed to establish a collective monopoly and did not warrant total divestiture of all defendants' theatres in this country.

There is no evidence of what percentage of total theatre patronage was represented by defendants' first run theatres in these 92 cities, because plaintiff offered no evidence of the box office receipts either (a) of all the 18,076 theatres in the country, (b) of any of the 13,286 independent theatres, or (c) of any or all of the defendants' first run theatres in these 92 cities. [Indeed, there is not even evidence of box office receipts of theatres of independents and defendants first run in these 92 cities.]

Assuming arguendo only that film rentals paid are some evidence of patronage, we recall no computation by plaintiff which discloses the relation of the film rentals paid by said defendants' theatres to those paid by all similar theatres.

Assuming further, arguendo on arguendo, that the Warner statistics as to its most booked picture in 1943/44, "Princess O'Rourke", would reflect the situation as to all five defendants for all their features in said season, the first run market in these 92 cities is only 27.4% of the total national market, and defendants' theatres' portion thereof only 60.8%, so that defendants' first run theatres in said 92 cities is only 16.6% of the national market, based on film rentals paid.* (Computed from Warner's answers to 1945 interrogatories.)

(e) No propriety in segregating these 92 cities.

But there is no factual or legal justification for segretating first run theatres in said 92 cities from the national market of this industry.

---

* There is no finding, nor evidence to support a finding, that operation of first run theatres in most of the 92 cities carried with it monopolization of any additional theatre patronage. Indeed, the percentage of actual attendance at these first run theatres necessarily included such control of attendance as might be implied by Findings 71-72 (R. 3672) relating to the system of runs, clearances, and fixed admission prices. And whatever divergence of attendance to first run there may have been will not continue with the injunction against continuance of the system.

It hardly needs argument to establish that the controlling factor in attendance as between runs is determined by admission pric[illegible] actually charged (not theoretical minimums) and the p[illegible], convenience, and pleasure of the prospective theatregoer.

The operation by each defendant of a first run theatre in a sufficient number of large cities is a business necessity if its features are to be adequately promoted and advertised for the benefit of the national market (Findings 122-123, R. 3685; see also R. 681, 1693). No one defendant, however, operates such show-cases in more than 48 of the 92 cities (Paramount). Other defendants operate in a lesser number of cities ranging from RKO's 18 (RKO Ex. 1) to Loew's 36. In many of these cities more than one defendant owns or operates a theatre primarily used as show-case, that is, for the proper advertising and promotion of its own pictures. The presence of these show-case theatres in these cities of the theatre-owning defendants in competition with one another is the best evidence of their intensive competition in order to properly promote and advertise their pictures for the nation-wide market.

The operation of first run theatres in some of these 92 cities is, therefore, a business necessity.

If the features of each of them are to be adequately promoted and advertised for the benefit of the national market of each of the defendants, including the 14,578 independent theatres, operation of first run theatres by each of the defendants in some of these 92 cities is a business necessity to each of them. There is no contrary evidence in the record.

Without such adequate promotion and advertisement first run in these centers of population, the 14,578 independent theatres could not operate.

Where business necessity requires "show-case" theatres for adequate development of the entire market, ownership of such theatres is not monopolization,— especially when they represent collectively at most 1/6th of the entire national market.

It cannot be that the very instrument which creates the larger national market can be segregated from the national market in order to be condemned as such monopolization as requires destruction.

Undoubtedly this was one of the many factual considerations which impelled the statutory court to find as a fact that (R. 3690):

> "155. Total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned and would be damaging to the public."

Plaintiff below and here asks that defendants be divested of all their theatres throughout the nation because of alleged monopolization of that small segment of theatres which have the function of making pictures more valuable for their producers and for all theatres throughout the nation (and plaintiff declined to request any relief as to any specific first run theatre in any one or more of said 92 cities [R. 2769, 2777-8, quoted in footnote on page 63, supra]).

There is no rhyme or reason for Warner to be deprived of all of its theatres, wherever situated and whatever their run, because other defendants like Warner felt the business necessity of operating theatres first run in the largest 92 cities,—especially when their number may be reduced substantially as the probable result of the provisions below for sale of partial ownerships and when the result of the new marketing provisions will enable any independent theatres to bid for first run features in such cities.

POINT IV.

The Court properly exercised its discretion in refusing to decree relief inappropriate under the circumstances.

Nationwide drastic relief of divestiture would have been improper where, as here,—

1.) The Court found (R. 3670):

> "59. There exists active competition among the defendants and others in the production of motion pictures.
>
> "60. None of the defendants has monopolized or attempted to monopolize or contracted or combined or conspired to monopolize or to restrain trade or commerce in any part of the business of producing motion pictures."

supported by undisputed testimony (for example, Joy, R. 1521-1552) and by concessions of plaintiff's counsel:

> "Judge Hand: Why don't you answer the query? As a producer there is no case against it?
>
> Mr. Wright: That is correct, yes, sir. * * *
>
> Judge Bright: Well then your case is aimed at distribution and exhibition in combination?
>
> Mr. Wright: Quite so" (R. 388).
>
> "Judge Goddard: Do you claim there is a monopoly in production? I don't think I understand your position.

Mr. Wright: I don't think we do.
Judge Goddard: I beg your pardon?
Mr. Wright: No, we do not" (R. 1952).

2.) There was express admission that any feature suitable for first-run exhibition was assured of first-run exhibition in suitable theatres, i. e., secured adequate distribution:

"Mr. Wright: * * * I would concede that the evidence you have before you does not show that any particular independent producer who wanted to make a picture could not get it released by one of these distributors.
Judge Bright: Or has not?
Mr. Wright: Or has not, yes" (R. 387).

"Judge Bright: If I understand you, if I wanted to produce I would hesitate to do it, anticipating that I might not get a market for my films; is that the idea?

Mr. Wright: I think you have a reasonable assurance that if you are a competent producer and can make a good picture, you can get one of these companies to release that film for you" (R. 388).

"Mr. Wright: Insofar as the production end of the business goes, I suppose it is perfectly clear that anybody who has talent and who can make a successful picture is in intense demand, and that all of the people who own theatres are anxious to have those people make pictures and get their pictures distributed. In other words, what Mr. Raftery says about 'there isn't anything wrong with the industry that more good pictures would not cure' is probably largely true in the sense > that * * * these defendants * * * want to do whatever they can to have as many good pictures made as possible because, in exploiting them through their theatres, they profit from good pictures, no matter who makes them" (R. 1949).

Indeed, the rapid growth of non-defendant producers like P. R. C., Republic and Monogram (R. 910-911), of the non-theatre owning defendants like Universal (p. 83, supra; R. 1263-65, 1350-52), and since the trial itself of Companies like Eagle Lion controlled by J. Arthur Rank made the concession inevitable.†

3.) It was undisputed that independent theatres had increased by well over 4,000 in the last ten years (Finding 145, R. 3688; R. 2797; Ex. L-12), an increase of over 68%, that independent circuits had also increased (R. 738), and that Warner, Loew's and RKO had not expanded their theatre holdings since 1935 (Findings 22, 31-32, 120, 118; R. 3664, 3684).

4.) There was no evidence of abuse of power such as has occasionally been found to have been

---

† Since the trial, Selznick, which formerly distributed through a defendant, has organized its own distribution company, The Selznick Releasing Organization, represented by an amicus curiae.

For ten years before the trial the number of independent producers and productions had been increasing (R. 639, 1263). A list of successful features produced independently during the years prior to the trial is in Columbia's Exhibit C-4. At the time of the trial there were about 40 independent producers in Hollywood alone (R. 639-641). Those who do not have their own studios make extensive use of the studio facilities, equipment and talent of the defendants and others, which are available for reasonable rentals (R. 637-39, 651, 1529-34, 1801-03, 1261-62). Thus independent producers have been and are able to compete successfully without high overhead either in fixed investments or talent contracts.

exercised by theatre circuits interested solely in their exhibition revenue, as was found in the Shine and Crescent cases. On the contrary, the theatre-owning defendants consented to a decree which made arbitrable any clearance in favor of any theatres, including their own, and offered below to consent to broaden such right to arbitrate to runs and to certain aspects of competitive bidding. That offer we repeat here.

5.) There were affirmative findings that none of the defendants was organized or maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly (66 F. Supp. at 354 [R. 3553]; Findings 152-154, R. 3689-3690).

6.) There was no evidence or claim that the public had to pay more for what it received from an affiliated theatre than from a comparable independent theatre.

7.) Each member of the public could see each feature at whatever admission price he preferred and, subject to the number of theatres in any given locality, under whatever surroundings he preferred.* This was primarily due to the system of run and clearance which tended to afford the exhibitor a wide selection of the film rental he chose to pay* and accordingly offered the public a wide selection of admission prices (Findings 76-77, R. 3673)—sometimes even on the same run.*

* The wide range of film rentals is sufficiently indicated in Exhibit W-12 which shows that, of Warner's most popular feature in 1943-1944, the average film rental per booking was $78 in 12,926 theatres out of the total bookings of 14,090. The exact sum paid by each of these 14,090 theatres is set forth in Warner's answers to 1945 interrogatories numbered 2 and 6 to 11 inclusive.

8.) There was no price-fixing or uniformity of price except as to minimum admission prices, which practice has been enjoined by the decree below. There was, however, no evidence that the minimum admission prices sometimes specified in Warner licenses did in fact hamper any exhibitor in his free choice of the admission price to be charged for any Warner feature.

---

* The range of admission prices sometimes overlaps on successive runs so that a first and second, or second and third run theatre will charge similar admission prices (Exs. W-22, 126), in spite of stipulations as to different minimum admission prices. A striking, though somewhat unusual example is the fourth run independent little Plaza Theatre in Manhattan, which charges more than most of the big neighborhood affiliated second run theatres.

 Exhibit W-22 shows the actual admission prices charged and the minimum admission prices if stipulated in Warner licenses for "Princess O'Rourke" in every one of the 14,090 theatres which played that Warner feature.

Appendices H and I show the same thing for the first run theatres in the 92 largest cities. They show:

In 75 of the 92 cities no minimum was inserted in the license, so that there is no basis for comparison.

In the remaining 17 cities ranging in size from Chicago (pop. 3,396,808) to Tampa (pop. 108,391), where a comparison is possible because a minimum was inserted in the license, the facts are these:

In 8, more than the minimum was charged;
In 6, less than the minimum was charged;
In 3, the minimum was charged.

12 of these cities involved independent exhibitors:

In 2 of these 12, the exhibitor charged the minimum specified;

In 3 of these 12, the exhibitor charged less than the minimum specified;

In 7 of these 12, the exhibitor charged more than the minimum specified, to wit:

27 cents more in Fall River and New Bedford
25 cents more in Buffalo
22 cents more in Providence
21 cents more in Cambridge
15 cents more in Dayton.

9.) There was express admission that the defendants compete with each other in their efforts to license their features to the greatest number of theatres (Wright, R. 1062). It was undisputed that the defendants (including Warner) maintain enormous sales organizations divided into exchanges where they spend millions competitively seeking the patronage of unaffiliated and affiliated theatres (R. 414, 437, 444, 660-670, 1257, 1410, 1415-16, 1452-53, 1456, 1467-8, 1504, 1685, 1729). There was no compulsion, however, for any theatre to license any Warner feature. The number of theatres booked varied with each feature. Thus, in the 1943-44 season, "Princess O'Rourke" had the highest number of Warner bookings, 14,090, and "Adventures in Iraq" the smallest, 3,933. Eight others had over 12,000, five over 10,000 and four over 7,000 bookings (Ex. 125). The film rentals received from licensing these 19 features ranged from $132,367 for "Adventures in Iraq" to a high of $2,806,909 for "Destination Tokyo". Though "Princess O'Rourke" had the largest number of bookings, six other features yielded more film rentals. The variations which often occur between revenue and bookings find illustration in "Mrs. Skiffington" with only 10,371 bookings yielding $2,286,121 in film rentals and "Uncertain Glory" with 11,651 bookings yielding only $1,274,682 (Ex. 125). There was therefore (a) competition in the prices for which Warner features are licensed, (b) no compulsion on the 18,076 theatres to pay uniform prices for each of Warner's features and (c) no regularity of pattern in their pricing.

10.) There was no proof of inordinate profits by any defendant and there was affirmative proof that Warner's integrated business as a whole had, over the last sixteen years, earned an annual average of only 1.25% of its assets (Ex. W-20), only 2.74% of its net worth (Ex. W-19), and only 2.19% of its total income (Ex. W-18).

11.) There was evidence that divestiture of theatres might seriously jeopardize, under existing conditions of the foreign markets, the ability of the defendants to maintain their present standard of production, with consequent damage to the public (Findings 155, 158, 159, R. 3690; and R. 1560 quoted on page 121, infra).

Amputation of theatres was found "damaging to the public" (Finding 155, R. 3690) in an industry where there was active competition in production; assistance rendered to independent producers of one or more pictures; assurance of adequate distribution and exhibition of the pictures so produced by independents; rapid growth of independent and non-theatre owning producers; rapid growth of independent theatres; no intent to achieve either national or local monopolies; no evidence that the public has to pay more for what it receives from a defendant than from an independent (be he producer, distributor, or exhibitor); and an industry structure which permits each member of the public to see each feature produced at whatever admission price he prefers and, subject to the number of theatres in any given locality, under whatever surroundings he prefers.

Other considerations which may have influenced this finding, and the consequent reluctance to disturb the structure of an industry further than to eliminate such existing restraints as were found illegal, may briefly be mentioned.

Since "The basic requisite for successful theatre operation [by a suitable theatre with suitable management] is access to good pictures" (Pltff.'s Br., p. 121), and since such good pictures in adequate quantities for successful theatre operation have in the past primarily flowed from the theatre-owning defendants who could better afford the risks inherent in such large-scale production because of revenue from theatre operation and foreign distribution, amputation of these theatres at a time when substantial revenue from foreign distribution has been cut off (p. 121, infra) may well involve serious "risk of injury to the public interest" (p. 118, infra).

Moreover, the Court may not have been unmindful of the necessity for adequate advertising in defendants' "showcase" theatres if both the producers and the 15,000 odd other theatres are to receive adequate returns on their investments (p. 102, supra).

We do not suggest that such considerations affect the primary questions of whether and to what extent the Act has been transgressed.

We do suggest that they cannot be ignored in deciding whether discretion as to the pragmatic form of relief decreed has been so abused as to compel a reversal in the form of amputation.

The Court below correctly exercised its discretion as to the form of relief (cf. United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319, hereinafter quoted; and Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 324 U. S. at 575) by adapting that relief to remedy alleged evils in the distribution of features where it was claimed that there was insufficient competition and restraints, declining to extend relief to the highly competitive field of exhibition further than to order divestiture wherever there were restraints on competition by pooling or joint ownership of otherwise competing theatres, and retaining jurisdiction to order different or further relief should the circumstances warrant in the light of actual performance under its present decree.

No case or rule of law requires this exercise of judgment to be upset.

(1) In the Oil, the Tobacco and the Pullman cases, the defendants were solitary monopolists.

No such claim is even suggested here. Indeed, it is conceded that the Warner corporations, as an entity, do not monopolize the industry. The make-weight suggestion that there should be a decree divorcing the Warner corporations from one another just has no point in the evidence either with respect to the evils complained of or the attempt to remedy them.

(2) In the Oil (221 U. S. 1), Tobacco (221 U. S. 106), and Pullman (330 U. S. 806) cases, the Court found that because a solitary monopolist had violated both Sections 1 and 2, dissolution was an appropriate remedy. There the solitary monopolist was found to have acquired and maintained his position as a solitary monopolist through persistent predatory practices. It was thought necessary, therefore, to dissolve the solitary monopolist. Here, there is no evidence of any degree of control over exhibition that any defendant, either singly or collectively, has secured through predatory practices. Indeed, the Court below pointed out (66 F. Supp. at 354 [R. 3553]):

> "* * * there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly * * *." (See also Findings 152-154, R. 3689.)

(3) In the Oil and Tobacco cases where dissolution was thought necessary, the Court dissolved the solitary monopolist into separate integrated companies so that each of the resulting integrated companies would be in a position to compete with each other as integrated companies. Here, the Government seeks to amputate each of five separate integrated companies by making each of them a non-integrated company.

What plaintiff demands is, not the dissolution of the monopoly, but amputation and an interdict that five of the present competitors shall not compete in exhibition. Under the guise of removing certain minor restraints on competition, the Court is urged to enjoin competition by and between all integrated units in the industry.

The two Reading cases are even less in point (226 U. S. 324 and 253 U. S. 26).

There, in the first case the Court left intact the holding company's control over six otherwise integrated companies, merely enjoining their contractual agreement with each other to maintain anthracite prices at the mine of not less than 65% of the average tidewater prices.

Eight years later, when it was found that their collective control had remained unchanged despite said injunction, the Court dissolved the holding company and separated the railroad companies from the mining companies, relying in part on the then recently enacted statute prohibiting railroads to own mines.

Apposite are the words of Mr. Justice Burton in the recent case of United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319:

> "* * * The findings show vigorous and apparently profitable competition on the part of each of the four producers, including an intimation that the smaller companies are gaining ground rather than losing it.* * * * * The competition between National Lead and du Pont has been carried into this Court. * * * * (pp. 347-348).
>
> "Assuming, as is justified, that violation of the Sherman Act in this case has consisted primarily of the misuse of patent rights placing restraint upon interstate and foreign commerce, that conduct is not before this Court for punishment. It is brought before this Court in order to secure an order for its immediate discontinuance and for its future prevention. That will be accomplished largely through the strict prohibition of further performance of the provisions of the unlawful agreements" (p. 348).

* Compare the phenomenal growth of independent theatres in the last ten years and of the non-theatre owning defendants and other producers and distributors, heretofore noted (p. 106, supra).

 Compare the divergent attitudes of Universal, United Artists, Columbia on the one hand, and the theatre-owning defendants on the other. Note the divergent views on competitive bidding among the theatre-owning defendants themselves.

"* * * Finally, the District Court, under * * * the decree, will retain sufficient jurisdiction to enable it to vacate or modify its orders * * * if it finds such action to be necessary or appropriate* (p. 351).

* * * *

"We believe there is neither precedent nor good reason for such a requirement [i. e. divestiture of one of defendants' two titanium plants]. The violation of the Sherman Act is found in these cases in the patent pooling and in the related agreements restraining interstate and foreign commerce. There is neither allegation in the complaint nor finding of fact by the District Court that the physical properties of either National Lead or DuPont have been acquired or used in a manner violative of the Sherman Act, except as such acquisition or use may have been incidental or related to the agreements above mentioned.† The cancellation of such agreements and the injunction against the performance of them by the appellant companies eliminate them.‡ * * * the decree goes further. It requires National Lead and its subsidiary, Titan Inc., to present, within one year, a plan for divesting themselves of their stockholdings and

* Compare VIII of the decree below (R. 3701).

† Compare Findings 152-154 (R. 3689) quoted on page 8, supra and 66 F. Supp. at 354 (R. 3553), quoted on page 73, supra.

‡ Compare II, 1-9 and III, 1-4, 7 of the decree below (R. 3695).

other financial interests in certain foreign corporations, or for the purchase of the entire stockholdings and other financial interests * * * in such corporations or any of them.†† Such a plan * * * will go as far toward divestiture as the findings of fact indicate should be necessary to make the decree effective.‡

"There is no finding of fact, and apparently no evidence, showing that the respective principal titanium plants of National Lead or du Pont were acquired in violation of law, that they ever were separately owned or operated,† or that they are adapted to such operation.* Presumably, the requested divestiture would be for the purpose of providing four instead of two inde-

---

†† Compare Decree, III, 2-4 and especially III, 5 and 6 (R. 3698).

‡ Compare Findings 152-156 (R. 3689) and the Opinion below (66 F. Supp. at 357 [R. 3559]):

> "The relief proposed we believe should suffice, while total divestiture would be damaging to the public as well as to the defendants and not accomplish any useful purpose at the present time."

 The holding here is that the theatres were not acquired or maintained for the purpose of a national monopoly (66 F. Supp. at 354 [R. 3553]; see also Findings 152-154 [R. 3689]).

† Compare the way theatres have been operated, when controlled by a circuit whose sole interest is in theatre operation (United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173). As the Opinion below noted (66 F. Supp. at 355 [R. 3555]:

> "These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five major defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited. That such would be the case seems amply demonstrated by the decisions where powerful independent circuits were involved [citing the Crescent and Interstate cases]."

* Compare Finding 155 (R. 3690) and 66 F. Supp. at 353 (R. 3551), and the evidence as to the necessity of theatres for adequate production (p. 102, supra).

pendent major competing plants in the titanium pigment industry. However, there is no showing whether or not the two [existing] licensees * * * may not be able to develop, under the decree, even more substantial competition against National Lead and du Pont than would new concerns operating the divested plants.* No comparable precedents have been presented.

"There is no showing that four major competing units would be preferable to two, or, including Zirconium and Virginia Chemical, that six would be better than four. Likewise, there is no showing of the necessity for this divestiture of plants or of its practicality and fairness. The findings of fact have shown vigorous and effective competition between National Lead and du Pont in this field. * * * Such competition suggests that the District Court could do well to remove unlawful handicaps from it but demonstrates no sufficient basis for weakening its force by divesting such of the two largest competitors of one of its principal plants. It is not for the courts to realign and redirect effective and lawful competition where it already exists and needs only to be released from restraints that violate the antitrust laws. To separate the operating units of going concerns without more supporting evidence than has been presented here to establish either the need for, or the feasibility of, such separation would amount to an abuse of discretion."

* "We think that the opportunity of independents to compete under the bidding system for pictures and runs renders such a harsh remedy as complete divestiture unnecessary, at least until the efficiency of that system has been tried and found wanting" (66 F. Supp. at 353 [R. 3551]).

The harsh and drastic relief of divorcement is additionally inappropriate here where the consequences to the industry and to the public might be disastrous.

Illuminating in the instant case are the concluding words of the Court in United States v. U. S. Steel Corp., 251 U. S. 417, 457:

> "In conclusion we are unable to see that the public interest will be served by yielding to the contention of the Government respecting the dissolution of the company or the separation from it of some of its subsidiaries; and we do see in a contrary conclusion a risk of injury to the public interest, including a material disturbance of, and, it may be serious detriment to the foreign trade. And in submission to the policy of the law and its fortifying prohibitions the public interest is of paramount regard." (Italics supplied.)

The "serious detriment to the foreign trade" is apparent here where the total domestic film revenue barely covers costs before distribution expense (Exs. W-11, W-13, R. 444), where there is no evidence that any profits have been earned by any defendant solely from production and distribution in the domestic market, and where there is affirmative proof that Warner over most of eight years would have operated at a loss but for its foreign distribution and domestic exhibition (Ex. W-13).

The usefulness of our first run theatres both as "show cases" and to subsequent run exhibitors in advertising the pictures to the public is elaborately described in other briefs and need not be repeated here.

Apposite are the words used by the statutory court in United States v. Standard Oil Company, 47 F. 2d 288, 309, in approving a proposed merger of the Standard Oil Company of New York and the Vacuum Oil Company as not violative of the decree of dissolution entered in the Standard Oil case, 221 U. S. 1:

> "The industry, as a whole, is thoroughly into the stage of integrated companies, which means that such a company owns or controls crude production, pipe lines, and tank cars, refineries to work up the crude and marketing organizations to sell the refined products—with special emphasis, as to marketing, upon the operation or control of retail automobile outlets. The superior business position of such an integrated company is evident. Among these advantages are the ability to make up temporary losses in one stage of the business by profits in another; to be independent of outside supplies and operations; to have a consistently sustained business; and to secure the ultimate profits of the entire business from the raw production all the way to the retail of the finished products." (Italics supplied.)

The serious "risk of injury to the public interest", movie-goer and non-integrated theatre owner alike, from speculative experiments in disintegration was nowhere better stated than by counsel for the plaintiff before Judge Goddard on the hearing at the time of the adoption of the Consent Decree:

> "I think it fair to say that both the defendants and the Government honestly believe that [the consent decree] is infinitely to be preferred to years of litigation with the possibility at the end of the chaos that might result from divorcement." (Italics supplied.)

Indeed, one of the consequences of divorcement which both the Court below and said plaintiff's counsel may have preferred to avoid is the increase of predatory independent circuits interested solely in theatre aggrandisement,—like the foundation of the Shine circuit after 1929 when Universal disposed of its theatres, as alleged in the amended complaint herein (Par. 78, R. 3163).

This industry brought into this country millions of dollars annually for which it exported nothing more than a few thousand feet of celluloid of nominal cost (Ex. W-12). Approximately 30% of Warner's total film rentals came from abroad (Ex. W-5). This foreign business resulted solely from the high quality of American pictures which in turn rests on mounting production costs (Ex. W-10). Yet the cold statistics indicate that domestic film rentals without profits from theatre operation and foreign distributions do not cover negative costs of the magnitude of a company like Warner (Exs. W-11, W-13).

Any "chaos that might result from divorcement" will have repercussions not only in enhanced film rentals for the small independent exhibitor (Ex. W-12) but a direct effect upon the foreign business which has so successfully carried and popularized the American way of life to the farthest confines of the globe.

Indeed, if defendants are forbidden to compete with independent circuits and booking combines

(R. 738 et seq.), the effect upon their film revenue might be disastrous, since defendants would be left at the mercy of predatory exhibition combines interested solely in revenue from theatre operation.

The present difficulties of the foreign business and the interdependence of domestic and foreign film revenue and profit from theatre operations were succinctly summarized by Mr. H. M. Warner (R. 1560):

> "In the past our foreign business has been exceedingly profitable, but with the cessation of the war our foreign markets are being severely restricted. Country after country is adopting quota systems and state monopolies in order to promote their own motion picture production. During the war England, our chief foreign market, was unable to produce its own pictures. Hence we were able to derive a very substantial revenue from England. At one time during the war England threatened (and did for a time) block our funds derived from exhibition in England and was only dissuaded from doing so by being convinced that the American companies could not continue to supply England with quality productions if their England revenue were shut off altogether. With the cessation of hostilities, England is launching on production on a large scale and the dangers of a quota system or restrictive measures in some other form are pressing.* The more our foreign revenues decrease, the more vital it will be for us to have the profits from our theatre operations in order to maintain our present standard of production.

* Since the trial, England has so heavily taxed American pictures as to make their distribution in England unprofitable.

In this industry the public may see within a comparatively short time every picture at whatever price it prefers to pay and every exhibitor we license may exhibit the same pictures in its theatre at whatever price it prefers to charge depending upon its policy of operation and the price level to which it caters.

Most of the seventeen thousand-odd theatres in the United States are able to license the same product within a comparatively short space of time at rentals below the cost of the positive print which they project on to their screens. * * *

This structure of the industry will, in my opinion, be jeopardized by the divorcement of theatres from production, with hardship not only to our company but to the attendance of many millions who go to the motion picture theatres in the United States, and the approximately 15,000 independent theatres in this country."

POINT V.

II, 4 of the Decree, properly construed, is not objectionable.

II, 8 (c) of the Decree provides that (R. 3697):

> "* * * the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor."

It therefore contemplates that, in granting a license, the licensor shall take into consideration the "reasonable return to the licensor".

It is in the light of this express recognition of the licensor's right to a reasonable return that II, 4 of the Decree must be construed, which enjoins any clearance "in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted" (R. 3696).

We construe this to mean that, once the licensor has been assured "a reasonable return", any clearance is enjoined which is "in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted".

If, however, II, 4 of the Decree is to be construed as enjoining the licensor from considering its own "fair return" in granting clearance, it should be modified as inconsistent with II, 8 (c) of the Decree and as depriving the owner of the copyright of a fair return on his copyright.

The second sentence of II, 4 of the Decree provides (R. 3696):

> "Whenever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree, the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof."

We construe this as shifting to the distributor the burden of going forward with the evidence as to the reasonableness of the clearance granted,—not with affecting the nature of the legality or illegality of the clearance which is elsewhere defined in the Decree, Decision, and Opinion.

So construed, it is unobjectionable.

If, however, it be construed as making illegal a clearance otherwise legal, it should be eliminated as a gross departure from all recognized concepts of judicial administration.

CONCLUSION.

On appeal No. 79 the judgment appealed from should be affirmed.

On appeal No. 80 the judgment appealed from should be modified as herein indicated.

Appeals from orders denying intervention should be dismissed or affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH M. PROSKAUER,
ROBERT W. PERKINS,
Attorneys for the Warner Defendants.

JOSEPH M. PROSKAUER,
ROBERT W. PERKINS,
J. ALVIN VAN BERGH,
HOWARD LEVINSON,
HAROLD BERKOWITZ,
Of Counsel.

INDEX TO APPENDIX.

PAGE

Total Film Rentals Paid by Warner Theatres (1931-1945) 125

Total Film Rentals Received by Warner (United States and Canada, 1931-1945) 126

Total Film Rentals Received by Warner (Domestic and Foreign, 1931-1945) 127

Film Rentals Paid to and Received from Loew's (1931-1945) 128

Film Rentals Paid to and Received from Paramount (1931-1945) 129

Film Rentals Paid to and Received from Fox (1931-1945) 130

Film Rentals Paid to and Received from RKO (1931-1945) 131

Film Rentals Paid by Warner Theatres to United Artists (1931-1945) 132

Film Rentals Paid by Warner Theatres to Universal (1931-1945) 133

Film Rentals Paid by Warner Theatres to Columbia (1931-1945) 134

Warner's First Run Revenue in the 92 Large Cities, Now and As It May Be Affected by Loss of Theatres Partially Owned 135

Cost of Warner Features and Average Admission Prices at Warner Theatres (1931-1945) 137

Ratios of Film Rentals Paid to Theatre Admissions Collected in Cases of Independent and Affiliated Theatres 138

Comparison of Cost of One Positive Print of "Princess O'Rourke" to Average Film Rental per Booking 139

PAGE

Instances of

(1) Where Warner Theatres Licensed Film from Another Company Whose Affiliated Theatres did not License Warner Pictures;

(2) Where Warner Theatres did not License Film from Another Company Whose Affiliated Theatres did License Warner Pictures;

(3) Where the Term of a License for Warner Theatres from Another Company was Different from the Term of the License of Warner Pictures for Such Company's Affiliated Theatres (1931-1945) 140

The Percentage of Warner's Total Film Rental Payments Paid to Each of the Other Producer-Exhibitors

Compared With

The Percentage of Each of the Other Producer-Exhibitor's Total Film Rental Payments Which Each Producer-Exhibitor paid to Warner 142

The Percentage of Warner's Total Film Receipts Received from Each of the Other Producer-Exhibitors

Compared With

The Percentage of Each of the Other Producer-Exhibitor's Total Film Receipts Which Each Producer-Exhibitor Received from Warner 143

Admission Prices Charged and Minimum Admission Price (Where Specified in License) in First Run Theatres for Princess O'Rourke in the 92 Large Cities:

By Population 144

By Highest Price Charged 148

Contract Minimum Admission Prices and Actual Minimum Admission Prices (Recapitulation) 152

TOTAL FILM RENTALS PAID

By Warner Theatres

(From Ex. W-3)

Fiscal Year Ended August	Companies to Whom Paid									Grand Total
	Warner	Paramount	Loew's	20th Century-Fox	R.K.O. and Pathe	United Artists	Columbia	Universal	All Others
1931.....	36.51%	5.63%	14.51%	11.23%	10.54%	8.17%	3.22%	6.19%	4.00%	100%
1932.....	32.09%	14.88%	10.36%	11.15%	9.92%	2.79%	5.52%	8.01%	5.28%	100%
1933.....	34.49%	15.84%	12.17%	9.73%	8.20%	4.96%	3.73%	6.54%	4.34%	100%
1934.....	32.18%	17.65%	17.61%	2.83%	10.87%	5.00%	4.00%	7.58%	2.28%	100%
1935.....	29.55%	17.31%	16.35%	6.65%	10.51%	6.22%	4.84%	5.31%	3.26%	100%
1936.....	26.71%	16.46%	18.16%	10.05%	10.52%	6.19%	4.07%	5.30%	2.54%	100%
1937.....	29.00%	15.33%	19.88%	10.94%	9.19%	5.82%	3.63%	4.49%	2.72%	100%
1938.....	25.72%	13.05%	18.97%	11.11%	10.37%	9.31%	4.05%	4.94%	2.48%	100%
1939.....	27.69%	12.45%	21.41%	9.98%	8.69%	7.32%	4.06%	5.96%	2.44%	100%
1940.....	24.14%	11.74%	24.91%	8.55%	9.59%	6.80%	4.79%	7.09%	2.39%	100%
1941.....	27.56%	12.95%	21.37%	7.95%	7.75%	7.35%	5.01%	7.62%	2.44%	100%
1942.....	30.09%	12.28%	18.15%	9.84%	8.23%	4.82%	5.37%	8.88%	2.34%	100%
1943.....	28.74%	11.72%	16.98%	9.83%	10.58%	4.20%	5.78%	9.43%	2.74%	100%
1944.....	26.50%	12.93%	17.25%	10.08%	9.94%	3.09%	5.62%	10.75%	3.84%	100%
1945.....	29.28%	13.12%	16.66%	8.60%	10.67%	5.58%	5.02%	7.56%	3.51%	100%

NOTE: Represents Film Rental for features, shorts and newsreels paid by Warner Theatres for fiscal year indicated.

The Film Rental paid "Warner" does not include the Rental paid for the picture "This Is The Army". This Rental is also excluded from the grand total.

Film Rentals for the Following Non-Consolidated Companies Are Included Above

Atlantic Theatres, Inc.	50%	Owned by Warners
Mansfield Operating Company..	50%	" " "
Mt. Oliver Theatre Company...	50%	" " "
Regent State Corporation.....	50%	" " "
Standard Theatres Corporation.	50%	" " "
W. F. Theatre Company.....	50%	" " "
Stanley Shapiro Theatre Co....	51%	" " "

Film Rentals for the Following Theatres Owned or Leased by Others, Included in Operating Agreements Are Included Above

Paramount Theatre, Hammond, Ind.
Frankfort and Nixon Theatres, Philadelphia, Pa.
Tower and Roosevelt Theatres, Philadelphia, Pa.
Oriental and Tower Theatres, Milwaukee, Wisc.
State and Strand Theatres, Harrisonburg, Va.
Regent Theatre, Kearny
Elwood Theatre, Newark
Palace Theatre, Orange
Royal and Broadmoor Theatres, Bloomfield
Bellevue Theatre, Upper Montclair
Rio Theatre, Appleton (Became 100% owned by Warners 4/30/44)

TOTAL FILM RENTALS RECEIVED BY WARNER FROM UNITED STATES and CANADA

(From Ex. W-4)

Fiscal Year Ending August	Film Rentals Received from Theatres Owned, Operated, or Affiliated With: Paramount	Fox	Loew's	R.K.O.	Total	All Other Accounts	Warner	Grand Total
1945	16.8%	6.4%	0.5%	5.0%	28.7%	52.6%	18.7%	100%
1944	16.5%	6.4%	0.6%	4.6%	28.1%	54.6%	17.3%	100%
1943	16.9%	6.0%	0.6%	4.6%	28.1%	54.1%	17.8%	100%
1942	16.9%	4.6%	0.5%	4.9%	26.9%	57.2%	15.9%	100%
1941	15.5%	4.8%	0.5%	5.8%	26.6%	58.4%	15.0%	100%
1940	13.1%	3.8%	0.6%	5.7%	23.2%	61.9%	14.9%	100%
1939	13.4%	4.8%	0.8%	5.5%	24.5%	60.7%	14.8%	100%
1938	12.8%	4.7%	0.7%	5.7%	23.9%	62.1%	14.0%	100%
1937	12.8%	4.7%	0.7%	5.2%	23.4%	61.8%	14.8%	100%
1936	9.8%	4.1%	1.1%	4.4%	19.4%	66.1%	14.5%	100%
1935	11.9%	3.9%	2.9%	3.6%	22.3%	62.8%	14.9%	100%
1934	11.[illegible]%	3.7%	4.8%	1.5%	21.3%	62.5%	16.2%	100%
1933	13.1%	4.4%	4.3%	1.1%	22.9%	59.2%	17.9%	100%
1932	12.3%	3.6%	3.2%	3.6%	22.7%	58.0%	19.3%	100%
1931	10.1%	5.2%	1.7%	3.1%	20.1%	59.2%	20.7%	100%

NOTE: Film Rentals received include receipts for Features, Short Subjects, Trailers and Advertising Accessories. Receipts from "This Is The Army" are excluded.

All figures for years prior to 1940-41 are compiled on basis of collections. Figures shown for 1940-41 and subsequent years are compiled on basis of Net Billings with the exception of Warner Theatres which are on a collection basis for all years.

TOTAL FILM RENTALS RECEIVED BY WARNER FROM DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN

(From Ex. W-5)

UNITED STATES AND CANADA

Film Rentals Received by Warner from Theatres Owned, Operated, or Affiliated With

Fiscal Year Ending August	Paramount	Fox	Loew's	R.K.O.	Total	All Other Accounts United States and Canada	Warner	Total United States and Canada	Foreign Other Than Canada	World Total
1945	11.9%	4.4%	0.4%	3.5%	22.2%	37.1%	13.1%	70.4%	29.6%	100%
1944	11.4%	4.4%	0.4%	3.2%	19.4%	37.5%	11.8%	68.7%	31.3%	100%
1943	11.7%	4.2%	0.4%	3.2%	19.5%	37.7%	12.4%	69.6%	30.4%	100%
1942	12.4%	3.4%	0.4%	3.5%	19.7%	41.8%	11.7%	73.2%	26.8%	100%
1941	11.5%	3.5%	0.4%	4.3%	19.7%	43.2%	11.1%	74.0%	26.0%	100%
1940	9.5%	2.7%	0.4%	4.1%	16.7%	44.7%	10.7%	72.1%	27.9%	100%
1939	9.4%	3.4%	0.6%	3.9%	17.3%	42.4%	10.3%	69.8%	30.2%	100%
1938	8.5%	3.2%	0.6%	3.9%	16.2%	42.0%	9.6%	67.8%	32.2%	100%
1937	8.9%	3.2%	0.5%	3.7%	16.3%	43.0%	10.3%	69.6%	30.4%	100%
1936	6.6%	2.8%	0.7%	2.9%	13.0%	43.9%	9.6%	66.5%	33.5%	100%
1935	8.2%	2.9%	2.0%	2.5%	15.6%	43.4%	10.2%	69.2%	30.8%	100%
1934	7.5%	2.6%	3.2%	1.0%	14.3%	41.7%	10.8%	66.8%	33.2%	100%
1933	10.1%	3.4%	3.3%	0.8%	17.6%	45.6%	13.8%	77.0%	23.0%	100%
1932	9.4%	2.7%	2.4%	2.8%	17.3%	44.3%	14.7%	76.3%	23.7%	100%
1931	6.7%	3.4%	1.1%	2.1%	13.3%	39.0%	13.5%	65.8%	34.2%	100%

NOTES: Film Rentals for the United States and Canada are receipts for Features, Short Subjects, Trailers and Advertising Accessories. Film Rentals for "Foreign other than Canada" are receipts for American Made Features, Short Subjects and Trailers. Receipts from "This Is The Army" are excluded from all figures.

All figures for the United States and Canada for years prior to 1940-41 are compiled on basis of collections. Figures shown for 1940-41 and subsequent years for the United States and Canada are compiled on basis of net billings with the exception of Warner Theatres which are on a collection basis for all years. All figures for "Foreign other than Canada" are compiled on basis of net billings.

Figures for the year 1944-45 for "Foreign other than Canada" and "World Total" are tentative.

TOTAL FILM RENTALS PAID TO
and
RECEIVED FROM LOEW'S AND ITS AFFILIATES

(Excludes Film Rental for "This Is The Army")

(From Ex. W-6)

Fiscal Year		Increase or *Decrease Over Previous Year
		Amount	Percentage
1931–32	Paid to Loew's	*$964,598	*40.88%
	Received from Loew's	212,943	43.90%
1932–33	Paid to Loew's	23,698	1.70%
	Received from Loew's	278,947	39.96%
1933–34	Paid to Loew's	646,246	45.55%
	Received from Loew's	141,699	14.50%
1934–35	Paid to Loew's	65,782	3.19%
	Received from Loew's	*353,482	*31.60%
1935–36	Paid to Loew's	484,204	22.73%
	Received from Loew's	*479,446	*62.65%
1936–37	Paid to Loew's	673,769	25.77%
	Received from Loew's	*51,578	*18.05%
1937–38	Paid to Loew's	*73,781	*2.24%
	Received from Loew's	*5,880	*2.51%
1938–39	Paid to Loew's	426,094	13.25%
	Received from Loew's	50,290	22.03%
1939–40	Paid to Loew's	933,124	25.63%
	Received from Loew's	*99,406	*35.68%
1940–41	Paid to Loew's	*729,218	*15.94%
	Received from Loew's	15,469	8.63%
1941–42	Paid to Loew's	*236,424	*6.15%
	Received from Loew's	13,936	7.16%
1942–43	Paid to Loew's	266,285	7.38%
	Received from Loew's	17,822	8.54%
1943–44	Paid to Loew's	170,683	4.40%
	Received from Loew's	*23,147	*10.22%
1944–45	Paid to Loew's	370,556	9.16%
	Received from Loew's	13,516	6.65%

*Italic figures are red in original.

TOTAL FILM RENTALS PAID TO
and
RECEIVED FROM PARAMOUNT AND ITS AFFILIATES

(Excludes Film Rental for "This Is The Army")
(From Ex. W-7)

Fiscal Year		Increase or *Decrease Over Previous Year
		Amount	Percentage
1931–32	Paid to Paramount	$1,086,755	118.60%
	Received from Paramount	*164,612	*5.65%
1932–33	Paid to Paramount	*156,602	*7.82%
	Received from Paramount	188,886	6.87%
1933–34	Paid to Paramount	222,204	12.03%
	Received from Paramount	*306,580	*10.43%
1934–35	Paid to Paramount	186,382	9.01%
	Received from Paramount	455,883	17.32%
1935–36	Paid to Paramount	116,224	5.15%
	Received from Paramount	*470,808	*15.25%
1936–37	Paid to Paramount	164,322	6.93%
	Received from Paramount	1,385,180	52.94%
1937–38	Paid to Paramount	*324,704	*12.81%
	Received from Paramount	*129,122	*3.23%
1938–39	Paid to Paramount	*93,030	*4.21%
	Received from Paramount	436,769	11.28%
1939–40	Paid to Paramount	37,674	1.78%
	Received from Paramount	*399,572	*9.27%
1940–41	Paid to Paramount	172,436	8.00%
	Received from Paramount	1,207,651	30.89%
1941–42	Paid to Paramount	113,675	4.88%
	Received from Paramount	1,253,301	24.49%
1942–43	Paid to Paramount	233,025	9.54%
	Received from Paramount	*194,681	*3.06%
1943–44	Paid to Paramount	356,027	13.31%
	Received from Paramount	*197,538	*3.20%
1944–45	Paid to Paramount	447,039	14.75%
	Received from Paramount	1,014,807	16.97%

* Italic figures are red in original.

TOTAL FILM RENTALS PAID TO and RECEIVED FROM 20TH CENTURY-FOX AND ITS AFFILIATES

(Excludes Film Rental for "This Is The Army")

(From Ex. W-8)

Fiscal Year		Increase or *Decrease Over Previous Year
		Amount	Percentage
1931–32	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	*$325,095	*17.80%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	*683,610	*45.91%
1932–33	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	*367,621	*24.49%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	193,681	24.04%
1933–34	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	*803,226	*70.86%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	*140,514	*14.06%
1934–35	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	535,706	162.16%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	171,768	20.00%
1935–36	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	581,186	67.11%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	39,533	3.84%
1936–37	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	362,676	25.06%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	373,082	34.86%
1937–38	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	72,632	4.01%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	13,781	.95%
1938–39	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	*184,378	*9.79%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	38,994	2.68%
1939–40	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	*127,291	*7.50%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	*392,015	*26.21%
1940–41	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	*140,335	*8.93%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	486,051	44.03%
1941–42	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	526,107	36.78%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	109,183	6.87%
1942–43	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	286,249	14.63%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	498,202	29.32%
1943–44	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	120,957	5.39%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	134,320	6.11%
1944–45	Paid to 20th Century-Fox	*84,316	*3.57%
	Received from 20th Century-Fox	263,026	11.28%

* Italic figures are red in original.

TOTAL FILM RENTALS PAID TO
and
RECEIVED FROM R. K. O. AND ITS AFFILIATES

(Excludes Film Rental for "This Is The Army")

(From Ex. W-9)

Fiscal Year		Increase or *Decrease Over Previous Year
		Amount	Percentage
1931–32	Paid to R.K.O.	*$378,537	*22.09%
	Received from R.K.O.	*73,495	*8.17%
1932–33	Paid to R.K.O.	*379,323	*28.41%
	Received from R.K.O.	*583,694	*70.68%
1933–34	Paid to R.K.O.	317,995	33.26%
	Received from R.K.O.	101,585	41.96%
1934–35	Paid to R.K.O.	96,229	7.55%
	Received from R.K.O.	583,255	169.71%
1935–36	Paid to R.K.O.	144,375	10.54%
	Received from R.K.O.	254,158	27.42%
1936–37	Paid to R.K.O.	5,833	.39%
	Received from R.K.O.	411,182	34.81%
1937–38	Paid to R.K.O.	237,248	15.60%
	Received from R.K.O.	176,066	11.06%
1938–39	Paid to R.K.O.	*278,895	*15.87%
	Received from R.K.O.	*732	*.04%
1939–40	Paid to R.K.O.	281,914	19.06%
	Received from R.K.O.	*77,045	*4.36%
1940–41	Paid to R.K.O.	*365,872	*20.78%
	Received from R.K.O.	207,686	12.28%
1941–42	Paid to R.K.O.	241,788	17.34%
	Received from R.K.O.	*97,765	*5.15%
1942–43	Paid to R.K.O.	778,075	47.54%
	Received from R.K.O.	*127,560	*7.08%
1943–44	Paid to R.K.O.	*84,469	*3.50%
	Received from R.K.O.	*12,045	*.72%
1944–45	Paid to R.K.O.	499,292	21.43%
	Received from R.K.O.	428,818	25.82%

*Italic figures are red in original.

FILM RENTALS PAID BY WARNER THEATRES

to

UNITED ARTISTS

(Source: Exhibit W-3)

Fiscal Years Ending August	Increase or *Decrease Over Previous Year		% of Total Rentals Paid by Warner Theatres
	Amount	%
1932	*$953,490.	*71.7%	2.79%
1933	202,609.	54.0%	4.96%
1934	8,178.	1.4%	5.00%
1935	224,485.	38.3%	6.22%
1936	80,225.	9.9%	6.19%
1937	72,206.	8.1%	5.82%
1938	614,496.	63.8%	9.31%
1939	*332,708.	*21.1%	7.32%
1940	3,144.	0.3%	6.80%
1941	73,855.	5.9%	7.35%
1942	*365,603.	*27.7%	4.82%
1943	2,643.	0.3%	4.20%
1944	*233,469.	*24.3%	3.09%
1945	753,299.	103.83%	5.58%

* Italic figures are red in original.

FILM RENTALS PAID BY WARNER THEATRES

to

UNIVERSAL

(Source: Exhibit W-3)

Fiscal Years Ending August	Increase or *Decrease Over Previous Year		% of Total Rentals Paid by Warner Theatres
	Amount	%
1932	$ 70,722.	7.02%	8.01%
1933	*315,922.	*29.30%	6.54%
1934	126,098.	16.54%	7.58%
1935	*195,873.	*22.05%	5.31%
1936	72,433.	10.46%	5.30%
1937	*22,467.	*2.93%	4.49%
1938	95,062.	12.80%	4.94%
1939	177,045.	21.14%	5.96%
1940	285,183.	28.11%	7.09%
1941	71,772.	5.52%	7.62%
1942	393,179.	28.66%	8.88%
1943	388,550.	22.01%	9.43%
1944	365,579.	16.97%	10.75%
1945	*513,399.	*20.38%	7.56%

* Italic figures are red in original.

FILM RENTALS PAID BY WARNER THEATRES

to

COLUMBIA

(Source: Exhibit W-3)

Fiscal Years Ending August	Increase or *Decrease Over Previous Year		% of Total Rentals Paid by Warner Theatres
	Amount	%
1932	$219,966.	42.0%	5.52%
1933	*308,759.	*41.5%	3.73%
1934	34,124.	7.8%	4.00%
1935	160,943.	36.6%	4.84%
1936	*44,522.	*7.0%	4.07%
1937	15,666.	2.6%	3.63%
1938	84,194.	14.0%	4.05%
1939	5,449.	0.7%	4.06%
1940	187,759.	27.1%	4.79%
1941	21,721.	2.4%	5.01%
1942	167,176.	18.5%	5.37%
1943	249,704.	23.3%	5.78%
1944	*734.	*0.05%	5.62%
1945	14,772.	1.1%	5.02%

* Italic figures are red. in original.

Warner's First Run Revenue in the 92 Large Cities, Now and As It May Be Affected by Loss of Theatres Partially Owned.

(Computed from Ex. RKO-11 and Warner answers to 1945 interrogatories nos. 2 and 6-11 inclusive, Ex. 126)

In the 1943/44 season Warner licensed "Princess O'Rourke" first run in the 92 cities with populations of over 100,000 to theatres other than Warner's own, as follows:

To theatres owned in whole or in part by:	Number of cities licensed first run	Dollar rentals received		Percentage of total
Independents	in 20 cities	for $100,955.99	or	28.6%
Paramount affiliates	in 24 other cities	for $117,074.58	or	33. %
War.-RKO pools	in 4 other cities	for $ 11,299.42	or	3.2%
RKO	in 8 other cities	for $ 38,265.84	or	10.8%
Fox	in 8 other cities	for $ 85,812.37	or	24.3%
Loew's	in 0 cities	for 0.	or	0. %
	64 cities	$353,408.20		100 %

If defendants should have to sell their interests in theatres less than 50% owned, in accordance with the Decree, III, 5 (R. 3699), these figures would be:

To theatres owned by:	Number of cities licensed first run	Dollar rentals received		Percentage of total
Independents	in 43 cities	for $264,275.89	or	74.3%
Loew's	in 0 cities	for 0.	or	0. %
Fox	in 0 cities.	for 0.	or	0. %
RKO	in 6 other cities	for $ 31,894.90	or	9. %
Paramount	in 15 other cities	for $ 59,429.64	or	16.7%
	64 cities	$355,600.43		100 %

The same computations, inclusive of Warner's own theatres; would show:

In the 1943/44 season Warner licensed "Princess O'Rourke" first run in the 92 cities with populations of over 100,000 to theatres, including Warner's intercompany payments to its own theatres, as follows:

To theatres owned in whole or in part by:	Number of cities licensed first run	Dollar rentals received		Percentage of total
Independents	in 20 cities	for $100,955.99	or	17.4%
Paramount affiliates	in 24 other cities	for $117,074.58	or	20. %
Par.-RKO pools	in 4 other cities	for $ 11,299.42	or	2. %
RKO	in 8 other cities	for $ 38,265.84	or	6.6%
Fox	in 8 other cities	for $ 85,812.37	or	14.8%
Loew's	in 0 cities	for 0.	or	0. %
Warner	in 28 other cities	for $227,336.88	or	39. %
	92 cities	$580,745.08		100 %

If defendants should have to sell their interests in theatres less than 95% owned, in accordance with the Decree, III, 5 (R. 3699), these figures would be:

To theatres owned by:	Number of cities licensed first run	Dollar rentals received		Percentage of total
Independents	in 43 cities	for $264,275.89	or	45.3%
Loew's	in 0 cities	for 0.	or	0. %
Fox	in 0 cities	for 0.	or	0. %
RKO	in 6 other cities	for $ 31,894.90	or	5.5%
Paramount	in 15 other cities	for $ 59,429.64	or	10.2%
Warner	in 28 other cities	for $227,336.88	or	39. %
	92 cities	$582,937.31		100 %

COST OF AMERICAN MADE WARNER FEATURE PICTURES

and

AVERAGE THEATRE ADMISSION PRICES AT WARNER THEATRES

(Ex. W-10)

Fiscal Year Ending; August	(1) Average Cost of American Made Warner Pictures	(2) Average Theatre Admission Price At Warner Theatres
1931	$ 337,000	35.0¢
1932	272,000	31.5¢
1933	241,000	28.0¢
1934	255,000	27.0¢
1935	280,000	27.0¢
1936	303,000	27.0¢
1937	315,000	27.9¢
1938	415,000	28.2¢
1939	403,000	28.0¢
1940	448,000	28.5¢
1941	411,000	28.9¢
1942	621,000	30.9¢
1943	976,000	33.3¢
1944	1,032,000	35.4¢
1945	1,371,000	36.9¢ (3)

(1) Negative cost plus royalties and participations payable in connection therewith.

(2) The average admission price is determined by dividing the box office receipts by the attendance. Data given exclude admission taxes.

(3) Based on data for 39 weeks ending May 26, 1945.

The Ratios of Film Rentals Paid to Theatre Admissions Collected in the Case of Independent and Affiliated Theatres

Estimated gross theatre admissions as per Film Daily Year Book (1945), R. K. O. Exhibit 2		$1,350,000,000
Total theatre admissions received by 5 major companies as reported in producer-exhibitor responses to additional Interrogatory No. 13
Warner	$ 83,622,000
Loew's	61,596,000
Paramount	185,499,000
20th Century-Fox Film	91,411,000
R. K. O.	40,642,000
		462,770,000
Estimated gross theatre admissions collected by all others		$ 887,230,000
Total film rentals received by 8 major companies, based on answers to Interrogatory No. 3 (as per Exhibit No. 425)	$264,131,000
Film rentals paid to 8 major companies by 5 major companies, based on answers to Interrogatory No. 12 (as per Exhibit No. 424)
Warner	$ 22,543,000
Loew's	19,497,000
Paramount	49,829,000
Fox	24,210,000
R. K. O.	12,400,000
		126,479,000
Film rentals paid to 8 major companies by all other exhibitors	$137,652,000

27.33% of their theatre admissions was paid by the affiliated theatres to the eight distributor defendants as film rental for their features.

(Computed by dividing the total film rentals of the affiliated theatres [$126,479,000] by their total theatre admissions [$462,770,000].)

15.51% of their theatre admissions was paid by all other exhibitors, to the eight distributor defendants as film rental for their features.

(Computed by dividing the total film rentals paid by all other exhibitors [$137,652,000] by their total theatre admissions [$887,230,000].)

COMPARISON
COST OF ONE POSITIVE PRINT OF WARNER'S "PRINCESS O'ROURKE" TO AVERAGE FILM RENTAL PER BOOKING

(Ex. W-12)

Approximate cost of one positive print....$130.

Based on information compiled from Warner answers to 1945 Interrogatories numbered 2 and 6 to 11 inclusive.

	Number Of Bookings	Film Rental Received	Average Film Rental Per Booking
Bookings enumerated in answers to Interrogatories 6 to 11 inclusive—the so-called "Preferred Runs"
Total of such Bookings	1536	$1,130,302.05	$735.89
Bookings of $130 or less	372	26,251.21	70.57
Bookings of over $130	1164	$1,104,050.84	$948.50
Total All Bookings given in answer to Interrogatory 2	14090	$2,118,050.01	$150.32
Deduct Bookings of over $130 enumerated in answer to Interrogatories 6 to 11 inclusive—see above	1164	1,104,050.84	948.50
Total Bookings other than those over $130 enumerated in answer to Interrogatories 6 to 11 inclusive	12926	$1,013,999.17	$ 78.45

Instances of (1) Where Warner Theatres Licensed Film from Another Company Whose Affiliated Theatres Did Not License Warner Pictures;

(2) Where Warner Theatres Did Not License Film from Another Company Whose Affiliated Theatres Did License Warner Pictures;

(3) Where the Term of a License for Warner Theatres from Another Company Was Different from the Term of the License of Warner Pictures for Such Company's Affiliated Theatres.

(Exhibit W-15)

1930–31

Distribution Dept. did not license RKO New York metropolitan theatres.
Theatre Dept. licensed RKO pictures generally.

Distribution Dept. licensed Paramount affiliates.
Theatre Dept. did not license Paramount pictures in most of the Warner theatres.

1931–32

Distribution Dept. licensed Loew New York metropolitan theatres.
Theatre Dept. did not license Loew pictures until late in the season when it licensed all or part of Loew pictures in approximately 150 of the 250 theatres which had played Loew pictures the previous year.

1932–33

Distribution Dept. did not license RKO metropolitan theatres.
Theatre Dept. licensed RKO pictures.

1933–34

Distribution Dept. did not license RKO metropolitan theatres.
Theatre Dept. licensed RKO pictures for a term of 2 years.

Distribution Dept. licensed Fox Theatres.
Theatre Dept. did not license Fox pictures except for the season in five cities and except for occasional local bookings.

Distribution Dept. licensed Loew metropolitan theatres for a term of one year.
Theatre Dept. licensed Loew pictures for a term of 3 years.

1934–35

Distribution Dept. licensed Fox theatres for a term of one year.
Theatre Dept. licensed Fox pictures for a term of 2 years.

935–36

Distribution Dept. licensed RKO metropolitan theatres for a term of our years.

Theatre Dept. licensed RKO pictures for a term of two years.

936–37

Distribution Dept. licensed Fox theatres for a term of one year.

Theatre Dept. licensed Fox pictures for a term of 3 years.

Distribution Dept. licensed some of the smaller Loew metropolitan eatres for a term of one year.

Theatre Dept. licensed Loew pictures for a term of three years.

Distribution Dept. licensed Paramount affiliates.

Theatre Dept. licensed Paramount pictures for 2 years.

939–40

Distribution Dept. licensed some of the smaller Loew metropolitan eatres for one year.

Theatre Dept. licensed Loew pictures for a term of 3 years.

Distribution Dept. did not license Sparks Circuit, affiliated with Paramount in Florida.

Theatre Dept. was under existing license to purchase Paramount film.

940–41

Distribution Dept. did not license Sparks Circuit, affiliated with Paramount in Florida until on December 1, 1941 some film was licensed for me theatres.

Theatre Dept. licensed Paramount pictures for a term of one year.

The Percentage Of Warner's Total Film Rental Payments Paid To Each Of The Other Producer-Exhibitors

Compared With

The Percentage Of Each Of The Other Producer-Exhibitor's Total Film Rental Payments Which Each Producer-Exhibitor Paid To Warner.

(Source: Page 256 of Appendix of Government Brief)

	Percentage of Total Paid to All Distributors
Warner Theatres Paid To Loew	17.3%
Loew Theatres Paid To Warner	2.0%
Warner Theatres Paid To Fox	10.1%
Fox Theatres Paid To Warner	9.6%
Warner Theatres Paid To Paramount	12.9%
Paramount Theatres Paid To Warner	11.4%
Warner Theatres Paid To R K O	9.9%
R K O Theatres Paid To Warner	15.7%

The Percentage Of Warner's Total Film Rental Receipts From Each Of The Other Producer-Exhibitors

Compared With

The Percentage Of Each Of The Other Producer-Exhibitor's Total Film Receipts Which Each Producer-Exhibitor Received From Warner.

(Source: Page 258 of Appendix of Government Brief)

	Percentage of Total Received From All Theatres
Warner Received From Loew Theatres	0.5%
Loew Received From Warner Theatres	6.8%
Warner Received From Fox Theatres	7.8%
Fox Received From Warner Theatres	4.6%
Warner Received From Paramount Theatres	17.9%
Paramount Received From Warner Theatres	6.9%
Warner Received From R K O Theatres	6.0%
R K O Received From Warner Theatres	8.3%

Admission Prices Charged and Minimum Admission Price (Where Specified in License Agreement) in First Run Theatres in the 92 Large Cities for Princess O'Rourke

By Population

(Source: Exhibits W-22, 126 and Census)

Population	City	Highest Admission Price Charged	Range of Admission Prices Charged	Minimum Contract Admission Price Where Specified
7,454,995	New York	$1.65	$1.65–.45	$
3,396,808	Chicago	.85	.85–	.55
1,931,334	Philadelphia	.75	.75–.68
1,623,452	Detroit	.75	.75–.65
1,504,277	Los Angeles	.90	.90–.75
878,336	Cleveland	.60	.60–
859,100	Baltimore	.60	.60–.50
816,048	St. Louis	.49	.49–.24
770,816	Boston, Mass.	.65	.65–
671,659	Pittsburgh	.60	.60–
663,091	Washington	.90	.90–.50
634,536	San Francisco	1.00	1.00–.60
587,472	Milwaukee	.65	.65–
575,901	Buffalo	.80	.80–.60	.55
494,537	New Orleans	.50	.50–
492,370	Minneapolis	.55	.55–
455,610	Cincinnati	.54	.54–.44
429,760	Newark	.90	.90–.65
399,178	Kansas City, Mo.	.60	.60–
386,972	Indianapolis	.50	.50–.40
384,514	Houston, Texas	.50	.50–.40
368,302	Seattle, Wash.	1.00	1.00–.70

Population	City	Highest Admission Price Charged	Range of Admission Prices Charged	Minimum Contract Admission Price Where Specified
324,975	Rochester, N. Y.	$ .55	$ .55–50	$
322,412	Denver, Col.	.74	.74–.39
319,077	Louisville, Ky.	.75	.45–.36
306,087	Columbus, Ohio	.49	.49–.44
305,394	Portland, Ore.	1.00	1.00–.50
302,288	Atlanta, Ga.	.50	.50–.40
302,163	Oakland, Cal.	1.00	1.00–.50
301,173	Jersey City	.85	.85–.55
294,934	Dallas, Texas	.50	.50–.40
292,942	Memphis, Tenn.	.50	.50–.40
287,736	St. Paul	.55	.55–
282,349	Toledo, Ohio	.55	.55–	.60
267,583	Birmingham, Ala.	.39	.39–.33	.44
253,854	San Antonio	.50	.50–.40
253,504	Providence	.50	.50–.44	.28
244,791	Akron, Ohio	.65	.65–.50
223,844	Omaha, Neb.	.55	.55–
210,718	Dayton, Ohio	.55	.55–.40	.40
205,967	Syracuse, N. Y.	.50	.50–
204,424	Oklahoma City, Okla.	.50	.50–.24
203,342	San Diego	.64	.64–.44	.60
193,694	Worcester, Mass.	.50	.50–
193,042	Richmond, Va.	.44	.44–	.44
177,662	Ft. Worth, Texas	.50	.50–.40
173,065	Jacksonville, Fla.	.44	.44–.39
172,172	Miami, Fla.	.70	.70–.55
167,720	Youngstown, Ohio	.50	.50–
167,402	Nashville, Tenn.	.44	.44–.33
166,267	Hartford, Conn.	.60	.60–.50

Population	City	Highest Admission Price Charged	Range of Admission Prices Charged	Minimum Contract Admission Price Where Specified
164,292	Long Beach	$ .60	$ .60–.40	$
164,292	Grand Rapids	.40	.40
160,605	New Haven	—	—
159,819	Des Moines, Iowa	.55	.55–
151,543	Flint, Mich.	.44	.44–
149,934	Salt Lake City	.58	.58–.39
149,554	Springfield, Mass.	.50	.50–
147,121	Bridgeport, Conn.	.50	.50–
144,332	Norfolk, Va.	.50	.50–	.44
142,598	Yonkers, N. Y.	.60	.60–.55
142,157	Tulsa, Okla.	.44	.44–.25
140,404	Scranton, Pa.	.65	.65–.50
139,656	Paterson, N. J.	.75	.75–.55
130,577	Albany, N. Y.	.55	.55–.50
128,163	Chattanooga, Tenn.	.44	.44–.33	.44
124,697	Trenton, N. J.	.65	.65–.44
122,001	Spokane, Wash.	.80	.80–.60
121,458	Kansas City, Kan.	.29	.29–	.30
118,410	Ft. Wayne, Ind.	.50	.50–.35	.50
117,536	Camden, N. J.	.75	.75–.44
116,955	Erie, Pa.	.60	.60–.50
115,428	Fall River, Mass.	.55	.55–.40	.28
114,966	Wichita, Kans.	.58	.58–.39
112,504	Wilmington, Del.	.50	.50–
111,719	Gary, Ind.	.44	.44–
111,580	Knoxville, Tenn.	.44	.44–	.44
110,879	Cambridge, Mass.	.65	.65–.44	.44
110,568	Reading, Pa.	.50	.50–
110,341	New Bedford, Mass.	.55	.55–.28	.28

Population	City	Highest Admission Price Charged	Range of Admission Prices Charged	Minimum Contract Admission Price Where Specified
109,912	Elizabeth, N. J.	$ .55	$ .55–.50	$ .28
109,408	Tacoma, Wash.	.70	.70–.46
108,391	Tampa, Fla.	.44	.44–	.44
108,401	Canton, Ohio	.50	.50–
105,9[illegible]	Sacramento, Calif.	.85	.85–.65
105,087	Peoria, Ill.	.50	.50–
102,177	Somerville, Mass.	.40	.40–
101,389	Lowell, Mass.	.50	.50–
101,268	South Bend, Ind.	.50	.50–
101,065	Duluth	.44	.44–
100,899	Charlotte, N. C.	.44	.44–.33
100,518	Utica, N. Y.	.55	.55–.50

Admission Prices Charged and Minimum Admission Price (Where Specified in License Agreement) in First Run Theatres in the 92 Large Cities for Princess O'Rourke

By Highest Price Charged

(Source: Exhibits W-22, 126 and Census)

Highest Price Charged	City	Population	Range of Admission Prices Charged	Minimum Contract Admission Price Where Specified
$1.65	New York, N. Y.	7,454,995	$.44–1.65	$.
1.00	San Francisco	634,536	.60–1.00
1.00	Oakland, Calif.	302,163	.50–1.00
1.00	Seattle, Wash.	368,302	.70–1.00
1.00	Portland, Ore.	305,394	.50–1.00
.90	Washington, D. C.	663,091	.50– .90
.90	Newark, N. J.	429,760	.65– .90
.90	Los Angeles, Cal.	1,504,277	.75– .90
.85	Jersey City, N. J.	301,173	.55– .85
.85	Sacramento, Cal.	105,958	.65– .85
.85	Chicago, Ill.	3,396,808	– .85	.55
.80	Buffalo, N. Y.	576,901	.60– .80	.55
.80	Spokane, Wash.	122,001	.60– .80
.75	Detroit, Mich.	1,623,452	.65– .75
.75	Paterson, N. J.	139,656	.55– .75
.75	Philadelphia, Pa.	1,931,334	.68– .75
.75	Camden, N. J.	117,536	.44– .75
.74	Denver, Colo.	322,412	.39– .74
.70	Miami, Fla.	172,172	.55– .70
.70	Tacoma, Wash.	109,408	.46– .70
.65	Boston, Mass.	770,816	– .65
.65	Cambridge, Mass.	110,879	.44– .65	.44
.65	Milwaukee, Wisc.	587,472	– .65

Highest Price Charged	City	Population	Range of Admission Prices Charged	Minimum Contract Admission Price Where Specified
$ .65	Scranton, Pa.	140,404	$.50– .65	$.
.65	Trenton, N. J.	124,697	.44– .65
.64	San Diego, Cal.	203,341	.44– .64	.60
.60	Cleveland, Ohio	878,336	– .60
.60	Akron, Ohio	244,791	.50– .60
.60	Kansas City, Mo.	399,178	– .60
.60	Long Beach, Calif.	164,292	.40– .60
.60	Hartford, Conn.	166,267	.50– .60
.60	Yonkers, N. Y.	142,598	.55– .60
.60	Pittsburgh, Pa.	671,659	– .60
.60	Erie, Pa.	116,955	.50– .60
.60	Baltimore, Md.	859,100	.50– .60
.58	Wichita, Kan.	114,966	.39– .58
.58	Salt Lake City, Utah	149,934	.39– .58
.55	Albany, N. Y.	130,577	.30– .55
.55	Utica, N. Y.	100,518	.50– .55
.55	New Bedford, Mass.	110,341	.28– .55	.28
.55	Fall River, Mass.	115,428	.40– .55	.28
.55	Rochester, N. Y.	324,975	.50– .55
.55	Cincinnati, Ohio	455,610	.44– .55
.55	Dayton, Ohio	210,718	.40– .55	.40
.55	Toledo, Ohio	282,349	– .55	.60
.55	Des Moines, Iowa	159,819	[illegible]
.55	Minneapolis, Minn.	492,370	– .55
.55	St. Paul, Minn.	287,736	– .55
	New Haven, Conn.	160,605
.55	Elizabeth, N. J.	109,912	.50– .55	.28
.55	Omaha, Neb.	223,844	– .55
.50	Atlanta, Ga.	302,288	.40– .50

Highest Price Charged	City	Population	Range of Admission Prices Charged	Minimum Contract Admission Price Where Specified
$ .50	Springfield, Mass.	149,554	$ – .50	$.
.50	Lowell, Mass.	101,389	– .50
.50	Worcester, Mass.	193,694	– .50
.50	Providence, R. I.	253,504	.44– .50	.28
.50	Syracuse, N. Y.	205,967	– .50
.50	Peoria, Ill.	105,087	– .50
.50	South Bend, Ind.	101,268	– .50
.50	Canton, Ohio	108,401	– .50
.50	Youngstown, Ohio	167,720	– .50
.50	Dallas, Texas	294,734	.40– .50
.50	Ft. Worth, Texas	177,662	.40– .50
.50	Houston, Texas	384,514	.40– .50
.50	San Antonio, Texas	253,854	.40– .50
.50	Memphis, Tenn.	292,942	.40– .50
.50	Bridgeport, Conn.	147,121	– .50
.50	New Orleans, La.	494,537	– .50
.50	Oklahoma City, Oklahoma	204,424	.24– .50
.50	Reading, Pa.	110,568	– .50
.50	Wilmington, Del.	112,504	– .50
.50	Norfolk, Va.	144,332	– .50	.44
.50	Indianapolis, Ind.	386,972	.40– .50
.50	Ft. Wayne, Ind.	118,410	.35– .50	.50
.49	Columbus, Ohio	306,087	.44– .49
.49	St. Louis, Mo.	816,048	.24– .49
.45	Louisville, Ky.	319,077	.36– .45
.44	Chattanooga, Tenn.	128,163	.33– .44	.44
.44	Jacksonville, Fla.	173,065	.39– .44
.44	Knoxville, Tenn.	111,580	– .44	.44
.44	Nashville, Tenn.	167,402	.33– .44

Highest Price Charged	City	Population	Range of Admission Prices Charged	Minimum Contract Admission Price Where Specified
$ .44	Tampa, Fla.	108,391	$ – .44	$.44
.44	Gary, Ind.	111,719	– .44
.44	Flint, Mich.	151,543	– .44
.44	Duluth, Minn.	101,065	– .44
.44	Tulsa, Okla.	142,157	.25– .44
.44	Richmond, Va.	193,042	– .44	.44
.44	Charlotte, N. C.	100,899	.33– .44
.40	Somerville, Mass.	102,177	– .40
.40	Grand Rapids, Mich.	164,292	– .40
.39	Birmingham, Ala.	267,583	.33– .39	.44
.29	Kansas City, Kan.	121,458	– .29	.30

Contract Minimum Admission Prices* and Actual Minimum Admission Prices* of Exhibitions of "Princess O'Rourke" Listed in Warner Answers to 1945 Interrogatories 6 thru 11

(Ex. W-23)

RECAPITULATION

I. Total Number of Exhibitions of Princess O'Rourke Covered by Interrogatories 6 thru 11 1,568

II. Total Number of Exhibitions where Contract Minimum Admission Price was not Specified in License 846

1.	Actual	minimum	admission	prices	were	from	.20	to	.30	in	146 instances
2.	"	"	"	"	"	"	.31	"	.40	"	321 "
3.	"	"	"	"	"	"	.41	"	.50	"	238 "
4.	"	"	"	"	"	"	.51 and over				107 "
											812

III. Total Number of Exhibitions where Contract Minimum Admission Price was Specified in License 722

1.	Actual	minimum	admission	prices	were	from	.20	to	.30	in	241 instances
2.	"	"	"	"	"	"	.31	"	.40	"	279 "
3.	"	"	"	"	"	"	.41	"	.50	"	123 "
4.	"	"	"	"	"	"	.51 and over				28 "
											671

A. Total Number of Situations where Actual Minimum Admission Price was Equal to Contract Minimum Admission Price 219

B. Total Number of Situations where Actual Minimum Admission Price was Greater than Contract Minimum Admission Price 395

1.	from	.01	to	.04	more	101 instances
2.	"	.05	"	.09	"	171 "
3.	"	.10	"	.14	"	68 "
4.	"	.15	"	.19	"	34 "
5.	"	.20 and over				21 "
						395

C. Total Number of Situations where Actual Minimum Admission Price was Less than Contract Minimum Admission Price 57

1.	from	.01	to	.04	less	25 instances
2.	"	.05	"	.09	"	7 "
3.	"	.10	"	.14	"	16 "
4.	"	.15 and over				9 "
						57

IV. Total Number of Situations where Actual Minimum Admission Price was not Available 85

A. Specified 51

B. Not Specified 34

* All prices are evening adult admission including tax.

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
FEB 2 1948
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947

No. 80

LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., et al., Appellants,

vs.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

No. 79

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellant,

vs.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, et al.

ON DIRECT APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

BRIEF FOR TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION AND NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION

JAMES F. BYRNES,
Attorney for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation.

OTTO E. KOEGEL,
JOHN F. CASKEY,
FREDERICK W. R. PRIDE,
DONALD RUSSELL,
Of Counsel.

February 2, 1948.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
History of This Litigation	1
Jurisdiction	5
Statutes Involved	5
Statement	6
Motion Picture Business	6
Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation	9
Roxy Theatre, Inc.	10
National Theatres Corporation	11
Acquisition of Theatres	12
Summary of Position in Industry	13
National's Use of Other Distributors' Pictures	14
Film Payments Received by Twentieth Century-Fox and Paid By National	17
Opinion, Findings, and Decree	20
Questions Presented	25
Points to be Argued	25
Argument as Appellants	25
First: The Decree Should Be Modified by Deleting Those Provisions of Paragraph 5 of Section III Which Prohibit the Continued Ownership by National of Partial Interests in Theatres in Conjunction with Non-Defendants	25
Second: The Decree Should Be Modified by Deleting Paragraph 6 of Section III Which Enjoins the Defendants From Expanding Their Present Theatre Holdings	31
Third: The Decree Should Be Modified So as to Provide for the Continuance of the Arbitration System Established Pursuant to the Consent Decree and for the Arbitration of Disputes Under the Decree	36

PAGE

Argument as Appellees 42

First: The Injunctions Contained in the Decree, Together With the Affirmative Relief Granted by the Court, Are Adequate to Bring the Conduct of the Defendants Into Harmony with the Anti-Trust Laws 44

(a) Plaintiff fails to establish that the decree is inadequate 48

(1) Plaintiff's references to prior proceedings and regulation are irrelevant 48

(2) Plaintiff's criticism of affirmative relief is unfounded 51

Second: The Ownership of Theatres by Twentieth Century-Fox is Lawful and Plaintiff Has Established No Basis For a Decree of Divestiture 53

(a) The plaintiff's contentions when applied to Twentieth Century-Fox and National, independently, provide no justification for divorcement 53

(b) Corporate relationship of Twentieth Century-Fox and National furnishes no basis for divestiture 57

(c) No illegality in the origin or purpose of theatre ownership 58

Third: The Record Furnishes No Justification For Aggregating the Theatre Interests of the Defendants, and Plaintiff's Arguments for Divestiture Based Upon Such Aggregation Are Without Merit 62

Fourth: There is No Justification for an Injunction Prohibiting a Producer-Exhibitor from Licensing its Pictures to the Theatres of Another Producer-Exhibitor 66

Fifth: No Question of "Public Interest" Is Involved ... 69

Conclusion 72

TABLE OF CASES

	PAGE
Chrysler Corporation v. U. S., 316 U. S. 556	40
Federal Trade Com'n v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152	20
Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., et al., 3 C.C.H., Fed. Trade Reg. Serv., p. 26,210; aff'd 120 F. 2d 891	49
General Motors Corp. et al. v. United States, 121 F. 2d 376; cert. den. 314 U. S. 618	58
International Salt Company v. The United States of America, decided November 10, 1947	41
Labor Board v. Express Pub. Co., 312 U. S. 426	35
Penna. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333	21
Rolsky v. Fox Midwest Theatres, C. C. H., Fed. Trade Reg. Serv., p. 6442	49
Siegel Co. v. Trade Comm'n., 327 U. S. 608	41
U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707	35
U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173	35, 41, 58
United States v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 254 U. S. 255	61
United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319	29, 41
United States v. Radio Corporation of America, 46 F. Supp. 654	40
United States v. Schine, U. S.	36
United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106	40, 62
United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218	58, 62
Westway Theatre v. Twentieth Century-Fox F. Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830; aff'd 113 F. 2d 932	49

STATUTES CITED

	PAGE
26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, 4	5
34 Stat. 585	62

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947

LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., et al.,

Appellants,

vs.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

No. 80

BRIEF FOR TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION AND NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION

This brief is submitted on behalf of the defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary, National Theatres Corporation, who appeal from Sections III (5), III (6), and V of a decree (R. 3699-3700) of a district court for the Southern District of New York, convened under the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, entered December 31, 1946 (R. 3694-3701). These defendants are appellees in the plaintiff's appeal herein (No. 79), and in their brief on that appeal, which is bound herein, ask for affirmance of all the other provisions of the decree.

History of This Litigation

This action, under the Sherman Act, was begun July 20, 1938, against the then eight principal producers and distributors of motion pictures, five of whom operated theatres. The petition sought injunctions against various distribution and sales practices alleged to be maintained by contracts and conspiracies in restraint of trade, and to compel the five theatre-owning companies to divest themselves of their theatres.

An amended and supplemental complaint was filed on November 14, 1940 (R. 3137-3201). In this amended and supplemental complaint, the plaintiff criticized the lack of competitive bidding by competing exhibitors in the licensing of motion pictures (R. 3173, 3177, 3178). On November 20, 1940, by consent of the plaintiff and the five theatre-owning defendants, a decree was entered (R. 3373-3402). This consent decree, among other things, enjoined each distributor from offering a motion picture for license until after it had been completely produced and trade shown (Sec. III); prohibited each distributor from licensing its trade-shown pictures in groups of more than five at a time (Sec. IV); required each distributor to license its pictures to any exhibitor on some run (Sec. VI); specified standards for clearance (Sec. VIII), and enjoined each distributor from arbitrarily refusing to license a run (Sec. X). The plaintiff agreed that it would not, for a period of three years after the entry of the consent decree, either in this action or other proceeding, seek to compel the theatre-owning distributors to divest themselves of their theatres, or to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres of such defendants (Sec. XXI, R. 3395). A comprehensive arbitration system for determination of controversies arising under the decree was established under the auspices of the American Arbitration Association (Sec. XXII, R. 3395-3400).

On August 7, 1944, the plaintiff filed an application for a radical modification of the decree (R. 3414-3419). It requested a decree enjoining any defendant from thereafter acquiring any financial interest in any theatre, and requiring each defendant, within three years, to "completely divorce its exhibition business from its production and distribution business to the end that no defendant directly or indirectly engaged in producing or distributing films shall then own any financial interest in theatres" (R. 3418).

It sought to eliminate Section XVII of the consent decree, which affirmatively stated each distributor's right to license its pictures to exhibitors on such runs as it might negotiate.

The application for modification did not ask for the abolition of the arbitration system; rather, it provided not only for arbitration of clearance and the other disputes arbitrable under the consent decree but sought the inclusion of a new section, to replace old Sections IX and X, which the plaintiff suggested should read as follows:

> "No distributor defendant shall license or make available for exhibition in theatres any films released by it upon terms which have the effect of unreasonably restraining competition between two or more theatres in exhibiting said films. Controversies arising on a complaint by an exhibitor thereby affected that a distributor has so licensed or made available such films for exhibition in the complainant's theatre or in a theatre competing with his theatre shall be subject to arbitration in accordance with the terms of this decree. If the arbitrator finds that this section has been so violated, he shall make an award which will describe the specific course of conduct found by him to violate this section and will require the payment of an amount by such defendant or defendants as he finds have engaged in such conduct which in his judgment will compensate the complainant for any pecuniary loss sustained as the result of such a violation or violations and discourage the recurrence of such violations" (R. 3417-3418). (All emphasis in this brief is supplied.)

On February 5, 1945, the plaintiff moved for the entry of an order enjoining the five theatre-operating companies "from granting unreasonable clearance in licensing for exhibition in theaters feature films distributed by them, pending the entry of a final decree herein" (R. 3420-3421).

A hearing on that application was had on March 5, 1945. Before the motion for injunction was determined, plaintiff filed its certificate for an expediting court (R. 3502-3503), which deprived the district judge of jurisdiction.

Hearings before the expediting court, consisting of Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand and District Judges Henry W. Goddard and John Bright, began on October 8, 1945, and were concluded November 20, 1945. The plaintiff did not call any witnesses and relied wholly on what it called a "paper" case. Oral arguments were had in January, 1946 (R. 2545). The opinion herein was filed June 11, 1946 (R. 3504-3563). It is reported in 66 F. Supp. 323. Proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law were submitted by all parties and extensive hearings thereon were had in October, 1946 (R. 2814-3090). The findings of fact, conclusions of law and decree of the court were filed December 31, 1946 (R. 3659-3702). They are reported in 70 F. Supp. 53. Timely motions were made by the defendants to amend certain of the findings of fact, conclusions of law and provisions of the decree, and hearings were had thereon on January 22, 1947 (R. 3091-3135). An order was entered February 11, 1947, denying these motions in all substantial respects (R. 3719-3720).

These defendants filed their petition for appeal on February 26, 1947 (R. 3726-3727), with their assignments of error and prayers for reversal (R. 3727-3737). An order was that day entered allowing their appeal (R. 3737-3738). This Court noted probable jurisdiction by order dated June 23, 1947 (R. 3840).

Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of this Court to review by direct appeal the decree herein is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 272; 15 U. S. C. Sec. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925 (43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. Sec. 345).

Statutes Involved

The Sherman Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended (15 U. S. C. §§ 1, 2, 4):

> "§1. Trusts, etc., in restraint of trade illegal; exception of resale price agreements; penalty
>
> "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: * * *
>
> "§2. Monopolizing trade a misdemeanor; penalty
>
> "Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.
>
> * * * * * *
>
> "§4. Jurisdiction of courts; duty of district attorneys; procedure
>
> "The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1-7 and 15 of this title; * * *"

STATEMENT

Motion Picture Business

The motion picture business falls into three successive steps—production, distribution and exhibition.

The end result of production is a master negative representing the final photographic version or edition of the screen play. The motion picture which one sees in the theatre is projected from a positive print developed from this master negative.

At the time this proceeding was begun in 1938, there were, in addition to the eight defendants, numerous individuals and corporations engaged in producing motion pictures (R. 1263-1265, 1350-1352). The number of domestic producers has substantially increased during the succeeding decade (R. 1521-1552, 626-631) and many foreign-made pictures are being imported. The cost of producing pictures has increased substantially. Picture production is a highly speculative business. This is particularly so with respect to companies which produce many pictures each year as compared with producers who make only one or two specially selected productions.

A steady volume of quality feature productions is required for the successful operation of theatres. The ordinary American theatre, with its frequent program changes and double billings, requires approximately 208 to 312 feature productions annually.

There are thirteen nation-wide distributors of motion pictures engaged in licensing pictures to the 18,000 American theatres. All eight of the defendants are such distributors. In its own distributing business Twentieth Century-Fox, for instance, maintains branch offices—or exchanges, as they are known in the trade—in 31 of the principal cities of the United States. In each exchange there are salesmen and sales supervisors, bookers, cashiers, billers and other clerks. Twentieth Century-Fox's exchanges are separate from those of every other distributor and it uses no facilities in common. It distributes both its own films and some pictures made by independent producers (R. 1053-1055).

In the licensing of films by the distributor to the individual theatre, certain business practices developed. Many of them are as old as the industry itself. In large part, they owe their origin to economic necessity. Illustrative of this development is the system of runs and clearances. In 1944 the average film rental received by Twentieth Century-Fox on its most successful picture, Sweet Rosie O'Grady, was $201.89; yet the cost of a single positive print of that picture was $344.29. Thousands of theatres paid less than $50 film rental. And some theatres paid many times over the rental paid by the smaller theatres, as they must, if pictures are to be profitably produced.

This the court below recognized:

> "The costs of each black and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800. Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs with a reasonable protection for the earlier runs is adopted in the way of clearance." (R. 3531; cf. Finding 74, R. 3673)

Generally, a picture is first exhibited in the first-run theatres in the large cities; then in the first-run theatres in smaller communities; then in the neighborhood theatres in the larger cities and so on until the picture has been exhibited in 15,000 to 16,000 theatres in the United States.

Thus, when Twentieth Century-Fox licenses its picture "Captain from Castile" for exhibition in the Capitol theatre in Washington, no one else exhibits that picture in the Washington area during its performance at the Capitol, and for a limited number of days after the close of that engagement. That period of time which must elapse before the next showing of the picture, and which is usually specified in the contract, is called "clearance".

About the same time as "Captain from Castile" is exhibited for the first time or on first run in Washington, it is exhibited first run in Baltimore, Wilmington and Richmond. Exhibition in the more important smaller cities follows. Upon the expiration of a reasonable clearance period after the close of the first run showing in Washington, the picture comes to some of the neighborhood theatres and for many weeks thereafter is shown in different theatres throughout the city. For a period of two or three months, it can be seen at some theatre in Washington.

As a result of this method of licensing pictures, each theatre in the United States has a constant flow of pictures to it and every person has an opportunity to see every picture at an admission price he can afford to pay.

The exclusivity in the motion picture business is only temporary. The print, including all the sound effects, used at the Roxy theatre in New York and the Capitol in Washington, is exactly the same as the print used by a small theatre charging 15¢, some months later.

The necessity for runs and clearances is acknowledged by theatre operators. Usually a distributor licenses its pictures to a particular first-run exhibitor in an area. If this relationship proves to be satisfactory, it often continues from year to year (Thalheimer, R. 1379).

Of the 18,000 motion picture theatres in America, the five producer-distributors, Loew's, RKO, Paramount, Warner Bros. and Twentieth Century-Fox own or have an interest in only 3,137 (Finding 118, R. 3684). These theatres were acquired by the producers to prevent the boycotting of their productions, to provide regional "show cases" for the better advertisement of their productions, and to stimulate development of the industry.

From 1935 to 1945, 4,690 new theatres were opened (Finding 145, R. 3689). During that period Twentieth Century-Fox, for illustration, increased its total but 25 theatres. Thus, while the number of theatres greatly increased during the decade, Twentieth Century-Fox added an insignificant number.

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation is a New York corporation organized in 1915. It produces motion pictures of high quality and distributes them, and some produced by others, in the United States and throughout the rest of the world, except where prohibited or restricted by foreign governments. The number of pictures which it has distributed during the ten motion picture seasons preceding the hearings varied each season and ranged from 61 in the 1936-1937 season to 25 in the 1944-1945 season (Ex. F-5).

These pictures are approximately 9% in number of those produced in the United States, and a somewhat lesser percentage of those distributed here (Finding 103, R. 3678; Exs. 40, 50, 80, 93, 125, 137, 362).

Twentieth Century-Fox is owned by the public. No other motion picture company has any interest in it. None of its officers or directors is an officer or director of any other motion picture company. No officer or director of any other company is an officer or director of Twentieth Century-Fox (R. 216, 1253). Its pictures are produced in its own studio in Los Angeles, California, and distributed in this country from its 31 branches or exchanges located in the principal centers of population (R. 1053). It serves its more successful pictures to some 15,000 theatres in the United States, which is approximately the maximum number it could serve (R. 1072). Of the total film rental bill paid by all theatres in the United States, the part which Twentieth Century-Fox receives does not exceed 15% or 16%.

By far the largest source of its income is from film rentals paid by theatres which are unaffiliated with any producer or distributor. In 1944, such theatres paid to it 60.8% of its domestic revenue (Exs. F-18, F-27). Its own theatres account for 14.1%; the Loew's theatres, for 1.26%; the RKO theatres, for 5.52%; the Warner theatres, for 4.82%; and the theatres in which Paramount has an interest, for 13.46% (Finding 144, R. 3688; Exs. F-18, F-27).

Roxy Theatre, Inc.

Since 1937, Twentieth Century-Fox has owned all of the common stock of Roxy Theatre, Inc., which owns the Roxy theatre and the leasehold upon which it is erected at 50th Street and 7th Avenue in New York. This is one of the outstanding theatres in America and is used as a show case for Twentieth Century-Fox product. It is also a profitable investment. For some years, no pictures except those released by Twentieth Century-Fox have been exhibited therein (R. 1120-1121). It pays large film rentals (Exs. F-12, F-21). For statistical convenience it is treated as a theatre of National. Twentieth Century-Fox has no interest in any other theatre except through its ownership of National Theatres Corporation.

National Theatres Corporation

Twentieth Century-Fox owns all the capital stock of National Theatres Corporation. National has five principal subsidiaries which own, lease and operate motion picture theatres in various parts of the United States, mostly in the western states (R. 2100-2101). The stock of National, formerly known as Wesco Corporation, was originally held by the public and was acquired by Twentieth Century-Fox in 1928 (R. 2104).

In 1933, the principal subsidiaries of National became bankrupt and their affairs were administered by trustees (R. 2105). In 193[illegible] reorganizations of these subsidiaries were completed. The ultimate result was that The Chase National Bank of the City of New York, which had been the largest creditor of National, became the controlling stockholder, owning 58% of the stock, and Twentieth Century-Fox, 42%. For eight years, the Chase National Bank continued to be the majority stockholder until, in 1943, Chase sold its stock to Twentieth Century-Fox for $13,000,000 (R. 1253).

Each of the five principal subsidiaries of National operates in a different part of the country and is separately managed by its own board of directors and officers (R. 2100). Fox Midwest has its home office in Kansas City; Fox Wisconsin in Milwaukee; Fox Inter-Mountain in Denver; Evergreen State Amusement in Seattle, and Fox West Coast Theatres in Los Angeles. Theatre policies, admission prices and methods of operation are determined upon and conducted separately by the management of each. Each of the five subsidiaries has its own film licensing department and the respective officers of the companies have complete authority to enter into all contracts relating to the operation of the theatres and particularly film license agreements (R. 2009, 2015, 2052, 2100, 2107).

Acquisition of Theatres

Fox Film Corporation was organized in 1915 by William Fox, then already engaged in producing motion pictures and owning a few theatres and a booking agency.

In 1926, Fox Film Corporation acquired an interest in theatres on the West Coast by buying a one-third stock interest in West Coast Theatres, Inc.

The remaining two-thirds stock interest in that corporation was shortly thereafter acquired by Hayden, Stone & Co., bankers, who organized National Theatres Corporation (then known as Wesco Corporation) and sold its stock to the public. In 1928, Fox Film Corporation acquired the stock of National by issuing its own stock therefor and thus became the holder of all the stock of West Coast Theatres, Inc., the name of which it changed to Fox West Coast Theatres (R. 2104).

At that time Fox West Coast Theatres had a number of less than wholly owned subsidiaries and was associated with various individuals in the ownership and operation of motion picture theatres in different localities. These partial interests it has continued to hold. The other stockholders or "joint owners" were various: some were theatre operators who had formerly sold a part of their interest; some were heirs of former theatre operators; and some were simply members of the general investing public. Thus, a number of the partially owned theatre interests of National as they stand today came into existence prior to the time when Twentieth Century-Fox or National had any interest whatsoever in the theatres involved.

At the time of trial, National had an interest in 636 theatres out of a total of 18,076 in the country (Finding 118, R. 3684). It had one in Philadelphia and one in Detroit. It had first run theatres in Kansas City, Missouri, and in Kansas City, Kansas, in Wichita, Kansas, in San Diego, Oakland, Sacramento, San Francisco, Long Beach and Los Angeles, California, in Denver, in Spokane, in Seattle, in Portland, Oregon, and in Milwaukee. In none of the other 75 of the 92 cities in the United States having a population of 100,000 or more, did Twentieth Century-Fox or National have any theatre, first run or otherwise. In all of the 17 larger cities in which they had first-run theatres, they had first-run competition except in Wichita, Kansas.

There are 320 cities in the United States which have a population of between 25,000 and 100,000. In only 38 of them has National any theatres, and, as to these 38, it should be said that 7 of them are, in fact, part of metropolitan Los Angeles.

There are 1,630 towns in the country which have a population of between 5,000 and 25,000. National has theatre interests in only 102. These theatres of National are about one-half of one per cent. of the total number of theatres in the country. They were either acquired in 1928 as a part of National, as it was then constituted, or are theatres built or leased better to serve the communities in which National was then operating, or are theatres in communities adjacent to those in which National did have theatres (Finding 42, R. 3667).

Summary of Position in Industry

To sum it up: Twentieth Century-Fox produces about 9% of the feature motion pictures produced in this country and distributes a somewhat lesser percentage. As a distributor it receives between 15% or 16% of the film rental paid by all theatres in the United States. Sixty percent of its revenue comes from unaffiliated, independent, exhibitors. It has an interest in only 636 theatres out of a total of 18,076. It has first run theatres in only 17 out of the 92 largest cities in the United States and has first run competition in every one of those cities except Wichita, Kansas.

National's Use of Other Distributors' Pictures

Twentieth Century-Fox does not make enough pictures to operate its own theatres exclusively with its own pictures. Nor does the revenue it receives from exhibiting its own pictures in its theatres begin to meet production costs.

As the court below found, except for a very limited number of theatres in the very largest cities, the 18,000 theatres in the United States exhibit the product of more than one distributor, and those theatres could not be operated on the product of only one distributor (Finding 151, R. 3689). This, indeed, is obvious. While the very largest theatres in the very largest cities may exhibit one picture on a single feature policy for several weeks, the ordinary theatre operates on a double feature policy, changes its program two or three times a week, and uses 208 to 312 pictures a year. A theatre, regardless of who its owner is, which changes its program two or three times a week and "double-features", uses substantially all of the quality motion pictures produced in this country.

National therefore licenses pictures distributed by the seven other distributor defendants and by other distributors, not defendants, both for exhibition in its first-run theatres in the larger cities and in its other theatres. Thus, in Kansas City, Missouri, it presently requires only the pictures of one other distributor, first run, to supplement its own, but in its neighborhood houses it uses pictures of all distributors. In Denver, it uses the product of several other companies first run, and in its neighborhood houses it uses pictures of all distributors.

What is true of National is true, in general, of the theatres of the other four theatre-owning defendants. Each supplements its program by exhibiting pictures of the other producers. Twentieth Century-Fox licenses its pictures for exhibition in some, but by no means all, of the theatres of the other four theatre-owning defendants.

There is, however, no condition imposed by National that when it licenses, for example, Warner pictures for exhibition in some of its theatres, Warner theatres shall license Twentieth Century-Fox pictures for exhibition in Warner theatres. The same is equally true as to Loew's, RKO and Paramount (R. 2107).

Nor is there any pattern of combination, conspiracy or restraint of competition discernible from the use of the pictures of other companies, as is shown below.

Loew's

In the 92 cities of more than 100,000 population, National exhibits Loew's pictures first run in 11. It does not license Loew's pictures in Portland, Oregon, Philadelphia or Detroit, although Loew's does not have theatres in those cities. National is in direct competition with Loew's first run in New York, Kansas City, Missouri, and Denver.

Loew's has first-run theatres in 36 of the cities. It uses Twentieth Century-Fox pictures, first run, in only 9 of them.

RKO

In those 92 cities, National exhibits RKO pictures first run in 8. It does not license RKO pictures in Long Beach, Philadelphia, Milwaukee or Detroit, although RKO does not have theatres in those cities. National is in direct competition with RKO first run in New York, Kansas City, Missouri, Denver, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

On the other hand, RKO has first-run theatres in 18 of these cities. Yet RKO theatres license most of Twentieth Century-Fox pictures first run only in 5 and some of them in 4 of these cities.

Paramount

In those 92 cities, National exhibits Paramount pictures first run in 10. It does not license Paramount pictures first run in Philadelphia, Denver or Kansas City, Kansas, although Paramount does not have any interest in theatres in those cities. National is in direct competition with Paramount first run in New York, Detroit, Kansas City, Missouri, and Los Angeles.

On the other hand, Paramount has an interest in theatres in 47 of these cities. Yet its subsidiaries license Twentieth Century-Fox pictures in only 22.

Warner

In those 92 cities, National exhibits most of Warner pictures first run in 6. It exhibits part of Warner pictures in 4: Long Beach, Oakland, San Diego and Sacramento. A non-affiliated exhibitor in those four cities is licensed the other Warner pictures. National does not license Warner pictures first run in Detroit, Kansas City, Kansas, or Kansas City, Missouri, although Warner does not operate theatres in those cities. National is in direct competition with Warner in New York, Los Angeles, Milwaukee and Philadelphia.

On the other hand, although Warner has theatres in 28 of the cities, it licenses Twentieth Century-Fox product in only 5, and, in two of these 5, only a part of the product.

Summary

National exhibits:

Loew's pictures in 11 of the 92 cities
RKO pictures in 8 of the 92 cities
Paramount pictures in 10 of the 92 cities
Warner pictures in 6 and a part in 4 of the 92 cities.

Twentieth Century-Fox licenses:

Loew's to exhibit its pictures in 9 of the 92 cities
RKO to exhibit its pictures in 5 and a part in 5 of the 92 cities
Paramount's subsidiaries to exhibit its pictures in 22 of the 92 cities.
Warner to exhibit its pictures in 3 and a part in 2 of the 92 cities.

Film Payments Received by Twentieth Century-Fox and Paid by National

A comparison of the film payments made to Twentieth Century-Fox by the four other theatre-owning defendants and the payments made by theatres of National to the four other theatre-owning defendants, likewise negatives the existence of any combination or conspiracy. It shows that there is not the slightest relationship between the payments made to Twentieth Century-Fox by the theatres of any other distributor and the payments made to any other distributor by the theatres operated by National.

Thus, during the last twelve years, the revenue which Twentieth Century-Fox has received from the Loew's theatres has never exceeded 2.1% of its domestic total; currently, it is somewhat less (Exs. F-18, F-27). During the same period, the revenue which it has received from the RKO theatres has never exceeded 5.74% of its domestic total; currently, it is 5.52% (Exs. F-18, F-27). The revenue which it has received from the Warner theatres has never exceeded 5.35% of its domestic total; it has been as low as 1.98%; currently, it is 4.82% (Exs. F-18, F-27).

Twentieth Century-Fox also licenses its pictures to some of the theatres operated by the many separate operating groups in which Paramount has an interest. During the last twelve years, the revenue received by Twentieth Century-Fox from those theatres in the aggregate has never exceeded 14.23% of its domestic total. It has been as low as 8.70%; currently, it is 13.46% (Exs. F-18, F-27).

Contrast this with National's payments during the last ten years. It has paid Twentieth Century-Fox from 16.72% to 27.47% of National's annual film bill; in 1944-1945 it was 20.01%. It has paid Loew's from 21.14% to 34.75%; in 1944-1945 it was 23.51%. It has paid Paramount from 12.71% to 18.19%; in 1944-1945 it was 15.61%. It has paid Warners from 8.87% to 12.47%; in 1944-1945 it was 9.62%. It has paid RKO from 7.04% to 10.24%; in 1944-1945 it was 9.52% (Ex. F-18, F-23).

In the 1943-1944 film releasing season (the test year generally used at the hearings) the same disparity of payments and receipts existed as is shown by the following table which has been compiled from defendants' answers to plaintiff's interrogatories.

Twentieth Century-Fox received from the theatres of

Loew's	2.1%	of its domestic film rental which was 6.6% of the Loew's theatres total film bill
RKO	5.2%	of its domestic film rental which was 17.0% of the RKO theatres total film bill
Warner	4.6%	of its domestic film rental which was 10.1% of the Warner theatres total film bill
Paramount	12.7%	of its domestic film rental which was 14.6% of the Paramount theatres total film bill
National	10.6%	of its domestic film rental which was 20.0% of the National theatres total film bill
Independents	60.1%	of its domestic film rental 100.%

National Theatres paid the following percentages of its total film bill to

Loew's	23.5%	which was 9.5% of Loew's domestic film rental
RKO	9.5%	which was 7.6% of RKO's domestic film rental
Warner	9.6	which was 7.8% of Warner's domestic film rental
Paramount	15.6%	which was 8.4% of Paramount's domestic film rental
Twentieth Century-Fox	20.0%	which was 10.6% of Twentieth Century-Fox's domestic film rental
Other distributors	21.8%
	100. %

The utter lack of relationship during the last decade between payment and receipt for films wholly refutes any claim that the theatre interests of the defendants have been used to control the distribution of their pictures.

Moreover, during this period there have been significant increases in both the dollar volume and the percentage of the whole which National has paid to the non-theatre-owning distributors. Thus, in 1935, National paid to Columbia 2.60% of its total film rental, and in 1944, 4.59%. In 1935 it paid to Universal 2.99% of its film rental; in 1944, 8.11%. In 1936 it paid to Republic .98% of its total film rental; in 1944, 2.27%.

Opinion, Findings, and Decree

The court below held that there was no monopoly or restraint of competition in the production of motion pictures (Findings 59, 60, R. 3670, 3695). The plaintiff, moreover, conceded that at the exhibition level each picture was in competition with every other picture for public patronage (R. 1062).

> "Mr. Wright: In so far as pictures themselves are concerned, I suppose every picture that plays, whether it plays in theatres owned by the same exhibitor or in others, it is in competition for public patronage with every other picture, and that each distributor wants to get the most that he possibly can out of every picture that is exhibited, wherever it is exhibited. I do not think there can be any question about that." (R. 1062)

Thus, at the beginning of the process—the production of a picture— and at the other end—the seeking of public patronage—there was found to be competition and no violation of the anti-trust laws.

The court held, however, that in the distribution of pictures the defendants by concert had maintained admission prices, uniform clearances and fixed runs. These it held to be violations of the anti-trust laws. Refusing to follow Federal Trade Com'n v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152, it assumed that the simultaneous sale of two or more pictures was the conditioning of the license of one motion picture on the licensing of another, and illegal.

The conspiracy or concert of action which the court below found with respect to distribution practices as to runs, clearances and admission prices was based entirely upon inferences from similarity of action. What was found and condemned was a rigidity in the selection of customers, the licensing of runs, the granting of clearances and the specification of admission prices. These similar trade practices grew out of competition rather than out of restraints of competition and, in fact, were encouraged by governmental agencies such as the Federal Trade Commission in 1927 and the NRA in 1933-1935.

The principal executives of the defendants testified and categorically denied conscious conspiracy or combination. There was no countervailing testimony by the plaintiff and it is submitted that the testimony of these responsible officials that the offenses found did not originate in actual agreements or conscious conspiracies should have been accepted. Penna. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 288 U. S. 333.

The court below held that there was no illegality in the ownership of theatres by a distributor, that the defendants neither individually nor collectively had any monopoly of theatres or of the business of exhibiting motion pictures, and that the illegalities and restraints found were not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors but in admission price-fixing and non-competitive granting of runs and clearances (Finding 154, R. 3690). The statutory court concluded that total divestiture of theatres would not remedy the distribution and sales practices found unreasonably to restrict competition and would be damaging to the public (Findings 155, 156, R. 3690).

The controlling findings are as follows (R. 3689-3690):

"152. There is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in production, distribution, or exhibition of motion pictures, except as found in findings 153 and 154 below.

"153. In localities where there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of the competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from 'inherent vice' on the part of these defendants.

"154. The illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited.

"155. Total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned and would be damaging to the public.

"156. Total divestiture would not remedy the price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and the other practices which have been found unreasonably to restrict competition."

The decree is in two principal parts. The first, Section II, deals with distribution practices. Each distributor is enjoined

1) from fixing the minimum admission price which the exhibitor charges the public (Decree II (1), R. 3695);

2) from granting clearances fixed by agreement with other distributors, or between theatres not in substantial competition, or in excess of that necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted (Decree II (2), (3), (4), R. 3695-3696);

3) from performing or making any franchise, formula deals or master agreements (Decree II (5), (6), R. 3696);

4) from conditioning the licensing of one picture on the exhibitors' licensing another (Decree II (7), R. 3696);

5) from licensing any feature as between competing exhibitors who desire to show it on the same run except on a competitive basis under which license is granted to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor (Decree II (8), R. 3696-3698); and

6) from arbitrarily refusing to license one exhibitor a picture on the run desired, and then licensing that same picture on the same run to his competitor (Decree II (9), R. 3698).

The second, Section III, deals with exhibition. National, and each theatre-owning company, is required to terminate existing pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby profits of "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-arranged percentages (Decree III (2), R. 3698). In fact, National, although not conceding the validity of this requirement, has terminated all such arrangements and has so reported to the district court in accordance with the decree (III, (5), R. 3699-3700). It has also terminated its arrangement with Paramount in San Francisco and Paramount is now operating its own theatres in that city exhibiting therein its own and other distributors' pictures in competition with National.

Twentieth Century-Fox and National are enjoined from owning in conjunction with another (who is a former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator), any interest in a theatre unless its interest is 95% or more. Where National has a lesser interest, it must either divest itself thereof or acquire from its co-owner an additional interest so as to increase its interest to 95% or more. But National is permitted to acquire such an additional interest only if it secures the approval of the court upon a showing that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of motion pictures (Decree III (5), R. 3699-3700).

National is enjoined from expanding its present theatre holdings (Decree III (6), R. 3700).

The consent decree was terminated, and with respect to the arbitration system the decree provided (Decree V, R. 3700):

> "But this shall in no way preclude the parties or any other persons from setting up a reasonable system of arbitration either through the use of the present boards or any others as among themselves."

The court retained jurisdiction for the purposes of enabling any of the parties to the judgment, and no others, to apply for such orders or direction as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction, modification or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof (Decree VIII, R. 3701).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

Points to Be Argued

On this appeal, Twentieth Century-Fox and National Theatres argue only their assignments of error Nos. 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 35 and 39. The other assignments, however, are not abandoned in so far as they bear upon these defendants' arguments as appellees. Stated generally, these two defendants are not urging on this appeal any error in connection with Section II of the decree which enjoins various distribution and sales practices and which sets up a new method of distributing motion pictures on a bidding or competitive negotiation basis. They do urge that two paragraphs of Section III of the decree, namely, paragraph 5, dealing with holdings in less than wholly-owned subsidiaries, and paragraph 6, prohibiting the expansion of theatre holdings, be deleted. They also submit that the arbitration system created pursuant to the consent decree be retained, with appropriate modifications to deal with the problems which will arise under the decree.

ARGUMENT AS APPELLANTS

FIRST: THE DECREE SHOULD BE MODIFIED BY DELETING THOSE PROVISIONS OF PARAGRAPH 5 OF SECTION III WHICH PROHIBIT THE CONTINUED OWNERSHIP BY NATIONAL OF PARTIAL INTERESTS IN THEATRES IN CONJUNCTION WITH NON-DEFENDANTS.

After a painstaking review of the voluminous record in this case, the court below found:

(1) that the acquisition of theatres by Twentieth Century-Fox was legal and did not violate the anti-trust laws (R. 354; cf. R. 1945);

(2) that by such theatre holdings Twentieth Century-Fox does not and cannot individually or collectively with other defendants, have a monopoly of exhibition (Finding 119, R. 3684; cf. R. 3553);

(3) that the ownership of such theatres did not create or cause the illegal restraints of trade found by the court (Finding 154, R. 3690; cf. R. 3554-3555);

(4) that the illegal restraints found by the court involved primarily certain distribution practices, common to all distributors and applied to all exhibitors, restraints which could be effectively eliminated by the ordinary injunctive processes without resort to the harsh and extreme remedy of divestiture (Finding 156, R. 3690);

(5) that divestiture would be injurious to Twentieth Century-Fox and damaging to the public (Finding 155, R. 3690).

In spite of these categorical conclusions, abundantly justified by the record, the court below proceeded to decree that where National owns less than all of a theatre, it must acquire from the other owner or stockholder an interest sufficient to bring its holdings to 95%, or dispose of its partial interest in the theatre. In so far as these provisions of the decree apply to theatres in which the other owner or stockholder is a non-defendant, we contend that they are unsupportable and should be deleted.

Apart from the propriety of such requirement, it must be obvious that it places National in a most inequitable position. As the other owner or stockholder cannot be compelled to sell, National may have no alternative but to divest itself of its partial interest if he should refuse to sell at a reasonable price.

This ruling came as a surprise to all the parties. The plaintiff, in its pleadings, did not claim that any illegality resulted from relationships between a single defendant—such as National—and an independent. The plaintiff did not, during the hearings, tender any issue with respect to that subject. It introduced no evidence except as to the fact that each of the defendants had some wholly-owned subsidiaries and some partially owned. The exhibits referred to in the court's opinion (R. 3548) were introduced to prove relationships between one defendant and another defendant or an alleged affiliate of such other defendant. The plaintiff's claim of illegality was in the joint ownership of theatres by defendants. None of those exhibits was offered to establish any basic illegality in the joint ownership of theatres by a defendant and another person not a defendant. Nor does any of them furnish any support for the court's decision in this respect. Moreover, no evidence was introduced concerning the mannet of acquisition, the intent or purpose of the acquisition, or the present effect upon competitive conditions of such partially-owned interests.

The inadequacy of the record to support the court's decision on this point is strikingly illustrated when applied to National. There are approximately 50 situations in which National and a non-defendant are interested in theatres, either through the ownership of stock in corporations or the ownership of a direct interest in the theatres themselves (Exs. 21-24). Some of these situations involve only one theatre. Others involve a substantial number of theatres. Yet there is evidence in this case with respect to only 2 of these 50 situations. And, with respect to these 2, the evidence simply consists of the documents and agreements reflecting the joint interest (Exs. 238, 239). Furthermore, as stated above, even this documentary evidence was introduced by the plaintiff solely for the purpose of establishing that the relationship between National and the other parties thereto was a relation between National and another defendant—a factual point contested by the defendants and not determined by the court.

Nor was it urged by the plaintiff in argument, or otherwise, that illegality existed in the ownership of less than all of an interest in a theatre. Because of this, and because the court had indicated that it was not concerned with the origin or development of these relationships (R. 105), no evidence was offered by National as to these situations. We therefore think it fair to state that the record is barren of any evidence to justify the judgment of the court below on this issue.

We think that the court below reached its decision concerning these partially owned theatres by resorting to an unjustifiable analogy. The court had determined that the pooling of competing theatres by a defendant and another was an improper restraint of competition. It then apparently concluded that in every other instance in which some other person was interested in a theatre with a defendant the relationship was tantamount to a pool. Because of this assumption it made Finding 116 and included in the decree the blanket condemnation of these joint ownerships.

We contend the court erred in the assumptions which it made and in the conclusions which it drew from them. In Finding 116, the court said (R. 3683):

> "116. When theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. The major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently."

It is perfectly true that the other owners of the stock in corporations in which National has an interest wish to participate in the business of exhibiting motion pictures in the sense that they wish to participate in the profits of the enterprise. But it does not at all follow that such persons would have entered the motion picture business on their own, or would have built or operated theatres in competition with National. The record does not disclose whether these other stockholders are exhibitors, putative or otherwise. There is nothing to show that in fact their original investment with National was a restraint of competition or that but for the investment with National they would have operated competing theatres.

We therefore submit that it is not a per se violation of the anti-trust laws for National to own less than all the stock of a subsidiary which owns or operates a theatre. We further submit that to determine illegality in such a case there must be established: monopoly, the improper union of theretofore competing theatres, or the illegal operation of the theatres in some manner which restrains trade.

Furthermore, from what little evidence there is in the record on the subject, it appears that there is substantial competition in the communities where some of these partially owned theatres are located. For example, the competitive conditions in Los Angeles, where a number of National's less than wholly owned subsidiaries are located, are described in the record at pages 2125-2130. If there is already competition, this Court in United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319, made it clear that divestiture will not be authorized just to secure an additional competitor.

The principal restraints of trade found by the court, and the only restraints with respect to which direct evidence was introduced by the plaintiff, can all be effectively prevented by injunction. Where this is so, this Court has made it plain, in the National Lead case that the extreme remedy of divestiture will not be granted. In that case, the Government sought divestiture of property lawfully acquired—a situation quite analogous on the record in the present case. The restraints charged consisted of agreements between competitors which restricted the trade in the product manufactured in the plant, divestiture of which was prayed. With those restrictive agreements enjoined, the ownership of the physical plants was held legal and divestiture unnecessary. In summing up its conclusions, this Court said (332 U. S. 319, 353):

> "It is not for the courts to realign and redirect effective and lawful competition where it already exists and needs only to be released from restraints that violate the antitrust laws. To separate the operating units of going concerns without more supporting evidence than has been presented here to establish either the need for, or the feasibility of, such separation would amount to an abuse of discretion."

We think the above language is particularly appropriate here. We emphasize that the record contains no evidence whatsoever with respect to the great majority of these jointly held theatre interests. Nothing is shown as to their origin, their purpose or their effect. There is nothing upon which this Court could predicate a determination that it was necessary to realign these existing operating units. There is no evidence that effective and lawful competition does not exist in the communities where these theatres are located.

The court below has indicated that all objectionable restraints in distribution can be effectively prevented by injunction. It found no monopoly in exhibition. There is no evidence that the great majority of the theatre interests affected represent improper joinder of theretofore competing units. Consequently divestiture is not an appropriate remedy here.

While not receding from the position taken above, we submit that at least the provisions of paragraph 5 of Section III of the decree should be modified to permit the retention by National of its less than wholly owned subsidiaries where it can show to the court that its retention would not unlawfully restrain competition. The option granted by the decree that National may "buy or sell" outstanding partial interests is somewhat illusory, as the court did not undertake, as it could not have undertaken, to compel the other stockholder to "buy or sell." It must be apparent that in many instances it may be impossible for National to buy and that a retention of its partial interest,—where that interest represents no unreasonable restraint of competition,—is the only just solution.

SECOND: THE DECREE SHOULD BE MODIFIED BY DELETING PARAGRAPH 6 OF SECTION III WHICH ENJOINS THE DEFENDANTS FROM EXPANDING THEIR PRESENT THEATRE HOLDINGS.

We respectfully submit that the court below erred in incorporating in the decree the provisions contained in paragraph 6 of Section III which enjoin the defendants from expanding their present theatre holdings. Nothing in the record, in the opinion or in the findings of fact furnishes any basis for the inclusion of this injunction.

As stated, the court has found that it is legal for Twentieth Century-Fox and National to own and operate theatres (R.

3554). It has found that Twentieth Century-Fox and National have no monopoly in the exhibition field either nationally or in particular localities. It has found that there is no evidence indicating that anything done by these defendants constitutes an attempt to monopolize exhibition.

The illegality which the court found in the ownership of partial interests in conjunction with another was not in the number of such interests or because they constituted monopolization but rather that they were restraints of competition.

The court has found that in 1945, Twentieth Century-Fox and National had an interest in only 636 theatres, or about 3.52% of the then 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States (Finding 118, R. 3684). The court did not criticize or find anything illegal in any of the activities of these defendants in acquiring those theatres. Nor did it intimate that the position of these defendants was so substantial in the exhibition field that its enlargement might bring about unlawful restraints. Moreover, it has not found, nor would there be any support in the record for a finding, that Twentieth Century-Fox or National has indicated any intention or desire to expand in any substantial way.

We submit that the only justification for the injunction against expansion of theatre interests would be that the acquisition of additional theatres would result in monopolization or restraint of trade. Yet the court, in its opinion, expressly stated that this was not the case. It said that there was no basis for injunctions against these defendants as exhibitors by reason of any monopolistic practices in the exhibition field (R. 3553):

> "The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. They can only be restrained from the > unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block-booking, and other things we have criticized."

Indeed, the court, in its opinion, in outlining the decree to be entered, indicated that it recognized the propriety of permitting certain types of theatre acquisitions in the future, coupled in certain instances with approval by the court. It said (R. 3562):

> "But it [the decree] shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the later case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor."

Despite this statement, however, the court, when it finally entered the decree, incorporated the injunction against expansion, and denied the defendants the right to apply to the court for relief in specific instances.

We urge that this provision of the decree running counter, as it does, to the opinion, and without support in the record, should be eliminated. In view of the insignificant position which these defendants have in the exhibition field, it is clear that the acquisition of additional theatres would not, per se, result in any monopoly or other violation of the anti-trust laws.

Twentieth Century-Fox and National have no theatres in 29 states. Moreover, in the 92 largest cities of the United States, those having a population of 100,000 or more, these defendants have theatres in only 17 of such cities. For example, they have no theatre in Chicago, Boston, St. Louis, Baltimore, Washington, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Dallas, Atlanta, Louisville, Indianapolis, Birmingham, Fort Worth, Houston, San Antonio, New Orleans, Cleveland, Columbus, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, Omaha, Des Moines, or 53 other cities having a population of 100,000 or more.

It is manifest that the acquisition of new theatres in areas where they do not now operate, and particularly where other defendants or large circuits have theatres, would promote and stimulate competition rather than restrain it. Certainly the erection by Twentieth Century-Fox of a new theatre in Washington would be in the public interest and would stimulate, rather than restrain, competition.

Apart from this consideration, however, the injunction in question seriously affects the normal business operations of the defendants. The court has held that it is proper for National to continue its operations in the areas in which it now has theatres. Yet, the restrictions contained in the decree effectively imperil even that business. In serving the communities where it now has theatres, National must be permitted to develop its business in line with the needs of those communities. It is obvious that in order to maintain its business it will be necessary from time to time to build or otherwise acquire other newer and more modern theatres in order to keep pace with the growth of these communities and changing factors in the theatre field. Shifts of population and new building developments may likewise require additional theatres. If National is to serve the territory which is contiguous to the community now served by it, it must be permitted to construct new theatres.

These are considerations which are wholly unrelated to any issue of "expansion" as the term has been used by the plaintiff in this case. They are but incidents of normal business development and growth. No reason exists to deny them to these defendants.

There is nothing in the history of the acquisitions by National during the last decade which would indicate any purpose on its part to acquire a substantial number of additional theatres. As above stated, the district court found that National had an interest in 636 theatres at the time of trial. This we think erroneous and that the accurate number was 581. But be that as it may, the net increase in the number of its theatres from 1938 to 1945 was but 25, which is at the average rate of a little more than 3 a year. In that same period the net increase of all theatres in the United States was over 4,000 (Finding 118, R. 3684).

While no injunction against the acquisition of additional theatres should be contained in the decree, we submit that, if the present language be retained, provision should be made to permit a defendant to come to court for approval of any acquisition upon a showing that the proposed acquisition would not unduly restrain competition in exhibition. We contend that the very least to which these defendants are entitled is a qualification along these lines. We see no justification for denying to the defendants the opportunity of demonstrating to the satisfaction of the court that a proposed theatre acquisition would not restrain competition and therefore should be permitted. To carry this provision, which is obviously punitive, to the extent of condemning theatre acquisition, without regard to its purpose or effect, can, we submit, find no support in authority. See U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 726; Labor Board v. Express Pub. Co., 312 U. S. 426.

While we do not contend that the precedent is controlling, we point out that in U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, the United States appealed from that part of the decree dealing with future acquisition of theatres and asked this Court to substitute for the lower court's decree a provision restraining future acquisitions "except after an affirmative showing that such acquisition will not unreasonably restrain competition". That was done (323 U. S. 173, 185, 187). We also suggest that in United States v. Schine, recently argued here, Section III of the decree entered July 2, 1946, provided:

> "No defendant shall acquire a financial interest in any additional theatres except after an affirmative showing that such acquisition will not unreasonably restrain competition. Such showing shall be made before this court upon reasonable notice to the Attorney General at Washington, D. C."

The United States did not appeal.

THIRD: THE DECREE SHOULD BE MODIFIED SO AS TO PROVIDE FOR THE CONTINUANCE OF THE ARBITRATION SYSTEM ESTABLISHED PURSUANT TO THE CONSENT DECREE AND FOR THE ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES UNDER THE DECREE.

The pleadings upon which the hearings were held are the amended complaint filed November 14, 1940 (R. 3137-3201), and the motion to modify the decree, filed August 7, 1944 (R. 3414-3419).

The amended complaint filed after substantial discovery proceedings, both by way of examination of officers of the defendants on oral depositions and answers to searching and voluminous interrogatories (R. 3199-3200), prays that a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals, or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper, be established to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained in the decree. In the decree entered on consent on November 20, 1940, an arbitration system was established and the American Arbitration Association was made administrator of that system (R. 3373, 3376, 3377, 3378, 3379, 3382-3386, 3392, 3395-3400, 3402-3413).

The system worked well. Tribunals were established in each of the 31 exchange cities and a panel of 1065 outstanding citizens nominated by the American Arbitration Association to serve as arbitrators. At November 1, 1945, 416 proceedings had been begun—approximately three-fourths related to clearance. Legitimate grievances were corrected. There had been 283 awards. In 177 some relief was granted (Ex. W-16, Schedule III), thus demonstrating the effectiveness of arbitration to solve exhibitors' grievances.

In its application for a modification of the decree filed August 7, 1944, the plaintiff not only did not ask for a discontinuance of the arbitration system but rather sought an extension of it so as to make arbitrable a claim by an exhibitor that motion pictures had been licensed by a distributor upon terms which had the effect of unreasonably restraining competition between two or more theatres in exhibiting such pictures. The plaintiff proposed that the arbitrator should be authorized to make an award which would proscribe the specific course of conduct found by him to violate the decree and require the payment of an amount of money which would compensate the complainant for any pecuniary loss sustained as a result of a violation, and discourage the recurrence of such violations.

Yet, at the trial, the Special Assistant Attorney General who was trial counsel for the plaintiff was unwilling to consent to a continuance of the arbitration system at all. The district court apparently considered consent of the plaintiff necessary, and, lacking it, regretfully decreed the termination of the arbitration system. In this respect, we think it underestimated its power.

In its opinion the court said:

> "Counsel for the five major defendants and their subsidiaries contend that the consent decree has, in some respects at least, the effect of a final judgment which may not be modified. But we cannot see how such a position is consistent with the language of Section XXIII (d), which permits '* * * any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of the decree for any modification thereof.' That period has expired, and therefore everything relating to rights under and remedies for violation of the Sherman Act is, therefore, open for consideration, even as between consenting parties; and certainly nothing has hitherto been decided which affected the non-consenting parties. It would seem to follow that we cannot bind any parties to subject themselves to the arbitration system or the board of appeals set up in aid of it without their consent, even though we may regard it as desirable that such a system, in view of its demonstrated usefulness, should be continued in aid of the decree which we propose to direct." (R. 3516)

Finding 160 is as follows:

> "160. The arbitration system created by the Consent Decree of November 20, 1940, has demonstrated its usefulness in dealing with exhibitors' complaints of unreasonable clearance and if extended to cover differences which may occur under the system to be established by the Decree herein, will be effective and result in quick and expeditious decisions and a saving of time and money." (R. 3690-3691)

In its supplemental opinion of December 31, 1946, the court said (R. 3702):

> "The arrangement for arbitration and an appeal board has been terminated except as to unfinished litigations and other matters referred to in the decree, because of the unwillingness of some of the parties to consent to their continuance. Nevertheless, as we have indicated in the opinion, these tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded.
>
> "Indeed, the arbitration system set up under the consent decree of November 20, 1940, was created pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint by the United States filed November 14, 1940, in which, among other things, the plaintiff prayed that 'a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein.'
>
> "We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree."

In the first place, the consent given by the plaintiff in 1940 was not limited to the three year trial period referred to in Sections XXI or XXIII (R. 3395, 3400). That period was primarily related to the time during which the plaintiff was not free to seek divestiture of theatres. While, of course, the arbitration system could be modified or even abolished by the court under the modification clause in Section XXIII of the decree, that only could be done by evidence and for cause. Chrysler Corporation v. U. S., 316 U. S. 556; United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106; United States v. Radio Corporation of America, 46 F. Supp. 654 (D. C. Del., 1942). Certainly, at the end of three years the district court would not have been required, contrary to its own judgment, to terminate the arbitration system because the plaintiff withdrew its consent.

The court below found, as a fact,

(1) that arbitration was a particularly appropriate and efficient remedy;

(2) that actual use of arbitration, following the entry of the consent decree, had demonstrated the effectiveness of that remedy; but

(3) concluded that, in the absence of consent of the plaintiff, it was without power to impose what it had found to be an appropriate remedy for meeting the situation.

The need for this proper remedy is even more imperative under the final decree of the court below. That decree necessarily speaks in general terms, particularly with respect to the distribution procedures enjoined. Unreasonable clearance is prohibited. Clearances between theatres not in substantial competition are prohibited. But, practically, as between a theatre in Arcadia, and one fourteen miles distant in Dodge City, what does that mean?. Is fourteen day's clearance reasonable? Are the theatres in substantial competition? Who is to decide?

Under Section II 8 of the final decree, pictures are required to be licensed to the highest bidder having an adequate theatre. But, since license terms for the better pictures in the larger theatres are not expressed in specific dollars but in percentages of prospective income, there is considerable room disagreement as to which exhibitor in fact offered the best terms. As the district court pointed out, arbitration of those disputes is the best and cheapest procedure (R. 3558).

Of course, use of an arbitration system is not to be mandatory. Rather it is to be auxiliary. The exhibitor who feels aggrieved may bring suit under the Sherman Act, or may persuade the Department of Justice to favor his cause in a contempt proceeding.

If it should be deemed that the plaintiff never consented to a permanent arbitration system, or that the Special Assistant Attorney General had the power to revoke the plaintiff's consent, nevertheless, we submit that the district court had the power to authorize the maintenance by consenting defendants of an appropriate arbitration system under rules and procedures approved by the district court as a convenient, cheap, expeditious, auxiliary enforcement procedure.

Decrees in Sherman Act cases must necessarily be hand-tailored. International Salt Company v. The United States of America, decided November 10, 1947; United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319; U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Siegel Co. v. Trade Comm'n., 327 U. S. 608.

Where, as here, at least five of the defendants are willing to arbitrate alleged breaches of the decree and to support for that purpose an arbitration system maintained under the control and supervision of the American Arbitration Association, we submit that the district court had the power, as it certainly had the inclination, to include such a system within its decree.

ARGUMENT AS APPELLEES

We here reply to the plaintiff in No. 79.

Before discussing the specific arguments which we think erroneous, we direct attention to the general philosophy and structure of the plaintiff's brief.

The facts concerning the individual status of these two defendants, Twentieth Century-Fox and National Theatres Corporation, are fully set forth, supra, and the plaintiff's brief does not controvert them.

We contend that both with respect to the matters covered in our argument and those relevant to a determination of the adequacy of the decree entered by the court below, those are the only controlling facts which should enter into the judgment of this Court. These two defendants cannot be "lumped" together with all other defendants to the end that the statistical results of such a joinder can be used as a basis for a hypothetical "monopoly" argument.

Though the plaintiff states, in the preface to its brief (p. 11), that it does not challenge the evidentiary findings of the court below and will rely upon them, its argument and its entire concept of the issues wholly negate that statement. The court below held that "the five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition" (R. 3553). Yet the plaintiff's argument, in the main, completely ignores this basic finding. It proceeds as though its claims of monopolization in the exhibition field had been sustained, rather than specifically rejected.

Space does not permit us to call attention to every one of the many instances in which the plaintiff has resorted to this "collective approach" in its presentation of what it calls the "Facts." Nor can we advert to every instance where the plaintiff attempts to prove its point by catchphrases and characterizations. These run throughout its brief. Their persistent use, we contend, is improper and meaningless.

We therefore point out that our restraint from exposing each instance of the impropriety of this "collective approach" and each use of such phrases as "cross-licensing," "vast theatre holdings," "established proclivity," "integrated vertical combinations," and "market control,"[4] indicates no acceptance of plaintiff's technique.

The plaintiff, in the preface to its brief (p. 11), also states that its appeal is to be confined largely to the adequacy of the relief granted by the court below. This statement would lead to the expectation that the plaintiff would analyze the various trade practices, which the court below determined to be illegal, and demonstrate how the specific injunctions and other affirmative relief, granted with respect thereto, were inadequate. No such presentation is made. We will show that none is possible.

Upon analysis, we submit that all that the plaintiff's brief offers in this respect is: (a) A blanket condemnation of the decree below; (b) an unreasoned prophecy that the court's injunctions will be ineffective; (c) a dissatisfaction with the refusal of the court to accede to the plaintiff's plea for divorcement; and (d) a plea for more severe injunctions (what the plaintiff calls a ban on "cross-licensing"). This last approach, we shall demonstrate, has been injected with the thought that even though this Court would affirm the court below on the divorcement issue, it could be led into framing a decree which, by injunction, would impose such severe restrictions upon these defendants as to force upon them theatre divestiture as a practical matter.

In this reply we will first deal with the adequacy of the decree and then consider the plaintiff's arguments as to divorcement.

FIRST: THE INJUNCTIONS CONTAINED IN THE DECREE, TOGETHER WITH THE AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF GRANTED BY THE COURT, ARE ADEQUATE TO BRING THE CONDUCT OF THE DEFENDANTS INTO HARMONY WITH THE ANTI-TRUST LAWS.

We have already referred to the trade practices which the court below found illegal and described generally the injunctive provisions which were directed to each one of them. We also summarized the additional relief granted by the court, namely, the requirement of the competitive licensing of runs, which was designed to eliminate any rigidity in the playing position of theatres or the availability of product.

The plaintiff in its brief has also enumerated the practices which the court below determined to be illegal, but leaves the impression that the court below did nothing whatsoever to eliminate them. Therefore, despite our prior reference to the decree, we here list the practices which the court criticized and analyze the relief contained in the decree with respect to each of them.

Our discussion of the relief granted, against the background of the court's opinion, does not, however, carry with it any concession that these defendants have, in fact, violated the Sherman Act. As stated in our appellants' brief, there was no direct proof of conspiracy or combination, and the finding of law violations is based upon inferences and implications from similarity of conduct, which, in our belief, were unjustified.

Admission Price Fixing.

We believe that the condemnation by the court below with respect to the fixing of admission prices was occasioned because of contracts and conspiracies which it found to exist among distributors and exhibitors to maintain a rigid system of runs, clearances and prices. We do not think that the record in this case presented the issue of the right of a single producer of a motion picture to agree with its non-exclusive licensee as to the admission price it will charge the public for witnessing the exhibition of the picture. On such a limited issue we think there could be no denial of the producer's right.

But be that as it may, the injunctive remedy in this decree is against all forms of price fixing. It is sweeping and unequivocal. It would be difficult to phrase a prohibition in more comprehensive language.

Clearance.

The court below, while sustaining the legal validity of agreements for clearance between runs, struck down all clearance systems (which had resulted in uniformity and rigidity) and prohibited clearances between theatres not in competition with each other. It made the distributor responsible for the length of clearance, as to time and area, by placing on the distributor, who is a party to the decree, the burden of justifying any clearance attacked.

This is certainly adequate relief. Short of prohibiting the distribution of motion pictures on runs with contractual clearance between them, which is unthinkable, the relief granted is comprehensive and complete. We say unthinkable because, as the court below found, clearance is essential in the distribution of motion pictures (Findings 75-78, R. 3673-3674), and has made possible motion picture entertainment in nearly every community in the country, at admission prices within the reach of all.

Franchises.

The decree prohibits any licensing agreements for pictures to be released over a period of more than one year. Again, the relief is sweeping. While it may be, as the court below seemed to believe, that some franchises had been used by exhibitors to attempt to monopolize the supply of motion pictures, that could not have been true of the great bulk. Nevertheless, to avoid classification into the good and the bad, the decree prohibits all. And in addition to this, it was established that none of the defendants who were parties to the consent decree had entered into any franchise since June 1940—almost eight years ago.

Master Agreements—Formula Deals.

Here, too, the decree prohibits all. We believe that, in the main, master agreements were used by a distributor and an exhibitor operating a number of theatres primarily as a matter of convenience, and that the essential terms for each theatre, as they appeared on the "deal sheets" annexed to the master agreement, were negotiated theatre by theatre. But be that as it may, there must be a separate contract for each theatre in the future.

So, too, formula deals, which were primarily a labor saving method of negotiating arising out of a distributor's effort to secure higher film rentals based on its assertion of the superior quality of its pictures, are absolutely prohibited.

Conditioning.

By the decree, a distributor is prevented from conditioning the licensing of one of its pictures on the exhibitor's agreeing to license another. While there is considerable proof that each of the distributors licensed many of its pictures together on a single contract—either a season's output in the case of some of the companies, or in small blocks as in the case of others—there is no proof of conditioning. And if there were, it is difficult to see the inherent illegality.

But again the injunction here is complete. Each individual picture must be offered individually—the buyer (the exhibitor) is to have his choice of those he will license.

And, as a complement to this requirement, the distributor must offer the pictures theatre by theatre. It is not only that a circuit exhibitor may not demand that the pictures be licensed to all of its theatres, as a condition to licensing them in some of its theatres, but that the distributor cannot say to an exhibitor, "If you want to exhibit my pictures in one of your theatres, you must exhibit them in all."

Pooling Agreements.

The joint operation of two or more competing theatres, one owned by a defendant and the other by another, defendant or stranger, is prohibited by the decree (III, 2). This provision has been complied with (Report filed July 1, 1947). It is inconceivable that there will be any violation of this specific prohibition against making like agreements in the future.

Rigidity in the Run and Clearance Structure.

As its remedy against the rigid system of runs and clearances found to exist, the court below established a system of licensing which has come to be called competitive bidding—or, by its more articulate opponents, auction block selling.

There is a considerable divergence of attitude among the defendants toward it. Four of the defendants—Twentieth Century-Fox, Loew's, RKO and Warner—are quite willing to try it. Twentieth Century-Fox does not endorse the prophecies of ruin and destruction voiced by some of the other defendants.

True, it has difficulty in wholly comprehending the precise requirements of the controlling paragraph (Decree II, 8) but it has faith in its ability, with the assistance of the district court, to establish a fair and workable system.

In addition to this specific remedy, the decree (II, 9) establishes a general standard that an exhibitor who seeks a specific run may not be arbitrarily refused it.

(a) Plaintiff fails to establish that the decree is inadequate.

What does the plaintiff offer to convince this Court that this judgment below was erroneous or would be ineffective? Its brief, it is true, contains repeated prophecies that the decree will be inadequate. But such unsupported prognostication is scarcely an answer to its apparent effectiveness. It is also suggested that in the eyes of the plaintiff, the defendants have a "proclivity" for contumacious conduct and there is the intimation that they might violate the decree. We are sure that this Court has adequate confidence in the efficacy of the power of the district court to deal with any such conduct, if, contrary to our belief, it should develop.

(1) Plaintiff's references to prior proceedings and regulation are irrelevant.

Next, the plaintiff points to a number of other anti-trust proceedings which, over the years, have been instituted by it and private individuals against companies formerly in the motion picture business or against one or several of these defendants. We think it clear that these proceedings have been referred to solely to create prejudice. It is, of course, true that the motion picture industry has been, from its very beginning, a litigious one. But it is a far cry to say, for example, that the efforts of unidentified persons thirty years ago to enforce or invalidate patents on motion picture equipment, can be used as an indictment of the conduct of the present responsible officers of these defendants.

Moreover, it is significant that plaintiff in its references to prior litigation in this field has seen fit to ignore those cases in which the decisions have been in favor of the defendants, such as Westway Theatre v. Twentieth Century-Fox F. Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830; aff'd 113 F. 2d 932; Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., et al., 3 C. C. H., Fed. Trade Reg. Serv., p. 26,210; aff'd 120 F. 2d 891; and Rolsky v. Fox Midwest Theatres, C. C. H., Fed Trade Reg. Serv., p. 6442, to name a few.

The varying decisions in these prior anti-trust proceedings, if they have any bearing on this case, disprove the existence of any national pattern or any overriding conspiracy. In some of them, one or more defendants have been found to have violated the Sherman Act, while co-defendants have been absolved. In some local situations it has been adjudged that no basis existed for a finding of conspiracy or wrongful conduct on the part of any of the defendants. In others, involving some of the same trade practices in a different setting, the defendants have been held liable. Such disparity in the outcome of these cases would not exist if these defendants had been parties to any conspiracy on a national scale.

Thus, we say that plaintiff's references to this history of litigation in nowise advance its argument that "experience shows that no judgment which merely regulates defendants' trade practices can give adequate relief" (Brief, p. 72). We will not analyze those cases in detail. Suffice it to say, they represent, over the span of thirty years, litigation involving many and varied issues and many differing local factual situations. It is interesting to note, however, that though these defendants have owned theatres ever since the first one of these proceedings was commenced in the '20s, it was not until the case now before this Court was instituted that the plaintiff advanced the claim that the ownership of theatres was illegal.

In describing steps taken in the past to regulate trade practices, the plaintiff has referred to the NRA Code which was in effect from December 1933 to May 1935 (Brief, p. 85). As plaintiff says, during that period local clearance and zoning boards were set up by the Government for the purpose of establishing reasonable periods of clearance. The plaintiff fails, however, to set forth the full experience flowing from the activities during this period when the NRA was effective,—an experience which has had a far-reaching effect upon some of the issues in this case, and requires amplification.

The local clearance and zoning boards were composed of representatives of all branches in the industry. They were established to secure impartial, unbiased determinations. Plaintiff's suggestion that they were dominated by the distributors is unworthy and finds no support in this record or elsewhere. When codes were promulgated by these local boards they were required to be submitted for approval by the Code Authority in Washington, which certainly was entirely independent of the distributors and their affiliated theatres.

With respect to the Los Angeles area, the local clearance and zoning board did establish a Code which set forth the determinations of that board as to reasonable clearances. This was approved by the Code Authority in Washington. There was thus put into practical operation the determination of this representative board in the industry as to clearance. Naturally, all of the distributors, as they were required to do, then licensed their pictures in accordance with this determination. Necessarily the result was that the clearance applicable to the pictures of each distributor was uniform.

Then the NRA was declared unconstitutional. Thereafter, although there was no law compelling the distributors to adhere to the clearance set up under the Code, nevertheless, those clearance schedules did represent an objective determination as to what was fair and reasonable. In consequence, each distributor in the main continued to license its pictures on that same basis. It, indeed, would have been extraordinary had they not done so. If any radical changes had been made, if there had been any significant departures from such schedules, the distributors would then have been accused of discrimination and arbitrary action.

We refer to this history because it shows how certain aspects of uniform conduct in this industry came into existence. It does not, we submit, furnish any support for plaintiff's argument that regulation by decree is inadequate.

(2) Plaintiff's criticism of affirmative relief is unfounded.

In commenting on the affirmative remedy of the competitive licensing of pictures, the plaintiff does attempt to become specific in belittling its effectiveness. While no one can prophesy with certainty that this new method of distributing motion pictures will be effective, we submit that the plaintiff's indictment of it is unjustified.

Plaintiff suggests that the independent exhibitor will be at a disadvantage because a defendant, having an opposition theatre, has greater resources and will be able to pay higher prices for desired pictures. If the plaintiff means that a defendant, in such a bargaining for product, will outbid his competitor over and above any fair value of the picture, solely for the purpose of keeping it away from his rival, it is, without reason, imputing conduct which would border on the contumacious. On the other hand, if it means that in a competitive market a defendant might have greater resources and thus, in some instances, be better equipped to compete, we ask, "Is that unlawful?" We know of nothing in the anti-trust laws which requires that every competitor for motion picture films or any other commodity, be placed upon an equal financial footing.

If the market is open, if the ability fairly to compete is unrestrained, every requirement of law is met.

What this decree does—its plain and apparent effect—is to break up what the plaintiff has condemned, and the court has found, to be a rigid system. It eliminates the "old" or "regular" customer philosophy in this industry. Any independent, competing with one of these defendants in the exhibition field, will now have complete freedom to bargain for product. Any exhibitor, wishing to enter into business in any community where a defendant today has the only theatres or the better theatres, can do so and have available to him such product as he desires. This, we say, is all that he is entitled to under the anti-trust laws or, indeed, under any concept of fair business practice in a free society.

The plaintiff also urges that this so-called competitive bidding system is unworkable (Brief, pp. 69-71). That argument boils down to the contention that many controversies will arise in connection with the practical administration of this system and that the determination of these controversies would be burdensome to the Department of Justice and to the district court.

The first answer is that the court below was fully aware of the administrative problems incident to its decree. It did not consider them to be insurmountable and wisely retained the power to modify the decree in the light of experience.

The second answer to this argument of inconvenience is that the court below recommended, and five of the defendants advocated, the continuance of an arbitration system which would provide an effective, inexpensive and expeditious determination of such controversies. And it is highly likely, we believe, that the other three defendants would also join in such a system. It is the plaintiff itself which is the bar to the establishment of that system. It is responsible for the present decision which has terminated the system which has worked so effectively since 1941. It comes with poor grace for plaintiff here to magnify administrative difficulties which, but for its own intransigence, could be so easily resolved.

SECOND: THE OWNERSHIP OF THEATRES BY TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX IS LAWFUL AND PLAINTIFF HAS ESTABLISHED NO BASIS FOR A DECREE OF DIVESTITURE.

(a) The Plaintiff's Contentions When Applied to Twentieth Century-Fox and National, Independently, Provide No Justification for Divorcement.

In Point II A of its brief (pp. 90-114) plaintiff argues that the ownership by Twentieth Century-Fox of theatres is illegal, even when that company is considered separate and apart from the other defendants. It is only in this section that it actually treats with the individual defendants as such, and comes to grips with any really relevant issue on this appeal.

Even under this point, however, the plaintiff cannot forego its propensity to characterize. It refers to the simple situation in which Twentieth Century-Fox, a producer and distributor of motion pictures, owns theatre interests through its wholly owned subsidiary, National Theatres Corporation, as an "integrated vertical combination." But this exercise in semantics does not advance its case. Its argument must be judged against the facts with respect to any actual monopolization or control of the market which arises from, or because of, that integration. The record is barren of any evidence of this and the court below expressly found that it did not exist.

We pass to a consideration of the claims of the plaintiff with respect to what it calls the "two serious trade-restraining consequences" (Brief, pp. 91-92) of the ownership by Twentieth Century-Fox of theatres. The first is that, to the extent that Twentieth Century-Fox as a producer can supply the exhibition needs of its theatres, the market is closed to other distributors. The facts concerning the theatre position of Twentieth Century-Fox demonstrate how unsubstantial is the argument. Obviously, the only segment of the market over which this fancied control could exist is that in which Twentieth Century-Fox has theatre interests. As we have heretofore stated, its theatre holdings represent only about 3.52% of the country's theatres. Again, as we have emphasized, in the special so-called "market" which the plaintiff has artificially created, consisting of the 92 largest cities with populations of over 100,000, Twentieth Century-Fox has theatres in only 17. In each of these 17 cities, there are competing theatres and in all except one there are theatres which compete on first-run. In each of the great cities of New York, Philadelphia and Detroit, Twentieth Century-Fox has only one theatre.

In the 320 cities of the United States which have populations between 25,000 and 100,000, Twentieth Century-Fox has theatre interests in only 38; and in the 1,630 communities with populations between 5,000 and 25,000, it has theatre interests in only 102. On such a record, it is preposterous to maintain that the ownership of these theatres could represent control of a substantial segment of any market.

But more than this, plaintiff does not even urge that there is any complete control, even in this restricted segment. The exclusion which is claimed to exist is not a complete exclusion of the product of other distributors from these theatres, but only the limited partial exclusion which comes from the fact that Twentieth Century-Fox itself supplies varying proportions of their film requirements. This is apparent from other portions of plaintiff's brief where it concedes—and indeed argues—that in the great majority of communities, theatres cannot exist on the product of one company but require, for the most part, the product of a number of distributors.

The shallowness of the plaintiff's argument can best be appreciated by considering it in reference to a typical situation, such as Long Beach, California. There are 20 motion picture theatres in that community, only seven of which are theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox is interested. Two of these seven theatres are operated as first-run theatres. An independent operator in the community also operates two first-run theatres (R. 2131-2132a). Leaving out of consideration the subsequent run "market" in Long Beach which requires the product of all distributors to supply the numerous policy changes which are in effect in subsequent run operation, a study of the first-run situation shows how ephemeral is the plaintiff's contention of market control. The two first-run theatres operated by the independent were, at the time of the trial, generally exhibiting the product of RKO, of Columbia and about one-half the product of Warner and Universal, together with other product offered by non-defendant distributors. The two theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox is interested were exhibiting the product distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox and, generally, the product distributed by Loew's, Paramount and about one-half of Warner and Universal.

In the light of these facts, what is this "market control" of which the plaintiff complains? It is simply this: Though the theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox has no interest furnish exhibition facilities for substantially one-half of the available motion picture product, and though the product of other distributors consumes about 75% of the playing time of the theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox has an interest, the fact that the product distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox itself occupies about 25% of the playing time of the Fox theatres and about 15% of the playing time of all first-run theatres in Long Beach, justifies the charge that there has been such an "exclusion" of other distributors as to constitute the illegal control of a "substantial segment of the market." The statement of the point is its best refutation.

The second alleged serious trade-restraining consequence (Brief, p. 92) is simply the reverse of the foregoing argument. Plaintiff says that where Twentieth Century-Fox has theatres, other exhibitors in that community are excluded from the opportunity of licensing Twentieth Century-Fox pictures on those runs which are "reserved for Fox's theatres." Applying this argument again to the situation existing in Long Beach, California, it comes down to this: Naturally, Twentieth Century-Fox wishes to exhibit its own pictures first run in its own theatres. Therefore, its competitors in Long Beach cannot secure those pictures on that particular run. But as we have heretofore pointed out, and as the court has found, the pictures produced by Fox are only approximately 9% in number of those produced in the United States.

Thus, at most, the plaintiff's argument is reduced to the claim that because the competing theatres in Long Beach are "excluded from access" to 9% of the product, though having available to them 91%, there is an improper restraint. Such a contention is supported by neither precedent nor reason. The plaintiff's position, as stated in its brief, is that

> "But no manufacturer, whether of a copyrighted or an uncopyrighted article, has the right deliberately to acquire control of a particular market for his product when the purpose or necessary effect is to exclude others from an important segment of the market." (p. 103)

We need not debate the soundness of this argument. When applied to this case, the foregoing facts demonstrate its irrelevancy. The ownership of theatres by Twentieth Century-Fox has neither the purpose nor effect of excluding others from any important segment of the market.

(b) Corporate Relationship of Twentieth Century-Fox and National Furnishes No Basis for Divestiture.

The plaintiff seeks to buttress its argument with respect to the claimed illegality of theatre ownership by urging that because the theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox is interested are owned by a subsidiary corporation, all of the stock of which is owned by Twentieth Century-Fox, an unlawful "combination" exists. In other words, the argument is that by owning theatres through a wholly owned subsidiary, rather than directly, an additional element of law violation exists.

With respect to this argument, it should be noted that no such issue was tendered on the trial of this case. No evidence was introduced to show that Twentieth Century-Fox and its wholly owned subsidiary were engaged in any separate conspiracy or combination. The court below made no finding even remotely indicating that any of the improper agreements and practices to which it referred were between this defendant and its subsidiary, or arose out of the intercorporate relationship. The court below properly regarded theatres owned by Twentieth Century-Fox, through its wholly owned subsidiary, as the theatres of the parent company for the purpose of determining whether there had been a violation of the Sherman Act.

We submit that the argument of the plaintiff, based upon the existence of these two separate corporate entities, is nothing but an unfounded attempt to avail itself of the decision in General Motors Corp. et al. v. United States, 121 F. 2d 376; cert. den. 314 U. S. 618, which it cites. In that case the violation of law was the suppression of competition among credit companies for the business of financing General Motors dealers and customers. What was done would have been just as illegal if done by General Motors itself rather than by it and its subsidiary, General Motors Acceptance Corporation. Nor is there any resemblance to U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, where the separate corporate entities in the combination were separately owned and controlled.

Thus, we urge that the plaintiff's endeavor to support its argument by urging that the corporate structure brings about a "continuing conspiracy among each group of affiliated corporations" (Brief, p. 103) is without substance. The nature of the ownership is unimportant. Only its purpose, scope and effect are significant. We borrow a phrase used in plaintiff's brief (p. 95) and taken from the opinion in United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, 227: ". . . the Sherman Act looks to substance rather than form . . ."

(c) No Illegality in the Origin or Purpose of Theatre Ownership.

The plaintiff also asserts that illegality attached to the original acquisition of the theatres. Here, again, an argument is advanced which is in direct conflict with the findings of the court below (Finding 152, R. 3689-3690). No evidence was introduced by the plaintiff on the trial of this action to establish that the acquisition by any defendant of theatres was accomplished by improper activities or motivated by improper purposes. On the contrary, these defendants introduced evidence showing that their theatre acquisitions were a natural and normal business development; that many of these theatres were secured in a highly competitive market; and that the development of these theatre interests had been in nowise affected by the distribution activities of Twentieth Century-Fox. The record is barren of any evidence to support a claim that the original acquisitions were the result of any conspiracy, concert of action or intent to monopolize.

In inveighing against the purpose of this theatre ownership, the plaintiff arrogates to itself the role of economist. It condemns such ownership because it says that there is no "economic justification" for it (Brief, p. 105). It cavalierly avers that there is no reason why independents cannot operate theatres as well as the defendants and that there is no "saving to the patron" in integration. Plaintiff's argument is built upon the unsupported and erroneous premise that, "assuming two theatres of equal quality and location, a picture will attract as many patrons in one as in the other" (Brief, p. 105). Certainly the picture is important. Certainly the theatre building and location are important. But successful exhibition is also controlled by the calibre of management, its ability in exploitation and advertising, its solicitude for patrons, and its capacity to furnish public service.

But even if it be assumed that plaintiff's "economic" argument is sound, we are at a loss to understand what it proves. We had not supposed that the law required a business organization, which entered a field in a perfectly lawful and proper way, because it believed that its overall business could be better and more profitably conducted, to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Department of Justice that the results would be "economically" beneficial.

Apart from this, however, the basis of plaintiff's contention is fallacious. The record amply supports the conclusion that the operation of theatres by these defendants has been beneficial to the public. It shows that those theatres have been managed by skilled and experienced operators; that the facilities afforded to the public through the defendants' theatres have been the finest available; that the public has been well served; and that the experience of these defendants in the entire motion picture field peculiarly qualifies them, through their officers and employees, to provide theatre facilities of the highest standards. While we recognize that this would be no defense to a claim of monopoly or illegal combination, it is an ample answer to the plaintiff's argument that no public benefit comes from theatre ownership by Twentieth Century-Fox.

Plaintiff has attempted to link the origin and development of the trade practices, which were criticized by the court below, to integration (Brief, pp. 27-29). It says that what it terms "licensing restrictions", namely, provisions in license agreements dealing with runs, clearance, admission prices, etc., did not come into existence until after integration commenced. This is completely contrary to fact and is abundantly disproved by the record. Indeed, plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint, on which the action was tried, expressly alleges (paragraphs 114, 115) that runs, clearances and advanced admission prices were practices which came into existence as far back as 1915 or 1916—prior to the time when any defendant owned theatres. The initial acquisition of theatres by Twentieth Century-Fox was in August 1925 (paragraph 42). Plaintiff's brief recognizes that these provisions in license agreements were in existence in 1923. Thus, from its brief and its pleadings, it affirmatively appears that the trade practices to which plaintiff refers antedated the acquisition of theatres by Twentieth Century-Fox. In addition, there is testimony in the record that these practices have been in use since the beginning of the production of feature motion pictures. Neither their origin, development or use has any relation whatsoever to integration.

In concluding our discussion of this point, one further argument by excoriation on the part of the plaintiff should be noted. The plaintiff says:

> "This persistent use of their theatres as a means of arbitrary suppression of the competition of others is itself conclusive evidence of the unlawful purpose of the major defendants' vertical integrations." (p. 105)

This statement is made in spite of the fact that there is no evidence and no finding that the defendants, or any of them, have used their theatres, persistently or otherwise, as a means of suppressing theatre competition. There is no evidence that any potential theatre operator has been kept out of business because of anything done by these defendants. And as the record so convincingly shows, if there were any efforts directed at the suppression of competition, they assuredly were most inept and ineffectual. In the last seven years the number of theatres in this country has increased over 4,000. Well over 90% of these 4,000 theatres have been built and are operated by independents and the defendants have no interest in them.

The authorities to which plaintiff has referred in its discussion of integration are plainly distinguishable. For example, United States v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 254 U. S. 255, to which plaintiff frequently refers, was one of a series of cases involving the ownership by railroads of coal mines and their unsuccessful attempt to avoid the prohibitions of the commodities clause of the Hepburn Act (34 Stat. 585) by the organization of coal and sales companies owned by the stockholders of the railroad but dominated by the management of the railroad. In United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218, the sufficiency of a petition against a motion to dismiss was upheld which alleged that a monopoly of the cab business in certain large cities had been acquired which had as its express purpose the elimination of all competition among cab manufacturers in the sale of taxicabs to the principal taxicab operators in those cities. In the petition it was alleged that the monopoly had accomplished its purpose, with the end result that "the public is charged higher rates for the transportation services rendered." United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106, involved applications for modifications of a consent decree entered in 1920. As the Court repeatedly remarked in its opinion, that decision did not purport to adjudicate the appropriateness of the remedy consented to by the defendants, but dealt only with the question of whether a sufficient showing had been made to justify modification over the opposition of the Government and the parties who were protected by the consent decree.

THIRD: THE RECORD FURNISHES NO JUSTIFICATION FOR AGGREGATING THE THEATRE INTERESTS OF THE DEFENDANTS, AND PLAINTIFF'S ARGUMENTS FOR DIVESTITURE BASED UPON SUCH AGGREGATION ARE WITHOUT MERIT.

We believe that all of the plaintiff's arguments, which are based upon statistics and other material resulting from an aggregation of the theatre interests of all of the defendants, are completely irrelevant and unimportant on this appeal. The judgment of the court below that the plaintiff's "collective approach" was unjustified; and that in any event it furnished no proof of monopoly, is abundantly sustained by the evidence.

We deem it unnecessary, therefore, for us to demonstrate here what has effectively been done in the brief for Loew's, that even on the basis of such aggregation and collective treatment no monopoly or other restraint exists which would justify theatre divorcement.

Furthermore, we think that the record convincingly sustains the finding of the court below that the "illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors. . . ." (Finding 154, R. 3690). This conclusion applies whether the defendants are treated collectively or regarded individually.

There are, however, certain broad statements in plaintiff's brief in support of its effort to "collectivize" these defendants, which must be challenged.

1. Plaintiff asserts that there is a "geographical pattern" (Brief, p. 15) with respect to the theatre holdings of the various defendants. This, if it means anything, implies that there is some underlying agreement to which the defendants are parties which parcels out the country and assigns to each a particular sphere. Though plaintiff, in its petition, did allege such an agreement, it presented no evidence on the trial in support of such an allegation. And, of course, the court below did not find that any such agreement or pattern existed.

Despite the plaintiff's unequivocal language in asserting the existence of such a "pattern," we find that the only evidence to which it refers are its compilations with respect to the actual location of the defendants' theatres. This proves nothing. The fact that the theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox is interested are mostly located west of the Mississippi River comes about by no conspiracy. It simply reflects the fact that when Twentieth Century-Fox entered into the theatre business twenty years ago it purchased theretofore existing circuits of theatres which were located in the western states (R. 1971, 2001-2003, 2041-2042, 2078, 2103-2104).

Moreover, the existence of any pattern, in so far as Twentieth Century-Fox is concerned, is quickly disproved by a glance at the largest cities in which it has theatres. In Los Angeles, Paramount, RKO and Warner are in competition with it. In San Francisco, RKO and Paramount compete with the Fox theatres. In Kansas City, Missouri, Loew's, Paramount and RKO compete. In Denver, Loew's and RKO are in competition. In Milwaukee, Warner has competing theatres. In addition, Twentieth Century-Fox has a single first-run theatre in New York, Philadelphia and Detroit. In each of these cities these theatres are in first-run competition with theatres of other defendants. We submit that this is hardly the sort of evidence to sustain the claim that there is an implied agreement among the defendants not to compete with each other in the theatre field.

As other examples of the plaintiff's loose treatment of the facts in this respect, we also point out that its statement that there are no towns in Michigan in which two or more major defendants separately operate theatres (Brief, p. 16), is not only wrong, but is shown to be so on plaintiff's own schedule which appears on page 228 of the appendix to its brief. As there shown, Fox, Paramount and RKO operate theatres in Detroit. Plaintiff's statement that prior to the dissolution of pools in San Francisco there was no theatre competition between any defendants (Brief, p. 17) is also incorrect and shown to be so by plaintiff's own compilations, appearing on page 212 of the appendix to its brief. It is there indicated that Fox and RKO separately competed in San Francisco. Plaintiff's list of towns of less than 100,000 population, which its says names the only ones in which the defendants compete with each other (p. 16) is inaccurate in that it omits Huntington Park, San Bernardino, Beverly Hills and San Pedro, California.

2. Plaintiff says:

> "Each of the five major defendants as an exhibitor has been licensed by all of the other defendants as distributors at the fixed admission prices." (Brief, p. 24)

This statement seems to us to be misleading and to suggest conclusions which are not in accord with the facts. The language implies that each defendant distributor licenses its product to each theatre of a theatre-owning defendant to the exclusion of independents. The record shows that this is not the case. In 72 of the 92 cities with populations of more than 100,000, one or more defendants, other than Twentieth Century-Fox, have theatres. Yet, in 23 of these 72 cities, Twentieth Century-Fox product is not licensed to the theatre of any defendant, but is licensed to independent exhibitors (Exs. F-12, F-21, F-30).

Similarly, with respect to the theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox is interested, the facts show that there is no "pattern" pursuant to which they receive licenses to the product of other distributors. We have analyzed this aspect of the distribution of product on pages 15 to 20 of our appellants' brief. The facts show that in a great many instances the product of one or more of these defendants is not licensed to the Fox theatres.

The foregoing facts completely disprove the implication contained in the above quoted sentence. They also disprove similar statements, such as: "At the same time, they have protected the theatres of the five major defendants from the competition of independents" (Brief, p. 107), which appear at various places in plaintiff's argument.

3. Plaintiff states:

> "This conspiracy has been effectuated mainly by means of film licensing agreements between all eight defendants as distributors and the five major defendants as exhibitors" (Brief, p. 24).

It cites, in support of this statement, Finding 64 (R. 3670) which certainly does not support it. That finding contains nothing which indicates that the court below found that any activities of the theatre-owning defendants, as exhibitors, had "effectuated" any conspiracy.

FOURTH: THERE IS NO JUSTIFICATION FOR AN INJUNCTION PROHIBITING A PRODUCER-EXHIBITOR FROM LICENSING ITS PICTURES TO THE THEATRES OF ANOTHER PRODUCER-EXHIBITOR.

Plaintiff strongly presses for an injunction prohibiting any theatre in which Twentieth Century-Fox is interested from licensing for exhibition the product of any other theatre-owning distributor. Conversely, it would also prohibit Twentieth Century-Fox from licensing its pictures for exhibition in any theatre owned by another defendant. This is what the plaintiff refers to as a ban on "cross-licensing."

Here, again, the plaintiff has coined a phrase in an effort to attach some opprobrium to normal and necessary business transactions in this industry. Because cross-licensing in the patent field has been the subject of attack for some years, plaintiff has used those words here. But the use of the term is patently inappropriate and inaccurate. There is nothing resembling a "pool of patents" as is so often found in the typical cross-licensing case. For example, there is no agreement between copyright owners restricting licenses to the parties to the cross-licensing agreement.

The unique suggestion by the plaintiff that normal business transactions between defendants be enjoined, was injected into this case after the trial and after the court had handed down its opinion. No such issue was raised by the plaintiff in its pleadings or in the presentation of its case. No evidence was introduced directed to such an issue. It was only after the court below had denied the plaintiff's plea for divorcement, that this suggestion was advanced.

Plaintiff has presented its arguments here as though it considers this relief as something of an incidental, technical nature which should complement the injunctions which the court below has issued against the trade practices which it condemned. Yet such is not the case. Plaintiff fully understands that at most only two or three of the theatres in which Twentieth Century-Fox is interested can be operated with the product distributed by Fox alone, and that in many situations the product of Fox and the other non-theatre-owning defendants is not enough. It knows that with respect to the great majority of the Fox theatres, the product of some of the other theatre-owning distributors is necessary for their effective operation. It knows that the ban it seeks would make it impossible for Twentieth Century-Fox to continue the operation of many of its theatres.

Therefore, this suggestion is simply divorcement under another name. Under this severe handicap Twentieth Century-Fox could not stay in the theatre business. It would be forced to divest itself of its theatres. This becomes self-evident when consideration is given to the situation of a typical town in this country where the theatres operated by National use 104, 156, 208 or 312 pictures a year. Those theatres could not operate under the restraints proposed by plaintiff. Competing theatres would be able to license the product of the other distributors without competition. The net effect would be to subsidize every independent competitor of National and assure such competitor of pictures of four of the leading distributors in the industry on a non-competitive basis. Plainly, the removal of National from the competitive field, would lessen, rather than enhance, competition. This is certainly not consonant with the spirit or purpose of the Sherman Act.

But the impact of such an injunction would not be confined to the theatre business. Twentieth Century-Fox as a distributor would find arbitrarily closed to it the theatres of other defendants located in many communities in which it has no theatres. Twentieth Century-Fox pictures could not be exhibited in many of the best theatres in the country. Moreover, in the smaller communities where some of these defendants have the only theatres, it would mean that Twentieth Century-Fox pictures could not be exhibited at all. And, paradoxically, with the existing prohibition against expansion which the plaintiff argues should be retained, Twentieth Century-Fox never could exhibit its product in those communities.

Plaintiff fully appreciates the disastrous consequences which would flow from the injunction which it seeks. Its counsel admitted this when he first proposed such a remedy in the court below:

> "I am merely suggesting that as an alternative remedy [alternative to divorcement]. I do not think myself that it is as adequate a remedy of dissolution. But I point it out as simply another means of attempting to accomplish the same result; . . . (R. 2570).

Thus, upon analysis, it is apparent that such an injunction would be solely in the nature of a penalty. It is not required to terminate any of the trade practices which the court below found illegal. This Court should reject it.

FIFTH: NO QUESTION OF "PUBLIC INTEREST" IS INVOLVED.

In what reads as the peroration to its brief (pp. 119-126), the plaintiff comments on what it terms the "public interest" in this case. This is sheer window-dressing.

As plaintiff well knows, this case was never instituted or tried on the theory that the general public interest was involved. On the contrary, this case was prosecuted as a "class action," in the sense that the plaintiff has claimed that restraints in the industry operated to the detriment of that class in it which consisted of independent theatre owners.

No evidence was introduced by the plaintiff—and there is none in the record—that the motion picture-going public has been injured in any way by the trade practices which the court below condemned. There is no evidence that the public has been the victim of inflationary prices, or that it has been gouged at the box office, or that any different system would reduce prices. On the contrary, such evidence as there is in the record with respect to admission prices shows that there has been no noticeable increase. The absence of enhanced prices, which are the usual consequence of monopoly, demonstrates that there has been no monopolization or restraint of competition. This is forcefully demonstrated by an exhibit introduced by the Warner defendants (Ex. W-10, R. 1816-1817). This exhibit contained a comparison of the average admission prices charged by Warner theatres in the year 1931 and the year 1945. The computation was arrived at by dividing the gross box office receipts in each year, exclusive of admission taxes, by the number of theatre patrons in each year. This showed that the average theatre admission price in 1945 was only 1.9% higher than it was in 1931. The foregoing statistics—and they are the only ones in the record with respect to theatre admission prices—thus not only disprove any claim that advantage has been taken of the public, but strikingly show that if cost to the public is to be considered, the current method of distributing and exhibiting motion picture films has been greatly in the public interest.

There is also specific evidence that the public has received the best in theatre accommodations, service and facilities. There is the finding of the court below, amply sustained by the evidence, that every potential motion picture patron has the opportunity of seeing every worthwhile film at a price which meets his individual pocketbook.

The plaintiff also seeks to color its argument by quoting expressions, lifted without relevance, from pronouncements of this Court in cases involving freedom of speech and freedom of the press. It implies that the quality of motion picture production and the scope of subject matter is limited and deficient. It says:

> "Certainly such a past gives little hope that they [the defendants] will in the future encourage production of the wide variety of films needed to satisfy the wide variety of tastes possessed by the potential American film audience, rather than a standardized mass product adapted to profitable exhibition in a controlled market." (Brief, p. 124)

We ask, "What basis exists in this record for such a statement?" Who has said that today's motion picture production is stereotyped and standardized? Who has testified that the tastes of the American film audience, however wide in variety, are not adequately satisfied? Where is there any evidence that any control exercised by these defendants has limited either the subject matter or number of motion picture productions?

Not only is this arrogance on the part of the plaintiff without foundation, but the court below has found to the contrary. It has found that there are no restraints in the production of motion pictures; that a free opportunity exists for anyone to make a picture on any subject and for any purpose and, more than that, there are no restraints which prevent the producer of such a picture from securing proper distribution and exhibition thereof.

This controversy, which is essentially one between competing elements in this industry, cannot be magnified into a "public cause." The only issues here tendered, and the only ones which this Court should pass upon, concern a decree to remove any restraints in trade adversely affecting those who wish to engage in the motion picture business.

Conclusion

It is respectfully submitted that paragraphs (5) and (6) of Section III of the decree should be deleted, that Section V, relating to arbitration, should be modified in the particulars above requested and that, in all other respects, the judgment below should be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES F. BYRNES,
Attorney for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation.

OTTO E. KOEGEL,
JOHN F. CASKEY,
FREDERICK W. R. PRIDE,
DONALD RUSSELL,
Of Counsel.

February 2, 1948.

FILE COPY

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term 1947

Filed - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
FEB 2 1948
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, et al., Appellants,
against
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellee.
No. 80

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Appellant,
against
PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., et al.,
Appellees.
No. 79

ON APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT, DECREE AND FINAL ORDER OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF FOR RKO DEFENDANTS AS APPELLANTS IN NO. 80 AND AS APPELLEES IN NO. 79

WILLIAM J. DONOVAN,
GEORGE S. LEISURE,
RALSTONE R. IRVINE,
GORDON E. YOUNGMAN,
ROY W. MCDONALD,
Attorneys for RKO Defendants,
2 Wall Street,
New York 5, N. Y.

DONOVAN LEISURE NEWTON LUMBARD & IRVINE,
Of Counsel.

INDEX

	PAGE
Opinion and Judgment Below	1
Jurisdiction	2
Statutes Involved	2
Statement of the Case	3
Questions Presented	4
The Facts	8
A. The Industry prior to the organization of RKO	8
B. Organization of RKO, 1928-1932	8
C. RKO's financial difficulties	10
D. RKO's theatre holdings at the date of trial	10
1. Theatres operated by RKO	12
2. Beneficial interests with defendants and independents	12
3. Pools and leases	13
E. RKO as producer, distributor and exhibitor	14
1. RKO's operation as an integrated unit results in increased efficiencies and economies	14
a. Show-case theatres	14
b. Financial stability	19
2. RKO's operation as an integrated unit does not effect a restraint upon competition at any level of the industry	22

PAGE

a. Production 23

b. Distribution 24

c. Exhibition 26

F. Minimum admission price provisions in film license contracts 28

1. Minimum admission prices in licenses of ordinary features 28

2. Minimum admission prices in licenses of extraordinary features 32

ARGUMENT FOR RKO APPELLANTS IN CAUSE No. 80

Specifications of Errors to be Urged 34

I. The district court erred in enjoining RKO from expanding its present theatre holdings 35

A. The prohibition upon theatre expansion is unnecessary and inappropriate in view of the type of conduct of RKO which the Court found violative of the Sherman Act 37

1. The appropriate function of a decree in an antitrust case is to grant such relief, and only such relief, as will prevent and restrain the continuance or the repetition of violations of the Act of the type which have occurred 37

2. The relief granted by the Decree adequately and effectively remedies illegalities found without the necessity of prohibiting absolutely any theatre expansion 39

3. The absolute prohibition on theatre expansion improperly restrains a lawful act merely because the court found that unrelated unlawful acts had been committed in the past 44

PAGE

B. The absolute prohibition of theatre acquisitions by RKO restrains, rather than promotes, lawful competition and is inconsistent with the objectives of the Sherman Act 50

II. The district court erred in compelling RKO to terminate its investments amounting to over 5% and less than 95% in certain local theatre holding and operating companies 55

III. The district court erred in enjoining RKO from agreeing with a licensee that the latter shall charge a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the feature licensed 58

A. A license provision stating the minimum admission to be charged during the exhibition of the feature licensed is normally and reasonably adapted to secure the pecuniary reward of the owner of the motion picture feature licensed, and hence is not illegal per se 59

B. The minimum price provision is not invalidated by the fact that the feature licensed is usually not the sole item on the theatre program 66

IV. The district court erred in enjoining RKO from agreeing with a licensee that the latter shall charge a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of an unusual feature roadshown in advance of general release 68

V. The district court erred in concluding that it lacked power to continue the arbitration system established in the Consent Decree pursuant to the prayer of Plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint 72

Conclusion as appellant 73

ARGUMENT FOR RKO APPELLEES IN No. 79

PAGE

Introduction 75

VI. The district court correctly refused to find that RKO through the use of its theatres is engaged with the other theatre-operating defendants in a nation-wide conspiracy to monopolize the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, and to find that its theatre operations may be aggregated with those of the other defendants for the purpose of establishing general claims of monopoly in exhibition 76

VII. The district court correctly refused to hold that RKO as an integrated company producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures is an unlawful combination 106

VIII. Since the Decree of the district court is adequate to prevent the continuance or repetition of all acts which the Court deemed violative of the Sherman Act, its refusal to order RKO to divest itself of its theatres or its production-distribution facilities was not an abuse of discretion ... 111

A. The adequacy of the Decree is not impugned by prior experience in the motion picture industry 115

1. Federal Trade Commission 116

2. Government Antitrust Suits 117

3. NRA Code and Consent Decree of 1940 118

4. Private Antitrust Suits 118

5. Conclusion 119

B. The authorities fully sustain the refusal of the district court to order the dissolution of RKO 119

PAGE

1. The violations found do not establish a situation where dissolution is the appropriate remedy 119

2. The district court correctly took into consideration, in exercising its discretion, the injury to the corporate defendants and to the public which would result from divestiture .. 122

C. The district court correctly refused the plaintiff's demand that RKO be enjoined from licensing theatres affiliated with other defendants, and that the other producer-exhibitor defendants be enjoined from licensing RKO theatres 124

1. The effect on RKO as a distributor 125

2. The effect on RKO as an exhibitor 127

APPENDIX A—Table Showing Competing Affiliated and Unaffiliated Theatres In Cities Where RKO Operates First-Run Theatres 131

APPENDIX B—Competitive Position of RKO Theatres in New York City 139

APPENDIX C—RKO's Total Income, Net Income After Taxes, and Percent of Net to Total Income, 1929-1944 158

APPENDIX D—Record as to the 35 Cities of Over 100,000 Population in Which RKO Licensed Product First-Run to Affiliated Theatres (1943-44) 159

APPENDIX E—Record as to the 187 Cities of 25,000 to 100,000 Population in Which RKO Licensed Product First-Run to Theatres Not Affiliated With RKO But Affiliated With Defendants Other Than RKO (1943-44) 178

APPENDIX F—Comparison Rentals Paid by Affiliated and Unaffiliated First-Run Theatres in Cities Over

PAGE

25,000 Population for RKO's First Block of Features, 1943-44 192

Appendix G—Distribution of First Run Exhibitions of RKO's 1943-1944 First Block Features Between Affiliated and Unaffiliated Theatres in Cities Over 25,000 Population, Excluding Exhibitions in RKO Theatres 193

List of Authorities Cited

Alexander Milburn Company v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 15 F. (2d) 678 (C. C. A. 4th, 1926), cert. den. 273 U. S. 757 (1927) 109

Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344 (1934) 58

Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, p. 23 (1945) 108, 111

Ball v. Paramount, 67 F. Supp. 1 (W. D. Pa., 1946) ... 119

Bement v. National Harrow Company, 186 U. S. 70 (1902) 65

Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291 (1923) 111

Bobbs-Merrill v. Straus, 210 U. S. 339 (1907) 65

Carbice Corporation v. American Patents Development Corporation, 283 U. S. 27 (1931) 64

DeBeers Mines v. United States, 325 U. S. 212 (1945) 37

Duluth Theatres Corp. v. Paramount, et al., No. 2335 (D., Minn.) 119

Eastman Kodak Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 F. (2d) 994 (C. C. A. 2d, 1925), aff'd, 274 U. S. 619 (1927) 109

Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436 (1940) 65

PAGE

Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, et al., In the Matter of, 11 F. T. C. 187 (1927) 116
Federal Club v. National League, 259 U. S. 200 (1922) 71

General Talking Pictures Corp. v. Western Electric Co., 304 U. S. 175 (1938) 65

Hartford Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386 (1945) 38, 45, 48

International Salt Co. Inc. v. United States, 68 Sup. Ct. 12 (1947) 39, 45, 52
Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208 (1939) 66, 84, 108, 118

Kalem v. Harper Bros., 222 U. S. 55 (1911) 65

Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293 (1934) 39

Momand v. Universal, No. 7024, District Court of Massachusetts 119

National Labor Relations Board v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U. S. 426 (1941) 38
Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197 (1904) 120

Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30 (1930) 117
Patterson v. Century Productions, 93 F. (2d) 489 (C. C. A. 2d, 1937) 65

Standard Oil Company of New Jersey v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 (1911) 37, 38, 39, 58, 120, 122
Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553, 605 (1936) 71, 122
Swift and Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375 (1905) 38, 45

United States v. Aluminum Co., 148 F. (2d) 416 (C. C. A. 2d, 1945) 78, 121
United States v. American Can Co., 230 Fed. 859 (D. C. Md., 1916) 120

PAGE

United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106 (1911) 120, 122
United States v. Balaban & Katz Corp. (N. D., Ill.) 117
United States v. Bausch Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 726 (1944) 38
United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 243 Fed. 964 (S. D. N. Y. 1916), app. dism., 249 U. S. 621 (1919) 120
United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944) 48, 49, 52, 111
United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 226 Fed. 62 (W. D. N. Y., 1915); 230 Fed. 522 (1916) 120
United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 188 Fed. 127 (C. C. Del. 1911) 120
United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., 282 U. S. 44 (1930) 117
United States v. General Electric Company, 272 U. S. 476 (1926) 64, 65
United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co., 208 Fed. 733 (N. D. Ohio 1913), 217 Fed. 656 (N. D. Ohio 1914) 120, 122
United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693 (1927) 58, 121
United States v. Keystone Watch Case Co., 218 Fed. 502 (E. D. Pa. 1915), app. dism. 257 U. S. 664 (1921). 120
United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255 (1920) 110, 120
United States v. Line Material Co., 64 F. Supp. 970 (E. D. Wis. 1946) 64
United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265 (1942) 64
United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319 (1947) 38, 50, 55, 121
United States v. Quaker Oats Co., 232 Fed. 499 (N. D. Ill. 1916), app. dism. 253 U. S. 499 (1920) 120

PAGE

United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26 (1920). 110, 120
United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, Final Decree unreported, reprinted in Statement of Jurisdiction, Schine Chain Theatres v. United States, Supreme Court Doc. #10 ..... 52, 63
United States v. Shoe Machinery Company of New Jersey, et al., 247 U. S. 32 (1918) 58
United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U. S. 214 (1922) 120
United States v. Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, 47 F. (2d) 288 (E. D. Mo. 1931) 109
United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106 (1932) 111
United States v. Terminal Railroad Association, 224 U. S. 383 (1912) 120, 122
United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U. S. 61 (1912) 120
United States v. United Shoe Machinery Company, 247 U. S. 32 (1917) 109
United States v. United States Steel Corporation, 251 U. S. 417 (1920) 58, 109, 121
United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241 (1942) 64
United States v. West Coast Theatres, Inc., S. D. Calif. 117
United States v. Winslow, 227 U. S. 202 (1913) 109
United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218 (1947) 71, 110
Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 227 U. S. 8 (1913) 65
West Coast Theatres, Inc., In the Matter of, 12 F. T. C. 383 (1929) 116

Table of Statutes

Copyright Act Sections 1, (a), (b), (d) (35 Stat. 1075, 17 U. S. C. 1, (a), (b), (d)) 2, 108

Expediting Act of Feb. 11, 1903 as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 272; 15 U. S. C. Sec. 29). 2, 4

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 52(a) 78

Judicial Code, Section 238, as amended (43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. §345) 2

Sherman Act, Sections 1 and 2 (26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. 1, 2) 2

Sherman Act as amended, Section 4 (26 Stat. 209; 36 Stat. 1167; 15 U. S. C. Sec. 4) 3, 37

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term 1947

LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, et al., Appellants, against UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee.	No. 80
UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant, against PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., et al., Appellees.	No. 79

ON APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT, DECREE AND FINAL ORDER OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF FOR RKO DEFENDANTS AS APPELLANTS IN NO. 80 AND AS APPELLEES IN NO. 79

Opinion and Judgment Below

The Opinion of the District Court (R. 3504)[1] is reported at 66 F. Supp. 323; the Decree (R. 3694) is reported at 70 F. Supp. 53.

[1] In this Brief, the abbreviation "R" refers to the printed Record.

Jurisdiction

Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 272; 15 U. S. C. §29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. §345).

Statutes Involved

Sherman Act (26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C.):

> Section 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. * * *
>
> * * * * * *
>
> Section 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

The Copyright Act (35 Stat. 1075, 17 U. S. C.):

> Section 1. Any person entitled thereto upon complying with the provisions of this title, shall have the exclusive right:
>
> (a) To print, reprint, publish, copy, and vend the copyrighted work;
>
> (b) To translate the copyrighted work into other languages or dialects, make any other version thereof, if it be a literary work; to dramatize it if it be a nondramatic work; to convert it into a novel or other nondramatic work if it be a drama; to arrange or adapt it if it be a musical work; to complete, execute, and finish it if it be a model or design for a work of art;

* * * * *

(d) To perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama or, if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced in copies for sale, to vend any manuscript or any record whatsoever thereof; to make or to procure the making of any transcription or record thereof by or from which, in whole or in part, it may in any manner or by any method be exhibited, performed, represented, produced, or reproduced; and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce, or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever. * * *

Statement of the Case

This is a suit in equity[2] under Section 4 of the Sherman Anti-trust Act to enjoin an alleged combination to restrain and monopolize the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act (R. 3137). The defendants are eight motion picture organizations:[3] RKO, Fox, Loew's, Para-

[2] The original complaint filed on July 20, 1938, was superseded by an amended and supplemental complaint filed November 14, 1940 (R. 3137).

On November 20, 1940, a consent decree was entered as to the five theatre owning defendants. The case at bar arises upon motion by the plaintiff to modify the consent decree (R. 3373).

[3] In this brief the United States will be referred to as "the plaintiff." The defendants, unless otherwise indicated will be referred to by abbreviated titles as follows:

"RKO"—Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation and RKO Midwest Corporation;

mount and Warner, each of which produces, distributes and exhibits; Columbia and Universal, each of which produces and distributes; and United Artists, which distributes feature motion pictures. "As between the eight defendants • • • there are no officers or directors in common, and none of said defendants owns any controlling stock or other securities in any other of said defendants" (Finding of Fact No. 57, R. 3670).

After the filing of an Expediting Certificate (R. 3502) under the Act of February 11, 1903 (32 Stat. 823, 15 U. S. C. §28), the case was tried before a Court composed of Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand and District Judges John Bright and Henry W. Goddard (R. 3504).

The Court filed Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law (R. 3659) and entered a Decree (R. 3694) which enjoined certain trade practices and required the termination of certain local agreements and the dissolution of certain joint interests. The Court refused the plaintiff's request that each theatre owning defendant be compelled to divest itself of all interests in theatres or in the alternative

---

"Paramount"—Paramount Pictures, Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation;

"Loew's"—Loew's Incorporated;

"Warner"—Warner Bros. Pictures Inc., Vitagraph, Inc. and Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation;

"Fox"—Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation;

"Columbia"—Columbia Pictures Corporation, Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc. and Screen Gems, Inc.;

"Universal"—Universal Corporation, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. and Big U Film Exchanges, Inc.;

"United Artists"—United Artists Corporation.

Paramount, Loew's, Warner, Fox and RKO are at times referred to as the "theatre-owning defendants" or as "distributor-exhibitor defendants."

be enjoined from exhibiting in its theatres any feature distributed by another theatre-owning defendant.

RKO joined with certain of the other defendants in a motion to amend the Findings and Conclusions and the Decree (R. 3703). This motion was overruled February 11, 1947 (R. 3719).

All parties appealed, and six docket numbers have been assigned. The plaintiff's appeal was assigned No. 79; the respective defendants' appeals, Nos. 80 (Loew's, RKO, Fox, Warner); 81 (Paramount); 82 (Columbia); 83 (United Artists); 84 (Universal).

Questions Presented

This Brief combines RKO's Brief as Appellant in cause No. 80 and its Brief as Appellee in cause No. 79.

The questions presented by RKO as Appellant in No. 80 are:

I. Whether the provision of the Decree, Part III, Paragraph 6, which absolutely prohibits this defendant from expanding its theatre holdings, is necessary or appropriate to prevent or restrain the violations of the Sherman Act found to have existed.

II. Whether the provision of the Decree, Part III, Paragraph 5, which requires RKO to terminate its investments amounting to over 5% and less than 95% in certain local theatre holding and operating companies either by selling its interest or by acquiring (with court approval) the interest of others, is a necessary and appropriate exercise of the court's discretion to prevent or restrain the violations of the Sherman Act found to have existed.

III. Whether the provision of the Decree, Part II, Paragraph 1, which prohibits RKO from setting the minimum admission price to be charged during the exhibition of the feature licensed, deprives it of a legitimate right to contract for the exhibition of the ordinary copyrighted feature motion pictures distributed by it in its routine operations.

IV. Whether the provision of the Decree, Part II, Paragraph 1, which prohibits RKO from setting the minimum admission price to be charged during the exhibition of the feature licensed, deprives it of a legitimate right to contract for the exhibition of the unusual copyrighted feature motion pictures distributed by it for special pre-release road show engagements.[4]

V. Whether the District Court erred in failing to Decree that disputes between one or more of the defendants and exhibitors arising under the decree should be determined by arbitration under the Rules of Arbitration provided in the Consent Decree (R. 3373) pursuant to the prayer of the Plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint (R. 3137).

The other questions raised by RKO's assignments of error have been thoroughly briefed by other appellants, and will not be discussed herein. They are not, however, waived by RKO.

---

[4] A road show is defined by the Court as:

> "A public exhibition of a feature in a limited number of theatres, in advance of its general release, at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in the areas where they are located" (Finding of Fact No. 1, R. 3660).

The questions discussed by RKO as Appellee in No. 79, which fully cover all propositions advanced by the United States as Appellant therein, are:

VI. Whether the District Court was correct in its refusal to find that RKO through the use of its theatres was engaged with the other theatre operating defendants in a nationwide conspiracy to monopolize the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, and hence was correct in its refusal to treat the theatre operations of the five defendants as an aggregate in considering the plaintiff's general charge of monopoly in exhibition.

VII. Whether the District Court was correct in refusing to hold that RKO, when considered alone as an integrated company producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, is in itself an unlawful combination.

VIII. Whether, in view of the adequate relief granted by the Decree of the District Court, that Court was correct in its refusal to order RKO to divest itself of its theatres or its production and distribution facilities, and was correct in its refusal to enjoin RKO from licensing its features to theatres affiliated with other defendants and to enjoin other producer-exhibitor defendants from licensing features for exhibition in RKO theatres.

The Facts

A. The industry prior to the organization of RKO.

By 1927 seven of the eight defendants were active. Five were engaged in production and exhibition: Paramount (R. 606, 894, 964), Fox (R. 1247), Loew's (R. 906, 1839), Warner (R. 1556), and Universal (R. 1969-70, 2078). A sixth, United Artists, organized in 1919 (R. 1407), was distributing features, and certain of its controlling stockholders were interested in United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., which had a relatively small circuit of theatres (R. 1233). Columbia was producing features (R. 906), and would shortly, in 1929, organize its national distribution system (R. 1256).

B. Organization of RKO, 1928-1932.

The organization of RKO stemmed directly from the introduction of sound pictures between 1925 and 1927. In 1925 Warner, under license from Electrical Research Products, Inc. (ERPI), a subsidiary of Western Electric Co., had undertaken the development of sound pictures (R. 1554). Fox also interested itself in sound recording and reproduction. By 1927 both companies, using ERPI equipment, were able to produce and exhibit pictures which indicated that this was to be the next major development in the industry (R. 1597). ERPI thereupon proceeded rapidly to place its equipment in most studios and in many of the leading theatres (R. 1597).

In 1928 Radio Corporation of America (RCA) perfected sound recording and reproduction equipment for motion pictures. It thus became the only company in a position to challenge the dominance of ERPI, but it was faced by the fact that ERPI's equipment was already established, installed, and in successful use. Against this handicap, RCA determined to form a new company capable of entering the market and demonstrating by actual performance the competitive merits of its own product (R. 1597).

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, organized October 25, 1928, was the outgrowth of this decision (Gov. Ex. 87). The Court found:

> "The organization of RKO did increase competition in each of the three branches of the industry" (Finding of Fact No. 23, R. 3664).

Production and distribution facilities were acquired by RKO through FBO Productions, Inc., which was a small, inconspicuous, and relatively weak producing company with a national distributing organization. Seven million dollars were invested in modernizing, enlarging and equipping its properties for sound (R. 1599). The Court found:

> "The formation of RKO introduced a new and substantial competitive factor in the production and distribution of motion pictures" (Finding of Fact No. 20, R. 3664).

Between 1928 and 1932 RKO acquired, by purchase or lease, and operated approximately 200 theatres. These theatres were located in 48 cities of over 100,000 population and 14 smaller cities (Gov. Exs. 89, 91, 97-101, 105-107, 158, 159).[6] The locations of the cities are shown on Figure 1, page 11.

---

[6] The evidence does not reflect all of RKO's interests during the organization period, but it furnishes sufficient data to indicate their general scope. In 1928 and 1929 RKO acquired a number of vaudeville theatres, which had been owned or operated by Keith-Albee-Orpheum, the Orpheum Circuit, and F. F. Proctor Holding Corp. These theatres were located in the East and the Mid-West. In 1929 through 1931 theatres were added in new areas as widely separated as Georgia and Washington, Texas and Wisconsin, Utah and Rhode Island.

Most of these theatres were large houses suitable for first-run operation. Many of them were vaudeville theatres which were rapidly being outstripped by newer and finer theatres constructed primarily for the exhibition of motion pictures. RKO met the competitive challenge by investing some $8,000,000 in rehabilitating and modernizing its theatres and equipping them for sound (R. 1599).

There is no contention that RKO in acquiring these theatres was guilty of any predatory or improper practices. As to the effect of the acquisitions, the Court found:

> *"The formation of RKO * * * introduced new and substantial competition into the exhibition field in the cities in which each of these theatres was located"* (Finding of Fact No. 121, R. 3684).

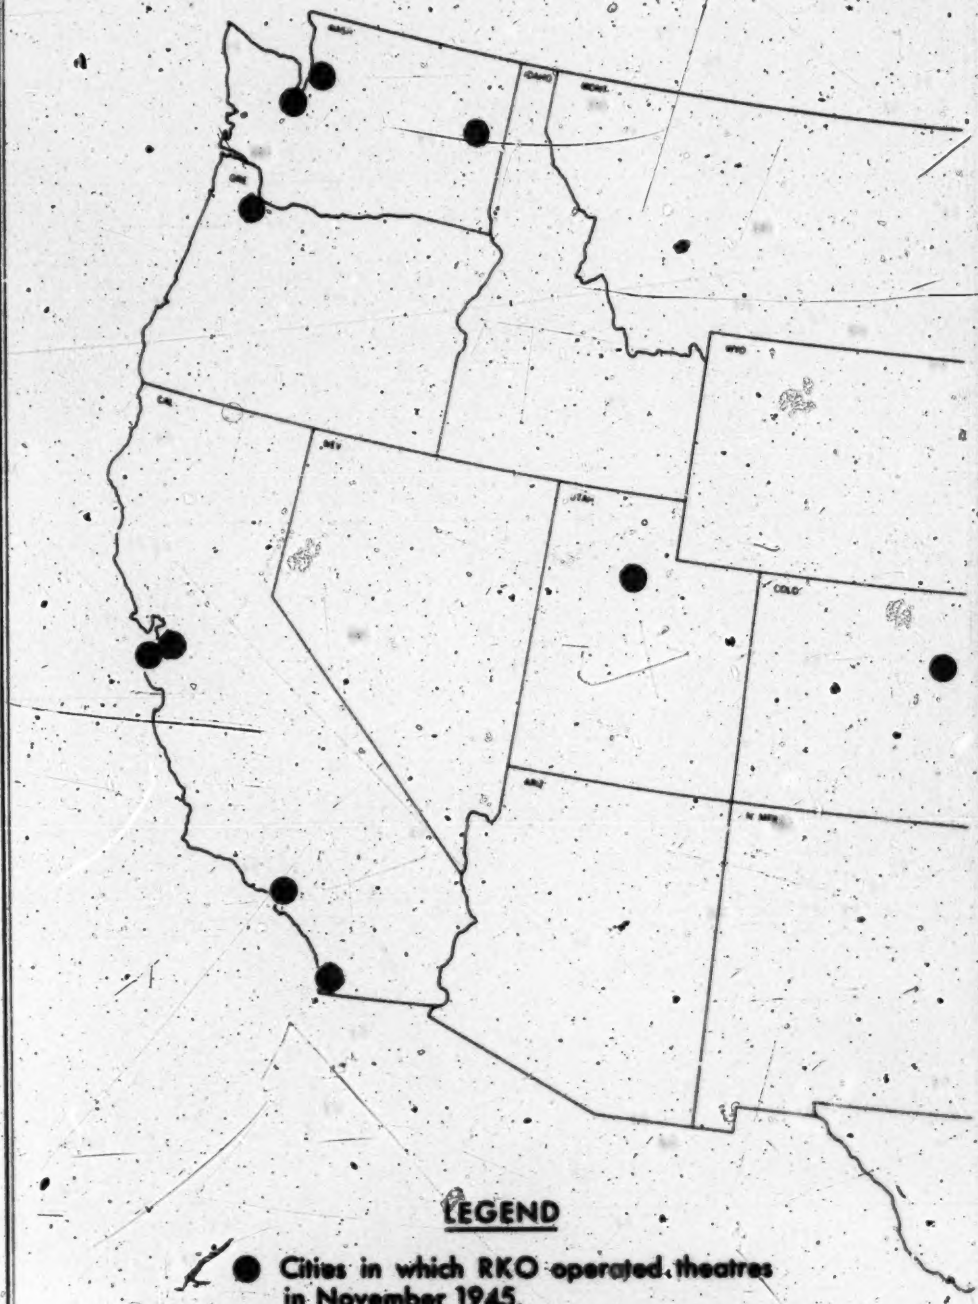
C. RKO's financial difficulties.

In 1933 RKO went into receivership. This was followed by reorganization proceedings under Section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act. The company was not freed of these proceedings until 1940 (Gov. Ex. 91). Some 57 of its theatres were lost during the receivership and reorganization (Gov. Exs. 158, 159, R. 1600). Another 60 theaters had been eliminated from its operations before the trial, most of these before 1933. Plaintiff concedes that there has been virtually no expansion of RKO's theatre holdings since 1935 (R. 1600). In the same period, however, the total number of theatres in the United States increased from 13,386 to 18,076 (Finding of Fact No. 145, R. 3688).

D. RKO's theatre holdings at the date of trial.

RKO's theatre holdings at the date of the trial were of three types:

LOCAT



LEGEND

- Cities in which RKO operated theatres in November 1945.
- Cities in which RKO formerly operated theatres, operation lost prior to November 1945.

1. Theatres operated by RKO.

At the date of the trial RKO was operating 106 theatres located in 38 cities (RKO Ex. 1). Of these, RKO owned in fee only 32. Of the remainder, 51 were leased; 3 were held in part in fee and in part under lease; and 20 were joint interests of the type condemned by the Decree (RKO Exs. 1, 11; Gov. Ex. 158). RKO owned, but did not operate eight additional theatres located in seven cities (Gov. Ex. 158). The locations of the cities wherein RKO operated theatres at the time of the trial are shown on Figure 1.

2. Beneficial interests with defendants and independents.

At the time of the trial, RKO held beneficial interests in a number of local theatre operating or holding companies, most of these being minority interests. Specifically, RKO held the following interests:[7]

10% interest in 2 companies having 96 theatres
15% interest in 1 company having 1 theatre
20% interest in 1 company having 136 theatres
25% interest in 2 companies having 8 theatres
30% interest in 1 company having 1 theatre
33-1/3% interest in 3 companies having 24 theatres
35% interest in 1 company having 3 theatres
49% interest in 1 company having 1 theatre
50% interest in 5 companies having 16 theatres
65% interest in 1 company having 3 theatres

[7] Finding of Fact No. 117 (R. 3683) shows RKO as having joint interests with other exhibitors in 318 theatres. This Finding, however, is predicated on RKO Exhibit 11 which made no distinction between beneficial interests falling within Paragraph (5) and "pooling situations" coming within Paragraph (2) of Part III of the decree. See Government Exhibits 87, 96, 99, 105.

The majority of such interests were owned by predecessor companies or were acquired shortly after RKO was organized. The record shows the lawful purpose for which RKO was formed. The plaintiff introduced no evidence to show either the purpose or the effect of RKO's ownership of such interests. Under the Decree, if it remain in its present form, RKO will be compelled to terminate these joint interests by December 31, 1948. It may do so by disposing of its interest or by acquiring (with court approval) the interest of its co-owner.[8]

No evidence was offered by the plaintiff to support any finding that such interests were improperly acquired or had in any locality any adverse effect upon competition.

3. Pools and leases.

At the time of the trial RKO had 14 theatres, located in 9 cities, which were parties to "pools."[9] All such operating agreements have been terminated.

At the date of the trial RKO owned the fee of three theatres and a leasehold on two theatres which had been leased and subleased, respectively, to Fast Theatres, Inc. in January, 1935 for a flat rental, plus a percentage of profits (Gov. Ex. 204). These theatres were located in Albany, Troy, and Schenectady, N. Y. RKO has never licensed features for them (R. 588). To comply with the [8] RKO has already sold its interest in Affiliated Theatres and in The United Theatres Company (Report of Compliance, July 1, 1947).

[9] The court refers to "pooling agreements" as "agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors normally in competition are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee or by one of the exhibitors or whereby profits of the 'pooled' theatres are divided among the owners according to prearranged percentages" (Decree, Part III, paragraph 2; R. 3600).

Decree, RKO has sold these owned and leased theatres (Report of Compliance, dated July 1, 1947).

E. RKO as producer, distributor and exhibitor.

The plaintiff in its appeal demands that RKO be compelled to divest itself of all its theatres. RKO in its appeal asks that it be allowed to expand its theatre holdings where justified by an affirmative showing that such expansion will not unlawfully restrain or monopolize trade.

Pertinent to the issues presented on both appeals, therefore, are the facts as to: 1. The increased efficiency and economy resulting from the operation by RKO as an integrated unit; and, 2, the evidence as to the ability of others to compete with RKO at each level.

1. RKO's operation as an integrated unit results in increased efficiencies and economies.

a. Show-case theatres.

The theatres operated by RKO serve an unique and useful function in the advertising of features distributed by RKO. It is significant that this advertising function redounds not only to the advantage of RKO but also of subsequent run exhibitors in areas in which such RKO theatres are located. As found by the Court,

> "The ownership and operation by RKO of theatres in certain principal cities of the United States enables RKO through the utilization of the facilities of such theatres to plan and direct the first exploitation of the features which it distributes in such areas in a more effective manner than is possible in areas where RKO does not operate theatres" (Finding of Fact No. 122, R. 3685).
>
> "The successful exhibition of a feature in its initial runs in any area is widely publicized and closely observed by subsequent run exhibitors in that area and success in exploiting a picture in such exhibitions produces increased revenue both for the distributor and for subsequent run exhibitors" (Finding of Fact No. 123, R. 3685).

The significance of these Findings will appear from a brief description of the mechanics of motion picture distribution.

The fundamental fact is that it is not feasible to exhibit the feature in all theatres simultaneously.[10] Hence the [10] An outstanding feature will be exhibited in from 8,000 to 14,000 theatres (R. 668, 1696-97). At the date of trial each black and white print cost $150 to $300, each color print $600-$800 (Finding of Fact No. 74, R. 3673).

---

Few theatres could afford to pay a license fee of $500, which would be the minimum amount necessary to recover the cost of production and distribution on an average feature if 10,000 prints were made. This is shown by the record on RKO's most widely exhibited feature in 1943-44, LADY TAKES A CHANCE. The following table shows the number of exhibitions at stated license fees in the larger cities.

	First Run, Cities of 25,000 and over	Second Run, Cities of 50,000 and over	Third Run, Cities of 200,000 and over	Fourth Run, Cities of 1,000,000 and over
Over $10,000	7	0	0	0
$5,000-10,000	22	1	0	0
2,500-4,999	58	6	1	0
1,000-2,499	160	21	2	8*
500- 999	113	31	9	2
250- 499	53	60	36	8
100- 249	42	153	66	50
50- 100		78	88	64
Less than 50		31	39	28
Total	455	381	241	160

* Seven of the eight fourth run situations paying in excess of $1000 were in Philadelphia, Pa.

Source: Gov. Ex. 94

distributor must determine the number of prints which, by rapid shuttling between theatres, can most efficiently service the exhibitors without unduly magnifying the expense to be paid, ultimately, by the theatre patron. Each additional print, on the one hand, will permit more rapid circulation, and, on the other, will increase the investment to be recovered. The number of prints depends on the anticipated demand (R. 668, 670). The present practice is to make 200 to 350 prints (R. 415, 670),[11] each of which is circulated as rapidly as possible to some 30 to 40 theatres (R. 417).

Because of this limited number of prints, a feature cannot possibly show on the same day in more than 300 to 350 theatres. "[L]icensing features for exhibition on different successive dates is essential in the distribution of feature motion pictures" (Finding of Fact No. 75, R. 3673). In accord with logical business judgment, the distributor licenses runs in the order of importance (R. 415). Initial showings should be, and where possible are, in the largest theatres in the largest cities. These theatres have greater capacity and can accommodate more patrons than first-run theatres in smaller towns, or neighborhood theatres in the same city. Out of their substantially higher box office receipts, without undue burden on the patron, these larger theatres can, should and do pay higher rentals than theatres in small towns (R. 705). The fact that these initial runs pay higher license fees is of course reflected in the lower fees which can be and are charged to smaller first-run theatres in smaller cities and towns and to subsequent runs everywhere. Indeed, the license fees progressively decrease, until the majority of the theatres actually pay less than the print cost (R. 671).[12] "Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs * * * is adopted * * *" (Finding of Fact No. 74, R. 3673).

[11] On a very unusual picture the number of prints may be larger. Thus there were some 500 prints of the feature GONE WITH THE WIND (R. 415); on less attractive features the number may be as small as 150 (R. 670).

After the initial engagements, a feature is circulated as rapidly as physically possible to other theatres, usually to first-run theatres in smaller communities before returning to the larger city for second and subsequent run engagements. No print is kept idle during this period: except for the minimum of time required in shipment, handling and inspection, each is constantly in use for the first 12 to 14 months (R. 670). The bulk of the revenue from a feature is concentrated in the first few months, and the life expectancy of a print is 18 to 24 months (R. 672). This system "permits the public to see the picture in a later exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates" (Finding of Fact No. 76, R. 3673).

As a result of this system of staggered engagements, characteristic of and essential to all film distribution, a lapse of some period is unavoidable between the opening of the first exhibition in a trade area and the availability of a print for every exhibitor in that area. This time lag, an inherent factor in motion picture distribution, exercises an unusual influence upon the habits of exhibitors and motion picture patrons. Each feature, after all, differs from all which have gone before and all which will come after.

---

[12] For example, Warner's PRINCESS O'ROURKE, its feature with the greatest number of exhibitions in 1943-44 had 14,090 bookings, 12,926 of which were for an average fee of $78.40 (R. 1560).

A distributor can roughly classify a feature as to its probable attractiveness on the basis of the talent employed and the investment committed, but he knows, as plaintiff's counsel conceded at the trial, that he "cannot attempt any evaluation of these films in any other terms than what they actually produce at the boxoffice. There are no standards * * * by which any of us can judge them aesthetically * * *" (R. 14).

Because it is impossible to determine in advance the probable public appeal of any particular feature, exhibitors perforce rely upon the impersonal test of the competitive market as shown by the ability of a feature to attract patronage in the early runs in the larger cities. Subsequent-run exhibitors in the city and all exhibitors in smaller cities and towns follow closely trade journal reports, newspaper reviews, and other sources of information as to the features' acceptance at the large city first-runs. Thus they are able to judge the box-office value of the feature often before they license it, and in any event before they "book" it for their theatres.[18] "In general, trade shows, which are designed to prevent blind selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors" (Finding of Fact 98, R. 3677).

So it is that in a market of this type the producer-distributor recognizes that the success of any feature, no matter how artistic and expensive, is directly related to the public reception of its initial exhibition in the "showcase" theatre of each commercial trade center. First-run advertising and word-of-mouth advertising benefit the first-run exhibition in the adjacent territory and the subsequent-run exhibition everywhere (R. 681, 1387, 1513).

---

[18] The term "book" refers to the setting of a date on which a given feature will be exhibited in a particular theatre (R. 559, 669).

Wherever possible, RKO as a distributor times this initial exhibition in close correlation with the results of widespread public surveys. These surveys indicate the period during which the opening of the exhibition will have the maximum public interest. The entire national advertising campaign is pointed toward this date. Local advertising campaigns are timed to coincide. This local campaign, to contribute most significantly to the success of the feature, must be varied in extent and nature depending on the needs of the particular feature (R. 1634-35). In Manhattan, for example, RKO's local advertising in support of its "showcase" theater almost invariably equals or exceeds its film rentals, so that the feature goes to the second-runs before RKO begins to earn revenue (R. 1646). Thus the support and cooperation of the exhibitor is of the utmost importance and is most effective when the exhibition is in an RKO "show-case" theatre (R. 1625-26, 1634-35, 1693).

The Findings quoted above give recognition to these factors.

b. Financial stability

Its theatre operations contribute to RKO's over-all financial stability. RKO has had financial difficulties. The depression which followed shortly after its organization caused RKO disastrous losses. Without its theatres RKO probably never could have emerged from its reorganization, and in the early years after its release from the courts could not have continued to operate (R. 1618).

The business of producing motion pictures necessarily entails substantial financial risks (R. 611, 1619). A large studio capable of producing a steady flow of quality features must have numerous departments, staffed by experts, to handle such diverse subjects as talent, story, scenario, music, casting, research, design, makeup, costume photography and sound (R. 622, 1795). Such studios represent investments of millions of dollars (R. 622). The cost of producing features has increased tremendously during the past thirty-five years (Tr. 611, 672, 1261). Typical average cost per feature have been, in 1935-36, $376,014; in 1940, $430,000; in 1943-44, $1,250,000; and in 1945, $1,350,000 (Tr. 1548, 1550, 1570). These contrast sharply with the $40,000 to $60,000 production cost which was customary about 1915 (R. 611). Furthermore, these are average costs. A so-called "A" feature will frequently cost $3,000,000, as against $1,500,000 ten years ago (R. 611, 625-26).

To the production cost must be added the distribution expense. The cost of prints is treated as a part of the distribution expense. The total cost of black and white prints prior to the trial was from $25,000 to $97,500 per feature; for color prints, from $100,000 to $250,000 (R. 671, 1895-96). When all expenses are added, distribution cost will total one-half or more of the production cost (R. 1568-69).

Large sums are thus invested in recording an idea which cannot be tested in advance and which may not win public favor. An independent producer normally makes only one feature at a time. He usually rents studio space, borrows or hires talent, and has little fixed investment. He can enter production in boom years and withdraw when business is bad (R. 1619). The companies like RKO on which the individual exhibitor depends for a day-to-day supply must plan a program which will produce a continuous flow of pictures. This program is scheduled a year to eighteen months in advance (R. 673, 1619). Thus their total investment is pyramided upon producers such as RKO, who must build an inventory of finished features (R. 1619). Frequently a high cost production grosses substantially less than its cost (R. 647, 742-43). The history of the industry has many examples of box office failures which certainly were expected, and often seemed entitled artistically, to win box office acceptance. Any producer who undertakes to underwrite a continual output of features, therefore, is likely from time to time to be faced with unprofitable pictures (R. 1619).

Added to the risks of the domestic market are the unforeseeable hazards of the international situation. Upwards of 30% of RKO's total revenues has come from foreign markets, and features are produced in expectation of this revenue (R. 1620). Over a long period of time the foreign market has contributed the bulk of the profit (R. 1569-1571; 1620). In the present condition of world commerce, of which this Court can take judicial notice, no producer can plan with assurance upon a free flow of funds from the foreign to the domestic bank account. The recent confiscatory tax of 75% of revenues imposed by England is only the most publicized instance of trade barriers which have been erected, often without warning, to destroy the profit potential of a producer.

The theatre business, on the other hand, is relatively stable and predictable. In no year between 1935 and 1945 did the attendance at RKO theatres vary 5% from the average (R. 1617, 1618). While RKO lost $5,000,000 in its production and distribution operations between 1938 and 1942, it made $9,000,000 on its theatre operations during the same period (R. 1618). Ultimately, of course, the success of any producer depends "on his ability to create a box office picture, to build something that the public is interested in, and will pay to go to see" (R. 657). But the assurance of a stable revenue offsets some of the production risks and makes possible experimentation with new types of features (R. 1613-23, 1624).

2. RKO's operation as an integrated unit does not effect a restraint upon competition at any level of the industry.

The fact that RKO can operate more efficiently and serve the public more effectively as an integrated unit having an interest in the production, distribution, and exhibition of feature pictures does not impair the ability of its non-integrated rivals to compete successfully at each level of the industry. The Court below concluded that certain trade practices in distribution and certain local exhibition arrangements and investments violated the Sherman Act. These conclusions are assigned as error. But even if such conclusions were not challenged, the fact is clear that such violations were not the result of integration. The Court found:

> "In localities where there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of the competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from 'inherent vice' on the part of these defendants" (Finding of Fact No. 153, R. 3690).
>
> "The illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in admission price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited" (Finding of Fact No. 154, R. 3690).

"Total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned and would be damaging to the public" (Finding of Fact No. 155, R. 3690).

"Total divestiture would not remedy the price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and the other practices which have been found unreasonably to restrict competition" (Finding of Fact No. 156, R. 3690).

The record fully sustains these Findings:

a. Production

Independent producers have demonstrated their ability to compete successfully with the integrated producer-exhibitor companies. For ten years prior to the trial the number of independent producers and productions had been increasing (R. 639, 1263). A list of successful features produced independently during the years before the trial is in evidence (Columbia Ex. C-4). At the time of the trial there were some 40 independent producers in Hollywood alone (R. 639-41). Those who do not have their own studios make extensive use of the studio facilities and equipment of the defendants and others, which are available for reasonable rentals (R. 651, 1533, 1534, 1802, 1803). Established stars, feature players, and other production personnel are amply available in the free lance market (R. 797-99). Where particular personalities are under contract and are peculiarly suitable for certain roles, there is a wide loan of talent in which independent producers freely share (R. 1801-02, 1261-62, 1529-30, 637-39). Thus independent producers have been and are able to compete successfully without high overhead either in fixed investments or talent contracts.

Distribution of independently produced features is normally handled through one of the eleven national distributors. No worthwhile independently produced feature has failed to secure such distribution (R. 1263-66). RKO relies heavily on independent producers to fill out its supply of product, and in the five seasons prior to the trial from 15.7% to 41.3% of the features it distributed were independently produced and yielded from 30.9% to 40.6% of its gross distribution revenue (R. 1649, RKO Ex. 5).

On this showing the plaintiff conceded that it could not show any monopoly in the field of production (R. 1952), and the Court found:

> "There exists active competition among the defendants and others in the production of motion pictures" (Finding of Fact No. 59, R. 3670).
>
> "None of the defendants has monopolized or attempted to monopolize or contracted or combined or conspired to monopolize or to restrain trade or commerce in any part of the business of producing motion pictures" (Finding of Fact No. 60, R. 3670).

b. Distribution

At the time of the trial there were eleven national distribution organizations (R. 544). Of the total of 442 features released through all distributors in 1944, RKO distributed 28 produced by itself and 9 produced by others (RKO Ex. 2). The 37 features handled by RKO represented but 8.4% of the total. No one can seriously contend that RKO has the power to dominate or control the market in distribution.

Furthermore, the integrated structure of RKO does not deny any distributor access to its theatres. As found by the Court below, it would be financially impossible for RKO to operate its theatres on RKO features alone (Finding of Fact No. 102, R. 3678). RKO theatres therefore must license features from other distributors to fill the time not used in exhibiting RKO's own features.

Naturally RKO, like every other exhibitor, seeks to license the best product available (R. 1655). This policy necessarily limits it largely to the eleven distributors with national release organizations, since the features distributed by the so-called "states rights" exchanges are low-cost, low-quality productions (R. 660).

The source of the features exhibited by RKO reflects the fact that its theatres look to the product of the non-integrated companies for almost one half of their supply. During the 1943-44 motion picture season RKO's 93 theatres which operated on first-run and (in the New York metropolitan area) first-neighborhood-run played 10,376 feature engagements[14] (RKO Ex. 8). Of these, a little less than one-fourth (23.1%) were exhibitions of RKO's own releases, and nearly one-half (47.3%) were exhibitions of features released by distributors which did not operate theatres. If Fox, Warner, Loew's and Paramount, the other theatre owning defendants, are aggregated, less than three feature exhibitions in each ten in these RKO theatres (29.6%) were licensed from them (Finding of Fact No. 137, R. 3687). In licensing the product of a distributor which is affiliated with theatres, RKO has no understanding, express or implied, that such distributor's theatre operating executives will give RKO features any preference for such theatres (R. 1659).

[14] In this tabulation, each engagement of a feature in each theatre is counted separately. Thus, if a Columbia feature is exhibited in five RKO theatres, this would be tabulated as five feature engagements.

c. Exhibition.

In 1945 there were approximately 18,000 theatres operating in the United States: RKO operated 1 in each 167. The estimated weekly theatre attendance was 95,000,000 customers: about 1 in 50 went to an RKO theatre. The estimated weekly box office receipts were just under $25,000,000: about $1 in each $40 went to an RKO theatre (Tr. 1611, RKO Ex. 2).

RKO operates first-run theatres in 25 of the 92 cities of the United States with a population of 100,000 or more (RKO Ex. 7). There are 175 first-run theatres in these 25 cities, of which RKO operates only 47. In every city where RKO operates such a first-run theatre, with one exception, there are competing first-run theatres in which it has no interest[15] (Appendix A), and in all such cities there is additional competition from theatres operating on other runs (Finding of Fact No. 147, R. 3688).

In the four largest boroughs of New York City RKO operates 36 theatres. The Palace is a relatively small first-[15] At the time of the trial RKO operated in Cincinnati, Ohio seven first-run theatres and had a minority interest of 15.4% in the United Theatre Corp. which operated the Keith, a first-run theatre. The minority interest in the Keith has since been sold to an operating company in which RKO has no interest (Report of Compliance, July 1, 1947).

The exception is Grand Rapids, Michigan, where the competing first-run theatres are operated by W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. in which RKO has a 10% interest. See Appendix A.

run theatre in the highly competitive Times Square theatre area.[16] The remainder, scattered over the metropolitan area, are surrounded by theatres competing on the same or subsequent runs. Using a radius of one-half mile to embrace the area of most intense competition, the number competing with each RKO theatre averages 6.4 theatres. Only one of RKO's theatres is without competition within this distance, and only four have but one theatre competitor in this area; whereas the number rises as high as 18 in one case, and 17 in another. If the radius is extended to one mile, to cover an area of substantial competition, the average number of theatres competing with each RKO theatre rises to 15. No RKO theatre has less than two competitors within this distance, and the maximum rises to 36.[17] For a summary tabulation, see Appendix B.

Nor do the RKO theatres in New York dominate their respective competitive areas in seating capacity. Only seven of the 35 theatres have as much as one-half the seating capacity in a competitive area defined by a half mile radius, only one has as much as half the capacity in an area defined by a one mile radius. At the other extreme, fifteen have 10% or less of the seating capacity in the one-mile radius area where they are located (See Appendix B).

---

[16] Seating capacities of representative first-run theatres in the Times Square area:

Music Hall	5949 seats	Palace	1707 seats
Roxy	5886 seats	Hollywood	1587 seats
Capitol	5486 seats	Globe	1416 seats
Paramount	3664 seats	Winter Garden	1350 seats
Rivoli	9092 seats	Astor	1141 seats

[17] In some instances, the competitive areas thus outlined will overlap where two RKO theatres are less than two miles apart. The resulting duplications are not sufficiently numerous to affect the figures materially.

F. Minimum admission price provisions in film license contracts.

The above fact statement is directed to RKO's theatre holdings and operations, pertinent to Points I and II of its Argument as Appellant, dealing with the Decree's prohibition of expansion and of joint interests; and to Points VI, VII and VIII of its Argument as Appellee, dealing with the plaintiff's demand for divestiture. Additional facts pertinent to the material in the Government's Brief are stated in RKO's Argument as Appellee.

Points III and IV of RKO's Argument as Appellant consider the legality of license contract provisions as to the minimum admission price to be charged during the exhibition of the feature licensed. The relevant facts are subdivided into those related: 1. To the distribution of ordinary features; and 2. To the roadshowing of unusual features.

1. Minimum admission prices in licenses of ordinary features.

Feature motion pictures may be classified as "ordinary" and "extraordinary" features. Extraordinary features include the small number of productions which, because of outstanding cast, unusual cost, extra length, and similar distinguishing characteristics, are "roadshown," often with reserved seats. Ordinary features are those which are handled in the normal routine of distribution.

All features distributed by RKO are copyrighted (R. 658). "In the distribution of feature motion pictures no film is sold to the exhibitor; the right to exhibit under copyright is licensed" (Finding of Fact No. 61, R. 3670). The practice of licensing film, as shown above, is the logical and economical way to distr bute a feature film.

Long prior to 1920 distributors began to provide in the license agreement that the licensee should not charge less than a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the feature licensed (R. 439-40, 612, 717, 1723). Neither in origin nor in continued use did this practice have any relation to the fact that some distributors owned or operated theatres. It originated, indeed, before any defendant owned theatres (R. 612, 717-28, 916-17; P. Ex. 6).

The distributor has a direct and substantial interest in the minimum admission price to be charged during the period while the distributor's picture is being exhibited. The distributor's commercial problem is to license the feature on terms which will produce from each theatre a fair license fee and which will, in the aggregate, recoup the costs of production and distribution and a reasonable profit. The task requires the application of judgment to a complicated set of facts. The negotiation of a license fee for a particular feature for exhibition in a particular theatre involves the evaluation of numerous factors: for example, the location and seating capacity of the theatre, the quality of its housing and equipment, the exhibitor's playing policy, the sequence of runs in the competitive area, the box office attractiveness of the feature, the admission price to be charged, and the age of the picture.[18]

With the possible exception of the factor of admission price policy, the relation of the enumerated factors to the license fee is obvious. But the relevancy of the admission [18] The age factor is illustrated by the fact that during the week ending Oct. 13, 1945, Fox product billings were:

Features released in	1945-46 season	1,642	billings
" "	" 1944-45 "	4,547	"
" "	" 1943-44 "	493	"

(R. 1118)

price is equally indisputable. The relationship is clearest, of course, where the license fee is set as a stipulated percentage of the exhibitor's gross receipts. On the more attractive features such percentage terms are employed for two reasons. First, such a feature will normally be in the upper bracket of production cost, and it is difficult if not impossible to distribute it profitably on flat rentals (R. 430). Secondly, the percentage arrangement affords the distributor an opportunity to participate in the outstanding business which an exhibitor may do on the basis of the unusual excellence of the feature (R. 431). When features are distributed on a flat rental, however, the negotiation of its amount must turn, in part at least, on the parties' estimates of the probable gross (R. 725, 726).

The distributor can make his necessary estimates on any admission price the exhibitor may set for the period during which the feature is to be shown, but no distributor could form any intelligent guess as to the reasonable and fair license fee if the distributor had no idea of the admission price to be charged by the theatre when the feature was to be exhibited.

Accordingly, RKO in its negotiations has asked the exhibitor what admission he proposed to charge during the exhibition of a feature licensed and has incorporated this representation in a license provision specifying that during such exhibition he shall not charge less. Further, RKO's license form in use at the time of trial provided that if no higher admission price was written in, the exhibitor should charge not less than 10 cents in the afternoon and 15 cents in the evenings during the exhibition of the feature licensed (R. 1723). This was a nominal provision, since substantially all exhibitors charged more, and was looked upon as a matter of self-protection, since the charging of admission prices below 10¢ and 15¢ would debase motion picture entertainment and ultimately would hurt both the exhibitor and RKO (R. 1723).

The undisputed evidence shows that exhibitors have found, as a matter of good business practice, that they can best operate their theatres upon an admission price policy which does not vary from picture to picture or day to day. To see-saw prices would be unworkable and unsatisfactory both to the exhibitor and the public (R. 723, 969). Hence, an exhibitor normally continues on an established policy until conditions warrant a change, and then raises or lowers his price to set a new policy which he follows until another general change is indicated. It is also undisputed that the minima specified were the exhibitors' established scales of prices (R. 433, 718, 968, 999, 1382-83, 1723). Frequently the exhibitor established prices in excess of the minima (R. 725, 1001).[19] There is no evidence that RKO, or any other distributor, ever suggested a change of admission prices on ordinary features, or ever made any agreement as to the admission price to be charged at any time other than during the exhibition of its own feature then being licensed.

In specifying a minimum admission price to be charged during the exhibition of the feature licensed, RKO did not take into consideration whether or not the exhibitor was affiliated with any of the defendants in this case (R. 1723). Furthermore, the evidence shows affirmatively that RKO by the stipulation of admission prices in subsequent-run license contracts did not discriminate in favor of prior-run theatres affiliated with any of the defendants.[20] RKO had no understanding or agreement, written or oral, with any exhibitor concerning the admission prices which RKO would require any other exhibitor to charge on features licensed to such other exhibitor (R. 1724).

[19] For example, Loew's made a study of the price policy followed in 3237 theatres exhibiting one of its better features, and found that in 346 instances, or nearly 11%, the prices exceeded the minima specified (R. 434).

2. Minimum admission prices in licenses of extraordinary features.

From time to time producers have created unusual features which have been licensed for a limited number of "roadshow" engagements at advanced admission prices prior to general release (R. 720, 952). The roadshow practice is characterized by the following attributes: (a) the feature involved has an unusually high production cost and is generally much longer than the ordinary feature; (b) the feature involved is exhibited as a roadshow in only a limited number of theatres and not on the usual run and clearance basis; (c) the license fee is based on a percentage of gross receipts; (d) each license contract for the feature stipulates a minimum admission price to be charged by the licensee during the exhibition of the feature which is higher than the usual admission price; (e) a considerable period of time elapses between the conclusion of the roadshow exhibition and the time when the feature is made available for general release; and (f) due to the unusual cost and character of the feature, it cannot be distributed as advantageously by resort only to the normal method of distribution (R. 720-21, 1125-26, 1203, 1725).

---

[20] The RKO feature in the 1943-44 season which had the greatest number of domestic billings, LADY TAKES A CHANCE, was exhibited on first-run in affiliated theatres and on subsequent-run in unaffiliated theatres in 62 cities of over 50,000 population. Only 2.3% of the subsequent-run license contracts with the unaffiliated theatres stipulated an admission price of 40¢ or more (RKO Exs. 20, 21). On the other hand, the same feature was exhibited on first-run in unaffiliated theatres in 71 of the cities with over 100,000 population and in 4.6% of the subsequent-run exhibitions in unaffiliated theatres an admission price of 40¢ or more was stipulated in the license contracts with the subsequent-run exhibitors (RKO Exs. 22, 23).

The use of roadshow licenses is not a frequent practice, but is of importance to producers who wish on occasion to attempt more ambitious releases than are possible on ordinary production budgets. During the five years before the trial only six such features were roadshown by defendants. The six were For Whom the Bell Tolls, Northwest Mounted Police, Reap the Wild Wind, Gone With the Wind, Wilson, and Song of Bernadette (R. 720, 1124, 1125, 1927). None of these pictures was distributed by RKO.

There is no evidence which suggests that the defendants have combined or conspired concerning the distribution or exhibition of such unusual features.

ARGUMENT FOR RKO APPELLANTS IN CAUSE NO. 80

Specification of Errors to be Urged

The following errors are urged herein:

1. The Court erred in Section III, Paragraph (6) of the Decree in enjoining RKO from expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in Section III, Paragraph (5) of the decree.

2. The Court erred in denying Paragraph I of RKO's Motion to Amend and Modify the Decree so as to make Paragraph (6) of Section III thereof read as follows:

> "'From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever, except as permitted in the preceding paragraph; or except for the purpose of acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field, if such defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Reasonable notice of the intention to make any such acquisition shall be served upon the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the Court.'"

3. The Court erred in Section III, Paragraph (5) of the Decree in requiring RKO to terminate its investments amounting to over 5% and less than 95% in certain local theatre holding and operating companies either by selling its interest or by acquiring (with court approval) the interest of others.

4. The Court erred in Section II, Paragraph (1) of the Decree in enjoining RKO:

> "1. From granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties, either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration or upon the happening of any event or in any manner or by any means."

5. The Court erred in failing to provide for a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained in its decree, as prayed in the Amended and Supplemental Complaint and as provided in the Consent Decree of the parties of November 20, 1940.

Other errors assigned by RKO are covered in the Briefs of the other appellant defendants. Though they are urged, RKO will not separately brief or comment on them.

I.

The District Court erred in enjoining RKO from expanding its present theatre holdings.

Paragraph (6) of Part III of the Decree (R. 3700) enjoins RKO and the other four exhibitor-defendants "From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in the preceding paragraph." The "preceding paragraph" enjoins the ownership by a defendant of a beneficial interest in a theatre in conjunction with another exhibitor, affiliated or independent, unless such interest is 5% or less or 95% or more; and provides that a defendant, in dissolving such relationships, may acquire his co-owner's interest upon showing to the Court's satisfaction that the acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in exhibition.

The three defendants who were not operating theatres at the date of the trial are left free to build up theatre circuits, perhaps from some of the sales forced on their co-defendants.

The exhibitor defendants moved the Court to amend Paragraph (6), Part III, to read as follows:

> "From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever, except as permitted in the preceding paragraph; or except for the purpose of acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field, if such defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the Court, and the Court shall first find, that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Reasonable notice of the intention to make any such acquisition shall be served upon the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the Court" (R. 3704).

The Court denied this Motion (R. 3719), and appeal was taken from this Order as well as the Decree (R. 3726).

The RKO defendants contend that the absolute prohibition upon expansion is an abuse of discretion, because:

A. It is unnecessary and inappropriate in view of the type of conduct of RKO which the Court found violative of the Sherman Act.

B. It decreases rather than promotes legitimate competitive activity of the RKO defendants, and thus is inconsistent with the objectives of the Sherman Act.

It is RKO's position that the Decree should not prohibit the expansion of its theatre holdings; but that if any provision on the subject is warranted, it should be substantially in the form as quoted from the Defendants' motion to amend the Decree.

A. The prohibition upon theatre expansion is unnecessary and inappropriate in view of the type of conduct of RKO which the Court found violative of the Sherman Act.

1. The appropriate function of a decree in an antitrust case is to grant such relief, and only such relief, as will prevent and restrain the continuance or the repetition of violations of the Act of the type which have occurred.

The District Court has jurisdiction to "prevent and restrain" violations of the Act (Sherman Act, §4). The Court exercises this jurisdiction "according to the general principles which govern the granting of equitable relief." DeBeers Mines v. United States, 325 U. S. 212, 218-219 (1945). In framing a decree the "fact must not be overlooked that injury to the public by the prevention of an undue restraint on, or the monopolization of trade or commerce is the foundation upon which the prohibitions of the statutes rest, and moreover that one of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property." Standard Oil Company v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 78 (1911).

While precedents in antitrust cases "cannot be much more than guides," nevertheless this Court has formulated the criterion to be applied: "The essential consideration is that the remedy shall be as effective and fair as possible in preventing continued or future violations of the Antitrust Act in the light of the facts of the particular case." United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319, at 335 (1947).

The test of propriety of a decree provision under Section 4 is "whether or not the required action reasonably tends to dissipate the restraints and prevent evasions." United States v. Bausch Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707, 726 (1944). "Past unlawful competition does not deprive the parties of the right to conduct lawful competition." United States v. Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, 173 Fed. 177, 192 (C. C. E. D. Mo., 1909) aff'd 221 U. S. 1 (1911). The court may not "impose penalties in the guise of preventing future violations," or "create, as to the defendants, any duties, prescription of which is the function of Congress," or "place the defendants, for the future, in a different class than other people," or "enjoin all possible breaches of the law," or "cause the defendants hereafter not to be under the protection of the law of the land." Hartford Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, 409, 410 (1945); Swift and Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 396 (1905). See also National Labor Relations Board v. Express Publishing Co., 312 U. S. 426, 435 (1941). Accord: United States v. National Lead, 332 U. S. at 338: "This is a civil, not a criminal proceeding. The purpose of the decree • • • is effective and fair enforcement, not punishment."

It is not argued that a decree must deal only with the precise type of unlawful acts found to have existed. But when the special facts of the particular case justify a somewhat broader scope for the injunction, judicial discretion is not left wholly unfettered. The decree can only "forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which we have found to have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute." Standard Oil Company v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 77-78 (1911) (italics supplied). It should enjoin only "acts of the sort that are shown by the evidence to have been done or threatened in furtherance of the conspiracy." Local 167 v. United States, 291 U. S. 293, 299 (1934) (italics supplied). The recent decision in International Salt Co. Inc. v. United States (Docket No. 46, Opinion Nov. 10, 1947) is not inconsistent in any way with the principle of these cases. Discrimination in leases of patented machines in the past was taken as proved, and the majority of this Court determined that a prohibition upon discriminations in future sales or leases was sufficiently closely related to be sustained. "The usual ways to the prohibited goal may be blocked against the proven transgressor," said Mr. Justice Jackson for the majority. This does not even approach an infringement of the doctrine that the relief must be fitted and limited to "effective and fair enforcement, not punishment."

2. The relief granted by the Decree adequately and effectively remedies the illegalities found without the necessity of prohibiting absolutely any theatre expansion.

It is not conceded here that any of RKO's acts violated the Sherman Law, but, even assuming arguendo that the trial court was correct in its various conclusions, it is clear that the absolute prohibition upon any future expansion is both unnecessary and inappropriate, and hence is an abuse of discretion.

RKO's acts which were deemed violative of the Sherman Act were of three general types:

First, the eight distributor defendants (three of whom had no theatres) were found to have conspired with each other and with their respective licensees (both affiliated and independent) to establish a nationwide system of fixed theatre admission prices, runs and clearance (Findings of Fact Nos. 64, 65, 70, 71, 79, 81, R. 3671, 3672, 3674; Conclusions of Law Nos. 7(a)(b), 8(a)(b)(c), 9(c)(d), R. 3692, 3693). The Court further found that certain license agreement terms, whether made with affiliated or independent exhibitors, constituted illegal restraints, such provisions being enumerated in Finding of Fact No. 110[21] (Findings Nos. 79, 86, 88, 89, 93, R. 3674-6; Conclusions Nos. 8(d)-8(h), 9(d), 10 and 11, R. 3693-4).

The violations, if any, embraced in this general type of activity were specifically enjoined. The following tabulation sets forth each violation found and the corresponding relief granted in the Decree and shows in detail the manner in which the Decree deals with each practice found to have been unlawful:

---

[21] The Court's Finding of Fact No. 110 (R. 3681) reads as follows:

"110. Various contract provisions by which discriminations against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits were accomplished are: . . . [enumeration omitted] These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors" (Italics added).

Violations	Relief Granted
(a) All the defendants violated Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act by
1. Aequiescing in the establishment of a price fixing system by conspiring with one another to maintain theatre admission prices.	Distributors enjoined from granting any license in which minimum admission prices are fixed by the parties (Part II, Par. 1 of the Decree).
2. Conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform in each local competitive area. (Conclusion of Law No. 7)	Distributors enjoined from agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances (Part II, Par. 2 of the Decree) and from licensing in the future in any manner except pursuant to a prescribed procedure under which any exhibitor may, if he so desires, bid for any picture on any run he chooses (Part II, Par. 8 of the Decree).
(b) The distributor-defendants violated Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act by
1. Conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of fixed minimum motion picture theatre admission prices.	Same as (a)1 above.
2. Agreeing individually with their respective licensees to fix minimum motion picture theatre admission prices.	Same as (a)1 above.

Violations	Relief Granted
3. Conspiring with each other to maintain a nation-wide system of runs and clearances which is substantially uniform as to each local competitive area.	Same as (a)2 above.
4. Agreeing indiyidually with their respective licensees to grant discriminatory license privileges to theatres affiliated with other defendants and with large circuits as found in finding No. 110 above.	Distributors enjoined from licensing in the future in any manner except pursuant to prescribed procedure under which any exhibitor may, if he so desires, bid for any picture on any run he chooses (Part II, Par. 8 of the Decree).
5. Agreeing individually with such licensees to grant unreasonable clearances against theatres operated by their competitors.	Distributors enjoined from granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition and from granting or enforcing any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted (Part II, Pars. 3 and 4 of the Decree).
6. Making master agreements and franchises with such licensees.	Distributors enjoined from making and further performing master agreements and franchises (Part II, Pars. 5 and 6 of the Decree).

Violations	Relief Granted
7. Individually conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films, except in the case of the United Artists Corporation.	Each license must be offered and taken, theatre by theatre, and picture by picture (Part II, Par. 8(d) of the Decree).
8. The defendants Paramount and RKO making formula deals. (Conclusion of Law No. 8)	Distributors enjoined from making or further performing any formula deal (Part II, Par. 6 of the Decree).
(c) The exhibitor-defendants violated Section 1 of the Act by
1. Conspiring with each other and with the distributor-defendants to fix substantially uniform minimum motion pictures theatre admission prices, runs, and clearances.	Same as (a)1 and 2 above.
2. Conspiring with the distributor-defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission price, run, clearance and other license terms. (Conclusion of Law No. 9)	Same as (b)4 above.

The second type of violation related to the joint operation of certain theatres—so-called "pooling" arrangements and percentage leases (Findings of Facts Nos. 112, 113, 114, R. 3682; Conclusion of Law No. 9(a), R. 3693).

Full relief was given on this aspect by the Decree's requirement that all such pools be dissolved and all such leases be terminated by July 1, 1947, the final date set by the Decree as modified (R. 3720), plus an injunction against any future such pools or leases. Pursuant to the Decree, RKO has dissolved the few "pool" situations in which it was interested and has terminated—at the expense of having to sell the theatres involved—the five percentage leases it had at the time of the trial.

The third type of violation related to the joint ownership of theatre operating companies (Findings of Fact Nos. 115, 116, 117, R. 3682-3; Conclusion of Law No. 9(b), R. 3693).

These Findings and this Conclusion are questioned in Point II below, but in any event full relief was accorded here by enjoining future investments of the type involved, and directing RKO to increase its interest (with court approval) to 95% or more, or to decrease its interest to 5% or less, within two years.

Clearly the prohibition upon expansion has no relation to any of the violations found.

3. The absolute prohibition on theatre expansion improperly restrains a lawful act merely because the Court found that unrelated unlawful acts had been committed in the past.

Prior decisions of this Court make it clear that a lawful act cannot properly be restrained in the future merely because unrelated unlawful acts have been committed in the past. True, an act which, though per se legal, is a part or instrumentality of a conspiracy violative of the statute or which would be a "usual road" for continuing a past illegality may be enjoined if necessary to restrain the continuance of such conspiracy. International Salt Co., Inc. v. United States, supra; Swift & Co. v. United States, supra. But the injunction must be aimed at the illegal conduct and cannot broadly prohibit unrelated acts which, in the absence of conspiracy, are perfectly lawful. In Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, supra, the lower court's decree prohibited the defendants from disposing of, or transferring the possession of, glass making machinery other than by an outright sale. This Court stated (p. 413):

> "* * * The injunction as drawn is not directed at any combination, agreement or conspiracy. It binds every defendant forever irrespective of his connection with any other or of the independence of his action."

The force of these guiding principles cannot be deflected, in the present case, by an argument, grounded perhaps on the International Salt case, and based on the particular theatre activities condemned below. True, RKO has made certain investments in companies operating theatres, and has in a few instances entered into operating agreements relating to two or more theatres. True, also, the lower Court declared these investments and operating agreements to be unlawful. But the lower Court specifically found that "the illegalities and restraints herein found, are not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors" (Finding of Fact 154, R. 3690, quoted in full, supra).

The Court made no Finding or Conclusion, and there is no evidence which indicates, that RKO violated the Sherman Act in the acquisition of a 100% interest in any theatre in any locality or by acquiring a partial interest in any theatre in conjunction with a person who is not an exhibitor. On the contrary, the Court specifically found that RKO's exhibition activities increased competition in the cities in which its theatres were located (Finding of Fact No. 121, R. 3684), and by the Decree permitted, when approved by the court, the acquisition of additional interests in theatres in which RKO at the time of trial had any beneficial interest between 5% and 95%.

There is no evidence and no Finding or Conclusion that RKO ever acquired any theatre interest through predatory practices. Indeed, the plaintiff specifically excluded from the issues below any claim of improper acquisitions. It contended that "Whether or not particular theatres were originally acquired by tactics sometimes described as predatory or by more conventional means is of no moment, in view of the clearly illegal character of the producer-exhibitor combinations that have resulted, in and of themselves" (Plaintiff's Trial Brief, p. 25).

There is no evidence and no Finding or Conclusion that RKO through its theatres monopolized or conspired or attempted to monopolize trade or commerce in exhibitions either nationally or in any locality.[22] RKO's ownership of [22] The only Conclusion relating to monopolization by the exhibitor defendants is that they attempted to monopolize by (a) acquiescing in the establishment of a theatre admission price-fixing system and (b) conspiring to maintain a nation-wide uniform system of runs and clearances (Conclusion of Law No. 7, R. 3693). Even the joint ownership and operation of theatres with other exhibitors was condemned by the Court not on the basis that it was an attempt or conspiracy to monopolize but on the theory it constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade (Conclusion of Law No. 9, R. 3693).

---

0.6% of the theatres in the United States, with a weekly average attendance of 1.9% of the total attendance of all theatres, and receiving 2.6% of the estimated gross admissions of all theatres, would not support a finding of monopoly in exhibition. The fact that RKO during the period of the alleged conspiracy lost a large number of its theatres and that during the same time the number of independent theatres was increasing by several thousand is itself persuasive proof that RKO has no power to dominate in the field of exhibition.

There is no evidence, or any Finding or Conclusion, which indicates that RKO through its theatre operations has monopolized "any part" of interstate commerce. In each city in which RKO operates theatres there is competition from theatres in which RKO has no interest operating on the same or other runs. The facts as to competition are summarized in the Statement of the Case. Certainly the acquisition of a single theatre in some city in which it presently has none, especially when preceded by a hearing and court approval, could not possibly give RKO a local monopoly or unreasonably restrain trade in the area.

In its Opinion the Court recognized that "Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them" (Opinion p. 55, R. 3554). The denial of this right by the Decree is difficult to justify, particularly in view of the specific statement in the Opinion that the Decree should not "prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the later case, this Court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor" (Opinion p. 65, R. 3562). This intention clearly remained unchanged at the time of argument upon the proposed Decree, as shown by the following colloquy (R. 3057-63):

> "Mr. Seymour: Now I will pass on, if I may to section 5 at the top of page 15. That is the injunctive provision dealing with future acquisitions. We have tried in our language to follow the Court's opinion. Mr. Wright has suggested an absolute ban on any future acquisitions. He says 'from expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever.' Now, that is directly in the teeth of your Honor's opinion.
>
> Judge Hand: We are not going to have any such drastic provision as that. We considered that."

That the lower Court's original view correctly stated the maximum relief appropriate, and that the provision challenged here is improper, is clear from the analogy of prior decisions. In the Hartford Empire case, cited supra, the lower court's decree contained a prohibition upon expansion. It prohibited the defendants from acquiring, otherwise than through direct issue from the Patent Office, a patent right or a restricted license under any patent relating to glass making machinery. The Supreme Court held that this provision was inappropriate and should be eliminated. In United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944) the lower court placed a ban upon expansion, prohibiting the defendants from acquiring any financial interest in any additional theatre outside Nashville in any town where there was already a theatre "unless the owner of such theatre should voluntarily offer to sell same * * * and when none of said defendants * * * are guilty of" predatory practices. See 323 U. S. at 185. The United States, desiring a more restrictive provision, asked that the decree be modified to prohibit expansion "except after an affirmative showing that such acquisition will not unreasonably restrain competition." This Court granted the requested modification. Noting that the growth of the defendants had "been the result of predatory practices condemned by the Sherman Act" (323 U. S. at 186), this Court said: "Where the proclivity for unlawful activity has been as manifest as here, the decree should operate as an effective deterrent to a repetition of the unlawful conduct and yet not stand as a barrier to healthy growth on a competitive basis" (Ibid.). RKO, though operating a smaller number of theatres than the Crescent defendants,[28] and though specifically exonerated from any finding of predatory practices in theatre acquisitions and operation, is subjected to a more drastic decree than the court approved in the Crescent case.

---

[28] See Findings and Conclusions, United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., reprinted in Supreme Court Cause No. 662 (October Term, 1943) Record pages 1357-1363, tabulating the number of theatres operated by the Crescent defendants in 1939 as follows:

Crescent Amusement Co.	49	theatres
Muscle Shoals Theatres, Inc.	5	"
Lyric Amusement Co.	3	"
Cumberland Amusement Co.	13	"
Strand Enterprises*	21	"
Rockwood Amusement Co.	12	"
Cherokee Amusements, Inc.	11	"
Newport Amusement Co.	2	"
Kentucky Amusement Co.	1	"
	117

*The Bill of Complaint was dismissed as to Strand. See Crescent Record, 1484.

Further analogy is to be found in the National Lead case, supra, wherein the government asked this Court to strike down the provision for compulsory patent licenses on reasonable royalties, and to substitute either an injunction against the enforcement of certain patents or a provision for compulsory royalty free licenses. The following quotation of the Court's language would, with a slight paraphrase involving no change of substance, fit the facts of the present case:

> "Assuming * * * that violation of the Sherman Act in this case has consisted primarily in the misuse of patent rights placing restraint upon interstate * * * commerce, that conduct is not before this Court for punishment. It is brought before this Court in order to secure an order for its immediate discontinuance and for its future prevention. That will be accomplished largely through the strict prohibition of future performance of the unlawful agreements. Further assurance against continued illegal restraints upon interstate * * * commerce * * * is provided through the compulsory granting * * * of licenses at uniform reasonable royalties * * *
> On the facts before us, neither the issuance of such licenses on a royalty free basis nor the issuance of a permanent injunction prohibiting the patentees and licensees from enforcing those patents has been shown to be necessary in order to enforce effectively the Antitrust Act * * *"

B. The absolute prohibition of theatre acquisitions by RKO restrains, rather than promotes, lawful competition and is inconsistent with the objectives of the Sherman Act.

It has been shown that the prohibition of future theatre acquisitions is inappropriate and unnecessary since it has no relation to the type of misconduct found by the court below, and recurrence of such misconduct will be prevented by other provisions of the Decree. We consider now the impact of such a provision upon competition within the industry.

The Court found that at the time of the trial:

Paramount owned independently of the other defendants approximately	1395	theatres
Fox approximately	636	"
Warner approximately	501	"
Loew's approximately	135	"
RKO approximately	109	"

(Findings of Fact No. 118, R. 3684)

After all joint interests are dissolved, RKO will have substantially fewer theatres than any other exhibitor defendant with the possible exception of Loew's. There is, of course, no assurance whatever that RKO will be able to negotiate fair terms for the purchase of a co-owner's interest in any theatre, or if successful in such negotiations will receive the approval of the lower court. Furthermore, of the 106 theatres operated by RKO at the time of the trial, 51 were mere leases which RKO may or may not be able to renew at fair terms. Already, as noted below, controversy has arisen as to the rights of a defendant confronted by the loss of present theatre operations through such causes.

The result is that RKO by the flat prohibition upon expansion will be permanently frozen in an inferior position vis-a-vis the other theatre owning defendants and the large independent circuits. This is the very antithesis of competition. Moreover, the defendants Universal, Columbia and United Artists remain free to acquire theatres wherever and whenever they may choose to do so. The closely held circuits involved in United States v. Griffith, now pending in this court, aggregated over 175 theatres. Even an independent circuit which had been convicted of predatory practices—practices of which RKO is not even accused—and which had more theatres than RKO, was left free to expand its theatre holdings with court approval. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944). The pattern set in that case has been followed by Judge Knight in United States v. Schine, in his order of July 5, 1946 (printed in the Statement of Jurisdiction, p. 38, in Schine Chain Theatres v. United States now pending in this Court). This case also involved a circuit of theatres much larger than that of RKO,[24] and a judicial finding of practices without parallel in the RKO record. Yet the lower court's decree also provided that: "No defendant shall acquire a financial interest in any additional theatres except after an affirmative showing that such acquisition will not unreasonably restrain competition." This is a reasonable pattern intended to preserve competition.

It is believed that the Decree does not prohibit the acquisition of a theatre in a new territory to replace a theatre disposed of or lost elsewhere, since on balance there would be no expansion. The plaintiff urges, however, that such an acquisition would violate the Decree. The failure of the Decree to deal specifically with this problem is an admirable example of a failure to meet the requirement suggested by the International Salt case, supra, that "It is desirable, in the interests of the court and of both litigants, that the decree be as specific as possible, not only in the core of its relief, but in its outward limits, so that the parties may know their duties * * *". RKO's dilemma is illustrated by the fact that during the pendency of this appeal the Government has asserted in open court (on an attempted civil contempt proceeding initiated by a local exhibitor) that a theatre owning defendant would violate the prohibition upon expansion if it erects a theatre structure with the intention of substituting it for an obsolete theatre which it plans to abandon in the same town. The prohibition in its present form is sure to lead to misunderstandings, disputes and possible contempt hearings burdensome alike to the defendants in their day-to-day operations, to the personnel of the Department of Justice, and to the Court below.

[24] On May 19, 1942 the Schine circuit included 148 operating and 18 closed theatres, a total of 166. See Brief for Appellants, p. 4, in Cause No. 10, Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. v. United States, now pending.

The prohibition upon expansion is peculiarly incomprehensible in the light of the plaintiff's charge in its complaint, reiterated during the trial, that the exhibitor-defendants had conspired to divide the territory of the United States. The evidence showed that this charge was unfounded, and there is no Finding or Conclusion tending to sustain the accusation. It is true, however, that the vaudeville houses which were acquired by RKO during its organization period, and which now constitute the bulk of its theatre operations, were principally in the north and east. RKO's early efforts to obtain geographical spread by operating theatres in a number of the larger cities of the south and west were partly successful, but most of these theatres were lost during its reorganization (see Figure 1). Now the Decree restricts, if it does not wholly prevent, RKO's entry into territory where it has no present representation. And this despite the fact that it is reasonable to infer that the result would be the same as the Court found flowed from RKO's prior exhibition activities: an increase in competition.

Moreover, the absolute prohibition against expansion arbitrarily places RKO as a distributor at the mercy of dominant exhibitor chains in any area where it has no present showcase outlet. It would be a mistake to think of a circuit of theatres only in the sense of a closely controlled business unit operating a number of theatres. Equally powerful as market factors are the voluntary theatre chains which lodge in a single booking agent the authority to license features for all the otherwise independent exhibitors who thus concentrate their buying power. Historically, it was just such a combination of "independent" exhibitors which originally threatened to boycott Paramount product and thus led Paramount to secure its own theatres (Findings of Fact Nos. 5-8, R. 3061-2). The affirmance of the absolute prohibition on expansion thus would be equivalent to a judicial notice to all exhibitors in every state where RKO now is without theatres that they could boycott RKO's product unless it was licensed to them at any terms they might set, with complete confidence that RKO could not protect itself by acquiring its own outlets, save perhaps—and this, as above indicated, not beyond argument—by abandoning a competitive operation elsewhere.

The result is a judicial locking of the whole competitive picture in the industry. This Court is familiar with those risks of industry which arise from external changes which impair the values of fixed investment: for example, shifts of population among the states as well as in local areas; changes in the income characteristics of particular regions, cities and neighborhoods; alterations in public tastes as to location, size or types of theatres and programs; and technological developments which may render existing theatres inadequate or obsolete. An outstanding example at the present time is the growing preference of many theatre patrons for outdoor drive-in theatres. Active and successful competition calls for flexibility. By the Decree, the District Court would permanently bar RKO from making such adjustments. Such a ban goes beyond the appropriate function of the Courts in an anti-trust proceeding. "It is not for the courts to realign and redirect effective competition where it already exists and needs only to be released from restraints that violate the antitrust laws. To separate the operating units of going concerns without more supporting evidence than has been presented here to establish either the need for, or the feasibility of, such separation would amount to an abuse of discretion." United States v. National Lead Co., supra, 332 U. S. at p. 353.

II.

The District Court erred in compelling RKO to terminate its investments amounting to over 5% and less than 95% in certain local theatre holding and operating companies.

The Decree, in Part III, Paragraph 5, directed RKO within two years to terminate certain beneficial interests in theatres (R. 3699).[25] At the time of the trial RKO had [25] Part III, Paragraph 5 of the Decree enjoins RKO and the other exhibitor-defendants: From continuing to own or acquiring any beneficial interest in any theatre, whether in fee or shares of stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant, and from continuing to own or acquire such an interest in conjunction with an independent (meaning any former, present or putative motion picture theatre operator which is not owned or controlled by the defendant holding the interest in stock interests falling within this paragraph in companies owning or operating some 289 theatres. In only 20 of these theatres was the interest 49% or more.[25]

The plaintiff introduced no evidence to show the circumstances under which RKO made these investments or their competitive effect. The plaintiff did not charge in the complaint and did not undertake to prove at the trial that RKO acquired any such interest for the purpose of restraining trade, or that the effect of any such acquisition or holding was to restrain or monopolize trade in the competitive area in which the theatre was located.

The undisputed evidence offered by RKO shows that its interests in 254 of the 289 theatres (1) was acquired at the time of its organization or shortly thereafter; (2) question), where such interest shall be greater than five per cent unless such interest shall be ninety-five per cent or more. The existing relationships which violate this provision shall be terminated within two years (R. 3699).

---

[25] RKO's interests in all such companies may be classified as follows:

65% interest in 1 company having 3 theatres
50% interest in 5 companies having 16 theatres
49% interest in 1 company having 1 theatre
35% interest in 1 company having 3 theatres
33-1/3% interest in 3 companies having 24 theatres
30% interest in 1 company having 1 theatre
25% interest in 2 companies having 8 theatres
20% interest in 1 company having 186 theatres
15% interest in 1 company having 1 theatre
10% interest in 2 companies having 96 theatres

Finding of Fact number 117 shows RKO as having joint interests with other exhibitors in 318 theatres (R. 3683). This Finding, however, is predicated on RKO Exhibit 11 which made no distinction between beneficial interests falling within Paragraph (5) and "pooling situations" coming within Paragraph (2) of Part III of the Decree. Government Exhibits 87, 96, 99, 105.

was held solely as an investment; (3) did not give it any advantage in licensing its pictures in the theatres concerned; and (4) did not give it any control over the policy and management of any company or any theatre of any such company. As to the remaining 35 theatres, the record merely shows the extent of the interest of RKO (Gov. Exs. 158, 159, R. 1611-1617).

The Court made no finding that any interest of RKO in any such company was acquired for an unlawful purpose or that in fact such acquisition had restrained trade in any competitive area. The Court did find, however:

> "115. Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, together with another exhibitor-defendant, in some cases in conjunction with independents. These joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively. When a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, such an interest is de minimis and only to be treated as inconsequential investment in exhibition.
>
> 116. When theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. The major defendant thereby eliminates putative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently."

Insofar as these constitute Findings of Fact, they are unsupported by the Record; insofar as they are Conclusions of Law, we submit they are erroneous.

Without exception, the decisions of this Court have held that an acquisition of a competitor or of an interest in a competing enterprise is not illegal unless undertaken for the purpose or with the direct and necessary effect of restraining interstate trade and commerce unreasonably.

Standard Oil Company v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 75 (1911);
Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344 (1934);
United States v. The United States Steel Corporation, 251 U. S. 417 (1920);
United States v. International Harvester Company, 274 U. S. 693 (1927);
United States v. Shoe Machinery Company of New Jersey, et al., 247 U. S. 32 (1918).

The applicable law is fully discussed in the brief of the Paramount appellant in Cause No. 81. The required showing of illegality is entirely lacking in the record in this case. In the absence of such a showing, we respectfully submit that the court committed reversible error in ordering a dissolution of these partial interests.

III.

The District Court erred in enjoining RKO from agreeing with a licensee that the latter shall charge a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the feature licensed.

The Decree, Part II, Paragraph 1, enjoins the distributor defendants from "granting any license in which minimum prices for admission to a theatre are fixed by the parties * * * in any manner or by any means" (R. 3695). This injunction is based on the Court's conclusion that the distributor defendants had unreasonably restrained trade by "Agreeing individually with their respective licensees to fix minimum motion picture theatre prices" (Conclusions of Law 8(b), R. 3692). This prohibition is considered in this Brief: first, as applied to a license contract relating to an ordinary feature (Part III of Argument); secondly, as applied to a license contract relating to an unusual feature which is roadshown (Part IV of Argument).

A. A license provision stating the minimum admission to be charged during the exhibition of the feature licensed is normally and reasonably adapted to secure the pecuniary reward of the owner of the motion picture feature licensed, and hence is not illegal per se.

The facts clearly demonstrate that the minimum admission price provision in a film license agreement is normally and reasonably adapted to secure the pecuniary reward of the owner of the feature. This becomes evident when one considers the inherent nature of the motion picture industry.[27] A producer-distributor, owner of a so-called "A" feature, in order to recover his costs and a reasonable profit, must circulate each of his prints to a number of theatres, deriving his profit from the aggregate fees. In every area of any substantial size he will serve two or more competing theatres on simultaneous or successive runs. He knows, as a matter of common business sense, that the first-run exhibitor in a given area will have the largest gross receipts, and hence will be able to pay the highest license fee.

The additional value which a print has on its first-run exhibition does not derive from a conspiracy but from the appeal of the first showing. It is no more subject to legislative, judicial, or administrative control than is the popular preference for any fresh product, whether it be a book, a fashion, or a motion picture. At the time of the first run, the market is untouched. The trade paper, newspaper and magazine stories and the radio commentators' remarks about, and the national and local advertising of, the feature are fresh in the potential patrons' minds. In the smaller cities, such national sources are supplemented by the reviews and advertisements which appear in the large city newspapers reporting on the earlier exhibitions in the metropolitan hub of the particular trade area. So it is that when a feature is first shown in a given competitive area it has its maximum income-producing potential to both the distributor and the exhibitor.

---

[27] Record references on the following analysis will be found in the summary of the facts above.

To exploit the inherent values of the feature at the moment of first showing in a competitive area, the distributor normally grants an exclusive license permitting an exhibitor, for a limited time, the right to exhibit the print to the public in a specified theatre. The distributor does not part with his property in the print or in the copyright thereon. He sells neither. He licenses the print for use in a theatre, and both he and the licensee understand that he will license it for later use in competing theatres.

The distributor clearly has two legitimate interests when he makes the license contract. His contractual protection of these two interests is a reasonable restraint which does not violate the Sherman Act.

His first interest is to protect the license fee to be received from the individual theatre licensed. The distributor's interest here coincides with the interest of the exhibitor licensed. When the feature is licensed for a specified percentage of the gross receipts of the theatre during its exhibition, the distributor's return depends directly upon the admission price charged during the period of the exhibition of his feature. As stated by Mr. Wright, of plaintiff's counsel, "Of course, the film rental that any of these theatres can pay is dependent on the length of time that the picture plays, and the admission price charged by the theatre" (R. 11). A distributor is not compelled by the Sherman Act, or by any other law, to license his picture without asking the exhibitor what price policy the exhibitor intends to follow. Such blind (to the distributor) selling would not be required even under the auction bidding technique imposed by the Decree below. The Decree, Section II, paragraph 8(c) authorizes the exhibitor to bid "a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, • • •" and directs the distributor, if it accepts any offer, to "grant such license to the highest responsible bidder • • •." If one exhibitor bids $300 flat rental and another bids 35% of gross receipts, a distributor can obey the Decree only if he knows the admission price which the latter bidder intends to charge. By the Decree, he is merely forbidden to translate this representation as to intention into a binding contract that, during the period of the exhibition, the exhibitor will not dissipate the distributor's expected revenue by violating the representation.

Where the license fee is a flat rental, the figure is set upon an estimate of the amount the exhibitor will probably gross on a stated admission price policy. In no other way can the exhibitor intelligently decide what he is willing to pay, or the distributor intelligently decide what he is willing to accept.

The distributor's second interest is in the protection of the aggregate license fees from the competitive area. Here the interest of the distributor is not coincident with that of any one individual exhibitor but is coincident with the interests of the exhibitors of the area in the aggregate. Implicit in the Opinion below appears the view that there is something vicious in the fact that a distributor, faced with the necessity of licensing a limited number of prints in successive runs in competing theatres, keeps the whole playing sequence in mind when he licenses each theatre. It would be unrealistic to argue that a competent distributor does not see the exhibition area as a whole.

In a typical city of 150,000 people, probably 100,000 theatre admissions are sold weekly.[28] The distributor has an interest in seeing that his feature is made available, in competition with features released by his rivals, to these patrons. To afford the maximum variety of facilities, in time, location, and quality of appointments, the distributor subdivides his total market in each area, and licenses numerous theatres. He desires, however, to insert in each license contract a minimum admission provision which in effect constitutes a covenant by the exhibitor not to destroy the value of the rights which the distributor retains.

Such a negative covenant, essential to the protection of the distributor's retained property interest in other licenses, is not an unreasonable restraint of trade. It is a fair and reasonable safeguard for his total revenue from the area. As recognized by Mr. Wright of plaintiff's counsel, an exhibitor "cannot get more, and probably not as much, for a later exhibition of the same area as [another exhibitor] has gotten for the prior exhibition" (Tr. 16).[29] It follows that a change in the admission price policy of an exhibitor "would not only affect the film rental income in" the theatre making the change, "but it would also affect . . . the film rental income in the subsequent theatres, because if the prior-run theatres reduce their admission prices, then the subsequent theatres could not continue to charge the admission prices that they have been charging" (R. 726).

[28] The estimated theatre attendance in 1944 in the United States was 95,000,000 out of a (1940) population of approximately 132,000,000 (RKO Exhibit 2).

It is interesting to note, also, that in the case of United States v. Schine Chain Theatres Inc., now pending on appeal in this Court, the government's counsel stated in the trial court:

> "Whatever may have been the position originally, this method of licensing films through clearance and minimum admission prices has been established in the industry and it is the way in which the industry operates and so long as those restraints are reasonable, as far as we are concerned there clearly is no conflict with the Sherman Act" (Schine Record, p. 494).

No one urges that for this reason there should not be full flexibility of prices at the exhibitor level. What is argued, however, is that there is no violation of law when an exhibitor contracts to charge a certain minimum during the exhibition of a particular feature. The distributor, to [29] Mr. Wright was referring to Warner as the prior run exhibitor, but his remark evidences his understanding of the fundamental business reality which has no relation to whether either the prior-run or subsequent-run exhibitor is affiliated.

---

protect his interest in the revenue from the license under negotiation, and from the several runs in the area, does, of course, have "in contemplation" the several exhibitors who in a given area are going to exhibit his picture (Opinion, p. 27).

But it is a far, indeed an impossible, step from the fact that the distributor has in contemplation the several exhibitors who will license his picture, to the conclusion that each individual license agreement is a price fixing combination which violates the Sherman Act. The distributor is not selling a commodity which bears his trade-mark or name. If he were, he could, under the Fair Trade Acts of forty-five states, prevent such destruction of the value of his property. Selling nothing, but granting merely a license, he is to be barred from the protection afforded by a reasonable covenant which has merely the effect of preserving his retained property right: the revenue in future licenses.

The decisions of this Court do not support the conclusions of the trial court. This Court has upheld a provision in a patent license agreement which allowed the licensee to make and vend a patented product and specified the retail price. United States v. General Electric Company, 272 U. S. 476 (1926). The General Electric case, though vigorously attacked from time to time, has not been overruled or limited by this Court.[30] Rather, it has been cited with approval. In Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Develop- ment Corp., 283 U. S. 27 (1931), this Court recognized that a patent owner "can grant licenses upon terms consistent with the limited scope of the patent monopoly," citing with approval the General Electric case. In General Talking Pictures Corp. v. Western Electric Co., 304 U. S. 175 (1938), the court cited the General Electric case with approval as establishing that the patentee may grant a license upon any condition the performance of which is reasonably related to the reward which the patentee by the grant of the patent is entitled to secure. In Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436 (1940), the court again cited the General Electric case with approval. See also, Bement v. National Harrow Company, 186 U. S. 70 (1902).

[30] The Court was requested to overrule the General Electric case in U. S. v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241, and U. S. v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, but did not do so. It is now being requested to overrule the case in the appeal in United States v. Line Material Co., reported below at 64 F. Supp. 970 (1946).

Each feature motion picture is copyrighted. The owner of a copyrighted feature has, under the copyright law, "the exclusive right . . . [to] perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama . . . and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever" (17 U. S. C., §1). A copyrighted motion picture is a "drama" within this provision and its exhibition by projection on a screen constitutes a performance of the drama. Kalem Co. v. Harper Bros., 222 U. S. 55 (1911); Patterson v. Century Productions, 93 F. (2d) 489 (C. C. A. 2d 1937). The Sherman Act does not abridge rights conferred by Copyright Law. Hence a contractual provision which constitutes merely the exercise of the statutory monopoly does not fall within the condemnation of the Sherman Act. Cf. Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 227 U. S. 8, 32 (1913).

The position of the distributor is clearly different from that of the publisher who sells outright a copyrighted book for a satisfactory price. In Bobbs-Merrill v. Straus, 210

U. S. 339 (1907) it was held that after such a sale the publisher, having parted with all title, dominion, and control, could not fix the resale price of the book. That case has no significance on the issue here, where the license passes no title whatsoever and only a limited privilege of exhibition.

Moreover, factually the motion picture copyright owner may reasonably assert an even stronger right to protect his interest than can the owner of the usual patent. Only a limited number of exhibitions of the unique copyrighted feature are practical in each area. No sale of any product is involved. Instead a mere license to exhibit a motion picture is granted. The distributor reserves the right to issue other licenses. Even if the feature were not copyrighted, the property in the film is unique and the facts above clearly demonstrate that the owner of the feature has a legitimate interest in the admission price to be charged by the licensee.

B. The minimum price provision is not invalidated by the fact that the feature licensed is usually not the sole item on the theatre program.

The attack upon minimum admission provisions has yet another string to its bow. It is observed that usually the feature licensed is but one part of the theatre's program. From this fact it is argued (even assuming arguendo validity were the feature the sole item on the program) that a license stipulation as to the admission price must be illegal. An effort to secure aid and comfort for this argument is sometimes made by citation of the dictum in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, at 228 (1939) wherein Mr. Justice Stone said: "Because a patentee has power to control the price at which his licensee may sell the patented article, it does not follow * * * that the owner of a copyright can dictate * * * the admission price which shall be paid for an entertainment which includes features other than the particular picture licensed." The issue was not posed or litigated in the Interstate case, and the language quoted was a mere passing disclaimer of any intention to prejudge the question when it should be presented directly.

It is now presented directly to this Court for the first time, and the superficially attractive argument which is launched from the shaky foundation of a passing aside must be tested against the realities disclosed by a record in which the issue has been directly litigated. The fact is that the minimum price provision applies solely to the exhibition of the feature licensed. That feature constitutes the backbone of the entertainment.

The distributor has no control over the manner in which the exhibitor plans a program of entertainment. The exhibitor is licensed to exhibit the feature. Whether the feature is to be presented alone, or as a part of an elaborate program including short subjects, other features, or even stage shows, is within the unrestricted discretion of the exhibitor. As a good salesman, he may elect to package the feature in the way he considers most appealing to the public. The distributor has only the right to specify the minimum admission price at which the particular feature owned by the distributor is to be exhibited. How this right can be lost because the exhibitor elects to license other films and exhibit them on the same bill defies legal analysis. After all, the provision is for minimum admission prices, and the exhibitor is free to charge any higher amount that he may believe justified by the quality of the additional entertainment offered.

IV.

The District Court erred in enjoining RKO from agreeing with a licensee that the latter shall charge a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of an unusual feature roadshown in advance of general release.

Part III of the Argument deals with the minimum admission price stipulation in the license of an ordinary feature. Part IV deals with those unusual features which are roadshown at advanced admission prices prior to general release.

In the Consent Decree special treatment was accorded the roadshow situation by Section XIV, reading as follows:

> "Nothing contained in this decree shall be construed to limit or affect the right of any distributor defendant, prior to the general release of a motion picture, to road show such picture or to license or otherwise arrange for the road showing of such picture upon such terms and conditions as may be fixed by the distributor." [Note: Roadshow was defined as "an exhibition at a theatre where a majority of the main floor seats for each evening performance are reserved and sold at an admission price of not less than one dollar."] (R. 3391)

After the Opinion in this cause, the major defendants proposed a form of decree which, in Section V, would have authorized distributors to lease or otherwise to contract for the temporary use of a theatre for the road showing of a particular feature (R. 3261). This would have continued the provision contained in Section XIV of the Consent Decree.

At the time of the hearing on this proposal, the defendants offered to limit its scope to features having a production cost of $3,000,000 or more (R. 3074). The Court failed to include in the Decree any provision which would permit the continuance of the practice under any circumstances. Furthermore, by its absolute prohibition upon expansion, the Court cast doubt upon the propriety of a distributor's leasing for temporary periods a theatre to be used for roadshowing its own productions.

The problem was forcefully presented at the argument below upon the form of the decree. Vanguard Films, an independent non-defendant producer, presented an application to file a brief amicus curiae (R. 2584). Vanguard was not controlled, directly or indirectly, by any defendant, but it released through United Artists (R. 2586). For more than a year before the Opinion below, Vanguard had in production a very costly feature, and at the time of the argument on the decree it had invested therein some $6,500,000 (R. 2855). Vanguard "planned to do something that was traditional in the industry": to roadshow the feature (R. 2855). The reason which Vanguard gave was simple: "We want to get our money back." This was the same reason for the roadshowing of other unusual pictures (R. 721).

The reaction of plaintiff's counsel to the Vanguard plea was somewhat amorphous. He was "opposed to any road show exemption" (R. 2876). But he observed that "insofar as these independents may release their film through non-defendant distributors, they are not subject to any of the Decree's restrictions" (ibid.). And "as far as the particular picture 'Duel in the Sun', which apparently gives rise to that petition, is concerned, we believe that the provisions of the Decree ought not to be made to apply to that picture * * *" (R. 2876-77). And in any event, "United Artists, which is to release the picture, * * * proposes to appeal from the price-fixing provisions of the decree * * * and we assume that a stay of such provisions during such appeal would probably take care of whatever special hardship might be presented by that picture * * *" (R. 2877).

If any thread of consistency can be found in these expressions, it is that plaintiff's counsel fully realized that roadshow licenses were not per se violative of the Sherman Act, but that in his zeal to penalize these defendants, he was unwilling to yield even one concession. Can it be seriously argued that six roadshown features in five years by the eight outstanding distributors evidence a conspiracy? The inference is clear: plaintiff's counsel fully realized that such license provisions are lawful.

During the five year period, a total of six features were roadshown: three by Paramount, two by Fox, and one by Loews. None of the other five defendants roadshowed a feature. There is no evidence in this case which would support a finding that fixing a minimum admission price in a roadshow license for an occasional feature picture has any effect whatsoever upon competition in the licensing of motion pictures, either among the same or other exhibitors for other contracts, or among distributors. It is apparent, also, that such a provision, employed only exceptionally, in roadshow licenses, can have no substantial effect on the general pattern of admission price competition among exhibitors for the patronage of movie-goers. The commerce involved in that competition is wholly intrastate. United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218 (1947); Federal Club v. National League, 259 U. S. 200 (1922).

The inevitable effect of the prohibition will be to obstruct, if not wholly to end, the production of outstanding features of the type which have been roadshown in the past. Many of these have been considered landmarks in the industry. The prohibition clearly runs counter to the admonition of this Court that the Decree should not place the defendants under a restriction "which may do more harm than good." Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553, 605 (1936).

The argument in Part III, though directed to ordinary features, is equally applicable to the roadshow exhibition license, with the added weight that frequently a roadshown picture is the only item on the program during its run.

Unless a roadshow license contract stipulating a minimum price is illegal per se, the Decree below which by its broad provisions proscribes such licenses cannot stand. This is true because the very nature of the roadshow distribution makes it impossible for it to be used as an instrumentality in a nationwide conspiracy of the type charged against these defendants. Even if the District Court's inference of conspiracy concerning the distribution of ordinary feat res were justified on the Record, there would be no basis for an inference that such conspiracies exist or are threatened with respect to the occasional licensing of features for roadshow exhibitions. In the first place, there is no evidence from which any inference can be drawn that in licensing roadshow exhibitions two or more distributors stipulate the same admission prices in their separate contracts. In the second place, roadshow exhibitions do not take place in all theatres in any given area. It can hardly be said that the licensing of six features on this basis in the past five years or more has created a "national system to fix prices" which "regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices" (see Opinion of Court p. 25, R. 3527) or that the erection of such a system is threatened in the future by the occasional licensing of roadshows.

No public purpose will be served by outlawing roadshows entirely. On the contrary, the public may well be deprived of extraordinary pictures for which in the past it has willingly paid a higher than usual admission price.

V.

The District Court erred in concluding that it lacked power to continue the arbitration system established in the Consent Decree pursuant to the prayer of Plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

This point is briefed by the appellant Fox. To avoid repetition the Fox brief is adopted insofar as it deals with the power and propriety of the Court's continuing the existing arbitration system.

Conclusion as appellant

It is respectfully submitted that the judgment of the District Court in the respects herein complained of should be reversed.

Dated: January 15, 1948.

ARGUMENT FOR RKO APPELLEES IN CAUSE NO. 79

The Brief for the United States as appellant (here cited as Pl. Br.) concentrates on the five defendants engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of features. The plaintiff describes its "attack on the action below" as being "confined largely to the adequacy of the relief granted" (Pl. Br. 11). It disclaims any intention to "challenge any of what [it] considered to be the evidentiary findings," but it does "object to the court's failure to conclude that the defendants, both individually and collectively, had monopolized important segments of the motion picture industry" (ibid). It asks this Court to rewrite the Decree so that each integrated defendant shall be split into two companies, one to produce and distribute feature pictures,[1] and the other to operate theatres.

The contention that the refusal of the District Court to order RKO to divest itself of all interests in any theatre necessarily rests on the basic contentions that:

(1) The District Court erred in refusing to find that RKO through the use of its theatres is engaged with the other four theatre-operating defendants in a nationwide conspiracy to monopolize the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, and hence to conclude that the separate theatre operations of all defendants may be treated as an aggregate (discussed in Point VI); or

(2) The District Court erred in refusing to find and conclude that RKO as an integrated company producing, distributing, and exhibiting feature pictures is an unlawful combination (discussed in Point VII).

[1] Plaintiff recongnizes that a company engaged in production and distribution is "integrated" (Pl. Br. 6).

In addition to convincing this Court that it is correct on either point (1) or (2), plaintiff, to secure a reversal of the Decree, must also establish:

(3) That the District Court erred in rendering the Decree appealed from, because the same is so inadequate as to constitute an abuse of discretion (discussed in Point VIII).

All of the plaintiff's arguments fall within these three propositions, and will be so discussed.

VI.

The District Court correctly refused to find that RKO through the use of its theatres is engaged with the other theatre-operating defendants in a nation wide conspiracy to monopolize the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, and to find that its theatre operations may be aggregated with those of the other defendants for the purpose of establishing general claims of monopoly in exhibition.

The District Court found that the defendants had conspired to establish a nationwide system of clearance, run and minimum admission prices. It was the Court's view that this conspiracy in general operated for the benefit of prior-run theatres, whether affiliated or unaffiliated. We have demonstrated that this illegality, if any existed, has been completely corrected by the injunctive provisions discussed in Point I A, at page 39, supra.

The illegalities found arose not from the fact that certain defendants owned theatres, but from the fact that all the distributors—those with no theatres as well as those with theatres—followed certain distribution practices which the Court considered illegal and which "if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five exhibitor defendants * * * have owned or controlled * * * theatres * * *" (Finding of Fact No. 154, R. 3690).

The District Court concluded, moreover, that "the five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition" (R. 3553). The Court also found:

> "The present theatre holdings of the five defendant-exhibitors Paramount, Loew's, Fox, RKO and Warner, aggregate little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States, and by such theatre holdings alone the defendants do not and cannot collectively or individually, have a monopoly of exhibition" (Finding of Fact No. 119, R. 3684).
>
> "There is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly either in production, distribution or exhibition * * *" (Finding of Fact No. 152, R. 3689-90).[2]
>
> "In localities where there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of the competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from 'inherent vice' on the part of these defendants" (Findings of Fact No. 153, R. 3690).

[2] The court added "except as found in Findings 153 and 154 below" (ibid.). This limitation is meaningless, since there is no contrary Finding in either 153 or 154.

Hence, plaintiff's argument, in so far as it attempts to draw inferences from aggregate figures, is built upon a premise which the District Court expressly repudiated. The plaintiff's brief nowhere undertakes to set forth any factual or legal justification for thus lumping together RKO and the other companies and ignoring their numerous differences in origin, development, size and operating policy.

The District Court's refusal to treat the theatre holdings of the defendants as a composite aggregate is supported by the evidence and wholly consistent with its Findings of Fact. To prevail, therefore, the plaintiff must convince this Court that it should overturn the District Court's Findings. "Findings of Fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous and due regard shall be given to the opportunity of the trial court to judge of the credibility of the witnesses" (Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 52(a)).[3]

---

[3] In this case plaintiff offered over 400 exhibits, called no witnesses, and rested. The defendants introduced witnesses whose testimony is recorded in some 1800 pages of the Record and was supported by numerous exhibits. The judges considered this Record for over a year before making their Findings of Fact. As Judge Hand said in United States v. Aluminum Co., 148 F. (2d) 416 (C. C. A. 2d, 1945) at p. 433:

> "Rule 52(a) in substance merely carried over the earlier practice in equity to all trials before a judge. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Co. v. Bonacci, 8 Cir., 111 F. 2d 412, 415; Petterson Lighterage & Towing Corporation v. New York Central R. Co., 2 Cir., 126 F. 2d. 992, 995; Katz

In an effort to discharge this burden, the Government employs composite figures throughout its argument, and urges that these figures disclose a combination and conspiracy by the integrated defendants through the use of Underwear Co. v. United States, 3 Cir., 127 F. 2d 965, 966; 3 Moore's Federal Practice, §52.01 * * * [A]n appellate court, though it will hesitate less to reverse the finding of a judge than that of an administrative tribunal or of a jury, will nevertheless reverse it most reluctantly and only when well persuaded * * * His duty is to sift the evidence, to put it into logical sequence and to make the proper inferences from it; and in the case of a [large] record * * * it is physically impossible for an appellate court to function at all without ascribing some prima facie validity to his conclusions. Consumers Import Co. v. Kawasaki, 2 Cir., 133 F. 2d 781, 787. What the plaintiff is really asking is that we shall in effect reconsider the whole evidence de novo, as though it had come before us in the first instance. The impossibility of that at once appears * * * However, whatever may be said in favor of reversing a trial judge's findings when he has not seen the witnesses, when he has, and in so far as his findings depend upon whether they spoke the truth, the accepted rule is that they 'must be treated as unassailable,' Davis v. Schwartz, 155 U. S. 631, 636; 15 S. Ct. 237, 39 L. Ed. 289; Adamson v. Gilliland, 242 U. S. 350, 353, 37 S. Ct. 169, 61 L. Ed. 356; Alabama Power Co. v. Ickes, 302 U. S. 464, 477, 58 S. Ct. 300, 82 L. Ed. 374. The reason for this is obvious and has been repeated over and over again; in such cases the appeal must be decided upon an incomplete record, for the printed word is only a part, and often by no means the most important part, of the sense impressions which we use to make up our minds. Morris Plan Industrial Bank v. Henderson, 2 Cir., 131 F. 2d 975, 977. Since an appellate court must have some affirmative reason to reverse anything done below, to reverse a finding it must appear from what the record does preserve that the witnesses could not have been speaking the truth, no matter how transparently reliable and honest they could have appeared. Even upon an issue on which there is conflicting direct testimony, appellate courts ought to be chary before going so far; and upon an issue like the witness's own intent, as to which he alone can testify, the finding is indeed 'unassailable,' except in the most exceptional cases."

---

their theatres to create a nationwide monopoly of the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. The District Court repudiated this contention. We shall examine these aggregate figures in the light of the activities of RKO. Such an examination will demonstrate, as the Court below found, that the theatres of RKO have been in active and vigorous competition with both affiliated and independent theatres, and that the composite figures form no sound basis for the inferences which the plaintiff asks this Court to substitute for those of the District Court.

1. Plaintiff urges that "together" the defendants distribute a large number of features (Pl. Br. 21, repeated 54). The defendants distribute no features "together." In 1943-1944 the eleven national distributors, of which eight are defendants, separately released a total of 397 features, including 137 features released by the three non-defendant distributors (Finding of Fact No. 99, R. 3677).[4] Separately each of the eight distributor-defendants released from 4.04 to 12.34 per cent. of the 397 features distributed by the eleven national distributors. RKO distributed 9.57%, of which a substantial number were handled for independent producers. There is no more basis for lumping RKO's percentage with that of United Artists (which distributes only), or Columbia (which produces and distributes), or Warner (which produces, distributes and exhibits), than there is for lumping RKO's theatres with those of any other circuit, independent or affiliated.

[4] The Finding refers to 62 of the features distributed by non-defendants as "Westerns." The attempted distinction between so-called "Westerns" and other features is of no real significance, since most, if not all, of the producers release a substantial number of low cost productions (Pl. Exs. 40, 56, 80, 93, 125, 136, 143).

2. The Government next urges that one or the other of the defendants has some interest in a total of 3,137 theatres (Pl. Br. 19, repeated 54). The District Court's choice of language in its Finding of Fact No. 118 (R. 3684) is precise. It states that of the 3,137 theatres, RKO owned "independently of the other defendants" 109 theatres, or 0.6% of the total. In 82.65% of the theatres in the United States no defendant had any interest. Plaintiff tacitly concedes (Pl. Br. 17), and on the trial openly conceded (R. 1600), that there has been no expansion of RKO's theatre holdings since 1935, although in the same period the total number of theatres increased by nearly 5,000 (Finding of Fact No. 145, R. 3688). Indeed, the number of theatres which RKO operates is now substantially less than in the past (See Figure 1, p. 11). The mere fact that other defendants own numerous theatres is no basis for adding all the separate interests into a single figure.

3. Plaintiff refers to the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000 and asserts that "the five major defendants together own interests in at least 70 per cent. of all the first-run theatres" in such cities (Pl. Br. 20, repeated 55). The word "together" thus again suggests joint operations. The fact is that RKO operates 9.2% of the first-run theatres in these cities. In 67 of the cities RKO operates no first-run theatre. In the remaining 25 cities there are 175 first-run theatres, of which RKO operates 47. In all except one it is actively competing with first-run theatres in which it has no interest;[5] and in all is competing with theatres operating on other runs (Appendix A; Finding of Fact No. 147, R. 3688).

[5] The exception is Grand Rapids, Michigan, where RKO operates two first-run theatres and has a 10% minority interest in the theatre operating company which operates the other three first-run theatres.

When plaintiff turns (Pl. Br. 21, repeated 55) to cities of 25,000 to 100,000 population, the complete lack of any pattern to which RKO conforms again appears. RKO operates thirteen (or 1.5%) of the 978 first-run theatres in cities of this bracket,[6] and all of them have first-run competition (Appendix A). In the thousands of urban centers below 25,000, RKO has only 5 theatres—a number so small as to be described by Mr. Wright, plaintiff's counsel, as inconsequential (R. 371).

---

[6] Both confusion and incompleteness mark plaintiff's factual discussion of these cities. It says (Pl. Br. 21) that there were 978 first-run theatres in these 320 cities, of which 401 first-run theatres (or 41%) were independent, i.e., theatres in which no defendant has any interest. It says that in 135 of the 320 cities affiliated theatres played all the product of the eight distributors on first-run (Pl. Br. 21). Plaintiff omits the fact, proved at the trial, that in 93 of the 320 cities independent theatres played all the product of the defendants on first-run; that in the remaining 92 cities independent theatres played a part of the product of the defendants; and that plaintiff's own witness admitted that "no independent theatre in these 313 [320] towns went without films" (R. 2390). Plaintiff says (Pl. Br. 21) in the next sentence that "in at least 300 additional towns [i.e., additional to the 135 where affiliated theatres played all products], most of them with populations under 25,000, an operator affiliated with one of the major defendants had all of the theatres in the town." This statement is in part false, in part meaningless. It implies that some of the "additional" towns were over 25,000, yet plaintiff's own witness shows that in all the cities of 25,000 to 100,000 other than the 135 some independent theatre played product, hence must have existed. As to towns under 25,000, the plaintiff has stipulated that in approximately 6200 towns between 2,500 and 25,000, no defendant has any interest in any theatres (R. 358, 365). Hence it is utterly meaningless to say without more that in some 300 towns some unidentified defendant or defendants have all the theatres. Are these one- or two-theatre villages, or are they cities of significant size? Plaintiff omits to say.

4. Plaintiff also urges that the "defendants' theatres are so located that there is practically no competition between them" (Pl. Br. 55, figures repeated from 16 to 21). It asserts that there are at present only 47 towns of the 922 in which the defendants own some theatre interests in which "the theatre interests of two or more majors are operating in nominal competition with each other" (Pl. Br. 55-56). Is this generalization true as to the theatres of RKO?[7] RKO operates first-run theatres in 39 cities and towns, and in over 30 of these is competing with theatres operated by other defendants and in all of them is competing with theatres operated by other defendants or independents or both (Appendix A).

Plaintiff would have this Court conclude that this competition is nominal rather than real, but plaintiff—which says it attacks no Findings—is confronted with the fact that the District Court specifically found that there was competition on first-runs > "In about 91 per cent. of the 92 cities with over 100,000-population * * * between independent theatres and theatres of one or more of the defendants, or among the defendants themselves, except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices found to have unreasonably restrained competition. In the remainder of the 92 cities there is always competition in some run" (Findings of Fact No. 147, R. 3688).

---

[7] At Pl. Br. 15 it is erroneously stated that the defendants "operate" theatres in 922 cities. As shown at Pl. Br. 16 and 55, the 922 towns and cities are those in which a defendant has some interest in a theatre. The undisputed evidence establishes that in many of these towns such interests are small minority investments and that the interested defendant does not operate or control the operation of the theatre or theatres involved. As to RKO, see R. 1611-1617.

This Finding is fatal to plaintiff's theory that RKO has participated in conduct which justifies its aggregation with other defendants to establish charges of general monopolization.

Lack of precision is found in the conversion of the statement (Pl. Br. 16) that in 100 towns "two or more defendants pool * * * all or some of their theatre interests," into the statement (Pl. Br. 55) that in such towns "two or more defendants have pooled their theatre interests." At any rate, the Decree required all "pools" to be terminated before July 1, 1947, RKO has done so, and no contempt proceeding has been brought against any other defendant. This past conduct, if improper, has thus been fully remedied by the Decree.

5. Plaintiff urges (Pl. Br. 18) that there has been no competition between defendants' theatres for product, and claims as evidence thereof a failure to show large shifts in customers in the years prior to the trial. Not a single exhibitor, and not one of the officers or agents of the fifty or more buying combines which dominate the licensing of films for many so-called independent theatres (R. 738), was called by plaintiff to testify that he had ever sought to license features from RKO and been refused, either arbitrarily or for good reason. It is not inapposite to recall that in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208 (1939) the United States made much of the failure to produce witnesses other than those who testified, and that this Court observed (p. 226): "The production of weak evidence when strong is available can lead only to the conclusion that the strong would have been adverse."

Reckless shifting of exhibitor outlets is not a necessary or desirable aspect of a fully competitive society. Manufacturers and distributors of all commodities which are sold through a limited number of local outlets tend to retail through the same agency, store, or firm from year to year. A high turnover of outlets, like a high turnover of labor, is a sign of unnecessary friction in the economic mechanism. Such fluctuation of outlets is not in the interest of the manufacturers, the retailers, or the public. A motion picture distributor or an exhibitor which attempted weekly, monthly, or annually to shift its product completely would soon be in bankruptcy.

But if one of RKO's regular customers becomes unsatisfactory, either because he is not willing to pay the license fees RKO thinks its product justifies, or because he does not faithfully perform his contracts, or for any other business reason, RKO seeks a new outlet (R. 1703-04). For example, in Buffalo, Salt Lake City, and Oklahoma City it shifted from affiliated theatres with which it was dissatisfied to independent exhibitors who could offer it better outlets (R. 1700, 1705). These are typical of the frequent occasions when RKO has left affiliated for independent exhibitors (R. 1703-04). While the evidence did not emphasize shifts from independent to affiliated theatres, no doubt for similar business reasons such shifts have on occasion been made.

6. Plaintiff argues that the "conspiracy to fix runs" was an exclusionary conspiracy (Pl. Br. 56). By this plaintiff apparently contends that the defendants conspired (a) to exclude independent theatres from access to features distributed by the defendant, and (b) to exclude independent producers from access to affiliated theatres. The undisputed evidence shows that RKO does not fit any pattern of exclusion on either theory.[8]

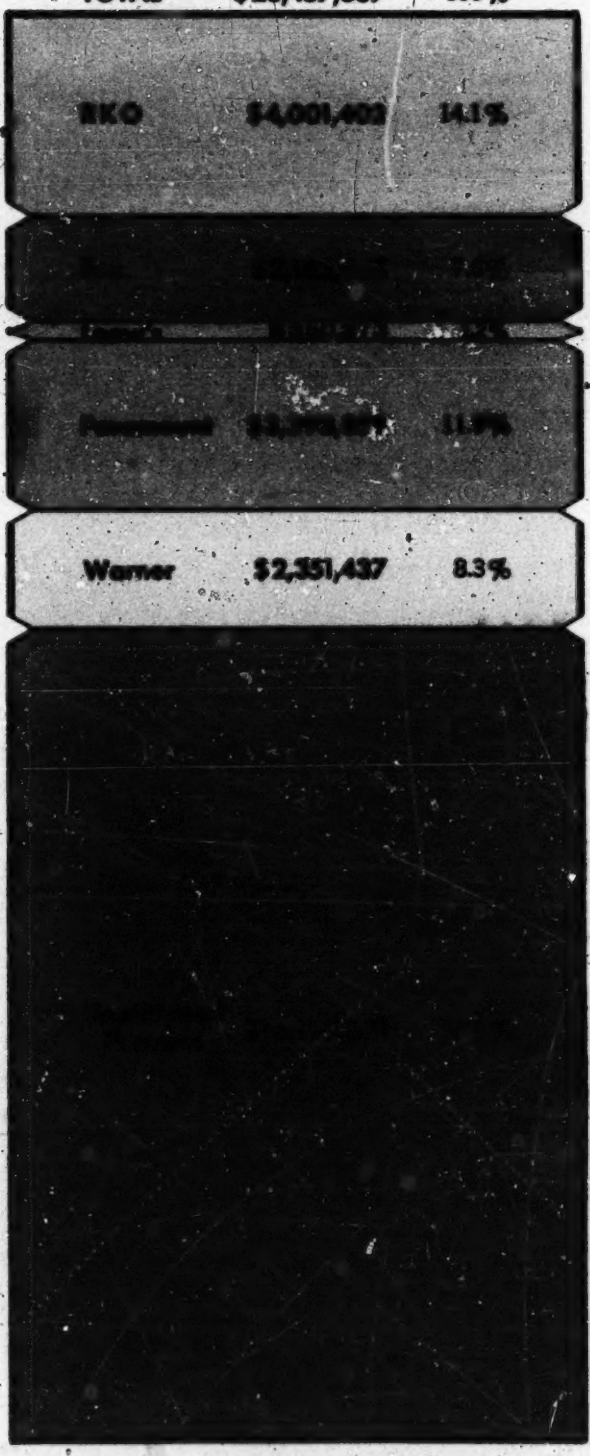
(a) RKO as a distributor relies heavily upon the independent theatres for the exhibition of its features. Of each dollar of domestic rental received by RKO in 1943-44, 57¢ came from independent theatres, 14¢ came from theatres affiliated with RKO. Only 29¢ was paid RKO by the theatres affiliated with the other defendants (RKO Ex. 7, reproduced).

[8] Indeed, in its opinion, the District Court specifically stated:

"The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices. They have perhaps done so, but we are without sufficient knowledge of the many factors entering into the determination of these provisions such as the character of theatre appointments, of the patrons, operating policies, locations, and responsibilities of operators. In the absence of such facts, we are unable to infer that the distributor-defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard * * *" (R. 3551)



Source: RKO's Answer to the Government's Interrogatories 2 and 3, 1945.

The Wheeler Chart Co., N. Y.

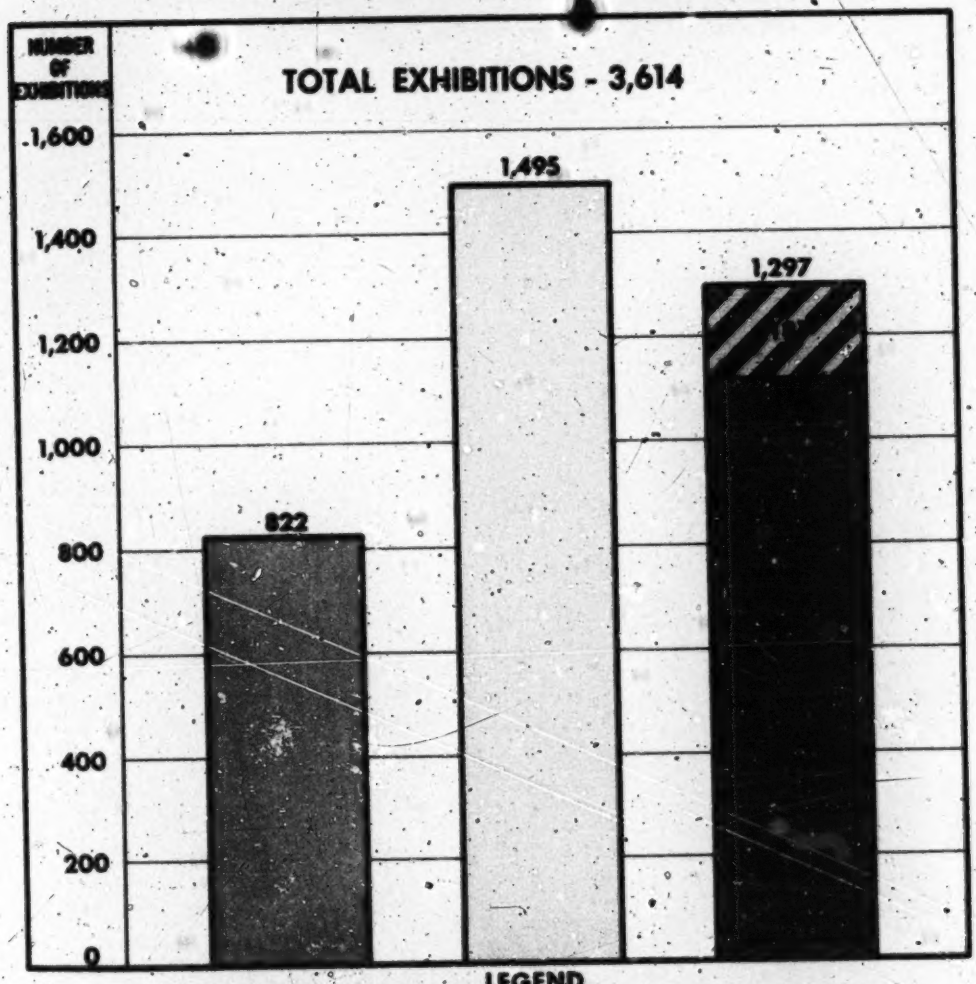
RKO relies heavily on the independent theatres for its first runs. This is true both as to the large and the smaller cities, and, of course, is undisputed as to the small towns.

In the 92 large cities with a population of 100,000 or more, the 38 features RKO distributed during 1943-44 played 3,614 first-run engagements, of which 1,097 were in theatres in which RKO had some interest[9] and 1,116 were in theatres in which no defendant had any interest (RKO Ex. 12, reproduced).

[9] RKO Exhibits 14, 17 and 19 used plaintiff's test of affiliation to include all theatres in which any defendant had any interest, however indirect or however small.

RKO Ex. 12
In Evidence
Witness - Miller

FIRST RUN
EXHIBITION OF FEATURES DISTRIBUTED BY RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., DURING 1943-'44 SEASON IN CITIES OVER 100,000 POPULATION



Source: RKO's Admission of Facts (1945)

In these 92 cities were 511 theatres which plaintiff treated as first-run. RKO had some interest in 71, although it operated only 47. Plaintiff treated as affiliated with other defendants approximately 291, and as independent approximately 149. The following table shows RKO's choice of first-run customers:

	Number of First-Run Theatres	Per cent. of Total First-Run Theatres	Per cent. RKO First-Run exhibitions	Difference
Treated as affiliated with RKO	71	13%[10]	27.8%	Plus 14.8%
Other theatres treated as affiliated	291	58%	41.2%	Minus 16.8%
Aggregate		71%	69.0%	Minus 2.0%
Theatres treated as unaffiliated	149	29%	31.0%	Plus 2.0%
Totals	511	100%	100.0%

Plaintiff conceded that RKO properly could prefer theatres affiliated with it (R. 1945). Excluding such first-run theatres, this table shows that other affiliated theatres, constituting 58% of the total, received only 41.2% of the first-run licenses of RKO's pictures, while unaffiliated theatres, constituting 29% of the total, received 31% of such licenses. This is not a picture of discrimination.

But was the 41% of RKO's product which did go to affiliated theatres contracted to them because of discrimination in their favor? The evidence answers: No. In these 92 cities RKO licensed its product as follows:

[10] In the 92 cities RKO operated only 47 first-run theatres, under 9% of the total (RKO Ex. 1).

To its own theatres	24 cities
(Where the RKO theatres lacked sufficient playing time fully to utilize RKO's product, the surplus—amounting to 107 exhibitions in the 24 cities—was licensed 56 to affiliated theatres and 51 to independent theatres.)
To theatres operated independently but in which RKO had a minority interest	3 cities
To independent theatres	24 cities
Roughly one-half to independent theatres and one-half to affiliated theatres[11]	6 cities
(The average was 20 to affiliated, 18 to independent theatres.)
To affiliated theatres in	35 cities
Total	92 cities

[11] Though RKO licensed a substantial part of its product to unaffiliated theatres in these six cities, the evidence is undisputed that the affiliated theatres were at least as good as, if not better than, the independent first-runs; Akron, R. 450; Birmingham, R. 844-45, Par. Ex. 25, pp. 1-4; Cambridge, R. 852-3; Houston, R. 465, 865; Kansas City, R. 2068-9, cf. R. 757; Pittsburgh, R. 484-5, 760, 763, 1141.

The great majority of the 41% licensed to affiliated theatres obviously was in the 35 cities of the last category. Detail as to these 35 cities is given in Appendix D, with full record references. The record shows the seating capacities of the first-run theatres in 28 of these cities. In 23 of the 28 cities the affiliated theatre playing the high grossing features in RKO's first block, which of course are the ones on which dispute would center, exceeded the seating capacity of the largest competing unaffiliated theatre by at least 22.6%. In most of the cities the seating capacity difference was even greater, in many being at least 75% and in some as much as 175 to 190%. Seating capacity, while not determinative, is an important factor in the selection of a first-run outlet, since it has a direct bearing on revenue potentialities (R. 1697, 1902). The record establishes that business factors were dominant in the selection of the first-run theatres in the other seven cities.

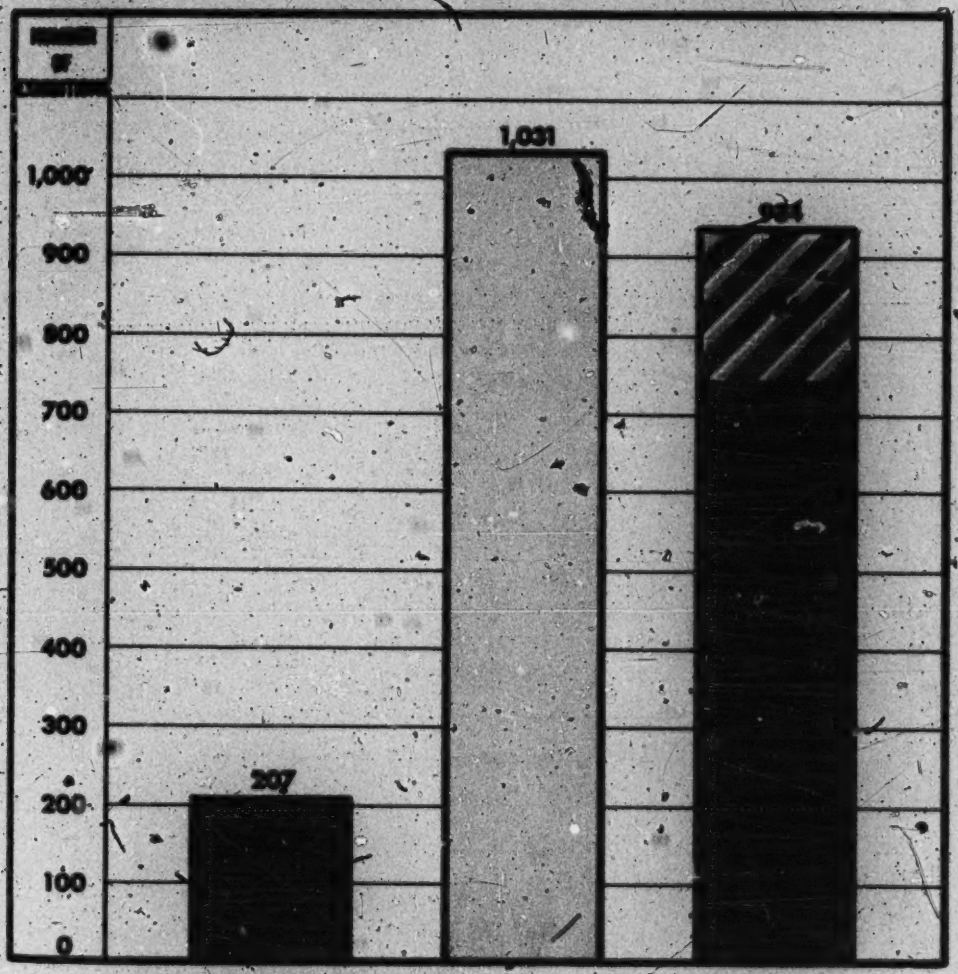
In the 412 cities of 25,000 or more population, the record is equally clear. The aggregate number of first-run exhibitions of RKO's first 1943-44 block, and the division between affiliated and independent theatres, is shown by RKO Ex. 15, reproduced on page 93.

As to the 320 cities of 25,000 to 100,000 population, Plaintiff's Appendix (pp. 308-317) shows 92 cities in which plaintiff concedes there is first-run competition between affiliated and independent theatres: in 48 of these 92 cities all or some of RKO's features were shown in the independent theatres, although such theatres numbered only 133 of a total of 336 theatres in such cities.

From RKO Ex. 15
In Evidence
Witness-Miller

RKO: U. S. v. PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., ET AL.

Distribution of first run exhibitions of RKO's 1943-1944 first block features between affiliated and unaffiliated theatres in cities over 25,000 population



LEGEND

Exhibitions in theatres in which RKO has an interest of 50% or more, and in theatres controlled by RKO in which RKO and another defendant have an aggregate interest of 50% or more.

Exhibitions in theatres in which one or more of the defendants (other than RKO) have an interest of 50% or more.

Exhibitions in theatres in which one or more of the defendants have interests of less than 50%.

Exhibitions in theatres in which no defendant has any interest.

Source: RKO's Admission of Facts (1945)

More precise analysis of the basic data from which plaintiff made its appendix table shows that these exhibitions occurred:

In theatres operated by RKO	11 cities
In theatres independently controlled and operated, but in which RKO had a minority interest	14 cities
In independent theatres	107 cities
In part in independent theatres and in part in affiliated theatres	35 cities
In theatres in which another defendant had minority interest	20 cities
In affiliated theatres in cities where there were no independent theatres	19 cities
In affiliated theatres which were larger than the largest unaffiliated theatre	58 cities
Two highest grossing pictures shown in affiliated theatres larger than any unaffiliated theatre, three less desirable features shown in smaller affiliated theatre	43 cities
	307 cities

There were thus only 12 cities out of 319 where the RKO first block showed first-run in an affiliated theatre smaller than the largest independent theatre. In six of these the undisputed evidence showed the superiority of the affiliated theatres, and as to the other six there was no evidence.[12]

These tabulations reveal the high percentage of RKO's first-run exhibitions in independent theatres in the 412 cities of 25,000 or more. The soundness of RKO's business judgment in selecting these theatres is shown by the fact that its first-run affiliated outlets in the 412 cities paid it on an average of 16.6% more per theatre than the independents (RKO Ex. 16). This was not due, as has sometimes been charged, to a policy of licensing the best pictures to affiliated and the less successful ones to independent theatres. Excluding first-runs in RKO's theatres, there were, in these 412 cities 1,965 first-run exhibitions of the first block of RKO's product in 1943-44. 52.47% were in theatres in which some defendant, other than RKO, had an interest of 50% or more; 9.86% were in theatres in which such a defendant had an interest of less than 50%; and 37.66% were in theatres in which no defendant had any interest (See RKO Exhibit 15, reproduced opposite p. 92). Appendix G, page 193 of this Brief, based on RKO Exhibits 13 and 14, makes a feature-by-feature comparison of the proportion of exhibitions of each feature shown in affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. The outstanding feature was Lady Takes a Chance, the least attractive was So This is Washington. Between the licenses of good and poor box office attractions to the affiliated theatres, the extreme difference was 6.03%. This hardly suggests a concerted plan to discriminate.

---

[12] See Appendix E for tabulation of all cities of 25,000 to 100,000 in which RKO features were licensed to affiliated theatres in which RKO had no interest, together with summary of all Record data as to the local competitive situation in each such city.

The plaintiff offered no evidence concerning the comparative quality of the competing theatres in any of the 412 cities, and in its brief ignores the great volume of undisputed evidence offered by the defendants. The first-run status of any theatre is a contractual recognition of its suitability for first-run operation. Not all theatres are suitable for such a run (R. 1900). The size and location of a theatre, its general physical equipment and appointments, its available playing time, and the reliability and ability of its operator, are among the factors which must be evaluated in determining which theatre is best qualified for first-run exhibition[18] (R. 419-20, 1697).

(b) The record is equally clear that RKO does not fit into any purported conspiracy of exclusion whereby independent and non-integrated producers have been shut out of RKO's theatres. In an obvious effort to imply that RKO's affiliated theatres do not afford the features of non-integrated producers a fair proportion of playing time, plaintiff argues (Pl. Br. 56 footnote) that from 35% to 50% of a feature's total domestic gross comes from 3% to 4% of its total domestic exhibitions. This is not a recent phenomenon, for at page 75 of its Brief plaintiff points out that in 1927 [one year before RKO was organized] "approximately 50% of the revenue from a film [was] derived from first-run showings within six months from the date of its release," In the Matter of Famous-Players-Lasky Corp., 11 F. T. C. 187, at 197 (1927). But in any event, since an outstanding feature normally will show in well over 10,000 theatres (see p. 15 supra), the footnoted statistic is merely an observation that 35% to 50% of its gross comes from some 350 to 400 exhibitions—most of which will be first-runs in the 412 larger cities (see tabulation on Lady Takes a Chance, supra, page 15). This would seem a reasonable expectation on any market analysis: 77.8% of the people living in cities of 2,500 or more reside in these 412 cities. These cities have the largest theatres playing the longest runs to a population normally having the highest per capita income. Naturally, the best theatres in the larger cities should, and do, contribute a substantial percentage of total rentals (see p. 16). A ten-week exhibition at the 6,000-seat Music Hall in New York's Rockefeller Center (an independent theatre) yields more film rental to the producer than a thousand one-night double-feature showings in tiny theatres such as those in Hawesville, Kentucky. Certainly plaintiff would be quick to attack if RKO attempted to charge the same rental to every theatre. Literally hundreds of theatres would be unable to license at such a figure (see supra p. 17).

---

[18] This is well illustrated by Mr. Mochrie's testimony regarding Atlanta, Georgia. In 1943-44 six affiliated theatres (5 affiliated with Paramount and 1 with Loew's) licensed most of the product of seven distributors. One independent operator licensed Columbia's 41 features and 14 features from integrated distributors. These figures are meaningless in a vacuum. The undisputed evidence shows that the independent (the Rialto) is a small theatre of 700-800 seats which licenses certain of RKO's most popular pictures, and runs each four to five weeks (R. 1698). With this product, 41 Columbia, and 9 other features, this theatre's playing time is fully occupied with good product (R. 1739-40) and no complaint by the independent exhibitor is shown. Yet this is supposed to be an example of discrimination, and is so counted in plaintiff's reference to its Exhibit 428, 428A (Pl. Br. 29).

RKO's theatres cannot operate (with the possible exception of the Palace in New York City) on the product of one distributor (Finding of Fact No. 151, R. 3689). "The percentage of features on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatre would be relatively small and in nowise approximates monopoly" (Finding of Fact No. 100, R. 3678). RKO theatres must license features from other distributors, and they consistently accord a large proportion of their playing time to those of non-integrated distributors. RKO Exhibit 8, reproduced here, shows that 47.3% of the exhibitions of features in RKO's first-run theatres and in its New York neighborhood first-run theatres in 1943-44 were from non-integrated companies.

Source:- RKO Film Booking Corp. Records.

At page 348 of the Appendix to the plaintiff's brief, the effort is made to argue that the RKO theatres, although using a large amount of non-integrated products, discriminated against such non-integrated producers by paying therefor an excessively low film rental. This inference is clearly not justified by the record. It is true, of course, that the larger amount of RKO's film rentals is paid to those distributors who on the undisputed evidence released the best features. RKO's theatres paid to RKO in 1943 $3,916,743 for film rental (of which a substantial amount accrued to the accounts of the independent producers for whom RKO acted as a distributor). They paid $3,303,206 in the same year to non-integrated distributors, both defendants and non-defendants; and $5,592,611 to the other four integrated defendants. But rental depends in large measure on the box office attractiveness of product. Better features reflect this directly through percentage license terms, others indirectly in flat rentals. The average rental per feature per billing paid by RKO theatres varied widely between the non-integrated defendants: Universal, $1158; Columbia, $1099; United Artists, $510; Monogram, $248; Republic, $231; PRC and all others, $120 (RKO Exs. 8, 9).

The only reasonable inference is that such differences are due to variations in quality. Though absolutes are dangerous, there is truth in the epigram, used by Mr. Wright and adopted by a witness for a non-integrated defendant: "There is no evil in this business that good pictures won't cure" (R. 1297).

Plaintiff called no representative of any independent producer or any non-integrated distributor as a witness. A number of highly prosperous independent producers, who did not appear as witnesses during the trial, have come forward in this Court to argue as amici curiae on the basis of matter largely outside this record. Representatives of non-integrated distributors having knowledge of the facts were also easily available to testify if plaintiff had wanted them. From plaintiff's failure to call such witnesses the inference would be justifiable that, if called, their testimony would not have supported the plaintiff's thesis. This likelihood is strengthened by the fact that the plaintiff conceded that "the evidence * * * does not show that any particular independent producer who wanted to make a picture could not get it released by one of these [eleven national] distributors * * * I think you have a reasonable assurance that if you are a competent producer and can make a good picture, you can get one of the companies to release it for you" (R. 387, 388).

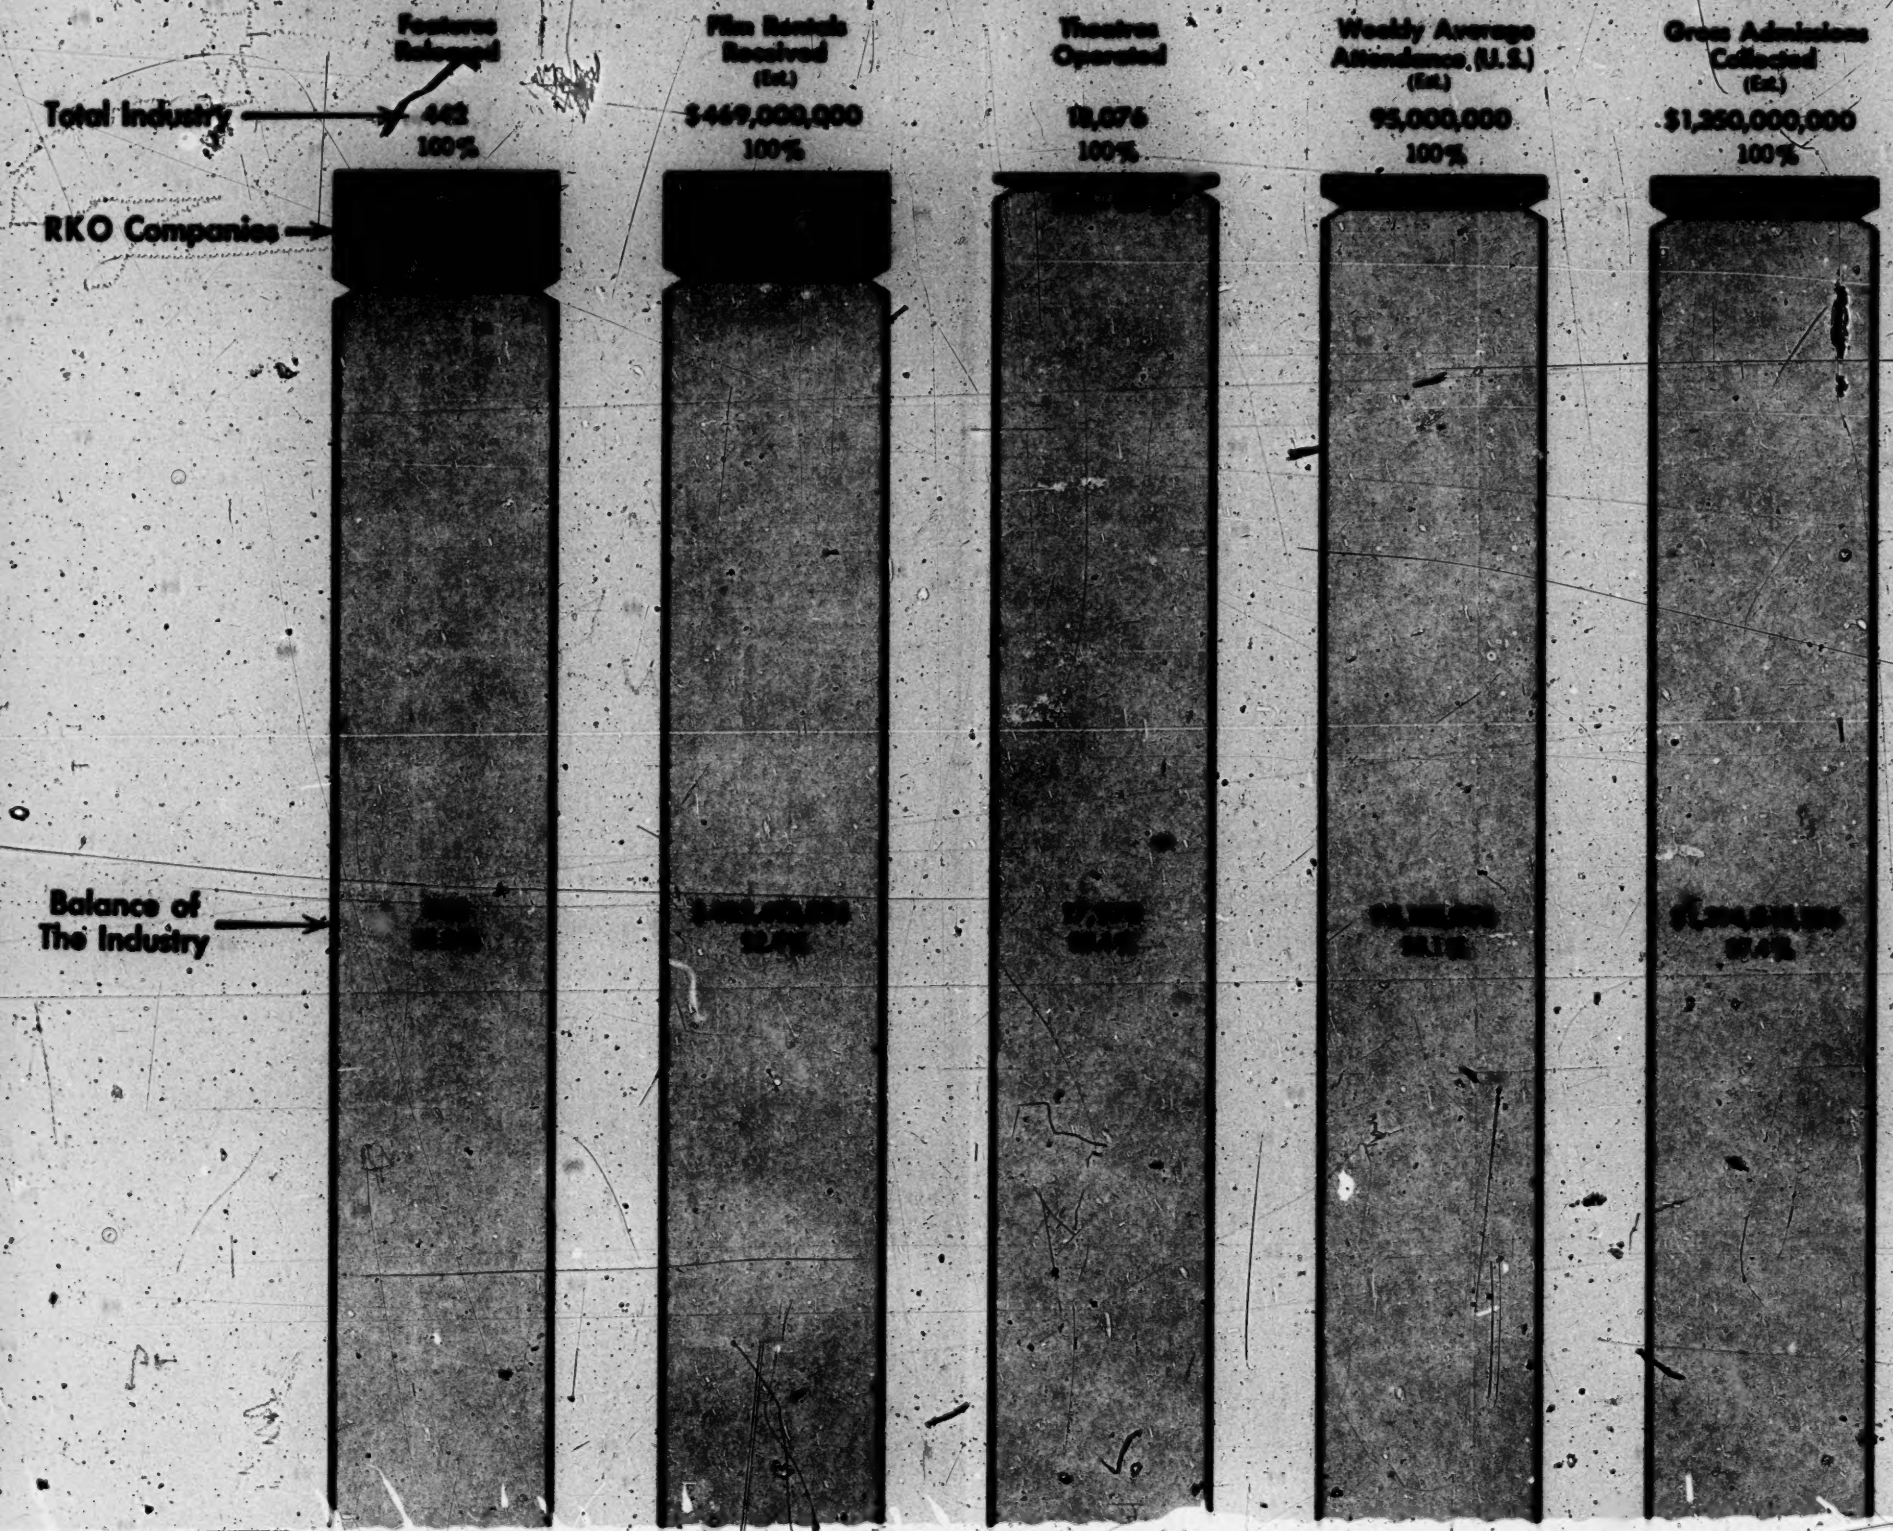
7. As evidence that "The conspiracy has been extremely successful" the plaintiff urges (Pl. Br. 57, repeated from 19) that 17% of the theatres in the United States pay 45% of the total domestic film rentals received by all eight distributor defendants.

In this connection it should be emphasized that plaintiff's consistent effort to picture RKO as a financially powerful conspirator disregards the facts as to RKO's relative size in the industry. RKO is by no means the giant which the plaintiff would have this Court envisage. RKO Exhibit 2 reproduced here, shows graphically its proportion of five important industry aggregates.

RKO Ex. 2
In Evidence
Witness - Rathvon

PERCENTAGE RELATIONSHIP OF RKO COMPANIES TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY IN 1944



Moreover, insofar as profits may be evidence of monopoly power, RKO Exhibit 26, reprinted as Appendix C, reveals the fact that such power has not been reflected in RKO's financial results. In the sixteen years prior to the trial RKO, on gross receipts of $950,000,000, realized a net profit for its shareholders of $3,818,087.31—less than 4¢ of profit out of each $10 of gross receipts. This is not the traditional picture of a monopolistic company whose power has been exerted to oppress the public and to harvest excessive returns.

The abstract statement that 45% of the domestic film rental is paid by 17% of the theatres can in itself furnish no basis for sound inference. The rental paid by any theatre must (and, regardless of the identity of the owner or operator, always will) depend upon the basic factors which, as a matter of sound business judgment, determine its playing position: its size, location, appointments, general characteristics and the ability of its manager, all weighted according to its admission price policy, which in turn is affected by the average per capita income of its patrons. Not one of these factors is reflected in the plaintiff's evidence.

Furthermore, analysis shows the close correlation between first-run rentals paid by all theatres regardless of affiliation. The unaffiliated theatres which showed such a large proportion of RKO's product first-run in the 412 cities averaged smaller in size than the affiliated houses, and on the average paid a smaller rental, but the correlation of rental to seating capacity was striking; on three features the rental per seat was identical; on one the rental per seat varied by 1¢ between the two classes of theatres; and on one the variance was 3¢ per seat (see Appendix F). There is no pattern of discrimination in these rentals.

In the preceding subdivisions RKO has met each aggregate figure urged by the plaintiff. In each, the question has been: do the aggregate figures suggest any sort of plan or pattern, and if so does RKO fit into it? The District Court's answer is written into its Findings that RKO's theatres can not be aggregated with those of its competitors to establish general claims of monopolization, and that the net effect of RKO's operations has been to increase competition. We have, we are confident, adequately shown that those Findings are supported by the record.

The plaintiff's contention, put in its strongest frame, comes to this: that RKO, though engaged in the most intense competition at the production, the distribution, and the exhibition levels and though its organization increased competition at each of these levels, and though it acquired its facilities without any predatory practices, must be split because in its distribution contracts it is said to have included certain provisions (no different in substance from those used by the six national distributing organizations which have no theatre affiliates) which the Court has declared violative of law, and because in a few localities it "pooled" theatres or invested in theatre operating companies; and this despite the judicial determination of the trial court that the illegalities found can be effectively eliminated by the system of relief granted.

On the basis of the Findings of Fact and their supporting evidence, we confidently submit that the plaintiff has wholly failed to establish this contention.

VII.

The District Court correctly refused to hold that RKO as an integrated company producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures is an unlawful combination.

Plaintiff contends that RKO, in and of itself, constitutes "a[n unreasonable][14] restraint and a monopolization of an appreciable segment of trade in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act" (Pl. Br. 90). The trade which is thus restrained, says plaintiff, is that "represented by the pictures [RKO] distributes to its own theatres" (Pl. Br. 91).

When the plaintiff asserts that each defendant, in and of itself, constitutes an unlawful combination, it converts this law suit into five separate controversies and each defendant must be considered on its own merits. Hence all contentions of combination or conspiracy between the various defendants are abandoned by the plaintiff in so far as this argument is concerned, and RKO must be judged solely upon its own facts.

On this count, also, the District Court disagreed with the plaintiff. It recognized that "Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them" (Opinion, R. 3554). It characterized this as "the ordinary rights of ownership" (Ibid.). This was carried into the Decree by the Court's refusal to order the disintegration of RKO and the other exhibitor defendants, and [14] Plaintiff consistently omits the "unreasonable" in this portion of its argument, but we assume that it does not seriously contend that the "rule of reason" is no longer applicable in anti-trust cases.

by the provision that each might license its own features to its own theatres on terms, satisfactory to itself (R. 3700).

In the Consent Decree of 1940 plaintiff recognized the propriety of RKO exhibiting its features in its own theatres (See Paragraph XXVII, R. 3392). At the trial, plaintiff conceded:

> "Let us assume that you have two distributors of a commodity, two national distributors, and each of them controls a group of retail outlets; and each of these distributors makes agreements with his outlets, under which the outlets act as agents for the sale of his product to the ultimate consumer, and under which agreements he stipulates the price, or a minimum price, at which the product is sold.
>
> "Now, up to this point you have no Sherman Act violation * * *" (R. 1945).

These concessions are directly at variance with the plaintiff's present position. Now it contends that the creation and operation of RKO as an integrated company was unlawful because, it claims, RKO's theatres were acquired "not to meet an expanding business demand resulting from superior skill in film production or distribution" but for the deliberate purpose of obtaining an assured retail outlet for its features regardless of their merits (Pl. Br. 91). It is urged that two unlawful trade restraints result: first, pictures of other distributors are excluded from RKO theatres to the extent that such theatres show RKO features; and, secondly, other theatres are excluded from licensing the RKO features at the time they are shown in the RKO theatres (Ibid.).

Plaintiff's argument amounts in essence to the assertion that a producer or a manufacturer can never lawfully acquire retail outlets for the primary purpose of marketing his products because the necessary effects are (a) to exclude other producers or manufacturers from access to such outlets to the extent that they handle their owner's product; and (b) to exclude other retail outlets from access to the producer's products to the extent that the particular items are handled by its own retail outlets. This doctrine finds no support in any decided case. The restraints mentioned are necessarily incident to the lawful ownership and operation of any business. They are not different, for example, from the restraints resulting from a lawful contract for the purchase and sale of particular commodities. As Mr. Justice Douglas said in Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, at 23 (1945):

> "Every exclusive arrangement in the business or commercial field may produce a restraint of trade. A manufacturer who has only one retail outlet for his produce may be said to restrain trade in the sense that other retailers are prevented from dealing in the commodity * * *. But Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 * * * construed the Sherman Act to include not every restraint but only those which were unreasonable * * *."

Moreover, in this case we are dealing with a copyrighted feature. The right to exhibit its features is specifically granted to RKO as the producer and copyright owner by statute. As the court stated in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, at p. 227 (1939):

> "Under §1 of the Copyright Act, 35 Stat. 1075, 17 U. S. C. §1, the owners of the copyright of a motion picture film acquired the right to exhibit the picture and to grant an exclusive or restrictive license to others to exhibit it.'

Even without regard to the Copyright Act, however, the anti-trust laws do not prevent RKO from acquiring retail outlets for the purpose of marketing its products. It is true that an unreasonable restraint of trade may exist within a vertically integrated industrial complex, but this must rest on proof beyond the mere fact that the enterprise operates at two or more levels of the production-distribution-exhibition process. Whether vertical integration violates the anti-trust laws depends upon whether its purpose or necessary effect is unreasonably to restrain or to monopolize trade in the various business levels in which the enterprise is engaged. Vertical integration in essence is nothing more than a union of non-competing complementary enterprises. The courts have consistently held that the union of such enterprises for business purposes unconnected with any design to monopolize or restrain the trade in which the constituent enterprises are engaged is not violative of the Act. United States v. Winslow, 227 U. S. 202 (1913); United States v. United Shoe Machinery Company, 247 U. S. 32 (1917); United States v. Standard Oil Company, of New Jersey, 47 F. (2d) 288 (E. D. Mo. 1931); Alexander Milburn Company v. Union Carbide & Carbon Corp., 15 F. (2d) 678 (C. C. A. 4, 1926) cert. den. 273 U. S. 757 (1927). See also Eastman Kodak Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 7 F. (2d) 994 (C. C. A. 2d, 1925) affd. 274 U. S. 619 (1927); United States v. United States Steel Corporation, 251 U. S. 417 (1919), affirming 223 Fed. 55 (D. N. J., 1915).

In support of its theory that a producer cannot market its own products through its own retail outlets, the plaintiff relies primarily on United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255 (1920) and United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26 (1920). These cases are clearly distinguishable. In each case the Court found that the combination had already acquired a dominant control of the anthracite coal land served by the carriers involved, and of the railroads over which the coal had to pass to reach its market. The Court also found that such lands were acquired with the intent to monopolize and in fact had monopolized the production, transportation and sale of coal. There are no Findings of Fact and there is no evidence here that RKO acquired any theatre for the purpose or with the effect of eliminating competition in the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures. The Court found the direct opposite: it found that RKO's organization increased competition at each of the three levels of the industry (Findings of Fact No. 20, 23, 121, R. 3664, 2684, quoted supra pp. 9-10).

The Government also refers to United States v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218 (1947). In that case the Court had before it a motion directed to the pleadings. The basic allegation was that the combination there considered was for the express purpose of unduly restraining and monopolizing an important segment of interstate commerce. The case stands merely for the proposition that unreasonable restraints of trade can be effected by vertical combinations as well as by horizontal combinations. The form of combination is immaterial. If the "primary object" of a vertical combination is to eliminate and unduly restrain competition, the Act, of course, is violated. As previously shown, there is no evidence and there are no Findings that RKO acquired theatres with the object, primary or otherwise, of unduly restraining or monopolizing trade either in distribution or exhibition. All the Findings are that the contrary object motivated RKO and that the contrary result followed.

In United States v. Swift & Co., 286 U. S. 106 (1932) the sole question involved was whether the Court should revise a consent decree under which the defendants had voluntarily agreed to an injunction barring them from certain fields of activity. This Court made clear the limited nature of the issue: "We are not framing a decree. We are asking ourselves whether anything has happened that will justify our changing the decree" (p. 119). Since the Court found that there had been no change in the conditions which would warrant a modification, the defendants were left subject to the injunction to which they had consented.

Neither of the other cases cited by the plaintiff, Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1 (1945); Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291 (1923) or United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 (1944) has any relevancy to the legality of vertical integration.

VIII.

Since the Decree of the District Court is adequate to prevent the continuance or repetition of all acts which the Court deemed violative of the Sherman Act, its refusal to order RKO to divest itself of its theatres or its production-distribution facilities was not an abuse of discretion.

Plaintiff demands the dissolution of RKO together with a supplementary injunction against RKO licensing its features to other affiliated theatres and against RKO's theatres exhibiting features distributed by other integrated defendants. To prevail, the plaintiff must establish (A) that the refusal of the District Court to grant such relief was an abuse of discretion; and (B) that the particular relief demanded is so clearly the only appropriate remedy that this Court should substitute it for the relief granted below.

The analysis in Point I-A, p. 39, supra, demonstrates that the Decree adequately meets every violation of the Sherman Act which the District Court concluded existed in this case. The Decree rested upon the District Court's findings that competition > "* * * can be introduced into the present system of fixed admission prices, clearances, and runs, by requiring a defendant distributor when licensing its features to grant the license for each run at a reasonable clearance (if clearance is involved) to the highest bidder, if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable, the one offering the best terms shall receive the license * * *" (Finding of Fact No. 85, R. 3674).

>
> "The discriminations referred to in Finding 110 would appear to be impossible under a system where the exhibitors competing for a license to exhibit a given feature on a given run do so on a parity since the same offer must be made to all prospective exhibitors in each competitive area" (Finding of Fact No. 111, R. 3682).
>
> "Total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned and would be damaging to the public" (Finding of Fact No. 155, R. 3960).
>
> "Total divestiture would not remedy the * * * practices which have been found unreasonably to restrain competition" (Finding of Fact No. 156, R. 3690).

Accordingly, the Court framed a Decree (R. 3694ff) which attacked the problems of the industry constructively:

It ordered that each feature be individually offered and licensed "theatre by theatre and picture by picture" (II-8-(d)), and each "license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or others" (II-8-(b)). Provisions fixing minimum admission prices were (erroneously, we believe, see Points III and IV) prohibited, as was clearance between theatres not in competition and unreasonable clearance between those in competition. Franchises, formula deals, master agreements, and block booking were outlawed.

Each distributor was enjoined from arbitrarily selecting one of two or more exhibitors to play a feature on a run desired by both (II-9). This provision, which is nowhere mentioned by the plaintiff, in one sentence demolishes any fixed pattern of runs which may have existed. The District Court wisely recognized that neither it, nor anyone else, could by any form of Decree assure every one of the 18,000 theatres in the United States that it could have any run which it demanded.

If the Decree had stopped at this point, it would have accorded full relief against all the violations found. It would have provided that no exhibitor shall be arbitrarily denied the right to exhibit any picture on the run he desires, and it would have assured that all licenses shall be granted picture by picture and theatre by theatre.

But the District Court went further. It provided for the situation where a run "is desired, or is to be offered, upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres" (II-8-(c)). Here the distributor is to offer to all competing exhibitors, 30 days in advance of the date "bids" are to be received, each individual feature, stating "knockdown terms" as to run, clearance, time of exhibition, and minimum flat rental. Each exhibitor may then make the offer which, considering the quality of his theatre and patronage, and his estimate as to the attractiveness of the picture, constitutes in his judgment a fair rental if it be exhibited on the run in question at his theatre. The distributor may reject all offers but if he accepts any, must "grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor."

This is in brief outline the constructive system of competition which the Decree substitutes for the present distribution practices. It is attacked by the plaintiff and others. The Amended and Supplemental Complaint (R. 3173, 3176) complained of the lack of competitive bidding and it was Mr. Wright, chief trial counsel for the plaintiff, who said he did "not see why [features] should not go on the auction block" (R. 2556).

The Decree's system of competitive selling varies in a number of respects from that proposed by Paramount, Loew, Fox, Warner and RKO and set forth at R. 3613. It is not RKO's contention that the system substituted by the Court for this proposal is better or worse, or that it is perfect. But RKO believes it does establish the basis of a workable system of free competitive negotiation. It may be assumed that the District Court will freely exercise its reserved jurisdiction either to modify the system if it be found procedurally inept in any way, or to strengthen it if it proves inadequate in any detail.

A. The adequacy of the Decree is not impugned by prior experience in the motion picture industry.

The plaintiff contends that the District Court ignored certain historical material which it now presses on this Court (Pl. Br. 72-89). It is unlikely that this is true. 'At the trial plaintiff proposed to offer in evidence twenty-five exhibits dealing with various court and Federal Trade Commission proceedings. Of the first item offered, a special master's report in a District Court case in Chicago, Judge Hand remarked: "We won't receive any such thing as that. This is absurd" (R. 297). Of an indictment on which the jury had found the defendants not guilty, his comment was equally positive: "I think it is absurd. You cannot put such stuff in" (R. 300).

Thereupon all the proposed exhibits were withdrawn, with the observation that these "may be referred to by this Court" (R. 300), to which Judge Hand's comment was illuminating: "You can do that with anything" (R. 302).

Despite the fact that it referred freely to these items, the plaintiff signally failed to convince the judges of the District Court, who said:

> "* * * The defendants have built up great business enterprises in a very popular field. Yet they have carried on practices we have found unduly restrictive of interstate commerce and even though we do not suggest that they any more than 'those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell' have been 'sinners above all men', yet measures should be taken to restore the moving picture business to a condition of competition that will benefit both competitors and the general public and to abate practices that are unlawful" (R. 3558).

The District Court, in its Finding of Fact, also denied any "'inherent vice' on the part of these defendants" (Finding of Fact No. 153, R. 3690).

We cite the Opinion and Finding only as indicative that the District Court, after careful study, could not agree with plaintiff's insistence that the defendants were inherently vicious. We turn now briefly to the "past experience":

1. Federal Trade Commission (Pl. Br. 73-78). Neither RKO, nor any of its predecessor companies, nor any of its officers or executives, has ever been charged before the Federal Trade Commission with unfair competition or any other offense within the Commission's jurisdiction. Both of the proceedings cited by the plaintiff, In the Matter of Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation, et al., 11 F. T. C. 187, and In the Matter of West Coast Theatres, Inc., 12 F. T. C. 383, were instituted prior to RKO's organization and dealt with the industry as it then existed. RKO therefore has no occasion to discuss the merits of the complaints.[15] [15] One example of the carelessness of plaintiff in comparing figures may be noted. The footnote on p. 75 of plaintiff's Brief incompletely recites the finding of the Commission regarding revenue from first-runs. The full finding was that "approximately 50% of the revenue from a film is derived from first-run showings within six months from the date of its release, and the remaining revenue from second and repeat runs in other theatres, extending over a period of two or three years (11 F. T. C. at 197)." Plaintiff submits as comparable the assertion that 80% of the total rental earned in large cities comes from the first-run theatres. The proportion of the domestic gross from all theatres the F. T. C. statistic) is obviously not comparable with the proportion of the revenue from a large city paid by first-run theatres (the second asserted statistic).

---

2. Government Antitrust Suits (Pl. Br. 78-85). The plaintiff cites United States v. West Coast Theatres, Inc.; United States v. Balaban & Katz Corp.; Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30 (1930) and United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., 282 U. S. 44 (1930), all of which were instituted in 1928. That was the year in which the organization of RKO "increase[d] competition in each of the three branches of the industry"—production, distribution and exhibition (Finding of Fact No. 23, R. 3664; see also Finding of Fact No. 121, R. 3684).

RKO was not named as an original defendant in any of these cases, and none of them involved any activities of the theatres which it later acquired.

RKO was not a defendant in the later equity proceedings in United States v. West Coast Theatres, which resulted in the Consent Decree of August 21, 1930. In January, 1931, RKO acquired a part of the assets of the Pathe Exchange, which had been a defendant therein; and hence was named in the contempt proceedings instituted in August 1939. The contempt charge was never determined by the Court, and the mere accusation certainly does not convict RKO.

Similarly, although not an original defendant, in United States v. Balaban & Katz Corp. (N. D. Ill.), RKO was named as a defendant in the contempt information of November 9, 1938. In the course of the hearing before the Master, counsel for the government entered into a written stipulation reading in part as follows:

> "It has conceded that in any view of the case evidence does not establish a violation of any paragraph of the decree against the defendants, RKO and Universal." See Master's Report, cited by plaintiff at Pl. Br. 79, paragraph IV, italics added.

The only other government case mentioned by the plaintiff is Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208 (1939). Nothing in this case even suggests any impropriety in RKO's relations with its theatres.[16]

Thus not one of these cases casts the slightest doubt on the trial court's conclusion that the appropriate way to remove the impact of distribution practices it deemed improper was to prohibit them and affirmatively to outline a system of competitive negotiation.

3. NRA Code and Consent Decree of 1940 (Pl. Br. 58-87). There is no evidence in this record as to the NRA Code of Fair Competition, or the activities of the various local boards set up under such Code. There is not the slightest intimation that the fact that RKO had theatres contributed either to the success or failure of that program.

The Consent Decree can hardly be used to taint RKO. The plaintiff agreed to that Decree. RKO entered into it in good faith, RKO observed it in letter and spirit, and the only inference to be drawn from this fact is that it will similarly observe any decree entered in this cause.

4. Private Antitrust Suits (Pl. Br. 87-88). RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. has been named in most of the private antitrust suits filed in recent years, though in some no RKO company is a defendant. Many resulted in judgments for the defendants; a number have been determined in favor of the plaintiffs. Not one which has been determined in favor of any plaintiff has involved an RKO theatre or an RKO theatre operating company.

---

[16] The plaintiff's reference to RKO in connection with a claim that clearance in Sioux City, Iowa, is related to double billing (Pl. Br. 85) is evidently a misprint, since Gov. Ex. 94, cited in support, makes no reference to any such restriction.

We believe that this Court has a sufficient task in deciding the present appeal without undertaking to investigate the peculiar local issues of a number of private suits. It would be impossible, for instance, to go into details concerning such cases as Duluth Theatres Corp. v. Paramount, et al., No. 2335, District of Minnesota, which resulted in 1946 in summary judgment for RKO; or Ball v. Paramount, 67 F. Supp. 1 (W. D. Pa. 1946), which resulted on August 30, 1946, after trial, in judgment for the defendants; or Momand v. Universal, No. 7024, District Court of Massachusetts, which resulted on February 13, 1947, in an instructed verdict for the defendants. Each suit involves its own unique local issues, and it may be assumed that the trial courts are capable of handling them as they are reached on the dockets.

5. Conclusion. Nothing in "history" as recited by the plaintiff suggests any intention, much less any effort, on the part of RKO to use its 106 theatres to injure its competitors, or to combine so as to abuse them. The significant fact is that plaintiff has cited no case, and there is no case, where theatre abuse has been found against RKO. It has cited no instance where RKO has failed to live up to any decree entered in any case where it, or a predecessor company, was a distributor defendant.

B. The authorities fully sustain the refusal of the District Court to order the dissolution of RKO.

1. The violations found do not establish a situation where dissolution is the appropriate remedy.

The authorities of the past half century establish that dissolution of a corporate defendant who has violated the Sherman Act is not the normal remedy, though it will be granted when necessary. Such necessity is shown only when the gravamen of the offense is the creation of the corporation dissolved, and where the dominant position of the corporation results from the acquisition of competitors with the intent or the necessary effect of unduly restraining and monopolizing commerce. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197 (1904); Standard Oil v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 (1911); United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106 (1911); United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 188 Fed. 127 (C. C. Del., 1911); United States v. Union Pacific R. Co., 226 U. S. 61 (1912); United States v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U. S. 214 (1922); United States v. Eastman Kodak Co., 226 Fed. 62 (D. W. N. Y. 1915), 230 Fed. 522 (1916); United States v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 Fed. 964 (S. D. N. Y. 1916), app. dism. 249 U. S. 621 (1919); United States v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26 (1920); United States v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 254 U. S. 255 (1920).

Even in cases where a corporation is unlawfully formed or monopoly is unlawfully maintained, dissolution is not granted as of course. It is used sparingly, and only when relief short of dissolution is clearly inadequate. The courts have repeatedly refused to order dissolution in cases where violations of the Act could be met adequately by less drastic remedies. United States v. Terminal Railroad Association, 224 U. S. 383 (1912); United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co., 208 Fed. 733 (N. D. Ohio 1913), 217 Fed. 656 (N. D. Ohio 1914); United States v. Keystone Watch Case Co., 218 Fed. 502 (E. D. Pa. 1915), app. dism. 257 U. S. 664 (1921); United States v. American Can Co., 230 Fed. 859 (D. Md., 1916); United States v. Quaker Oats Co., 232 Fed. 499 (N. D. Ill., 1916), app. dism. 253 U. S. 499 (1920);

United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U. S. 417 (1920); United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693 (1927); United States v. Aluminum Co., 148 F. (2d) 416 (C. C. A. 2nd 1945); United States v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319 (1947).

The present case is not one in which dissolution is appropriate. The District Court found a conspiracy of eight separate defendants, and by its Decree ended that conspiracy. RKO, as a separate entity, was found to have been created for a lawful purpose and to have had the effect of creating new competition in each field in which it operated. In such a setting, divorcement would go far beyond the restraint of violations and would be an effort by judicial fiat to rebuild the industry.

As the Court stated in United States v. National Lead Co., supra:

> "There is no showing that four major competing units would be preferable to two, or * * * that six would be better than four. Likewise, there is no showing of the necessity for this divestiture of plants or of its practicality and fairness. The findings of fact have shown vigorous and effective competition * * * in this field * * *. Such competition suggests that the District Court could do well to remove unlawful handicaps from it but demonstrates no sufficient basis for weakening its force by divesting each of the two largest competitors of one of its principal plants. It is not for the courts to realign and redirect effective and lawful competition where it already exists and needs only to be released from restraints that violate the antitrust laws. To separate the operating units of going concerns without more supporting evidence than has been presented here to establish either the need for, or the feasibility of, such separation would amount to an abuse of discretion."

2. The District Court correctly took into consideration, in exercising its discretion, the injury to the corporate defendants and to the public which would result from divestiture.

The plaintiff criticizes the District Court (Pl. Br. 119) because, as one factor in the determination of the remedy which it fitted to the illegalities it found, that Court took into consideration the harm which would result to the defendants and the public from what it described as "the harsh remedy of complete divestiture" (R. 3551, 3559).

In adopting this constructive approach the District Court followed a principle laid down by numerous decisions. Standard Oil v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 77-78 (1911); United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U.S. 106, 185 (1911); United States v. Terminal Railroad Assn., 224 U. S. 383, 411 (1912); Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553, 604 (1936); United States v. Great Lakes Towing Co., supra, at 217 Fed. 656 (N. D. Ohio 1914).

Upon consideration of the record, the Court found (Finding of Fact No. 155, R. 3690):

> "Total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned and would be damaging to the public."

In its Opinion the Court stated that divestiture would "withdraw the defendant distributors from competition in the exhibition field and at the same time would create a new set of theatre owners which would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they have supplanted in view of the latter's demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded in general as the largest and best equipped theatres" (R. 3551).

Plaintiff argues that there are two answers to the Court's concern over damage to the public: first, that there is nothing in the record to suggest that independent interests cannot give the public as good service as the defendants; and secondly, that if the violations found can be eliminated only by divestiture, it would be paradoxical to deny the relief on the ground of public injury, since Congress has decided that competition is to the greater public advantage.

Regarding the plaintiff's first contention, the Court was eminently justified in concluding that divestiture would be injurious to the public. For example, subsidiary findings, based on the undisputed evidence, were made by the court to the effect that the ownership and operation of theatres by RKO enables it, through the use of such theatres, to plan and direct more effectively the first exploitation of the features it distributes than is possible in the areas where it does not operate theatres, which results not only in greater revenue for it, but also for the subsequent-run exhibitors (Findings of Fact Nos. 122, 123, R. 3685). There is also undisputed evidence that the quality of the motion pictures made by the five theatre-owning defendants would be jeopardized by divorcement (R. 1827), that, for example, the ownership of theatres has enabled RKO to take the risk of experimenting with new types of pictures, which have advanced the art (R. 1623-24).

The short answer to the plaintiff's second contention is that it is based upon a hypothetical proposition which the Court below expressly repudiated. If improprieties can be eliminated only by divorcement, plaintiff says, then the court's position is contradictory. The Court below concluded that they can and will be eliminated by the relief given. The plaintiff's attempted answer is but an assignment of error.[17]

C. The District Court correctly refused the plaintiff's demand that RKO be enjoined from licensing theatres affiliated with other defendants, and that the other producer-exhibitor defendants be enjoined from licensing RKO theatres.

Plaintiff seeks to have this Court rewrite the Decree so that each producer-exhibitor shall be enjoined for a ten year period from licensing any feature it distributes to any theatre affiliated with another defendant. This relief was demanded first some two months after the trial ended. Prior to the arguments on January 15, 1946, the idea had not been mentioned.[18] It was first suggested by plaintiff, not as a demand for relief but as an "example" of an "alternative" remedy for which "these defendants might conceivably argue" (R. 2568). But, faced by the District Court's re-

---

[17] It is interesting to note that plaintiff refers to a legislative determination that divorcement is in the public interest (Pl. Br. 133, f.n. 5a). It is true that North Dakota in 1937 passed a statute making it unlawful for any motion picture theatre in which a producer or a distributor had an interest, to be operated in the state (Chapter 165, Laws of North Dakota, 1937). It repealed the law in 1939 (Chapter 203, Laws of North Dakota 1939). Apparently the legislature soon discovered that divorcement was not in the public interest. But in any event, the courts are not legislative organs.

[18] Plaintiff's Brief (p. 9) filed December 15, 1946, called for divestiture and for interim relief, pending divestiture, "which will prevent the use by any of them of licensing restrictions or other agreements between any two or more of them which have the effect of fixing, directly or indirectly, the admission prices in affiliated theatres or other theatres competing with such theatres, or which have the effect of excluding such competitor from any part of the theatre operating business" (Pl. Br., p. 9).

fusal to order divestiture, plaintiff evidently found the idea increasingly seductive. By October, 1946, it achieved maturity: the plaintiff's second proposed decree urged the ten year ban (R. 2601). By October 24th, it became the plaintiff's "key proposal" (R. 3000).

The strange aspect of this demand is that it bears most oppressively on the smallest defendants, RKO and Loew's. So long as RKO retained a single theatre, say in Marshalltown, Iowa, its features would be shut out of every affiliated theatre in the United States.

Plaintiff's argument rests upon its theory that RKO, as a distributor, will discriminate in favor of theatres affiliated with another defendant as against independent competitors for the purpose of inducing the other defendants to discriminate elsewhere in favor of the RKO theatres (Pl. Br. 128). We have demonstrated above the fact that RKO has not so discriminated in the past, and there is no reason to assume it will in the future. Here we show that the proposed ban on "cross licensing" is but an indirect method of compelling RKO to divest itself of all its theatres. Plaintiff concedes there is no precedent for such relief (Pl. Br. 133).

The ban proposed by the plaintiff would bar an integrated defendant "from licensing for exhibition in any theatre owned or controlled by it, films distributed or produced by" another integrated defendant (R. 3601). It must be considered from two angles: (1) the effect on RKO as a distributor; and (2) the effect on RKO as an exhibitor.

(1) The effect on RKO as a distributor

The ban on so-called "cross-licensing" would deprive RKO as a distributor of the income derived from the distribution of the productions of independent producers. Distribution of independently produced features has been an important part of RKO's business. "Continuously since its organization RKO has distributed features for independent producers. The particular independent producers whose features have been distributed by RKO have varied from time to time. In the nine seasons ending 1943-44, 19.8% of the features distributed by RKO were independently produced, and 28.4% of RKO's gross receipts from domestic licenses of features was derived from such independently produced features" (Finding of Fact No. 101, R. 3678). No independent producer could utilize the distribution facilities of RKO if thereby he was barred from some 3000 of the largest and finest theatres in the United States.

Had such a ban as the government now proposes been in effect during the first five motion picture seasons after RKO emerged from its reorganization, it would have deprived RKO of its service fees on the $55,000,000 of receipts it collected for these independent producers (RKO Exs. 5, 6).

Furthermore, a ban on so-called "cross licensing" would materially impair RKO's revenue as a distributor of its own productions. An injunction which would bar RKO from licensing its features for exhibition in theatres affiliated with any other defendant would shut RKO out of some 3,000 theatres, including "many or most of the best theatres" in the United States (Finding of Fact No. 154, R. 3690). In 1943-44 RKO's fees for features produced by it included approximately $5,750,000 from theatres affiliated with other defendants (RKO Exs. 5, 7).

The immediate result on RKO as a distributor, therefore, would be to reduce its gross receipts from rentals by over 50%, i.e., using 1943-44 as a sample year, from $28,457,337 to $13,923,287.[19]

RKO as a producer and distributor obviously could not successfully operate with its own features barred from 3,000 theatres, including the largest and best in the country, and its distributing organization blocked from its traditional reliance on independent producers. From the standpoint of its effect on RKO as a producer-distributor, the so-called ban on "cross-licensing" is but a veiled form of compulsory divorcement.

(2) The effect on RKO as an exhibitor.

The blow to RKO as an exhibitor would be only slightly less severe. The product which played during the 1943-44 season in RKO's 93 principal theatres is tabulated in RKO Exhibit 8A. "It would be financially impossible for RKO to operate its theatres on features produced by RKO alone" (Finding of Fact No. 102, R. 3678). Indeed, found the Court "except for a limited number of theatres in the very largest cities, the 18,000 * * * theatres * * * in the United States exhibit the product of more than one distributor. Such theatres could not be operated on the product of only one distributor" (Finding of Fact No. 151, R. 3689). In the year in question, RKO relied far more heavily on the features of the non-integrated distributors than upon those

[19]

Gross receipts from film rentals		$28,457,337
Receipts for independent productions	$8,802,780
Estimated receipts for RKO product in theatres affiliated with other defendants	5,731,270	14,534,050
Source: RKO Exs. 5 and 7.		$13,923,287

of its integrated competitors.[20] Now it would be compelled to rely upon them exclusively. Most of the attractive features come from the five producer-exhibitor defendants and United Artists. The product of the other seven national distributors, though including some outstanding box office features, is in general of substantially lower cost and of less attractiveness to the patron (R. 543, 873, 910, 1293, 1300, 1945; Pl. Exs. 426, 427).

RKO's theatres could not maintain their positions in the artificially restricted environment which the proposed ban would create. No justification has been shown for the shackling of their ability to compete on a fair and equal basis which would justify barring them from access to the fine features which may be produced by Fox, Warner's, Loew's or Paramount.

It is, of course, hardly surprising to find the non-integrated defendants favoring the proposed ban on "cross licenses." The creation of a wholly artificial demand for their product, and at the same time the creation of an artificial scarcity by blocking off their more able competitors, all to be accomplished by judicial fiat, would obviously appeal to them as an outcome highly desirable.

---

[20] In the year in question RKO's 93 leading theatres exhibited:

Universal features	1,718	engagements
Fox "	1,302	"
Warner "	1,153	"
MISCELLANEOUS MINOR PRODUCERS' features	883	"
MONOGRAM "	817	"
Columbia "	643	"
REPUBLIC "	455	"
United Artists features	378	"
Paramount "	343	"
Loew's "	283	"

(Source: RKO Ex. 8, reproduced at p.).
(Italics: non-integrated defendants; capitalized italics: non-integrated distributors who are not defendants.)

It is equally clear that the same motive is to be found in the support given by the independent producers to the demand for a ban on "cross-licenses." There is no evidence to support their contentions, so they have gone freely outside the record for their arguments. But it does not take any great perspicacity to appraise their motives. No doubt they envisage with consummate satisfaction the bonanza which could be opened to them by securing a judicial ban which would bar the features of integrated producers from theatres affiliated with other distributors. With their superior competitors artificially blocked from the market, and with the best theatres in the country strangling under the proposed ban, the independent producers would reap the harvest of exorbitant fees.

And the same motive, of course, underlies the assault of the so-called "independent" exhibitors. Banned together frequently in circuits and buying combines, these operators are naturally eager to secure a further leverage in their negotiations for product. What more fortunate windfall could come to them than a decree which would bar RKO and other major product from "many if not most of the best theatres," and would force its exhibition in inferior theatres for such bargain license fees as the exhibitor chose to dole out on his judicially created buyers' market?

The only person who has not been heard from is the very one whose interest should be paramount: the theatre patron. What is the profit to this unrepresented consumer if the best theatres in his city are thus shut off from the best features produced in the country? The District Court looked upon this question with understanding based upon a year of study of this record, and correctly denied the plaintiff's demand for this unprecedented type of relief.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that the assignments of error of the United States to the Decree of the District Court are not well taken, and that insofar as it is challenged by the United States such Decree should be affirmed.

Dated, February 2, 1948.

WILLIAM J. DONOVAN,
GEORGE S. LEISURE,
RALSTONE R. IRVINE,
GORDON E. YOUNGMAN,
ROY W. McDONALD,
2 Wall Street,
New York 5, N. Y.
Attorneys for RKO, Defendants.

Of Counsel:
DONOVAN LEISURE NEWTON LUMBARD & IRVINE.

APPENDIX A

Table Showing Competing Affiliated and Unaffiliated Theatres Operating on First-Run Policy in Cities Where RKO Operates First-Run Theatres

A. In cities of over 100,000 population[1]

City	RKO Theatres	Affiliated Theatres[2]	Unaffiliated Theatres[3]
Los Angeles, Cal.[4]	1—Hillstreet	6—Los Angeles (F) Orpheum (F) Paramount (P) State (F) United Artists (F) Warner (W)	2—California Music Hall
San Francisco, Cal.	1—Golden Gate	5—Fox (P & F) Paramount (P & F) Warfield (P & F) St. Francis (P & F) State (P & F)	4—Orpheum United Artists Esquire Tivoli
Denver, Col.	1—Orpheum[5]	5—Denver (F) Paramount (F) Esquire (F) Aladdin (F) Rialto (F)	1—Denham
Chicago, Ill.	2—Grand Palace	7—Apollo (P) Chicago (P) Garrick (P) McVickers (P) State-Lake (P) United Artists (P) Roosevelt (P)	3—World Playhouse Oriental Woods

City	RKO Theatres	Affiliated Theatres	Unaffiliated Theatres
Des Moines, Iowa	1—Orpheum	3—Des Moines (P) Paramount (P) Roosevelt (P)
New Orleans, La.	2—Orpheum Liberty	4—Saenger (P) Globe (P) Tudor (P) Loew's State (L)	1—Center
Boston, Mass.	2—Keith's Memorial RKO Boston	5—Metropolitan (P) Paramount (P) Fenway (P) Loew's State (L) Loew's Orpheum (L)	2—Majestic Translux
Lowell, Mass.	1—RKO Keith's	2—Strand (P) Merrimac Square (P)
Grand Rapids, Mich.	2—Keith[6] Regent[6]	3—Center (R & P)[6, 7] Kent (R & P)[6, 7] Majestic (R & P)[6, 7]
Minneapolis, Minn.	1—Orpheum[6]	6—Radio City (P)[6] State (P)[6] Aster (P)[6] Century (P)[6] Gopher (P)[6] Lyric (P)[6]	1—World
St. Paul, Minn.	1—Orpheum[6]	4—Paramount (P)[6] Riviera (P)[6] Tower (P)[6] Strand (P)[6]	1—World

City	RKO Theatres	Affiliated Theatres	Unaffiliated Theatres
Kansas City, Mo.	1—Orpheum	5—Uptown (F) Esquire (F) Tower (F) Midland (L) Newman (P)
Omaha, Neb.	1—Brandeis	3—Orpheum (P) Paramount (P) Omaha (P)
Newark, N. J.	1—Proctor's[5]	4—Paramount (P) Adams (P) Branford (W) Loew's State (L)
Trenton, N. J.	5—Lincoln[5] Capitol[5] State[5] Palace[5] Trent[5]		2—Stacy Mayfair
Brooklyn, N. Y.[8]	1—Albee	4—Paramount (P & W) Fox (P & W) Strand (P & W) Metropolitan (L)
New York City, Manhattan, N. Y.	1—Palace	9—Victoria (L) Criterion (L) Loew's State (L) Hollywood (L) Capitol (L) Rivoli (P) Paramount (P) Strand (W) Roxy (F)	8—Globe Gotham Rialto Music Hall Astor Republic Ambassador Winter Garden

City	RKO Theatres	Affiliated Theatres	Unaffiliated Theatres
Rochester, N. Y.	2—Palace[6] Temple[6]	3—Century (P)[6] Regent (P)[6] Rochester (L)
Syracuse, N. Y.	2—Keith[6] Empire[6]	1—Loew's State (L)	2—Eckel[6] Paramount[6]
Yonkers, N. Y.	1—Proctor's	1—Loew's Yonkers (L)
Cincinnati, O.	8—Albee Capitol Grand Palace Lyric Shubert Family		1—Keith[5]
Cleveland, Ohio	2—Allen[6] Palace[6]	5—Lake (W)[6] Hippodrome (W)[6] State (L) Stillman (L) Ohio (L)
Columbus, O.	2—Palace Grand	2—Ohio (L) Broad (L)
Dayton, O.	3—Keith Colonial State	1—Loew's (L)	1—Victory
Providence, R. I.	1—Albee	2—Carlton (L) State (L)	3—Majestic Fays Strand

City	RKO Theatres	Affiliated Theatres	Unaffiliated Theatres
Washington, D. C.	1—Keith's	5—Loew's Palace (L) Capitol (L) Columbia (L) Earle (W) Metropolitan (W)	1—Little

[1] Based upon RKO Ex. 1, Loew's Ex. 13 and RKO Ex. 11.

[2] Affiliated theatres are considered to be those in which one or more of the defendants have an interest. Where two companies are shown as interested in the same theatre, this information is as of the date of trial.

[3] Unaffiliated theatres are considered to be those in which no defendant has any interest.

[4] R. 2125.

[5] RKO has 50% interest.

[6] These theatres were at or prior to the time of the trial subject to a local operating agreement which is no longer in effect.

[7] RKO has a 10% stock interest in the company operating these theatres.

[8] Based upon RKO Ex. 4.

[9] At the time of the trial the Keith Theatre was operated by the United Theatre Corporation, in which RKO had an interest of 15.4%. RKO has sold this interest (Compliance Report, July 1, 1947).

City	RKO Theatres	Affiliated Theatres	Unaffiliated Theatres
Cedar Rapids, Iowa	1—Iowa	2—Paramount (P) State (P)
Davenport, Iowa	1—Orpheum	2—Esquire (P) Capitol (P)
Dubuque, Iowa	1—Orpheum[2]		2—Avon[2] Grand[2]
Sioux City, Iowa	1—Orpheum	2—Capitol (P) Princess[2]
Waterloo, Iowa	1—Orpheum	2—Paramount (P) Strand (P)	1—Iowa
New Brunswick, N. J.	3—Albany[4] Rivoli[4] State[4]		1—Opera
Union City, N. J.	1—Capitol	2—Lincoln (W) Roosevelt (W)
Mount Vernon, N. Y.	1—Proctors	1—Mount Vernon (L)

136

City	RKO Theatres	Affiliated Theatres	Unaffiliated Theatres
New Rochelle, N. Y.	1—Proctors	1—New Rochelle (L)
White Plains, N. Y.	1—Keiths	1—State (L)

137

[1] Based upon Gov. Ex. 126, 163, 432, RKO Ex. 8-A, 11, and Par. Ex. 25.

[2] These theatres were at the time of the trial subject to a local operating agreement which is no longer in effect.

[3] Controlled by Affiliated Theatres, Inc. in which RKO had 10%, Paramount 25% intrest (RKO Ex. 11), but to which RKO did not regularly license features (R. 1616). RKO has sold its interest in this company (Compliance Report, July 1, 1947).

[4] RKO has 50% interest.

C. In cities under 25,000 population

Plaintiff concedes that RKO is not involved in any "consequential situations" in these cities (R. 371). RKO does operate 5 theatres on a first-run policy in 3 cities having populations of less than 25,000: the Orpheum and Virginia theatres in Champaign, Ill., the Reade Theatre in Highland Park, N. J. (in which RKO has a 50% interest) and the Capitol and Strand theatres in Marshalltown, Iowa.

APPENDIX B

COMPETITIVE POSITION OF RKO THEATRES IN NEW YORK CITY

RKO theatre	Seats	Competing theatres within ⅛ mile	Competing theatres within 1 mile	Seats in competing theatres within ⅛ mile	Seats in competing theatres within 1 mile
MANHATTAN
Alhambra	1,545	11	26	12,376	27,279
Coliseum	3,125	6	8	8,140	12,620
Colonial	1,330	8	37*	7,261	58,436
Hamilton	1,857	4	8	4,921	10,087
Jefferson	1,857	18	36	17,248	35,066
Palace	1,757	Times Square area.
Regent	1,764	14	34	15,519	32,529
23rd St.	1,831	3	34	1,947	34,885
58th St.	3,163	12	40*	8,098	58,047
81st St.	2,062	6	14	8,900	18,214
86th St.	3,127	8	20	8,490	19,689
125th St.	1,585	10	24	8,650	25,104
BROOKLYN
Albee	3,272	17	28	32,588	40,525
Bushwick	2,045	11	23	10,956	27,259
Dyker	2,147	2	6	1,656	8,664
Greenpoint	1,667	4	7	3,626	5,325
Kenmore	3,017	7	10	12,202	16,873
Madison	2,771	5	16	4,891	13,968
Orpheum	1,741	15	26	27,617	39,294
Prospect	2,381	5	11	2,908	10,174
Republic	2,691	9	20	6,593	17,779
Shore Road	1,474	2	6	1,656	8,663
Tilyou	2,270	2	5	3,055	6,578

* Excludes 1 RKO theatre within distance.

RKO theatre	Seats	Competing theatres within ¼ mile	Competing theatres within 1 mile	Seats in competing theatres within ¼ mile	Seats in competing theatres within 1 mile
Bronx
Castle Hill	1,600	1	3	599	4,462
Chester	2,571	4	11	4,618	15,305
Fordham	2,357	11	16	14,975	22,039
Franklin	2,951	6	21	7,143	26,028
Marble Hill	1,649	1	2	599	1,698
Pelham	1,762	0	2	0	2,330
Royal	2,067	6	18	8,101	24,374
Queens
Alden	1,888	6	9	14,177	16,039
Columbus	1,350	1	2	599	1,399
Flushing	2,929	2	2	3,148	3,148
Midway	1,931	3	6	2,835	5,311
Richmond Hill	2,254	2	11	1,579	14,738
Strand	1,716	1	2	599	1,399

Detail

Manhattan

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist. Mile
Alhambra		1545	.0
	Harlem's Opera House	1532	0.1
	Victoria	2348	0.1
	Apollo	1744	0.1
	Orient	585	0.1
	Sunset	600	0.2
	West End	1100	0.3
	Franklin	560	0.3
	Columbia	600	0.5
	Lincoln	330	0.5
	Jewel	751	0.5
	116th Street	1726	0.5

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.-Mile
	Morningside	600	0.6
	Regun	867	0.6
	Teatro Hispano	1372	0.6
	Harlem Grand	1432	0.6
	Renaissance	863	0.6
	Triboro	571	0.7
	Reo	588	0.7
	Cosmo	1246	0.8
	Municipal	540	0.8
	Teatro Latino	854	0.8
	Delmar	2250	0.9
	Palace	599	0.9
	Manhattan	900	0.9
	Odeon	863	1.0
	Roosevelt	1358	1.0
Coliseum		3125	.0
	Heights	592	0.1
	Lane	1430	0.1
	Empress	599	0.2
	Gem	575	0.2
	175th Street	3444	0.3
	Uptown	1500	0.5
	Audubon	2607	0.7
	Inwood	1873	1.0
Colonial		1330	.0
	Arcade	542	0.1
	Lincoln	1546	0.15
	Alden	492	0.3
	Filmarte	800	0.4
	Town	1568	0.4
	Little Carnegie Playhouse	460	0.5
	55th St. Playhouse	253	0.5
	Broadway	1600	0.5

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist. Mile
	Beacon	2673	0.6
	Tivoli	1443	0.6
	Winter Garden	1350	0.6
	Hollywood	1587	0.6
	Republic	1225	0.6
	Gotham	922	0.6
	Ambassador	1118	0.7
	World	299	0.7
	Rivoli	2092	0.7
	Capitol	5486	0.7
	Roxy	5886	0.7
	Music Hall	5949	0.75
	77th Street	600	0.8
	Plaza	520	0.8
	48th Street	300	0.8
	Belmont	512	0.8
	Royal	540	0.8
	Palace (RKO 1st run)	(1757)	0.85
	Strand	2720	0.85
	Normandie	590	0.9
	Bijou	600	0.9
	Victoria	811	0.9
	State	3339	0.9
	Astor	1141	0.9
	Criterion	1600	0.9
	Mayfair	1735	0.9
	Globe	1416	0.9
	Squire	558	1.0
	Paramount	3664	1.0
	Miami	499	1.0
Hamilton		1857	.0
	Dorset	692	0.1
	Lido	580	0.1
	Washington	1399	0.2

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.- Mile
	Delmar	2250	0.4
	Costello	599	0.6
	Odeon	863	0.6
	Rio	2346	0.7
	Roosevelt	1358	0.7
Jefferson		1857	.0
	Star	240	0.1
	Arrow	599	0.1
	Comet	556	0.1
	Edison	594	0.1
	Academy	3515	0.1
	Century	1082	0.1
	Irving Place	710	0.1
	City	1855	0.2
	St. Marks	485	0.2
	Orpheum	567	0.3
	Gramercy	540	0.3
	Commodore	2694	0.3
	Art	599	0.4
	Fifth Ave. Playhouse	279	0.4
	Bijou	598	0.5
	Hollywood	1261	0.5
	Lucky Star	475	0.5
	Gramercy Park	599	0.5
	8th St. Playhouse	490	0.6
	National	1800	0.6
	Regent	525	0.6
	Luxor	560	0.7
	Roosevelt	963	0.7
	Avenue B	1738	0.7
	American Movies	579	0.7
	Palestine	1270	0.8
	Waverly	580	0.8
	Sheridan	2304	0.8

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.-Mile
	Superior	940	0.8
	Delancey	1788	0.9
	Peoples	800	0.9
	Greenwich	590	0.9
	Clinton	1095	0.9
	Hudson Playhouse	597	1.0
	Elgin	600	1.0
	34th Street	599	1.0
Regent		1764	.0
	116th Street	1726	0.1
	Jewel	751	0.1
	Morningside	600	0.1
	Regun	867	0.2
	Teatro Hispano	1372	0.3
	Manhattan	900	0.3
	Teatro Latino	854	0.4
	West End	1100	0.5
	Sunset	600	0.5
	Apollo	1744	0.5
	Victoria	2348	0.5
	Harlem Opera House	1532	0.5
	Municipal	540	0.5
	Orient	585	0.5
	Cosmo	1246	0.7
	Star	2296	0.7
	Madison	530	0.7
	Arden	593	0.7
	Olympia	1294	0.7
	Nemo	950	0.7
	Columbia	600	0.7
	Triboro	571	0.8
	Harlem Grand	1432	0.8
	Park West	598	0.8
	Studio	456	0.8

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.-Mile
	Edison	599	0.8
	Franklin	560	0.8
	Reo	588	0.9
	Progress	532	0.9
	Carlton	592	0.9
	Midtown	580	0.9
	Palace	599	1.0
	Eagle	1294	1.0
	Rex	1100	1.0
New 23rd Street		1831	.0
	Terrace	597	0.1
	Chelsea	750	0.1
	Elgin	600	0.2
	Greenwich	590	0.6
	Sheridan	2304	0.6
	Savoy	735	0.6
	Fifth Ave. Playhouse	279	0.7
	Gramercy Park	599	0.75
	8th Street	490	0.8
	Arena	800	0.8
	Stanley	621	0.85
	Regent	525	0.9
	Irving Place	710	0.9
	Academy	3515	0.9
	City	1855	0.9
	Hudson Playhouse	597	0.9
	Times	554	0.9
	Anco	572	0.9
	Laffmovie	840	0.9
	Liberty	1155	0.9
	Harris	1024	0.9
	New Amsterdam	1727	0.9
	Bryant	537	0.9
	Pix	850	0.9

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.-Mile
	Rialto	600	0.95
	Victory	982	0.95
	Lyric	1370	0.95
	Times Square	1056	0.95
	Apollo	1277	0.95
	Selwyn	1012	0.95
	Superior	940	0.95
	New York	600	1.0
	Squire	558	1.0
	Paramount	3664	1.0
58th Street		3163	0.0
	Sutton	569	0.1
	Arcadia	480	0.1
	Clifton	560	0.2
	Plaza	520	0.2
	Normandie	590	0.3
	Lexington	2418	0.3
	Trans-Lux	539	0.3
	Beverly	465	0.3
	York	510	0.4
	Art	598	0.4
	68th St. Playhouse	389	0.4
	Little Carnegie Playhouse	460	0.4
	72d Street	2672	0.6
	Granada	599	0.7
	Monroe	2228	0.7
	42nd Street	1119	0.7
	Filmarte	800	0.7
	Music Hall	5949	0.7
	55th St. Playhouse	253	0.8
	Tudor	601	0.8
	Annex	599	0.8
	State	3339	0.9
	Mayfair	1735	0.9

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.-Mile
	Palace (RKO 1st run)	(1757)	0.9
	Miami	499	0.9
	Strand	2720	0.9
	Belmont	512	0.9
	Ambassador	1118	0.9
	World	299	0.9
	Rivoli	2092	0.9
	Capitol	5486	0.9
	Roxy	5886	0.9
	Hollywood	1587	0.9
	Winter Garden	1350	0.9
	Republic	1225	0.9
	Gotham	922	0.9
	Broadway	1600	0.9
	Criterion	1600	1.0
	Globe	1416	1.0
	48th Street	300	1.0
	Tivoli	1443	1.0
81st Street		2062	.0
	83rd Street	2634	0.1
	77th Street	600	0.1
	Schuyler	567	0.3
	Beacon	2673	0.3
	Yorktown	953	0.4
	Stoddard	1473	0.5
	Alden	492	0.6
	Symphony	1411	0.7
	Thalia	299	0.7
	Lincoln	1546	0.8
	Arcade	542	0.8
	Jap Gardens	1495	0.8
	Riviera	1694	0.9
	Riverside	1835	0.9

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.-Mile
86th Street		3127	.0
	Orpheum	2214	0.1
	86th Street	1410	0.1
	Grande	492	0.1
	86th St. Casino	599	0.1
	Translux	588	0.15
	Modern Playhouse	300	0.25
	Park Lane	2001	0.5
	Colony	886	0.5
	Europe	306	0.6
	Photoplay	885	0.6
	Monroe	2228	0.7
	Annex	599	0.7
	Granada	599	0.7
	72nd Street	2672	0.7
	Eagle	1294	0.7
	68th St. Playhouse	389	0.9
	Madison	530	0.9
	Progress	532	0.9
	Art	598	1.0
	Schuyler	567	1.0
125th Street		1585	.0
	Harlem Grand	1432	0.1
	Triboro	571	0.1
	Reo	588	0.2
	Palace	599	0.3
	Cosmo	1246	0.4
	Orient	585	0.4
	Lincoln	830	0.5
	Franklin	560	0.5
	Regun	867	0.5
	Teatro Hispano	1372	0.5
	New Liberty	400	0.6
	Municipal	540	0.6
	Jewel	751	0.6
	116th Street	1726	0.6

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Capacity Seating	Approx. Dist.-Mile
	Victoria	2348	0.6
	Harlem Opera House	1532	0.6
	Apollo	1744	0.7
	Teatro Latino	854	0.7
	Morningside	600	0.8
	Renaissance	863	0.8
	Sunset	600	0.8
	West End	1100	0.8
	Star	2296	0.8
	Rex	1100	0.9
	Brooklyn
Albee		3272	.0
	Paramount	4156	0.05
	Fox	4060	0.05
	Duffield	890	0.05
	Melba	225	0.15
	Star	1495	0.2
	Metropolitan	3570	0.2
	Subway	580	0.2
	Momart	600	0.2
	Strand	2911	0.2
	New United	1600	0.25
	Majestic	1708	0.3
	Oxford	685	0.35
	Academy of Music	3500	0.35
	Tivoli	1848	0.4
	Towne	485	0.4
	Boro Hall	585	0.4
	Terminal	1660	0.5
	Gold	498	0.6
	Flora	500	0.6
	St. George	978	0.65
	Atlantic	997	0.65
	Lido	515	0.65
	Heights	885	0.7
	Paras Court	593	0.7

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Mile Dist.
	Scott	474	0.75
	Peerless	520	0.8
	Carlton	1383	1.0
	Gloria	594	1.0
Bushwick		2045	.0
	Monroe	592	0.05
	Gates	3011	0.
	Century	800	0.1
	Imperial	440	0.15
	Halsey	2108	0.2
	Empire	1189	0.35
	Marvin	443	0.4
	Eagle	500	0.4
	Decatur	565	0.45
	Bobby	416	0.5
	Grove	892	0.5
	Colonial	2222	0.55
	Comet	598	0.55
	Howard	1373	0.6
	New Casino	1600	0.6
	DeKalb	2600	0.6
	Alhambra	1611	0.7
	Rivoli	900	0.7
	Capitol	1781	0.8
	Mozart	589	0.8
	Parthenon	1499	0.9
	Wyckoff	600	1.0
	Sumner	930	1.0
Dyker		2147	.0
	Harbor	1089	0.3
	Stanley	567	0.5
	Electra	620	0.65
	Alpine	2150	0.8
	Bay Ridge	1905	0.8
	Fortway	2332	1.0

RKO Theatre	Theatres Competing	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.- Mile
Greenpoint		1667	.0
	American	556	0.1
	Meserole	1978	0.15
	Nassau	499	0.3
	Midway	593	0.4
	Winthrop	580	0.55
	Vernon	594	1.0
	Idle Hour	525	1.0
Kenmore		3017	.0
	Flatbush	1648	0.1
	Astor	584	0.1
	Albemarle	2656	0.15
	Kings	3609	0.2
	Parkside	600	0.3
	Rialto	1542	0.35
	Granada	1563	0.4
	Patio	2616	0.55
	Linden	1491	0.6
	Venus	564	0.9
Madison		2771	.0
	Parthenon	1499	0.15
	Wyckoff	589	0.3
	Mozart	600	0.3
	Alhambra	1611	0.4
	Grove	592	0.5
	Eagle	500	0.6
	Majestic	550	0.6
	Ridgewood	1966	0.6
	Imperial	599	0.65
	Wagner	550	0.65
	Rivoli	900	0.7
	Grandview	550	0.8
	Willoughby	600	0.85
	Glenwood	1285	0.9

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist. Mile
	Monroe	592	1.0
	Starr	985	1.0
Orpheum		1741	.0
	Strand	2911	0.05
	Momart	600	0.1
	Majestic	1708	0.1
	Academy of Music	3500	0.15
	Paramount	4156	0.15
	Fox	4060	0.2
	Oxford	685	0.25
	New United	1600	0.3
	Melba	2255	0.3
	Subway	580	0.4
	Duffield	890	0.45
	Peerless	520	0.5
	Star	1495	0.5
	Atlantic	997	0.5
	Terminal	1660	0.5
	Metropolitan	3570	0.6
	Towne	485	0.7
	Tivoli	1848	0.7
	Carlton	1363	0.7
	Gold	498	0.8
	Boro Hall	585	0.8
	Plaza	450	0.9
	Flora	500	0.9
	Lido	515	1.0
	Heights	885	1.0
	St. George	978	1.0
Prospect		2381	.0
	Avon	572	0.05
	Globe	904	0.25
	Sixteenth Street	441	0.3
	Minerva	398	0.5
	Garfield	593	0.5

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.- Mile
	Sanders	1535	0.7
	Plaza	450	0.9
	Carlton	1383	0.9
	Gloria	594	0.9
	Clinton	644	0.9
	Terminal	660	1.0
Republic		2691	.0
	Nassau	460	0.15
	Commodore	1419	0.25
	Marcy	716	0.25
	Williamsburg	600	0.25
	Square	388	0.3
	Metro	930	0.4
	Wilson	966	0.45
	Graham	575	0.5
	Model	539	0.5
	Rainbow	1746	0.55
	Lindy	600	0.6
	Sun	772	0.65
	Grand	600	0.65
	Grace	421	0.8
	Folly	1750	0.85
	Echo	560	0.9
	Winthrop	580	0.9
	Nassau	499	0.9
	Meserole	1978	1.0
	Alba	1680	1.0
Shore Road		1474	.0
	Harbor	1089	0.3
	Stanley	567	0.5
	Electra	620	0.6
	Bay Ridge	1905	0.75
	Alpine	2150	0.8
	Fortway	2332	1.0

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.-Mile
Tilyou		2270	.0
	Coney Island	2500	0.2
	Mermaid	555	0.5
	Surf	1277	0.7
	Tuxedo	1800	0.95
	Lakeland	446	1.0
	Bronx
Castle Hill		1600	.0
	Circle	599	0.5
	American	1998	0.6
	Square	585	0.7
	Rosedale	1280	0.85
Chester		2571	.0
	Elsmere	1542	0.2
	Vogue	1392	0.2
	Ritz	1085	0.25
	Dover	599	0.35
	Fairmount	2504	0.6
	DeLuxe	1400	0.75
	Radio	550	0.9
	Ward	1831	0.9
	Freeman	1604	1.00
	Parkway	1700	1.00
	Dark	1098	1.00
Fordham		2357	.0
	Concourse	587	0.05
	Valentine	1224	0.1
	Windsor	1600	0.15
	Paradise	3840	0.2
	Lido	599	0.25
	Grand	2472	0.25
	Kingsbridge	1099	0.35
	Ascot	599	0.4
	University	575	0.4

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist. Mile
	Decatur	900	0.5
	Metro	1450	0.5
	Oxford	1926	0.6
	Savoy	1000	0.75
	Avalon	1440	0.95
	Kameo	550	0.95
	Burnside	2178	1.00
Franklin		2951	.0
	Empire	1744	0.05
	Prospect	1423	0.1
	Burland	1817	0.1
	President	975	0.2
	Jackson	590	0.4
	Tiffany	594	0.4
	Star	599	0.55
	Tower	1693	0.6
	Art	599	0.65
	Ace	1099	0.7
	Victory	1712	0.7
	Boro	599	0.8
	McKinley	1200	0.8
	Freeman	1604	0.85
	Radio	550	0.9
	Rex	600	0.9
	Blenheim	1862	1.00
	Bronx	1457	1.00
	National	2333	1.00
	Boston Road	1578	1.05
	Central	1400	1.05
Marble Hill		1649	.0
	Dale	599	0.05
	Kingsbridge	1099	1.00

RKO Theatre	Competing Theatres	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.-Mile
Pelham		1762	.0
	Park	1098	0.7
	Allerton	1232	0.9
Royal		2067	.0
	Rex	600	0.05
	Bronx	1457	0.1
	Central	1400	0.1
	National	2333	0.1
	Victory	1712	0.25
	Boro	599	0.35
	Jackson	590	0.6
	Casino	2210	0.7
	Forum	2320	0.75
	Osceola	566	0.75
	Heaven	562	0.75
	President	975	0.75
	Ace	1099	0.8
	Prospect	1423	0.85
	Empire	1744	0.9
	Fleetwood	1699	0.95
	Earl	1268	1.00
	Burland	1817	1.00
	Queens
Alden		1888	.0
	Mesrick	2566	0.1
	Valencia	3544	0.1
	Jamaica	1677	0.2
	Savoy	1750	0.3
	Carlton	1973	0.35
	Hillside	2607	0.5
	Plaza	600	0.55
	Linden	820	0.9
	Hollis	502	1.0

RKO Theatre	Theatres Competing	Seating Capacity	Approx. Dist.- Mile
Columbia		1350	.0
	Gem	599	0.1
	Eldgemere	590-800 open air	0.65
Flushing		2929	.0
	Town	899	0.15
	Prospect	2249	0.3
Midway		1931	.0
	Kew Gardens	1287	0.45
	Forest Hills	949	0.5
	Trylon	599	0.5
	Inwood	1278	0.55
	Austin	599	0.7
	Main St. Playhouse	599	0.8
Richmond Hill		2254	.0
	Steinway	980	0.15
	Austin	599	0.45
	Jerome	872	0.6
	Willard	2300	0.6
	Kew Gardens (cl)	1287	0.7
	Inwood	1278	0.7
	Casino	901	0.8
	Lefferts	1613	0.8
	Roosevelt	1379	0.9
	Hillside	2607	0.9
	Ace	922	1.0
Strand		1716	.0
	Gem	599	0.1
	Edgemere	590-800 open air	0.75

APPENDIX C

RKO's Total Income, Net Income After Taxes, and Percent of Net to Total Income, 1929-1944

(From RKO Exhibit 26)

Year	Total Income (a)	Net Income or Loss After Taxes (b)	Percentage of Net Income or Loss to Total Income
1929	$53,261,719.50	$2,523,558.59	4.7380%
1930	72,976,264.38	4,173,210.16	5.7186
1931	80,445,488.13	5,199,397.44	6.4631
1932	61,078,722.94	10,695,503.20	17.5110
1933	45,040,791.85	4,384,064.09	9.7335
1934	42,533,027.59	310,574.67	.7302
1935	45,959,717.76	684,732.96	1.4899
1936	49,933,655.48	2,485,911.03	4.9784
1937	53,711,261.67	1,821,165.98	3.3907
1938	57,336,806.67	18,604.43	.0324
1939	52,194,963.99	228,608.38	.4380
1940	55,026,431.85	695,416.30	1.2638
1941	54,091,381.24	591,467.04	1.0935
1942	62,057,961.17	788,786.88	1.2710
1943	79,736,241.79	7,015,420.21	8.7983
1944	86,049,805.93	5,228,694.01	6.0764
Total	$951,434,241.94	$3,818,087.31	.4013%

[Figures in Italics are red figures]

Notes:

(a) The above figures are those appearing on the books of the companies and include income from miscellaneous sources shown under the caption "Other Income" on the annual operating statements.

(b) Before deduction of dividends paid on capital stocks of subsidiary companies in the hands of the public.

APPENDIX D

Record as to the 35 Cities of Over 100,000 Population in Which RKO Licensed Product First-Run to Affiliated Theatres (1943-44).

(Initials in parentheses indicate company with which theatre was affiliated.)

1. Oakland, Cal.

RKO licensed 36 features to Fox, Paramount, and Orpheum theatres (F) (Ex. 95). Their seating capacities are 3,335, 3,434, and 2,561, respectively (R. 2132b; Cf. R. 759-60). These theatres are "the superior houses of the city" and have "excellent locations in downtown Oakland" (R. 2132b). They are better operated and give greater playing time on good pictures (R. 478, 480). The Fox is one of the finest theatres in the country and the Paramount is among the best. (Ibid.)

Three unaffiliated theatres, T&D, Esquire, and Roxy operate first-run (R. 477-80). The T&D, seating capacity, 2,760, is the largest (R. 2132c; RKO Ex. 28). It is older, not so well equipped, and is a few blocks out of the better downtown amusement section (R. 2132c). The other two theatres have seating capacities of only 1,075 and 1,300 (R. 759-60). These theatres cannot compete from the standpoint of gross with either the Fox or Paramount (R. 760), though Columbia gets satisfactory revenues and playing time from them (R. 1291-2). RKO licensed 3 features for first-run exhibition in the Roxy during the 1943-44 season (Ex. 95), and apparently these theatres obtain part of United Artists' and substantially all of Universal's product (Ex. 428 and 428a).

2. Sacramento, Cal.

RKO licensed 35 features for exhibition in the Capitol, Senator and Hippodrome Theatres (Ex. 95). Fox has a minority interest in these theatres (RKO Ex. 11). Their seating capacities are 1,178, 2,105, and 1,7[illegible], respectively (RKO Ex. 11). The Senator is the finest theatre in the Sacramento Valley (R. 2132f). The Senator, Capitol, and Fox's Alhambra are the best theatres in the city (R. 761). Loew's considers Fox the most desirable outlet and "by far the best operation" (R. 489). The Hippodrome is now operated as second-run (R. 2132f).

The only unaffiliated theatres operating first run are the Esquire and the Times Theatres with seating capacities of 998 and 500 respectively and the new neighborhood Tower with 1,100 seats (Ibid.). Apparently the Tower was not open during the 1943-44 season, for RKO licensed three features for exhibition in only the downtown theatres (Ex. 95). These theatres showed on first-run product of Columbia, Universal, PRC, and one-half Warner's (R. 2132f). There is no evidence that these theatres are comparable in location, physical condition, or earning power with the Fox theatres.

3. San Diego, Cal.

RKO licensed 37 features for exhibition in the following theatres: Fox (F) 2878 seats, California (F) 2027, State (F) 1012, Adams (F) 684, and Orpheum (F) 1952 (Ex. 95; R. 2130-31; RKO Ex. 11). The Fox theatre is one of the largest and finest on the Pacific Coast, the California, Orpheum and State are de luxe theatres, and the Adams has excellent appointments (R. 2131). These theatres are by far the best in the city (R. 490).

Metzger operates three unaffiliated theatres on first-run, Spreckles 1800 seats, Broadway 800, and Tower 600, one of which plays continued first-run or moveovers (R. 2130-31). The Spreckles is the largest unaffiliated theatre (RKO Ex. 28). The Metzger theatres are in good condition (R. 2131). They show product of Universal, Columbia, and part of Warner (Exs. 428 and 428a).

4. Bridgeport, Conn.

RKO licensed 20 features for exhibition in Poli (L) 3,641 seats; Majestic (L) 2,240; and Lyric (L) 2,166. RKO licensed 17 features for exhibition in Warner (W) 1,332; and Merritt (W) 997 (Exs. 95 and 95a; RKO Ex. 11). The Merritt Theatre apparently plays RKO's highest grossing features day-and-date with the Warner (Ex. 94).

There is no evidence respecting appointments, location or general characteristics of any unaffiliated theatres in this city. The largest is the Park City, 1,090 seats (RKO Ex. 28).

5. Hartford, Conn.

RKO licensed 20 features for exhibition in Regal (W) and Strand (W) and 18 features in Poli (L) and Palace (L) (Ex. 95). Paramount has an interest in the Allyn which plays all of its product on first run policy (R. 846-7; Ex. 428).

The unaffiliated Dow's, State, and E. M. Loew operate on first run (R. 465), one or more of them probably using product of Universal and Columbia (Ex. 428). While the State and E. M. Loew are comparable in seating capacity to three of the four affiliated theatres playing RKO product (RKO Ex. 28), there is no evidence that they are comparable in location, appointments or operating efficiency.

6. New Haven, Conn.

RKO licensed 20 features to the Poli (L), 3007 seats, and Bijou (L), 1499, and 17 features to the Rodger Sherman (W), 2060 (Ex. 95; RKO Ex. 28). In addition, Paramount is interested in the Paramount with 2348 seats, which plays its product on first run (R. 847; Exs. 428 and 428a).

There are 2 unaffiliated theatres comparable in seating capacity to the smallest affiliated theatre which licensed RKO product (RKO Ex. 28), but there is no evidence that they or any other unaffiliated theatre are comparable in other important respects.

7. Wilmington, Del.

RKO licensed 38 features to the Queen (W) 1449 seats, Warner (W) 1761, Ritz (W) 1024, and Grand Opera (W) 1322 (Ex. 95; RKO Exs. 11 and 28). Apparently the Ritz does not operate on regular first run (R. 498; R. 762). In addition, the Aldine (L) operates on first run (R. 498).

The largest unaffiliated theatre is the Edgemoor, 850 seats, but Blair's Rialto is the only one operating on first run (Ibid.). Fox licenses exclusively to the Rialto which gives long runs (R. 1142). However, Kupper conceded that the Warner theatre could throw off greater revenue (Ibid). Fox consumes all of the Rialto's playing time (Ibid.), so RKO could not have licensed any part of its product to that theatre.

8. Jacksonville, Fla.

RKO licensed 35 features to Florida (P) 2185 seats, Palace (P) 1314, Arcade (P) 1115, and Temple (P) 889 which operates on a first run policy (Ex. 95; R. 466, 847). These theatres are "most superior", the largest and best in the city (R. 466, 847).

The largest unaffiliated theatre is the St. Johns with 815 seats (R. 847; RKO Ex. 28). It operates on first run. RKO licensed 2 features for exhibition in the St. Johns, but there is no evidence that this theatre is comparable to the affiliated theatres or that it could pay satisfactory rentals for most RKO features.

9. Miami, Fla.

RKO licensed 37 features for exhibition in the Olympia (P) 2125 seats and Paramount (P) 1134 and 4 other theatres affiliated with Paramount which are presently on a subsequent run policy (Ex. 95; R. 848). These theatres are better than any others (Ibid.; R. 471).

Wometco's unaffiliated Capitol with 1234 seats and Miami 472 compete with the affiliated theatres (Ibid.). Apparently Fox, United Artists, Universal, and Columbia license the Wometco houses first run (Exs. 428 and 428a), so they have ample product. RKO licensed one feature to Wometco's Ritz for first run exhibition (Ex. 95).

10. Tampa, Fla.

RKO licensed 36 features to the Tampa (P) 1554 seats, Park (P) 1281, Strand (P) 742, and Florida (P) 901 (Ex. 95; R. 495).

The only unaffiliated theatres operating on first run are the State with 604 seats and the Lincoln 800, the latter catering to colored patrons (R. 848). The affiliated theatres are much larger and better than the State (Ibid.). The State apparently uses all of Warner's product (Exs. 428 and 428a), which, in view of its size, probably exhausts its playing time. RKO licensed one feature for exhibition in the State (Ex. 95).

11. Atlanta, Ga.

RKO licensed 32 features for exhibition in Fox (P), 4500 seats, Paramount (P) 2476, and Capitol (P) 2100, and 3 other theatres affiliated with Paramount (Ex. 95; R. 849). The Grand (L), 1850 seats, operates in competition (Ibid.). In addition, Murray's unaffiliated Rialto and, perhaps, one or two unidentified unaffiliated theatres operate on a first run policy (Ibid.) (Cf. R. 451).

RKO licensed two features to the Rialto (Ex. 95) and regularly licenses all of its Goldwyn pictures to that theatre (R. 1698). The Rialto has only 700 to 800 seats, plays each Goldwyn picture for five or six weeks, and pays a better rental than the theatres affiliated with Paramount (Ibid.). However, it plays all of Columbia's product and could not take 25 or 30 RKO features and, perhaps, not even 1 or 2 more (Ibid.).

12. Peoria, Ill.

RKO licensed 38 features to the Madison (P) 1797 seats, Palace (P) 1816, and Rialto (P) 1560 (Ex. 95; R. 850).

The largest unaffiliated theatres have capacities of only 750 seats (RKO Ex. 28). The affiliated theatres are the best in Peoria (R. 850).

13. South Bend, Ind.

RKO licensed substantially all features for exhibition in the Colfax (P), Palace (P) and Granada (P) theatres (Ex. 95). Their seating capacities are, respectively, 2069, 2977, and 2387 (R. 851).

The largest unaffiliated theatre has only 800 seats (RKO Ex. 28). The Paramount theatres are the best in the city (R. 851) and no other theatres "by their quality, location or equipment, would be entitled to first-run" (R. 493).

14. Wichita, Kansas

RKO licensed 37 features for exhibition in the Miller (F), Orpheum (F), Palace (F), and Wichita (F) Theatres (Ex. 95). These have seating capacities of 1930, 1659, 1234, and 906 respectively (R. 2067). The Boulevard (F), 972 seats, runs day-and-date with the Orpheum or Miller. The Sandra (F), 640 seats, is a moveover theatre (Ibid.). These theatres are the most suitable for first run exhibition (R. 2068).

The largest unaffiliated theatre is the Civic, with 900 seats (RKO Ex. 28). RKO licensed one feature to the Civic for first run exhibition (Ex. 95), but there is no evidence that it or any other unaffiliated theatre would serve as a regular and satisfactory outlet for first run of RKO product.

15. Somerville, Mass.

RKO licensed 29 features to the Capitol (P) and Ball Square (P) Theatres (Ex. 95). Their seating capacities are 1735 and 1248 respectively (R. 854). They are much larger and better than unaffiliated theatres (Ibid.; R. 493).

The remaining theatres operating on a first run policy are Viano's Broadway, Teele Square, and Somerville (R. 492-3). The largest is the Somerville, with 1100 seats (RKO Ex. 28). Apparently they regularly play Columbia's product on first run (Ex. 428). During the 1943-44 season, RKO licensed 3 features for first run in Viano's theatres and 5 features to Peterson's Orpheum (Ex. 95). There is no evidence that they, or any other unaffiliated theatres, are comparable to the Paramount theatres as first run outlets for RKO product.

16. Springfield, Mass.

RKO licensed 19 features for exhibition in the Paramount (P) and Broadway (P), (Ex. 95). Their seating capacities are 2758 and 1765 respectively (R. 854). According to a Paramount witness, the Paramount Theatre is the largest, has the best appointments, has as good location as any theatre, and is the best in the city (Ibid.).

RKO licensed 1 feature for exhibition in the Palace (L), (Ex. 95). According to a Loew witness, the Palace is by far the best theatre in the city (R. 494).

RKO licensed 17 features for exhibition in the Capitol (W) and Art (W) Theatres (Ex. 95). Their seating capacities are 1777 and 936 respectively (RKO Ex. 28). Apparently, the Art is used as a moveover house (Ex. 94).

The only identified unaffiliated theatre playing on run is Ander's Bijou, with a seating capacity of less than 1000 (R. 493-4; RKO Ex. 28). This theatre apparently plays the product of Columbia and part of Universal (Ex. 428). The largest unaffiliated theatres are comparable in size only to the Art (W) (RKO Ex. 28).* There is no evidence that the Bijou, or any other unaffiliated theatre, is comparable to any of the affiliated theatres in terms of quality, appointments, operating efficiency, or location.

* RKO Ex. 28 erroneously lists the Art (W) as an unaffiliated theatre.

17. Worcester, Mass.

RKO licensed 16 features for exhibition in the Warner (W) Theatre (Ex. 95), which has a seating capacity of 1290 (RKO Ex. 11).

RKO licensed 11 features to the Poli (L) Theatre (Ex. 95), the largest in the city with 3239 seats (RKO Exs. 11 and 28).

RKO licensed 7 features for exhibition in the Capitol Theatre (P), 884 seats (Ex. 95; R. 855). The Capitol is not as large as the Poli (L) and Elm St. (L), but is comparable in appointments and has a better location than any other theatre playing first run (R. 855).

E. M. Loew's Plymouth Theatre is the only unaffiliated theatre comparable in size to any affiliated houses operating on a first run policy (RKO Ex. 28). RKO licensed three of its features for exhibition in this theatre. However, there is no evidence that it or any other unaffiliated theatre is comparable in location, physical condition, or operating efficiency to any of the affiliated theatres.

18. Detroit, Mich.

RKO licensed 37 features for exhibitions in the Palms-State (P), Michigan (P), United Artists (P) and Broadway Capitol (P) theatres (Ex. 95), with seating capacities of 2967, 4029, 2018 and 3367, respectively (R. 855). Together with the Fox (F) and Adams, they are the best theatres in the city (R. 461).

The Fox (F) theatre, 5041 seats, is the largest and finest in the city. Fox has a minority interest in the Adams, 1545 seats, which exhibits the pictures of the same distributors who license the Fox Theatre (R. 2134).

RKO licensed one feature for first showing in the unaffiliated Paradise. However, there is no evidence that any unaffiliated theatre is comparable in any respect with the affiliated theatres mentioned above.

19. Elizabeth, N. J.

RKO licensed 33 features for exhibition in the Regent (W), Ritz (W) and Liberty (W) Theatres (Ex. 95) with seating capacities of 2495, 2791, and 1692, respectively (RKO Ex. 11).

RKO licensed three features for first showing in the unaffiliated State and Strand theatres (Ex. 95). However, there is no evidence that these or any other unaffiliated theatres are comparable in location or facilities with any of the above named theatres.

20. Paterson, N. J.

RKO licensed 35 features to the Fabian (W), Garden (W) and Rivoli (W) Theatres (Ex. 95) with 3263, 1193 and 1623 seats respectively (RKO Ex. 11).

The only other theatre in the city operating first run is the United States (P), with 1487 seats (R. 481-2, 859). It is comparable in quality and location with the above theatres (R. 859).

The largest unaffiliated theatre is the State, with 1000 seats (RKO Ex. 28). RKO licensed two features to the unaffiliated Majestic for first run (Ex. 95). However, there is no evidence that the State, Majestic, or any other unaffiliated theatre is comparable with the above theatres as a regular first run outlet for RKO product.

21. Utica, N. Y.

RKO licensed 38 features for exhibition in the Avon (W) and Stanley (W) Theatres (Ex. 95), with seating capacities of 1562 and 2959 respectively (RKO Ex. 28). Both operate on a regular first run (R. 497).

The largest unaffiliated theatre in Utica is Gordon's Olympic, 1500 seats (RKO Ex. 28). This theatre operates on first run (R. 497) using product of Fox and apparently Columbia (R. 1131; Ex. 428). Loew's witness testified that the Avon and Stanley are superior in every way (R. 497). Fox transferred its product to the Olympic after a disagreement (R. 1131), but there is no evidence that it is comparable to the Avon and Stanley as a first run outlet.

22. Charlotte, N. C.

RKO licensed 38 features to the Carolina (P), Imperial (P), Broadway (P) and State (P) theatres (Ex. 95) with seating capacities of 1450, 946, 1103 and 645 respectively (R. 862).

The largest unaffiliated theatre has only 500 seats (RKO Ex. 28). The four theatres which license RKO product are the best in the city and there are no others comparable to them (R. 862).

23. Portland, Oregon

RKO licensed 38 features for exhibition in the Paramount (F), Orpheum (F) and Mayfair (F) Theatres

(Exs. 95 and 95a). The Paramount, 3054 seats, built in 1928, has always shown first run product (R. 2027). The Orpheum, 1732 seats, built in 1912, before Fox acquired its interest, consistently has operated first run (R. 2028). The Mayfair, 1498 seats, operates on a moveover policy, and was re-equipped in 1943 (R. 2026, 2028).

The J. J. Parker interests operate the unaffiliated Broadway and United Artists theatres first (R. 485). Unaffiliated exhibitors license the product of Loew's, United Artists, Universal and one-half of Warner for first run exhibition, and charge the same admission prices as affiliated first run theatres (R. 2039). There is no evidence that any unaffiliated theatres are comparable to the affiliated theatres. In any event, the Parker theatres are well supplied with first run product and there is no evidence that they or others could use RKO product.

24. Erie, Pa.

RKO licensed 38 features to the Warner (W) and Columbia (W) theatres (Ex. 95) with seating capacities of 2584 and 961 respectively (RKO Ex. 28). The Warner is the largest and best theatre in the city (R. 756) and plays RKO's best pictures (Ex. 94).

The largest unaffiliated theatre operating on first run is the Shea, seating 1189 (R. 462; RKO Ex. 28). Apparently the Shea plays the product of Fox, United Artists, Universal, Columbia, and part of Loew (Ex. 428).

25. Philadelphia, Pa.

RKO licensed 38 features for exhibition in ten theatres affiliated with Warner (Ex. 95).

The only unaffiliated theatres operating on first run in Philadelphia are Goldberg's Studio, which is very small, and Goldman's Erlanger with 1800 seats (R. 482-3). The Erlanger is "badly off location" (R. 484). There is no evidence that any unaffiliated theatre is comparable to the Warner houses as first run outlets for RKO's product. Warner's lease on the Fox (F) expired on October 5, 1945, and it is now operated as the first run outlet for Fox product in competition with the Warner theatres (R. 2135).

26. Scranton, Pa.

RKO licensed 36 features for exhibition in the Strand (P), Comerford (P), Capitol (P) and State (P) theatres (Ex. 95), seating capacities 1542, 1600, 1770 and 920 respectively (R. 863). They are the best theatres in Scranton (R. 863).

The largest unaffiliated theatre is the Orient with 720 seats (RKO Ex. 28). RKO licensed one feature for first run in the Bullshead and one in the Favini theatre (Ex. 95). However, there is no evidence that these or any other unaffiliated theatre could serve as a regular and satisfactory first run outlet for RKO product.

27. Chattanooga, Tenn.

RKO licensed 32 features to the Tivoli (P), State (P) and Rialto (P) (Ex. 95), with seating capacities of 1781, 856 and 800 respectively (R. 864). These are by far the best theatres in Chattanooga (Ibid.). The Tivoli was built in 1920, approximate cost $500,000, and was remodeled and refurnished at a cost of $30,000 in 1939. It has air-conditioning, and is "an outstanding theatre and the pride of Chattanooga" (Par. Ex. P-25, p. 6). The State was built in 1928 at a cost of $100,000 and was refurnished at a cost of $20,000 in 1938; next to the Tivoli, it is considered the best theatre (Ibid.).

RKO licensed two features for first exhibition in the American and Capitol theatres (Gov. Ex. 95). The Capitol, with 550 seats, is the best unaffiliated theatre (Par. Ex. P-25, pp. 1, 6). It was built in 1937 as a broadcasting studio but converted in 1940; it is a make-shift arrangement but produced a fair theatre at a cost in the neighborhood of $25,000 (Ibid.).

28. Knoxville, Tenn.

RKO licensed 37 features for exhibition in the Tennessee (P), Riviera (P) and Strand (P) theatres (Ex. 95a) with seating capacities of 1996, 1012, and 799 respectively (R. 864). The Tennessee is an $800,000 theatre and was opened in 1928; it is air conditioned and is known as the "showplace of East Tennessee" (Par. Ex. P-25, p. 7). The Riviera has an excellent location, is in fine physical condition, and is regarded as the city's second best theatre (Ibid.). These theatres are by far the best in the city and there are no others which are adaptable to first run (R. 468, 1864).

The best unaffiliated theatre is the Roxy, 800 seats (P-25, pp. 1, 7). It has an inferior location, is not attractive and has never been well maintained (Ibid.). There is no evidence that any other unaffiliated theatre is comparable in appointments, operating efficiency or location with the affiliated theatres.

29. Memphis, Tenn.

RKO licensed 18 features for exhibition in the State (L) and Palace (L) theatres (Ex. 95) with seating capacities of 2550 and 2154 respectively (RKO Ex. 11). They are the best theatres in the city (R. 471).

RKO licensed 12 features for exhibition in the Strand (P), 1086 seats (Ex. 95; RKO Ex. 11).

RKO licensed four features for exhibition in the Warner (W), 1982 seats (Ex. 95; RKO Ex. 11).

RKO licensed one feature each for showing in the Airways (900 seats) and Luciann (1014 seats) theatres, and two features to the Lamar (1000 seats) (Seating capacities: RKO Ex. 27). There are several unaffiliated theatres in Memphis comparable in size to the Strand, the smallest of the affiliated theatres (See RKO Ex. 27). However, "So This Is Washington," a low-grossing picture, was the only picture of the 1943-44 first block which was exhibited in the Strand (Exs. 93-94). This indicates that it plays some of RKO's lower-grossing features.

There is no evidence that any unaffiliated theatre is comparable in appointments, operating efficiency or location with the other affiliated theatres mentioned above, or could use RKO's product on first run and pay satisfactory rentals therefor.

30. Dallas, Texas

RKO licensed 35 features for exhibition in the Majestic (P), Palace (P), Capitol (P), Rialto (P), Melba (P), and Village (P) theatres (Ex. 95a). The Village, with 1309 seats, apparently operates in a suburb (RKO Ex. 11). The Majestic has 2415 seats, the Palace 2332, the Capitol 1052, the Rialto 1332 and the Melba 1841 (R. 864-65). The above theatres are the largest and best in Dallas (Ibid.).

The largest unaffiliated theatre is the Arcadia with 1042 seats (RKO Ex. 28). RKO licensed one feature to the Arcadia and two features to the Queen (Ex. 95), but there is no evidence that these theatres or any other unaffiliated theatre could serve as a regular and satisfactory first run outlet for RKO product in Dallas.

31. Fort Worth, Texas

RKO licensed 35 features for exhibition in the Worth (P), Hollywood (P), Palace (P) and Parkway (P) theatres (Ex. 95). The seating capacities of the first three of these theatres are 2358, 1700 and 1468 respectively (R. 865). Parkway, 1021 seats (RKO Ex. 11), apparently operates on a subsequent run policy (R. 464, 865). These theatres are by far the largest and best in Fort Worth (R. 865).

The only unaffiliated theatre comparable in size is the Liberty (RKO Ex. 28; but see R. 865). RKO licensed four features for first showing in the Holton and one in the White (Ex. 95), but there is no evidence in the record that any unaffiliated theatre could serve as a regular and satisfactory first run outlet for RKO's product.

32. San Antonio, Texas

RKO licensed 37 features for exhibition in the Majestic (P), Empire (P), Prince (P), Aztec (P) and State (P) theatres (Ex. 95a). The Majestic, with 3703 seats, the Aztec, with 2433, the Empire, with 1497, and the Texas (P), with 2752 are presently operated on a first run policy (R.

866; cf. R. 489). These theatres are by far the best in San Antonio (R. 866).

There are 8 unaffiliated subsequent run theatres in the city (Ibid.). RKO licensed one feature for first showing in Lucchese's Zaragoza (Ex. 95). There is no evidence that any unaffiliated theatre is comparable to the affiliated theatres in location, size, or appointments.

33. Seattle, Washington

RKO licensed 37 features for exhibition in the Fifth Avenue (F), Blue Mouse (F), Paramount (F), Music Hall (F) and Orpheum (F) theatres, and one feature to the Palomar in which Fox is interested (Ex. 95). All of these operate on first run, except the Blue Mouse, which plays moveovers (R. 2017). The Fifth Avenue, with 2366 seats, was built in 1926 and is one of the outstanding theatres in Seattle (R. 2018). The Blue Mouse, with 851 seats, was built in 1920 by an independent exhibitor, and has always played first run or moveover (R. 2019). The Paramount, with 3049 seats, is the largest theatre in Seattle and was built in 1928 to show pictures on first run (R. 2018). The Music Hall, with 2282 seats, was built about 1927 by an independent exhibitor and has always operated on a first run or moveover policy (R. 2018-19). The Palomar, with 1437 seats, was built around 1915 and from about 1938 has played first run product with stage shows (R. 2019). All of these theatres are centrally located in the downtown district and in the main theatre section (Ibid.). Reagan stated that it improves Paramount's revenue to play a picture in as fine a theatre as the Fifth Avenue in Seattle because of the advertising and publicity value of the theatre (R. 769-770). Rodgers regards these theatres as far superior to unaffiliated operations (R. 492).

The only unaffiliated theatre playing first run is the Liberty, 1650 seats. There is also a newsreel house (R. 2019). The Liberty is poorly located, plays first run the product of Columbia, one-half of United Artists, and the product of certain non-defendant producers (R. 2019-20). There is no evidence that the Liberty or any other unaffiliated theatre could serve as a satisfactory first run outlet for RKO product. There is no evidence that the Liberty is not supplied with all the product it needs.

34. Spokane, Wash.

RKO licensed 38 features for exhibition in the Fox (F), Orpheum (F) and State (F) theatres (Ex. 95). The seating capacity of the Fox is 2251. It was built in 1931 and is the largest and best theatre in the city (R. 2022-24). The Orpheum has 1272 seats and was built in 1918 (Ibid.). The State, with 954 seats, was built in 1916, has always played first run irrespective of ownership, and is larger than any unaffiliated theatre (Ibid.; but see RKO Ex. 28).

The only unaffiliated theatre operating on a first run policy is the Granada with 550 seats (R. 493, 2022-4). The Granada was built in 1912 and it began to operate on a first run policy in 1942 when it acquired the product of Universal, part of Republic and part of Columbia (R. 2022-4). The revenue possibilities of the Granada are not equal to the Fox (R. 537). There are no other unaffiliated theatres which by their quality, character and location could serve as a satisfactory first run outlet (R. 493).

35. Milwaukee, Wis.

RKO licensed 17 features for exhibition in the Warner (W) theatre and 19 features for exhibition in the Alhambra

(W) and Riverside (W) theatres (Ex. 95). The theatres in Milwaukee which operate on first run are, the Wisconsin (F) 2778 seats, Palace (F) 2438, Strand (F) 1200 (moveover), Warner (W) 2000, Riverside (W) 2300, and Alhambra (W) 1400 (moveover) (R. 1987).

The Warner and Wisconsin theatres are showcases and the best in the area betwen Chicago and Minneapolis (Ibid.). The Palace and Riverside are fine, luxurious theatres (Ibid.).

The affiliated theatres which operate first run are substantially larger than any unaffiliated theatre (RKO Ex. 28). One of the larger unaffiliated theatres, the Avalon, 1200 seats, is a first run neighborhood theatre (R. 1992). RKO licensed one feature for first showing in the Colonial theatre (Ex. 95), but there is no evidence that the Colonial or any other unaffiliated theatre could serve as a regular satisfactory first run outlet for RKO product in this city.

APPENDIX E

RECORD AS TO THE 187 CITIES OF 25,000 TO 100,000 POPULATION IN WHICH RKO LICENCED PRODUCT FIRST-RUN TO THEATRES NOT AFFILIATED WITH RKO BUT AFFILIATED WITH DEFENDANTS OTHER THAN RKO (1943-44)*

A. RKO product was exhibited first run in theatres in which other defendants have minority interests in 20 cities

In 14 of these cities the theatres in which RKO exhibited (Ex. 94) were those in which Paramount had a minority interest (RKO Ex. 11). The individual superiority of the theatres in these 14 cities is concisely summarized in Exs. P-25 and P-25A, at the pages indicated:

City	Exs. P-25 and P-25-A
1. Quincy, Ill.	pp. 77-79
2. Rockford, Ill.	81-83
3. Clinton, Iowa	103-104
4. Mason City, Iowa	108-109
5. Baton Rouge, La.	119-120
6. Shreveport, La.	125-126
7. Bangor, Me.	128-129
8. Jackson Miss.	200-201
9. Concord, N. H.	340
10. Wilmington, N. C.	231
11. Lebanon, Pa.	251-252
12. Danville, Va.	312
13. Burlington, Vt. (The unaffiliated Strong theatre played "Rookie" and "Lady" on first run.)	342
14. Fitchburg, Mass. (The unaffiliated Shea's played 4 of First Block first run.)	338

* For this Appendix, RKO has used the test of affiliation urged by the plaintiff, i.e., theatres in which a defendant has any interest, however small.

In the remaining 6 cities the Record either fails to show the existence of unaffiliated theatres herein or shows that they played part of RKO's first block:

15. Alhambra, Cal.
16. Ottumwa, Iowa
17. Waltham, Mass.
18. Aliquippa, Pa.
19. Everett, Wash.
20. Allentown, Pa.

B. RKO product was exhibited first run in theatres affiliated with other defendants in 19 cities where Record does not show existence of any unaffiliated theatre

1. Tuscaloosa, Ala.
2. Norwalk, Conn.
3. West Hartford, Conn.
4. Elgin, Ill.
5. Owensboro, Ky.
6. Newton, Mass.
7. Rochester, Minn.
8. Belleville, N. J.
9. Hackensack, N. J.
10. Kearny, N. J.[1]
11. Montclair, N. J.
12. Jamestown, N. Y.
13. Eau Claire, Wis.
14. Fond du Lac, Wis.
15. Beaumont, Tex. (except 1 Negro theatre)
16. Wilkensburg, Pa.
17. West Palm Beach, Fla.[2]
18. Santa Barbara, Cal.[3]
19. Bakersfield, Cal.

There can be no showing of "discrimination" where the Record does not show there is an alternative unaffiliated exhibitor.

---

[1] The Regent Theatre in Kearny, which played three of the four RKO first block exhibited in that city, is leased by RKO to a non-defendant. However, the Government classifies it as affiliated with Warner.

[2] R. 364; RKO Ex. 28.

[3] R. 2132-o. Cf. RKO Ex. 28.

C. RKO product was exhibited first run in part in theatres affiliated with other defendants, in part in unaffiliated theatres in 35 cities

Except in 13 instances, the Record contains no evidence as to the comparative merits of the theatres involved. In these 13 cities, indicated by Record citations, the undisputed evidence shows that the affiliated theatres are superior. In the absence of any evidence as to their respective sizes, locations, quality of equipment, and ability and reliability of management, it is impossible to draw any inference of discrimination from the licensing of certain features to X theatre and others to Y theatre.

City

1. Glendale, Cal.
2. San Jose, Cal. (R. 2132h).
3. Santa Ana, Cal.
4. Santa Monica, Cal. (R. 2132j-k).
5. Meriden, Conn.
6. New Britain, Conn.
7. Berwyn, Ill.
8. Evanston, Ill. (Ex. P-25, pp. 65-7).
9. Springfield, Ill. (Ex. P-25, pp. 87-9).
10. Hammond, Ind.
11. Council Bluffs, Iowa
12. Arlington, Mass. (Ex. P-25, pp. 133-4).
13. Brockton, Mass.[4] (Ex. P-25, pp. 135-40).
14. Taunton, Mass.[5] (Ex. P-25, pp. 161-7).
15. Atlantic City, N. J.
16. East Orange, N. J.

---

[4] Exhibit P-25 shows that the unaffiliated Colonial theatre regularly uses one-half of RKO's product on first run.

[5] Exhibit P-25 shows that the unaffiliated Strand theatre now plays all RKO features on first run.

City

17. Irvington, N. J.
18. Orange, N. J.
19. Passaic, N. J.
20. Asheville, N. C.
21. Lorraine, Ohio
22. Massillon, Ohio
23. Steubenville, Ohio
24. Chester, Pa.
25. Westport, Ky. (Ex. P-25, pp. 257-61).
26. Pawtucket, R. I. (Ex. P-25, pp. 267-71).
27. Woonsocket, R. I.[6] (Ex. P-25, pp. 272-78).
28. Amarillo, Tex. (Ex. P-25, pp. 290-2).
29. El Paso, Tex. (Ex. P-25, pp. 296-8).
30. Waco, Tex. (Ex. P-25, pp. 305-7).
31. Charleston, W. Va.
32. Clarksburg, W. Va.
33. Appleton, Wis.
34. West Allis, Wis.
35. Oak Park, Ill.

D. RKO product was exhibited first run in affiliated theatres substantially larger than largest unaffiliated theatre in 50 cities

In each of these cities the smallest affiliated theatre showing an RKO feature from the first Block exceeded the seating capacity of the largest unaffiliated theatre by at least 300 seats. In addition, the superiority of several of the affiliated theatres in such other respects as furnishings, location, projection equipment, etc. is demonstrated by testimony or exhibits in the Record.

[6] Exhibit P-25 shows that the unaffiliated Park and Bijou theatres regularly license one-half of RKO's product for first run exhibition.

City	Seating Capacity of Smallest Affiliated Theatre[7]	Seating Capacity of Largest Unaffiliated Theatre[7]

With respect to the first 21 cities, Paramount's Ex. P-25 demonstrates the superiority of its theatres over the best unaffiliated theatre in each city. Because of the length of the statements in that exhibit, the comparisons are not repeated here.

1.	Fort Smith, Ark.	Temple (P) 870	Fort 500
2.	St. Petersburg, Fla.	La Plaza (P) 1685	Reno 800
3.	Bloomington, Ill.	Castle (P) 893	Ewing 400
4.	Danville, Ill.	Palace (P) 986	Time 560
5.	E. St. Louis, Ill.	Majestic (P) 1788	Avenue 1100
6.	Marion, Ind.	Paramount (P) 1196	Lunalite 376
7.	Burlington, Iowa	Capitol (P) 682	Avon 350
8.	Monroe, La.	Capitol (P) 1014	Ritz 600 (negro)
9.	Lewiston, Me.	Auburn (P) 1169	Ritz 500
10.	Chelsea, Mass.	Olympia (P) 1420	Strand 900
11.	Chicopee, Mass.	Rivoli (P) 1261	Victoria 750
12.	Greensboro, N. C.	National (P) 1486	Criterion 550
13.	High Point, N. C.	Broadhurst (P) 758	Ritz 400
14.	Winston-Salem, N. C.	State (P) 1536	Ardmore 496[8]
15.	Fargo, N. D.	Grand (P) 739	Princess 352
16.	Hamilton, Ohio	Palace (P) 846	Linden 449
17.	Middletown, Ohio	Strand (P) 1762	State 400
18.	Hazelton, Pa.	Grand (P) 896	Alton and Family 500 each
19.	Columbia, S. C.	Ritz (P) 730	State 374
20.	Johnson City, Tenn.	Majestic (P) 989	Sevier 650
21.	Galveston, Texas	Queen (P) 756	Isle 300 (except Carver 650, negro)

Except as otherwise noted, RKO's Ex. 28 comparing seating capacities appears to be the only evidence in the record respecting the suitability of theatres as first run outlets in the following cities.

22.	Anniston, Ala.	Ritz (P) 1216	Rialto 350
23.	Tucson, Ariz.	Rialto (F) 1084	Plaza 700

[See Ex. P-25, pp. 15-16.]

---

[7] RKO Ex. 28.

[8] From P-25, p. 233; cf. RKO Ex. 28.

	City	Seating Capacity of Smallest Affiliated Theatre	Seating Capacity of Largest Unaffiliated Theatre
24.	Huntington Park, Calif.[9]	California (F) 1500
25.	Stockton, Calif.	California (F) 2172	Roxy 750
	[The California Theatre is "much the finest" in the City (R. 2132f-g).]
26.	New London, Conn.	Garde (W) 1602	Empire 1117
27.	Torrington, Conn.	Warner (W) 1854	State 999
28.	Waterbury, Conn.	State (W) 1951	Cameo 1041
29.	Belleville, Ill.	Lincoln (F) 1514	Ritz 500
30.	Hutchinson, Kan.	Midland (F) 965	State 400
31.	Hagerstown, Md.	Academy (W) 1142	Henry's 400
32.	Everett, Mass.	Capitol (W) 1955	Park 820
33.	Lynn, Mass.	Warner (W) 1789	Capitol 1300
	[See Ex. P-25, pp. 154-7.]
34.	Joplin, Mo.	Fox (F) 1779	Hippodrome 1317
35.	Springfield, Mo.	Gilloiz (F) 1438	Granada 650
	[The Fox theatres are superior in every respect and the most suitable for first run exhibitions (R. 2070-71).]
36.	Bayonne, N. J.	DeWitt (W) 2736	Victory 1100
37.	Bloomfield, N. J.	Broadmoor (W) 960	Savoy 400
38.	Hoboken, N. J.	Fabian (W) 3000	Rivoli 500
39.	Springfield, Ohio	Majestic (W) 735	Hippodrome 400
40.	Lower Merion Twp., Pa.	Ardmore (W) 1282	Suburban 800 Liberty 1400
41.	McKeesport, Pa.	Memorial (W) 2060	Nuluna 450
42.	Sharon, Pa.	Liberty (W) 1207	Mayfair 1100
43.	Upper Darby, Pa.	69th St. (W) (P) 1615	Basle 700
44.	Washington, Pa.	State (W) 1318	Criterion 350
45.	Spartanburg, S. C.	Palmetto (P) 813	Industrial School 200
46.	Ogden, Utah	Ogden (F) 813
47.	Bellingham, Wash.	Mt. Baker (F) 1637	Grand 832
48.	Kenosha, Wis.	Gateway (W) 1442	Roosevelt 780
	[See R. 1995-6, Tr. 2709-10]
49.	Oshkosh, Wisc.	Strand (W) 1165	Grand 857
50.	Sheboygan, Wisc.	Rex (W) 918	Butterfly 437

[9] RKO Exhibit 28 listed the Warner Theatre as the largest unaffiliated theatre. It subsequently appeared that this was an inadvertent error (RKO Ex. 11). However, a priori, any unaffiliated theatre would be smaller, but the Record does not show precisely how much smaller. With this caveat, the city is listed in this group.

E. RKO product was exhibited first run in affiliated theatres larger than largest unaffiliated theatres in 8 cities

These cities are analogous to those in section D, but are listed separately because the difference in seating capacity is, in absolute terms, smaller. They are generally smaller cities. In each, the smallest unaffiliated theatre which played an RKO feature from the first block had less than 1000 seats, but was 200 to 300 seats larger than the largest unaffiliated theatre. In comparing theatres under 1000 seats, a difference of 200 is substantial. These cities are:

City	Seating Capacity of Smallest Affiliated Exhibitor	Seating Capacity of Largest Unaffiliated Theatre
1. Bristol, Conn.	Bristol (W) 815	Carberry 600
2. Orlando, Fla.	Grand (P) 720	Rex 500
3. Macon, Ga.[10]	Rialto (P) 766	Bibb 500
4. Alton, Ill.	Princess (P) 700	State 500
5. Galesburg, Ill.[10]	West (P) 644	Grove 394
6. Salem, Ore.	Brand (W) 727	Hollywood 496
7. Wilkes-Barre, Pa.	Orpheum (P) 796	Crystal 500
8. Greenville, S. C.[10]	Rivoli (P) 744	Paris & Branwood 500 each

F. RKO product was exhibited first run in affiliated theatres in cities where highest grossing RKO features were shown in theatres larger than any unaffiliated theatre in 43 cities

In these cities RKO licensed its first block to affiliated theatres, and the two highest grossing features, Lady Takes a Chance and Fallen Sparrow, played first run, exclusive of moveovers, in affiliated theatres which were larger than the largest unaffiliated theatres in such cities. Plaintiff defines a first-class feature as one which grosses $450,000 in domestic film rentals (Complaint, Paragraph 15e), and the other three features in RKO's first block fell far short of this amount.[11] RKO is entitled to license a block of five features to an exhibitor who can show its high grossing pictures in larger theatres and exhibit the smaller grossing pictures in smaller theatres. The following schedule includes Record citations demonstrating the superiority of affiliated theatres in certain specific situations:

[10] See Exhibit P-25 for a detailed comparison of the first-run theatres affiliated with Paramount and the best unaffiliated theatres in respect to other important requirements of a first-run outlet.

---

[11] Exhibit 93 shows that as of April 26, 1945 the domestic gross rentals earned by the first block features were:

Lady Takes a Chance	$1,955,781
The Fallen Sparrow	1,170,032
Adventures of a Rookie	339,908
So This Is Washington	308,327
Seventh Victim	201,776

City	Affiliated Exhibitor of "Lady" and of "Sparrow"	Largest Unaffiliated Theatre	Record Citations Demonstrating Superiority of Affiliated Outlets
1. Mobile, Ala.	Saenger (P) 2,655	Azalea 750 Pike 750 Lincoln 750 (Col.)	Ex. P-25, p. 11
2. Montgomery, Ala.	Paramount (P) 1,525	Charles 800	Ex. P-25, pp. 4-5
3. Phoenix, Ariz.	Fox (F) 1,796 Rialto (P) 811	Phoenix 700	Ex. P-25, pp. 13-14
4. Belvedere, Twp., California	Golden Gate (F) 1,456	Strand 900
5. Berkeley, Calif.	United Artists (F) 1,646	Rivoli 1,410	R. 2132e
6. Beverly Hills, Calif.	Beverly (F) 1,318	Elite 824
7. Fresno, Calif.	Wilson (F) 1,899 Tower (F) 930 (d/d)	White 1,400[12]
8. Inglewood, Calif.	Academy (F) 1,190	Seville 766
9. Riverside, Calif.	Riverside (F) 1,528 DeAnza (F) 978	Del Rio 48[illegible]
10. San Bernadino, Calif.	Fox (F) 1,854	Rialto 700

[12] RKO Exhibits 28 and 11 classify the Warner (2400 seats) as unaffiliated. This appears to be erroneous (R. 2132g).

	City	Affiliated Exhibitor of "Lady" and of "Sparrow"	Largest Unaffiliated Theatre	Record Citations Demonstrating Superiority of Affiliated Outlets
11.	Miami Beach, Fla.	Beach (P) 1,615 Sheridan (P) d/d 1,343	Biscayne Plaza 1,400
12.	Augusta, Ga.	Miller (P) 1,656	Lenox 800	Ex. P-25, p. 33
13.	Columbus, Ga.	Bradley (P) 1,640	Pastime 800	Ex. P-25, p. 33 pp. 35-36
14.	Savannah, Ga.	Lucas (P) 1,480	Savannah 900	Ex. P-25, pp. 41-46
15.	Anora, Ill.	Paramount (P) 2,016 Tivoli (P) 1,015	Isle 750	Ex. P-25, pp. 51-52
16.	Joliet, Ill.	Rialto (P) 2,087 Princess (P) 813	Mode 750	Ex. P-25, pp. 72-73
17.	Waukegan, Ill.	Genessee (P) 1,865 Academy (P) 943	Time 800	Ex. P-25, pp. 91-92
18.	Topeka, Kansas	Jayhawk (P) 1,344	Coed 600	R. 2069-70
19.	Alexandria, La.	Paramount (P) 1,014	Don 800	Ex. P-25, p. 117
20.	Holyoke, Mass.	Victory (P) 1,680 Strand (P) 1,129	Majestic 1,000	Ex. P-25, pp. 152-153
21.	Lawrence, Mass.	Palace (W) 1,781 Broadway (W) 1,204	Majestic 1,000
22.	Pittsfield, Mass.	Capitol (P) 1,332 Palace (P) 1,658	Kameo 900	Ex. P-25, pp. 159-60

City	Affiliated Exhibitor of "Lady" and of "Sparrow"	Largest Unaffiliated Theatre	Record Citations Demonstrating Superiority of Affiliated Outlets
23. Meridan, Miss.	Temple (P) 1,633	Royal 450	Ex. P-25, p. 203
24. Albuquerque, N. M.	Kimo (P) 1,278	El Rey 750	Ex. P-25, pp. 208-209
25. Elmira, N. Y.	Keeney's (W) 2,366	Capitol 1,500
26. Newburgh, N. Y.	Ritz (P) 1,303 Broadway (P) 1,240	Academy 1,217	Ex. P-25, pp. 211-12
27. Raleigh, N. C.	Ambassador (P) 1,471	Wake 800	Ex. P-25, pp. 226-27
28. Rocky Mount, N. C.	Center (P) 1,014	Cameo 580	Ex. P-25, p. 229
29. Mansfield, Ohio	Ohio (W) 1,630 Madison (W) 1,512	Park 1,300
30. Marion, Ohio	Palace (P) 1,540	Ohio 800	Ex. P-25, pp. 241-3
31. Portsmouth, Ohio	Columbia (W) 1,022 LaRoy (W) 1,374	Garden 700
32. Johnstown, Pa.	State (W) 1,646 Cambria (W) 1,144	Embassy 1,000[12]

[12] RKO Exhibit 28 shows "University of Wisconsin 1300". This is not a commercial theatre (R. 1994-5). The superiority of the two affiliated theatres is shown at R. 1994, but the size of the Eastwood, presently a third and fourth run theatre, is not stated.

City	Affiliated Exhibitor of "Lady" and of "Sparrow"	Largest Unaffiliated Theatre.	Record Citations Demonstrating Superiority of Affiliated Outlets
33. Abilene, Tex.	Paramount (P) 1,409 Majestic (P) 928	B. Walker 675	Ex. P-25, pp. 288-9
34. Austin, Tex.	Paramount (P) 1,419 State (P) 997	Ritz 800	Ex. P-25, pp. 294-5
35. Port Arthur, Tex.	Strand (P) 1,046	Groves 504
36. Tyler, Tex.	Tyler (P) 1,085 Liberty (P) 749	Joy 584	Ex. P-25, pp. 303-4
37. Wichita Falls, Tex.	Wichita (P) 1,204 Majestic (P) 1,184	Tower 874	Ex. P-25, pp. 309-10
38. Newport News, Va.	Paramount (P) 1,241	Warwick 800	Ex. P-25, p. 315
39. Parkersburg, Va.	Smoot (W) 913	Virginia 900
40. Madison, Wis.	Orpheum (F) 2,246 Capitol (W) 2,242	Eastwood	R. 1994-5
41. Racine, Wis.	Venetian (W) 1,963 Rialto (W) 1,279	Mainstreet 1,100	R. 1993-4
42. Wausau, Wis.	Wausau (F) 797 Grand (F) 1,424	Hollywood 700
43. Pensacola, Fla.	Saenger (P) 1,883	Ritz 600	Ex. P-25, pp. 27-8

G. RKO product was exhibited first run in affiliated theatres smaller than largest unaffiliated theatre in 12 cities

In 12 cities of the 320, RKO licensed four or five of its first block for first run exhibition in affiliated theatres which were smaller than the largest unaffiliated theatres in such cities. However, both exhibits and testimony justify licensing to affiliated theatres in most of these cities:

	City	Affiliated Theatres[14]	Larger Unaffiliated Theatres[15]
1.	Little Rock, Ark.	Arkansas (P) 1284 Pulaski (P) 1053 Capitol (P) 1233 Royal (P) 1164	Robinson Auditorium 3000
2.	Pasadena, Calif.	Academy (F) 1673 Tower (M) (F) 747 Pasadena (M) (F) 894	Raymond 1900 Colorado 1709
	[These Fox theatres are "well maintained modern houses" (R. 2132h-i, Tr. 2894-95).]
3.	Decatur, Ill.	Empress (P) 991 Lincoln Sq. (P) 1389	Avon 1014
	[Exhibit P-25, pp. 61-2, shows that the unaffiliated Avon is poorly maintained, has uncomfortable seats and is poorly ventilated. Another unaffiliated theatre, the Varsity Theatre with 996 seats, is modern but is a neighborhood theatre and does not have good transportation facilities.]
4.	Butte, Mont.	Rialto (F) 1238 American (F) 851	Montana 1426 Park 880
5.	Great Falls, Mont.	Liberty (F) 1694 Towne (F) 725	Civic Center 1882

[14] (M) signifies moveover theatre.

[15] RKO Ex. 28.

City	Affiliated Theatres	Larger Unaffiliated Theatres
6. Poughkeepsie, N. Y.	Stratford (P) 1359 Bardavon (P) 1190	Rialto 1600

[Ex. P-25, pp. 217-18, shows that the Liberty, with 715 seats, is the best unaffiliated theatre in this city, but that it cannot compare with the Bardavon or Stratford in location or physical condition.]

7. Durham, N. C.	Center (P) 1254 Rialto (P) 638 Carolina (P) 1700	Quadrangle Pictures 1500 Criterion 800

[Ex. P-25, pp. 219-20 shows that the Uptown with 500 seats is the best unaffiliated theatre in this city, that the Center Theatre is an excellent, modern, fireproof house and is outstanding in this area and that the Carolina is well constructed and well maintained.]

8. Lancaster, Pa.	Capitol (W) 1161 Hamilton (W) 1014 Grand (W) 853	Colonial 1500 Fulton 1350
9. York, Pa.	Capitol (W) 848 Rialto (W) 798	York 935
10. Haverhill, Mass.	Colonial (P) 1255 Paramount (P) 1738	Strand 1400

[Ex. P-25, pp. 147-50, shows that the Strand has 1250 seats, that although it is in good condition, its stage, ventilating, and rest room equipment are inferior to those of the Colonial and Paramount.]

11. Lima, Ohio	Sigma (W) 891 Ohio (W) 1804	Quilna 1000
12. Lynchburg, Va.	Isis (P) 731 Paramount (P) 1530 Trenton (P) 950	Academy 800

[Ex. P-25, pp. 313-14, shows that the Academy with 1,000 seats is inferior in every respect to the Paramount.]

APPENDIX F

Comparison Rentals Paid by Affiliated and Unaffiliated First-Run Theatres in Cities Over 25,000 Population for RKO's First Block of Features, 1943-44

(Excluding theatres in lump-sum or national gross deals, theatres in which RKO had interest of 50% or more, and theatres controlled by RKO in which RKO and another defendant had aggregate interest of 50% or more)

Source: RKO Exhibits 14, 17

	Number of Theatres Playing First-Run	Average Seating Capacity	Average Rental	Average Rental Per Seat of Capacity
Lady Takes A Chance
Affiliated Theatres	278	1635	$1,671.57	$1.02
Unaffiliated Theatres	153	1231	1,255.46	1.02
The Fallen Sparrow
Affiliated Theatres	260	1493	929.08	.62
Unaffiliated Theatres	147	1233	767.57	.62
So This Is Washington
Affiliated Theatres	211	1311	177.97	.14
Unaffiliated Theatres	144	1077	151.54	.14
Adventures of a Rookie
Affiliated Theatres	250	1372	171.78	.12
Unaffiliated Theatres	147	1156	124.29	.11
Seventh Victim
Affiliated Theatres	226	1325	120.20	.09
Unaffiliated Theatres	149	1053	129.92	.12

Unaffiliated Theatres: Theatres in which no defendant had any interest.

Affiliated Theatres: All other theatres.

DISTRIBUTION OF FIRST RUN EXHIBITIONS OF RKO's 1943-1944 FIRST BLOCK FEATURES BETWEEN AFFILIATED AND UNAFFILIATED THEATRES IN CITIES OVER 25,000 POPULATION, EXCLUDING EXHIBITIONS IN RKO THEATRES.*

(Source: RKO Exhibits 13 and 14)

	The Fallen Sparrow	Adventures of a Rookie	The Seventh Victim	So This is Washington	Lady Takes a Chance	Total First Block
TOTAL Number	407	397	375	355	431	1965
Number in Affiliated Theatres	220	212	190	173	236	1031
Percent of TOTAL	(54.05)	(53.40)	(50.67)	(48.73)	(54.76)	(52.47)
Number in Minority Affiliated Theatres	40	38	36	38	42	194
Percent of TOTAL	(9.83)	(9.57)	(9.6)	(10.71)	(9.74)	(9.87)
Number in Unaffiiliated Theatres*	147	147	149	144	153	740
Percent of TOTAL	(36.12)	(37.03)	(39.73)	(40.56)	(35.50)	(37.66)

* This Table does not include 207 exhibitions in theatres in which RKO has an interest of 50% or more, and in theatres controlled by RKO in which RKO and another defendant have an aggregate interest of 50% or more.

 "Affiliated theatres" are those in which one or more of the defendants (other than RKO) have an interest of 50% or more.

 "Minority Affiliated Theatres" are those in which a defendant (other than RKO) has an interest of less than 50%.

* "Unaffiliated theatres" are all other theatres.

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
FEB 3 1948
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947

No. 84

UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY INC. (sued herein as Universal Corporation and Universal Pictures Company Inc.), UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES INC., and BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC.,

Appellants,

vs.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellee.

No. 79

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellant,

vs.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES INC., et al.,

APPELLEES.

APPEALS FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF FOR UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., ET AL., APPELLANTS

THOMAS TURNER COOKE,
CHARLES D. PRUTZMAN,
Counsel for the Universal Appellants.

ADOLPH SCHIMEL,
CYRIL S. LANDAU,
FRANK W. FORD,
Of Counsel.

INDEX

	PAGE
OPINION BELOW	1
JURISDICTION	1
THE STATUTES INVOLVED	2
STATEMENT	4
1. The motion picture theatre	5
2. The feature motion picture	7
3. The first-run theatre as a show-window for quality feature pictures	10
4. The Government's complaint	11
(a) The basic complaint	11
(b) The charge against Universal as distinguished from the charge against the major defendants	14
5. The defendants	15
(a) Paramount	15
(b) Fox	17
(c) Loew's	17
(d) Warner	18
(e) RKO	19
(f) United Artists	19
(g) Columbia	20
(h) Universal	20
6. The nature and character of the Government's evidence	21

PAGE

7. The salient facts relied upon as against Universal 24
   (a) Admission prices 24
   (b) Clearance 27
   (c) Other trade practices 29
   (d) First-run licensing 31
8. The decree 31

QUESTIONS PRESENTED 33

SPECIFICATION OF ASSIGNED ERRORS TO BE URGED ... 37

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 37

ARGUMENT 43

PART ONE—UNIVERSAL, IN LICENSING ITS FEATURE MOTION PICTURES UNDER COPYRIGHT TO INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS, NOT CLAIMED BY THE GOVERNMENT TO HAVE BEEN ENGAGED IN A COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY TO VIOLATE THE SHERMAN ACT, WAS ENTITLED TO GRANT RESTRICTIVE AND EXCLUSIVE LICENSES OF THE CHARACTER HERETOFORE DISCUSSED, WHICH PROHIBIT THE REDUCTION OF CURRENT ADMISSION PRICES, SPECIFY CLEARANCES, AND PROVIDE FOR ROYALTIES MEASURED BY A PERCENTAGE OF THE ADMISSION PRICE 43

1. In General 43
2. The minimum admission price restriction ... 45
3. Clearance 48
4. Royalties measured by a percentage of the licensee's selling price 50
5. Long term agreements to grant exclusive licenses for limited periods on all Universal feature pictures made with exhibitors operating a number of theatres 51
6. Block-booking 52

PAGE

I.—A Licensor of Copyrighted Feature Motion Pictures, Instead of Exercising His Full Legal Right to Grant an Exclusive License Under Copyright, Limited Only by the Duration of the Copyright, May Legally Grant an Exclusive License for a Limited Period of Time, and Agree, in Aid Thereof, that It Will Not Grant Any Further License During a Given Period of Time Thereafter 52

1. An agreement for clearance is legal 52

2. Clearance, in conjunction with an exclusive license for a limited time, is a diminution of exclusiveness and need not be "reasonable" ... 57

3. The idea that clearances must be "reasonable" originated in a waiver of legal rights by the major defendants (but not Universal) in the Consent Decree 59

4. There is no proof that Universal granted any "unreasonable" clearances 63

II.—Universal's Licenses Under Copyright to Independent Exhibitors, Not Claimed by the Government to Have Participated in Any Conspiracy to Monopolize or Restrain Interstate Commerce Under the Sherman Act, Legally Restricted the Grant in Requiring the Licensees to Refrain from Competition Which Would Result in Depreciating or Destroying the Value of the Licensor's Residuary Interest in Making Subsequent-Run Licenses 64

1. While the decree recognizes the right of large distributors, who own theatres, to control the admission prices charged therein, it inconsistently prevents Universal, a medium-sized distributor without theatres, from protecting its revenue by a covenant against the lowering, during the run of a feature picture licensed by it, of admission prices fixed by exhibitors 64

PAGE

2. A licensor under copyright, having the right to exclude all others completely, may let down the bars and permit competition against himself to the extent he sees fit, and, in requiring the maintenance of current admission prices, Universal so acted 65

3. The licensor does not extend the scope of its monopoly because it does not interfere at all with the price charged for entertainment it does not supply 69

4. Limited licenses under copyrights, the purpose of which is to restrict the licensee from competing in some specified manner with the licensor, are legal 69
   (a) In general 70
   (b) Delimitation of territory in which license is operative 70
   (c) Limitation of quantity which may be made 70
   (d) Restriction to articles of particular type or character 71
   (e) Restriction as to use for which articles may be manufactured 71
   (f) Restriction to particular types of markets 71
   (g) Restriction of selling price of articles manufactured under license to vend, use and sell 72

5. The doctrine of the Bement and General Electric cases 73

PAGE

6. Subsequent decisions of this Court cast no doubt on the Bement and General Electric doctrine 75

7. This is an a fortiori case 80

8. The arrangement would be lawful even if the feature pictures were not copyrighted..... 81

III.—THE ROYALTY FOR A LICENSE UNDER COPYRIGHT IS PROPERLY MEASURED BY A PERCENTAGE OF THE GROSS RECEIPTS 82

IV.—UNIVERSAL, WHEN LICENSING UNDER COPYRIGHT TO INDEPENDEPENT EXHIBITORS, NOT CLAIMED BY THE GOVERNMENT TO HAVE PARTICIPATED IN ANY COMBINATION OR CONSPIRACY TO MONOPOLIZE OR RESTRAIN INTERSTATE COMMERCE, WAS ENTITLED TO LICENSE AS MANY OF ITS PICTURES AT ONE TIME UNDER ONE CONTRACT, TO AN EXHIBITOR OPERATING ONE OR MORE THEATRES, AS A LICENSEE WAS WILLING TO TAKE, OR EVEN TO CONDITION THE LICENSING OF ONE PICTURE UPON THE ACCEPTANCE OF OTHERS (OF WHICH THERE WAS NO EVIDENCE AGAINST UNIVERSAL), AND WAS LIKEWISE ENTITLED TO COMMIT ITS PICTURES TO SUCH LICENSEE FOR A TERM OF YEARS.. 84

1. It is mutually advantageous to non-integrated distributors and independent exhibitors to make wholesale deals in feature pictures..... 85

2. Offering to license and licensing pictures in groups is entirely legal 87

3. The conditioning of the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another is legal in the case of a non-monopolistically-situated distributor 88

4. Master contracts are legal 94

5. Franchises are legal 95

PAGE

PART TWO—ASSUMING ARGUENDO THAT LARGE CIRCUITS OF THEATRES, AFFILIATED OR UNAFFILIATED WITH PRODUCER-DISTRIBUTORS, WERE ENGAGED IN COMBINATIONS AND CONSPIRACIES TO MONOPOLIZE AND RESTRAIN INTERSTATE COMMERCE, PURSUANT TO WHICH, BY VIRTUE OF THEIR DOMINANT POSITIONS, THEY WERE ABLE TO DETERMINE WHAT THEATRES SHOULD RECEIVE PRIOR RUNS, AND TO FIX CLEARANCES AND ADMISSION PRICES, NOT ONLY FOR THEIR OWN THEATRES BUT FOR SUBSTANTIALLY ALL OTHER IMPORTANT MOTION PICTURE THEATRES IN THE UNITED STATES. THIS DID NOT COMPEL UNIVERSAL TO CHOOSE BETWEEN (1) REFRAINING FROM OFFERING ITS FEATURE PICTURES TO SUCH THEATRES ON THE ONLY CLEARANCES AND AT THE ONLY ADMISSION PRICES POSSIBLE, AND, IN SO DOING, EXERCISING ITS ORDINARY RIGHTS UNDER COPYRIGHT AND THE GENERAL LAW, OR (2) BECOMING IMPLICATED IN SUCH ALLEGED COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY.. 100

V.—UNIVERSAL WAS FREE TO GRANT EXCLUSIVE AND RESTRICTIVE LICENSES OF THE CHARACTER HERETOFORE DISCUSSED, TO EXHIBIT ITS COPYRIGHTED FEATURE PICTURES, TO EXHIBITORS AFFILIATED WITH THE MAJOR DEFENDANTS, OR TO EXHIBITORS OPERATING LARGE INDEPENDENT THEATRE CHAINS, ASSUMED ARGUENDO TO HAVE BEEN ENGAGED IN COMBINATIONS AND CONSPIRACIES TO MONOPOLIZE AND RESTRAIN INTERSTATE COMMERCE, AND WAS LEGALLY ENTITLED TO NEGOTIATE FILM RENTALS, ON THE BASIS OF RUNS, CLEARANCES, AND ADMISSION PRICES FIXED BY THE LICENSEES, AND WHICH IT WAS UNABLE TO ALTER..... 104

1. The large theatre circuits were basically responsible for any fixed system of runs, clearances and admission prices which may have existed, and Universal's position relative thereto was no different than that of non-defendant "independent" distributors 104

PAGE

2. Universal was in no position to dictate admission prices to motion picture theatres 106

3. Uniform clearance is to be expected as a result of the programming requirements of exhibitors and competitive forces, and, to the extent it exists, furnishes no proof against Universal of participation in a combination and conspiracy 108

4. Assuming arguendo that runs and clearances were fixed by the large theatre circuits and/or their affiliated producer-distributors, Universal's involuntary acquiescence therein did not implicate it in any such combination and conspiracy 119

5. Supporting authorities 122

VI.—If the Major Defendants, or Large Chains of Independent Theatres, Alleged by the Government to Have Combined and Conspired to Monopolize and Restrain Interstate Commerce, Employed Long Term License Contracts Obtained from a Non-Integrated Exhibitor Such as Universal, for All its Feature Pictures, to be Shown in All Their Theatres to Effectuate Such Combinations and Conspiracies, the Remedy Is to Enjoin Such Theatre Chains from Enforcing Such Contracts, Not Injunction Against the Grantor Thereof, Which Did Nothing More Than Deal With the Best or Only Available Customers on a Wholesale Basis 126

1. Franchises with theatre chains 127

2. Alleged discriminations contained in such franchises 130

PAGE

PART THREE—THE REMEDY PRESCRIBED BY THE DECREE DEPARTS IN A NUMBER OF RESPECTS FROM WELL-ESTABLISHED LEGAL PRINCIPLES, AND IN IMPOSING A MANDATORY SYSTEM OF COMPETITIVE BIDDING, REGULATING IN DETAIL THE OPERATIONS OF NON-THEATRE-OWNING DISTRIBUTORS WHO ARE NOT PUBLIC UTILITIES, IS UNAUTHORIZED BY STATUTE AND UNCONSTITUTIONAL, IN THAT IT CONSTITUTES A JUDICIAL USURPATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER 136

VII.—THE IMPOSITION OF A SYSTEM OF COMPETITIVE BIDDING, REGULATING IN DETAIL THE OPERATIONS OF NON-THEATRE-OWNING DISTRIBUTORS, WHICH ARE NOT PUBLIC UTILITIES, IF NECESSARY IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST, IS A MATTER FOR CONGRESS, OR AN ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNAL CREATED THEREBY, NOT THE COURTS. THE RECOGNIZED JUDICIAL SANCTIONS TO RESTORE COMPETITIVE CONDITIONS IN A SHERMAN ACT CASE ARE TO ENJOIN UNREASONABLE RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND TO DISSOLVE MONOPOLIES OR MONOPOLISTIC COMBINATIONS 139

CONCLUSION 147

CASES CITED

PAGE

Aetna Portland Cement Co. et al., v. Federal Trade Commission, 157 F. (2d) 553 123

American Lead Pencil Co. v. Musgrave Pencil Co., Inc., 170 Tenn. 60; 91 S. W. (2d) 573 (1936) 72

American Refining Co. v. Gasoline Products Co., 294 S. W. 967 (Tex. Civ. App. 1927) 70

American Sand & Gravel Co. v. Chicago Gravel Co., 184 Ill. App. 509 (1914) 96

Anderson v. Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast, et al., 27 F. (2d) 163 (N. D. Cal., 1928), aff'd 31 F. (2d) 539 (C. C. A. 9th, 1929), cert. den. 279 U. S. 864 117

Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344 (1933) 96

Aspinwall Manufacturing Co. v. Gill, 32 Fed. 697, 698 (C. C. D. N. J.) 70

A. T. & S. Railroad v. D. & N. O. Railroad, 110 U. S. 667 146

Becton, Dickinson & Co. v. Eisele & Co., 86 F. (2d) 267, 268-270 (C. C. A. 6th), certiorari denied 300 U. S. 667 ..... 48, 70

Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70 (1902) 47, 48, 68, 69, 71, 72, 73, 75, 77, 78, 80

Bigelow, et al. v. R. K. O., 327 U. S. 251 23

Blauner v. Williams Co., 36 Misc. 173, 73 N. Y. Supp. 165 (Sup. Ct. N. Y. Co. 1901) 96

Bloomer v. McQuewan, 14 How. 539, 549 78

Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U. S. 337 43

Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U. S. 338, 345 (1908) 75

Boston Store v. American Graphophone Co., 246 U. S. 8 43

Buck v. Hillsgrove, 17 Fed. Supp. 643 (D. Ct. R. I., 1937) 134

PAGE

Burr v. Duryee, Fed. Cas. No. 2190 (C. C. D. N. J., 1862); aff'd. 68 U. S. 531 (1863) 70

Carbice v. American Patents Development Corp., 283 U. S. 27, 31 (1931) 76, 78, 88

Carter-Crume Co. v. Peurrung, 86 Fed. 439 (C. C. A. 6th, 1898) 96

Casco Products Corp. v. Kenny, 24 U. S. P. Q. 171 (S. D. N. Y., 1935) 72

Cement Manufacturers Protective Association, et al. v. United States, 268 U. S. 588 ..... 114, 123, 124

Ceramic Process Co. v. Cincinnati Advertising Prod. Co., 28 F. Supp. 794 (S. C. Ohio, 1939); appeal dismissed, 116 F. (2d) 497 (C. C. A. 6th, 1940) 72

Chapman v. Wintroath, 252 U. S. 126 49

Cincinnati Packet Company v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179 ..... 57, 81

Cincinnati Siemens-Lungren Gas Illuminating Company v. Western Siemens-Lungren Company, 152 U. S. 200 70

Cinema Patents Co., Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, 62 F. (2d) 310, 311-312 (C. C. A. 9th) 71

Commonwealth v. Hatfield Coal Co., 193 Ky. 229 118

Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Eastern Bag Co., 210 U. S. 405 49

Daniels et al. v. Portland Gold Mining Co. et al., 202 Fed. 637 146

Direct Sales Co. v. U. S., 319 U. S. 703, 709-713 ..... 103, 120

Dorsey v. Bradley, Fed. Cas. No. 4015 (C. C. N. D. Ill., 1886) 70

Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373 (1911) 75

Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Platt, 142 Fed. 606 (N. D. Ill., 1906) 134

English Hop Growers v. Dering, (1928) 2 K. B. 174 96

Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436 ..... 45, 76, 77, 93, 145

PAGE

Excelsior Quilting Co. v. Creter, 36 Misc. 698, 74 N. Y. Supp. 361 (Sup. Ct. N. Y. Co. 1902) 96

Federal Trade Commission v. Beechnut Packing Co., 257 U. S. 441 147

Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568 (1923) 96, 147

Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 252 U. S. 421 ..... 52, 84, 88

Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corp., 57 F. (2d) 152 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1932) 52, 84, 88

Federal Trade Commission v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565 147

Federal Trade Commission v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U. S. 463 147

Fowle v. Park, 131 U. S. 88 81

Fox Film Corporation v. Doyal, 286 U. S. 123 ..... 44, 49

Frey & Son, Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 256 U. S. 208 112

Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, 180 F. (2d) 891 (C. C. A. 7th, 1941) 53

General Electric Co. v. Willey's Carbide Tool Co., 33 F. Supp. 969 (E. D. Mich., S. D., 1940) 72

General Talking Pictures Corporation v. Western Electric Co., 305 U. S. 124 ..... 58, 68, 70, 71, 76

George Close Co. v. Ideal Wrapping Mach. Co., 29 F. (2d) 533 (C. C. A. 1st) 71

Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, 150 Fed. (2) 738 (C. C. A. 3rd, 1945) 22, 23

Good Humor Corporation of America v. Popsicle Corporation of United States, 59 F. (2d) 344 (D. Del. 1932) 71

Goshen Rubber Works v. Single Tube Automobile & Bicycle Tire Co., 166 Fed. 431 (C. C. A. 7th) 70

Goshen Rubber Works v. Single Tube A. & B. Tire Co., 166 Fed. 431 (C. C. A. 7th, 1908) 72

Grant v. Raymond, 6 Pet. 218, 241 44

PAGE

Great Western Distillery Products v. John A. Wathen Distillery Co., 10 Cal. (2d) 442, 74 P. (2d) 745 (1937) 96

Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386 ... 49, 140, 145

Heaton-Peninsular Button-Fastener Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co., 77 Fed. 288 75

Heimbuecher v. Goff, Horner & Co., 119 Ill. App. 373 (1905) 96

Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 224 U. S. 1, 61 (1912) ... 75, 76

Hobbie v. Jennison, 149 U. S. 355 70

Independent Wireless Telegraph Company v. Radio Corporation of America, 269 U. S. 459 48

Indiana Mfg. Co. v. J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co., 154 Fed. 365 (C. C. A. 7th, 1907) 72

Innis, Speiden & Co. v. Food Machinery Co., 2 F. R. D. 261, 262-264 (D. Del.) 70

International Salt Co. v. U. S., No. 46, Oct. Term, 1947 90

Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208 45, 48, 53, 61, 69, 76, 93, 131

Kalem Co. v. Harper Bros., 222 U. S. 55 44

Kelly-Springfield Tire Co. v. Bobo, 4 F. (2d) 71 (C. C. A. 9th, 1925), cert. denied, 268 U. S. 694 ... 96

Kelly-Springfield Tire Co. v. Overman, 287 U. S. 651 49

Kendall v. Winsor, 21 Howe, 327 44

Libbey Glass Co. v. McKee Glass Co., 216 Fed. 172, 176 (W. D. Pa.), affd. 220 Fed. 672 (C. C. A. 3rd), certiorari denied 238 U. S. 624 71

Maple Flooring Mfrs. Assn. v. United States, 268 U. S. 563 124

Massie v. Asbestos Brake Co., 123 Atl. 155 (Ct. of Chancery, N. J., 1922) 72

Match Corporation of America v. Acme Match Corporation, 285 Ill. aff. 197, 1 N. E. 2nd 867 96

Mercoid Corporation v. Mid-Continental Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661 ..... 78, 88

PAGE

M. G. M. v. Bijou Theatre Co., 3 Fed. Supp. 66 44
Mitchell v. Hawley, 16 Wall. 544 ..... 70, 76
Moon Motor Car Co. of N. Y. v. Moon Motor Car Co., 29 F. (2d) 3 (C. C. A. 2d, 1928) 96
Moore v. N. Y. Cotton Exchange, 270 U. S. 593 134
Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502 ..... 75, 88
Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488 88
New York Bank Note Co. v. Kidder Press Co., 192 Mass. 391, 78 N. E. 463 (1906) 96
Nissen v. Andres, et al., 63 Pac. (2d) 47 (Okla., 1936) 118
Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197 145

Oregon Steam Navigation Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 64 81
Over v. Byram Foundry Co., 37 Ind. App. 452, 77 N. E. 302 (1906) 96
Overman Cushion Tire Co. v. Goodyear, 59 Fed. (2d) 998 (C. C. A. 2nd) 49, 53
Owens Bottle Co. v. Libbey Glass Co., 9 F. (2d) 564, 565 (C. C. A. 6th) 70

Patterson v. Century Productions, 93 F. (2d) 489 .. 44
Pick Mfg. Co. v. General Motors Corp., 299 U. S. 3 .. 90
Pope Manufacturing Co. v. Owsley, 27 Fed. 100 (C. C. N. D. Ill.) 71

Radio Craft Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 7 F. (2d) 432 (C. C. A. 3rd) 71
Rubber Company v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. 788 71
Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., 154 Fed. 358 (C. C. A. 7th, 1907) 72

Schine Chain Theatres Inc. v. U. S., No. 10, Oct. Term, 1947 ..... 8, 11, 68
St. Louis Street Flushing Machine Co. v. Sanitary Street Flushing Machine Co., 178 Fed. 923 926-927 (C. C. A. 8th) 70
Sinko Tool & Mfg. Co. v. Casco Products Corporation, 89 F. (2d) 916-918 (C. C. A. 7th) 71
Southwest Kansas Oil & Gas Co. v. Argus Pipe Line Co., 141 Kan. 287, 39 P. (2d) 906 (1935) 96

PAGE

Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1 ..... 116, 145
Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 283 U. S. 163 83
Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 39-40 (1912) 76, 78
Steam Cutter v. Sheldon, Fed. Cas. No. 13,331 (C. C. D. Vt., 1872) 70
Straight Side Basket Corp. v. Webster Basket, 82 F. (2d) 245 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1936) 72
Terminal Warehouse Co. v. Penn. R. R. Co., 297 U. S. 500, 511, 515 134
Twin City Pipe Line Co. v. Harding Glass Co., 283 U. S. 353 96
U. S. v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 6th, 1898), aff'd 175 U. S. 211 81
U. S. v. American Bell Telephone Co., 167 U. S. 224 50
U. S. v. American Can Co., 230 Fed. 859 (D. Md., 1916) 115
U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106 145
U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 45 Fed. Supp. 387, aff'd 321 U. S. 707 96
U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, 321 U. S. 707 ..... 125, 146
U. S. v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300 ..... 112, 146
U. S. v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 Fed. 964 145
U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Company, 323 U. S. 173 ..... 23, 129, 131
U. S. v. Falcone, 311 U. S. 205 ..... 103, 120, 128
United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476 ..... 47, 48, 50, 58, 69, 72, 73, 75, 76, 77, 78, 80, 83
U. S. v. General Electric Co., 15 Fed. 2nd 715 ..... 50, 83
U. S. v. Griffith Amusement Company, et al., 68 Fed. Supp. 180 ..... 11, 23
U. S. v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693 113
U. S. v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 254 U. S. 155 145
U. S. v. New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, Inc., 263 U. S. 611 146
United States v. Line Material Co., 64 F. Supp. 970 (E. D. Wisc., 1946) 72, 73, 78, 80, 81

PAGE

United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 277, 278 (1942) 77, 78
U. S. v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26 145
U. S. v. Schine Chain Theatres Inc., et al., 63 Fed. Supp. 229 23
U. S. v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U. S. 214 145
U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of N. J., 47 F. (2d) 288 (E. D. Mo., 1931) 116
U. S. v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61 145
United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U. S. 32 (1918) 51, 54, 76
United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 67 F. Supp. 397 (Statutory Court, D. C., 1946) 72, 79
U. S. v. U. S. Steel Corporation, 251 U. S. 417 110
U. S. v. U. S. Steel Corporation, 223 Fed. 55, 160, 176 (D. N. J., 1915) 111
United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241 (1942) 78
United States v. Wayne Pump Co., 44 F. Supp. 949 (N. D. Ill., 1942); appeal dismissed, 317 U. S. 200 (1942) 72
Victor Talking Machine Co. v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 424 (C. C. A. 7, 1903) 134
Virtue v. Creamery Package Company, 227 U. S. 8, 33-4 ..... 48, 103, 120, 128
Vulcan Mfg. Co. v. Maytag Co., 73 F. (2d) 136, 138-139 (C. C. A. 8th), appeal dismissed 294 U. S. 734 71
Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Tri-City Radio Electric Supply Co., 23 F. (2d) 628 (C. C. A. 8th) 71
Westway Theatre v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830 (D. Md. 1940), affirmed on opinion below in 113 F. (2d) 932 (C. C. A. 4th, 1940) 53
White Bear Theatre Corp. v. State Theatre Corp. 129 F. (2d) 600 53
Wilson v. Rousseau, 16 U. S. 225 (1845) 70

SECONDARY AUTHORITIES

National Planning Commission (House Document No. 239, 78th Congress, First Session) 78
Restatement of the Law of Contracts 73, 82, 96
Senate Document No. 95, 76th Congress, July 17, 1939 78
T. N. E. C. Monograph, # 43 66
Williston on Contracts, Sec. 1645 96
Wood, Patents and Anti-Trust Law (C. C. H. 1942) 182-3 80

STATUTES

Clayton Act, Sec. 3 (15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 14) 90
Copyright Act of March 4, 1909 as amended August 24, 1912, U. S. C. A. Title 17 ..... 3, 44, 53
Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended, U. S. C. Sec. 29 1
Judicial Code, Sec. 238, as amended, 28 U. S. C. Sec. 345 2
Robinson-Patman Act (Title 15, Sec. 13, et seq., U. S. C. A.) 131
Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Act of July 2, 1890, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. 2, 127
U. S. Constitution, Art. 1, Sec. 8, par. 8 43

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947

UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY INC. (sued herein as Universal Corporation and Universal Pictures Company Inc.), UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES INC., and BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., Appellants, vs. THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellee.	No. 84
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant, vs. PARAMOUNT PICTURES INC., et al., Appellees.	No. 79

APPEALS FROM THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

BRIEF FOR UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., ET AL., APPELLANTS

Opinion Below

The case below is reported in 66 Fed. Supp. 323 and 70 Fed. Supp. 53 (R. 3504; 3659-3702).

Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of this Court to review by direct appeal the judgment and decree entered in this cause is conferred by Sec. 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 572; 15

U. S. C. Sec. 29), and Sec. 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. Sec. 345).

Probable jurisdiction was noted by this Court on June 23, 1947.

The Statutes Involved

The United States Statute under which the case was prosecuted was the Sherman Anti-Trust Act (Sections 1, 2 and 4, Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended; 15 U. S. C. A., Sections 1, 2 and 4; 4 F. C. A., Title 15, Sections 1, 2 and 4), the pertinent provisions of which are as follows:

> "Sec. 1. Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal; * * *"
>
> "Sec. 2. Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, * * *"
>
> "Sec. 4. The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1 to 7, inclusive, or section 15 of this chapter; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. * * *"

Also directly involved is the Copyright Act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. Part 1, pp. 1075-1088), as amended August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. Part 1, pp. 488-490), U. S. C. A. Title 17, and particularly that portion thereof which reads as follows:

"That any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this Act, shall have the exclusive right:

(a) To print, reprint, publish, copy and vend the copyrighted work;

(b) To translate the copyrighted work into other languages or dialects, or make any other version thereof, if it be a literary work; to dramatize it if it be a non-dramatic work; * * *

(d) To perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama or, if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced in copies for sale, to vend any manuscript or any record whatsoever thereof; to make or to procure the making of any transcription or record thereof by or from which, in whole or in part, it may in any manner or by any method be exhibited, performed, represented, produced, or reproduced; and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever;

* * * *

Sec. 5. That the application for registration shall specify to which of the following classes the work in which copyright is claimed belongs: * * *

(l) Motion-picture photoplays;

(m) Motion pictures other than photoplays: * * *

Statement

These are appeals (R. 3788) from a final decree (R. 3694) of a Statutory Court in and for the Southern District of New York, in a proceeding in equity (R. 3137) brought by the United States under Sec. 4 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, to enjoin five corporations, which, taken with their subsidiaries, are completely integrated businesses, and are the largest factors in all three branches of the motion picture business, i.e., production, distribution and exhibition, as well as the three corporations, which, taken with their subsidiaries, are next in line in respect of size, but are much smaller (pp. 15-20, post) and are not engaged in the exhibition business (G. X.* 146, F.F.  58, R. 3670).

The five largest defendants, together with their subsidiaries, will be referred to herein as Paramount, Loew's, RKO, Warner's and Fox, or collectively as the "major defendants" or "the producer-distributor-exhibitor defendants" or "the Big 5."

The three medium-sized corporations, taken with their subsidiaries, are not fully integrated, in that they have no theatre interests, but merely produce and/or distribute motion pictures (G. X. 146; pp. 19-20, post). The Universal appellants are in this category. They are completely independent of the other defendants, having no interlocking directors or officers or ties through security ownership (R. 215-217). The other such defendants are United Artists and Columbia. These three are collectively referred to herein, as they were upon the trial, as the "minor defendants", or the "little three".

---

*Government exhibits are thus designated.
Findings of Fact are thus designated.

Violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act were originally charged in respect of production, distribution and exhibition, but the charges in respect of production were abandoned (Government's Jurisdictional Statement,* p. 8).

1. The motion picture theatre.

There are over 18,000 motion picture theatres in the United States (F. F. 118, R. 3684). They may be broadly divided, in respect of function, into (1) first-run theatres, and (2) subsequent-run theatres. If affiliated with the major defendants, they are known as "affiliated theatres". If not so affiliated, as "independent theatres" or "independent circuit theatres".

First-run theatres qualify as such because they are the best-equipped, largest, best-located, best-managed, have the most responsible operators, and are most suitable for the first exhibition of the best feature pictures (R. 419-20, 702-3, 1510-11, 1697-1700, 1901-2, 2043-4). They are of the most importance, of course, when strategically located in the large metropolitan centers with the best box office potentialities (R. 1634-8, 1644-8).

It is in the first-run theatres that those feature motion pictures which are deemed to be of the best quality, in that they promise to be the best revenue-producers, are first shown (R. 561, 1698, 1907). In the 1943-44 season the number of high revenue-producing pictures ran from 100 to 150 at the most (G. X. 426).

The highest admission prices are, of course, charged to view such pictures in such theatres (R. 419, 1091, 1901-2).

The total number of first-run theatres does not appear in the record, but in 1945 there were approximately 522 thereof in the 92 cities over 100,000 population in the United States, of which some three-fifths were affiliated with the major defendants, and the rest independent (Ex. L-13). In 38 of these cities there were no independent first-run theatres. In 4 there were no affiliated first-run theatres, and in 50 there was competition between affiliated and independent theatres (Ex. L-13). In these 50 cities Universal licensed independent first-runs nearly as often as it did affiliated first-runs* (Ex. U. 1).

*Hereinafter sometimes referred to as Gov. Juris. St. or G. J. S.

There are numerous classes of subsequent-run theatres, exhibitions in which follow in order after those in the prior-runs, with clearance intervals of varying length in between. These clearance intervals give the prior-runs protection in respect of their exclusive rights. During such intervals the subsequent runs, which obtain without cost the benefit of the advertising and exploitation engaged in by the prior-runs, may further advertise and exploit the pictures which they will later show. Second-run theatres, generally speaking, are the second-best theatres. They charge the next highest admission prices. The succession may continue down as far as the seventh or eighth runs, or even further. These are the poorest theatres which charge the lowest admission prices (R. 416, 706-7, 1901-2, 1907-8).

A great many of the 18,000 motion picture theatres in the United States are grouped in circuits under common ownership and/or management (R. 738). The Amended and Supplemental Complaint (para. 17, R. 3145) defines a "circuit theatre" as a member of a "theatre circuit", which

*There was no showing whatsoever that in any of the cities in which Universal licensed the affiliated first-runs in preference to the independents, the latter should have been licensed "on the merits", because possessing better or more effectively operated theatres.

in turn is defined as "a group of more than five theatres, owned, controlled or managed by the same person, partnership or corporation; or a group of more than five theatres which combine with each other, through a common agent, in licensing film". An "independent theatre" is defined as any theatre which is not a member of a "theatre circuit".

2. The feature motion picture.

This case has to do with the licensing and exhibition of feature motion pictures, all of which are copyrighted (R. 658-9, 1460). Upon the Government's concession that the licensing and exhibition of "shorts", and "newsreels" was an unimportant part of the business, evidence in connection therewith was excluded (R. 190-196). Any motion picture which is over 4,000 feet in length is termed a feature motion picture, as contrasted with a "short", "newsreel", etc. (F. F. 1, R. 3660).

The cost of producing feature motion pictures ranges from a few hundred thousand dollars to several million dollars (R. 625-6, 672, 1895). Some types of feature motion pictures, such as the so-called "Westerns" (i.e., adventure or action pictures, so named because often dealing with activities in the Western part of the United States) are made at comparatively low cost. These are shown in the lower-class motion picture theatres (R. 1698, 910-11).

Features are classified by distributors as "top bracket", "second bracket", "third bracket", "fourth bracket" and "fifth bracket", depending upon their expected ability to draw at the box office as measured by test runs (R. 429).

Many theatres exhibit two features, often a high-bracket picture and a low-bracket picture, upon a program, and this is known as "double-featuring" (R. 1277, 1293).

Universal and Columbia, and Republic, Monogram and P. R. C., the three principal non-defendant national distributors, have specialized in producing lower-bracket features or program pictures (G. X. 426, 427), many of which are used as the second pictures in double-featuring (R. 1293-8, 1300-1, 1495, 543-6, 873-4, 910-11), instead of following the major defendants in producing mainly high and medium-bracket features. Thus out of an average of 45 to 50 feature pictures a year (exclusive of Westerns) produced and/or distributed by Universal (R. 1457), it was able to obtain a percentage of the gross receipts on an average of only ten (R. 1495). This is the usual method of licensing quality pictures (R. 430-1).

Many of the problems of the industry are due to the fact that quality feature pictures,* which are the money-makers, are in short supply relative to demand (R. 971, 1753-4). One of the principal reasons for this is the cost of producing such quality feature motion pictures. This runs as high as $3,500,000 (R. 625-6, 672, 1895), and the cost of producing feature pictures has increased to from 2 to 2½ times of what it was in 1937-8 (R. 625-6). If a motion picture theatre changes its program only once a week, but operates on a double-feature policy, it will require 104 feature pictures a year. If it changes its program two or three times a week, as a great many theatres do, it will require 208 or 312 feature pictures a year. Some theatres, indeed, change their programs every day (R. 1275, 1277, 1303).

The Government's interrogatories and requests for admissions were directed to two motion-picture seasons, to wit, September 1, 1936—August 31, 1937, which was the last season before the Petition was filed (July 20, 1938), and the season of 1943-44. The case was tried on an Amended and Supplemental Complaint filed November 14, 1940. Hence we are primarily, if not exclusively, concerned with conditions prior to the latter date. During the 1936-37 season there were 101 feature pictures in the three highest brackets released by the eight defendant distributors, of which Universal released only 4, all in the third bracket (G. X. 427). During the 1943-44 season, these eight distributors released 140 features in the three highest brackets, of which 99 were in the two highest brackets. No Universal picture was in the highest bracket, and it had nearly twice as many in the two lowest brackets as in the second and third highest brackets (G. X. 426).

*In its brief in Schine Chain Theatres Inc. v. U. S., argued at this Term, the Government conceded that there was no scarcity in "inferior" films (p 45).

Thus whenever two or more first-run theatres were in competition, as was usual in important situations, the demand for the limited number of successful pictures was bound to be great. Though the number of lower-bracket features released by the eight distributor defendants has been 3 to 5 times as many as top-bracket features, the top-bracket features collectively produce several times as much at the box office in the aggregate as do the much more numerous lower-bracket features (G. X. 426).

Prior to the filing on November 14, 1940, of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint, upon which the case was tried, the production and distribution of quality feature pictures, as among the eight distributor defendants, was almost completely in the hands of the "big five", except that United Artists distributed a substantial number thereof on behalf of independent producers (G. X. 427). During the season preceding the trial, although there had been some improvement in the quality of their pictures, it still remained true that Universal and Columbia had few pictures in the higher revenue-producing brackets, whereas most of the feature pictures produced and distributed by the "big five" were, even more emphatically, in such brackets (G. X. 426).

3. The first-run theatre as a show-window for quality feature pictures.

The box-office success of a feature picture which has cost a great deal to make depends upon the kind of exploitation it gets in the important first-run theatres in the larger cities. If a pictures does well in such theatres, it has long runs therein, and its prestige becomes established throughout the country, because people who have seen the picture talk about it, and the gross receipts are published in the trade papers and picked up all over the country by exhibitors (R. 654, 1515, 1624-7, 1646-8, 1634-8, 443-4). Thus the over-all success of a feature picture is mainly dependent upon the length of its runs in the first run houses.

In order to properly exploit a picture in the first and subsequent-run theatres, extensive national and local advertising is employed. The important pictures are the only ones which are extensively advertised nationally (R. 678-81, 1624-7).

In order to obtain proper exploitation in the first-runs, stable relationships* between the distributor and exhibitor are necessary to obtain proper cooperation in advertising and other matters necessary to the best exploitation (R. 1986-90, 2110, 1700-2, 1391).

*The Government's claim that our relationships with affiliated theatres in the larger cities were wholly stable during a four-year period is not borne out by the evidence (G. X. 147), which only shows that they were "for the most part" stable. Since such theatres were among our best customers, and only very infrequently would a better one, independently operated, come along, shifts initiated by us could hardly be expected.

4. The Government's complaint.*

(a) THE BASIC COMPLAINT.

The Government's basic complaint in this proceeding is that unreasonable restrictions of interstate commerce, in respect of admission prices, and in the granting of prior exhibition rights, detrimental to the public and/or to the small independent exhibitors, who were the competitors of the affiliated theatres in which the major defendants were interested, were imposed by the major defendants, through the exertion of monopolistic power flowing from their control of first-run theatres in most of the important domestic situations, particularly in the metropolitan centres, supplemented by their control of the great preponderance of the best revenue-producing feature pictures. Government's Closing Argument, R. 2546-2579, particularly R. 2576, 2556, 2549, 2547; Gov. Juris. Statement, pp. 7-8 (para. 2, 3, 5, 6), 17-19; Gov. brief in No. 79, page 131. In companion cases argued at this term, Schine Chain Theatres, Inc. et al. v. U. S. and U. S. v. Griffith Amusement Co. et al., the Government argued that large independent theatre chains had restrained and monopolized interstate commerce by means of their great buying power, but in our case introduced no evidence in this connection.

*Amended and Supplemental Complaint, para. 105, 124-5, 128, 129-132, 146, 150-165, 170-7, 178, 179, 180-8; R. 3137 et seq.; Government's Opening Statement, R. 5-32; Government's Jurisdictional Statement, pp. 3-4, 7-8, 17-23; Opinion, R. 3505-3511, 3549-50; Government's Closing Arguments, R. 2547-2602.

"The major defendants as distributors have collectively controlled and still control the major part of the first-class film supply, which enables them to set a pattern of run priority to which other distributors conformed in selling in any market in which the defendants' theatres are located."

In the present proceeding it emphasized the charge that the theatre chain of each major defendant constituted a monopoly in and of itself,* and that such monopolies, together with the power acruing from control of the large number of best-selling feature pictures produced and distributed by each major defendant, were combined through concerted action to impose the restrictions heretofore referred to.

The major form of relief which the Government demanded was that the major defendants be divested of their theatres, or in the alternative that licensing of feature pictures by a major defendant to any other major defendant be banned for 10 years. Injunctive relief against specific practices alleged to be illegal was also requested, but less insistently.

The Government's theory as to the complicity of the major defendants in a combination and conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act was along the following lines:

The distribution department of each major defendant can offer to the theatre chain of each other major defendant a large number of those quality feature pictures which promise to be the best revenue-producers. Each such theatre chain, greatly desiring such pictures, is in a position to induce its affiliated distribution department to refuse to license independent exhibitors desiring to license its pictures, and to license instead the theatre chain of a major defendant whose distribution department has quality feature pictures to offer. This because the independent exhibitor has no feature pictures to offer any distributor's affiliated theatres in return for the distributor's agreement to license its feature pictures to be exhibited by it.

*Universal, having no theatres, was, of course, not involved in this charge.

This opportunity, involved in the possession of great buying power by the major theatre chains and in control of the disposition of such a large proportion of the best-selling feature pictures by their affiliated distribution departments, was alleged by the Government to have been taken advantage of, and to have resulted in a monopolizing of interstate commerce by the major defendants, and in unreasonable restrictions thereof. No such opportunity was open to Universal, which, possessing no theatres, needed no pictures, and had no incentive to favor an exhibitor with an affiliated distribution department over an independent exhibitor.

The Government accordingly claimed that the major defendants, through their control of first-run theatres and of such a large proportion of the best-selling feature pictures, were able, through concerted action, to control admission prices in a great majority of the thousands of motion picture theatres in the United States located in cities and towns of over 25,000 population, and in nearly all of those located in cities of over 100,000 population, to the detriment of the public, and to obtain for themselves, at the expense of independent exhibitors, prior exhibition rights,* i.e., prior runs protected by unreasonably long clearances, to the best-selling feature pictures.

---

*The main bone of contention in respect of prior exhibition rights concerns clearance, i.e., the time interval which the distributor agrees with the exhibitor shall elapse between the completion of one run and the beginning of the next run, and the asserted requirement that it be "reasonable".

(b) THE CHARGE AGAINST UNIVERSAL AS DISTINGUISHED FROM THE CHARGE AGAINST THE MAJOR DEFENDANTS.

The basic charge against the Universal appellants, who possessed no theatres, on the basis of which the Government seeks to implicate them in the alleged conspiracy among the major defendants, and in like alleged conspiracies or monopolizing on the part of large independent theatre chains, is that, in licensing their feature pictures under copyright, they granted exclusive and restrictive licenses for limited times to exhibitors constituting the best, when not the only available, markets (which, by reason of the number and importance of the theatres in which the major defendants and the large independent theatre chains were interested, very frequently were chain theatres), accepted in such dealings admission price and clearance conditions which they had no power to alter, and, in so-called "franchises", committed their feature pictures, for a number of years to affiliated theatre chains by licensing contracts containing some provisions alleged to be more favorable* than those usually granted in similar contracts with the small independent exhibitor (pp. 21-22, 24-31, 94-99, post).

The Government also charged that in dealing with any exhibitor, however small, a distributor, whether integrated or non-integrated, and whatever its size, might not, in licensing copyrighted motion pictures upon successive runs for limited periods of time (1) require an exhibitor, on pain of losing run and clearance privileges, to maintain its current admission price, on the faith of which a film rental had been accepted, and by which it was frequently measured, and in accordance with which run and clearance terms had been granted, in order that it might not be free to decrease its film rental or to depreciate or destroy the valuable opportunity reserved by the distributor of obtaining further reward from the making of subsequent-run licenses, or (2) agree with a prior licensee that its license should be something less than exclusive for the duration of the copyright, in that after the lapse of a specified period of time thereafter the licensor might deliver the picture to a subsequent-run, or (3) measure royalties by a percentage of the charge made to the public to view the exhibition under copyright, or (4) offer to license its feature pictures in groups.

*No serious attempt was made to demonstrate that such contracts over-all were not more advantageous to the distributor, i.e., that the exhibitor did not pay for any advantages it obtained.

As against the major defendants, however, the Government claimed much more than the illegality of licenses under copyright, restrictive in respect of minimum admission price, which were exclusive for a limited time, and were protected by clearance provisions, and the measuring of royalties by a percentage of the gross receipts. Assuming the legality of all these provisions, it contended that since the major defendants had a vested interest in protecting their theatre-operating profits, they were extending their copyrights through such provisions, to protect such profits. This argument did not apply to the non-theatre-owning defendants such as Universal.

5. The defendants.

(a) PARAMOUNT

In 1944 Paramount had consolidated gross income of 150 million dollars (G. X. 405) and consolidated gross assets of 148 million dollars. (Moody's Manual of Investments, Industrials, 1946).

In 1945 Paramount and its subsidiaries had an interest in 1590 first and subsequent-run theatres (FF 117-118, R. 3683-4). It owned, operated or had an interest in first-run theatres in the following cities, among others: Atlanta, Boston, Canton (Ohio), Charlotte (N. C.), Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Duluth, Hartford, Houston, Kansas City (Mo.), Minneapolis, New Orleans, New York, Omaha, St. Paul, Salt Lake City and Toledo. The number of such first-run theatres which it had in cities over 100,000 population in the United States was around 100. It was also interested in first-run theatres in a great number of smaller cities and towns throughout the country. In varying numbers the theatres in which it had an interest were located in nearly every State in the Union. In Chicago it was interested in 47 theatres. In New York it had theatre interests in New York City, Buffalo and Rochester, among other localities. In California it had them in San Francisco and Los Angeles. In Massachusetts it had them in Boston, Springfield, Worcester, and dozens of other places. It had an interest in 27 theatres in St. Paul and Minneapolis. In each of the States of Michigan, Pennsylvania, Florida, Texas, North Carolina and Iowa it had an interest in theatres in dozens of different localities (Ex. L 13, G. X. 64, G. X. 161).

During the 1943-44 season Paramount released 31 feature pictures (not including any Westerns) out of the 335 such features released that year by all national distributors (F.F. 99, R. 3677). 5 of these grossed over 2 million dollars, and 14 over 1 million dollars. Only 1 grossed less than one-quarter million dollars (G. X. 426).*

*In this exhibit and G. X. 427 (for the 1936-37 season) the gross receipts brackets are as follows: (1) $2,000,000 and over; (2) $1,000,000 to $2,000,000; (3) $500,000 to $1,000,000; (4) $250,000 to $500,000; (5) less than $250,000.

(b) Fox

In 1944 Fox had consolidated gross income of 172 million dollars (G. X. 404) and consolidated gross assets of 145 million dollars (Moody, op. cit.).

In 1945 Fox and its subsidiaries were interested in 642 first and subsequent-run theatres (F.F. 117-118, R. 3683-4). It owned, operated or was interested in first-run theatres in Denver, Detroit, Kansas City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Milwaukee, Omaha, Sacramento, San Diego and Spokane, and in many smaller localities. The number of such first-run theatres in cities over 100,000 in the United States was 70 or more. It was interested in 250 theatres in California, 19 in Kansas City, 9 in Portland (Ore.), 11 in Seattle, and 30 in Milwaukee (Ex. L-13, G. X. 160, G. X. 24).

During the 1943-44 season Fox released 33 features (not including any Westerns) out of 335 such pictures released by all national distributors (F.F. 99, R. 3677). More than half of these grossed over a million dollars (G. X. 426).

(c) Loew's

In 1944 Loew's had consolidated gross income of 145 million dollars (G. X. 407) and consolidated gross assets of 190 million dollars (Moody, op. cit.).

In 1945 Loew's and its subsidiaries were interested in 157 first and subsequent-run theatres (F.F. 117-118, R. 3683-4). It owned, operated or was interested in first-run theatres in Akron, Canton, Cleveland, Dayton, Toledo and Columbus, Ohio; Baltimore, Md.; Bridgeport, Hartford and New Haven, Conn.; Boston, Mass.; Denver, Colo.;

Indianapolis, Ind.; Pittsburgh, Harrisburg and Reading, Pa.; Houston, Texas; Jersey City and Newark, N. J.; Louisville, Ky.; Kansas City and St. Louis, Mo.; Memphis and Nashville, Tenn.; New Orleans, La.; Providence, R. I.; Richmond, Va.; Washington, D. C.; Wilmington, Del.; and Atlanta, Georgia. It was interested in over 70 such theatres in New York City, including many first-runs. The number of its such first-run theatres in cities over 100,000 populations in the United States was about 50 (Ex. L-13, G. X. 163).

During the 1943-44 season Loew's released 33 features (not including any Westerns) out of the 335 such pictures released by all national distributors (F.F. 99, R. 3677). 23 of these grossed over a million dollars (G. X. 426).

(d) Warner

In 1944 Warner had consolidated gross income of 141 million dollars (G. X. 403) and consolidated gross assets of 183 million dollars (Moody, op. cit.).

In 1945 Warner and its subsidiaries were interested in 541 first and subsequent-run theatres (F.F. 117-118, R. 3683-4). It owned, operated or had an interest in first-run theatres in Akron, Albany, Baltimore, Bridgeport, Camden, Cleveland, Hartford, Jersey City, Los Angeles, Memphis, Milwaukee, Newark, N. J., New Haven, New York City, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, D. C., Wilmington, Worcester and Youngstown, Ohio. Its such first-run theatres in cities with over 100,000 population in the United States numbered over 50. It was interested in 78 theatres in Philadelphia, 24 in Pittsburgh and 19 in Washington, D. C. (Ex. L-13, G. X. 156).

During the 1943-44 season Warner released 19 feature pictures (not including any Westerns) out of the 335 such pictures released by all national distributors (F.F. 99, R. 3677). 9 of these grossed over 2 million dollars, and 13 grossed over a million dollars (G. X. 426).

(e) RKO

In 1944 RKO had a consolidated gross income of 84 million dollars (G. X. 406) and consolidated gross assets of 80 million dollars (Moody, op. cit.).

In 1945, RKO and its subsidiaries were interested in 273 first and subsequent-run motion picture theatres (F.F. 117-118, R. 3683-4). They were interested in first-run motion picture theatres in Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Kansas City (Mo.), Los Angeles, Indianapolis, Newark, Omaha, Providence, San Francisco, Rochester (N. Y.), and Washington, D. C. They were interested in over 40 first-run theatres in cities over 100,000 population in the United States (Ex. L-13).

During the 1943-44 season RKO released 38 feature pictures (not including any Westerns) out of the 335 such pictures released by all national distributors (F.F. 99, R. 3677). 13 of these grossed over a million dollars (G. X. 426).

(f) United Artists

United Artists' consolidated gross income for 1944 does not appear in the record. It apparently does not make public its consolidated gross assets.

It had no theatres and produced no motion pictures, being exclusively a distributor for feature pictures produced by independent distributors (F.F. 58, 53, R. 3670, 3669).

During the 1943-44 season United Artists released 16 feature pictures, not including any Westerns, out of the 335 such pictures released by all national distributors (F.F. 99, R. 3677). 4 of these grossed over a million dollars and 10 grossed over one-half million dollars (G. X. 426).

(g) Columbia

In 1944 Columbia had consolidated gross income of 37 million dollars (G. X. 413) and consolidated gross assets of 25 million dollars (Moody's, op. cit.).

It had no theatres, confining its operations to the production and distribution of motion pictures (F.F. 58, 44, R. 3670, 3667).

During the 1943-44 season Columbia released 41 feature pictures, exclusive of Westerns, out of the 335 such pictures released by all national distributors (FF 99, R. 3677). 6 of these grossed over a million dollars, but 30 grossed under half a million dollars (G. X. 426).

(h) Universal

In 1944 Universal had consolidated gross income of 51 million dollars (G. X. 408) and consolidated gross assets of 33 million dollars (Moody's, op. cit.).

It had no theatres, confining its operations to the production and distribution of motion pictures (G. X. 146, F.F. 58, 47-52, R. 3670, 3668-9).

During the 1943-44 season it released 49 feature pictures (exclusive of Westerns) out of the 335 such pictures released by all national distributors (F.F. 99, R. 3677). Half of these grossed under one-quarter million dollars, and none as much as 2 million dollars. In the 1936-37 season its gross consolidated income was only 14 million dollars (G. X. 408), and 32 out of the 40 features it released grossed less than $250,000 (G. X. 427).

6. The nature and character of the Government's evidence.

The Government called no witnesses, except two in rebuttal to collate statistical evidence. Its evidence consisted exclusively of documents and data obtained from the defendants through interrogatories and demands for admissions (Gov. Opening Statement, R. 6-7).

As recited in its Jurisdictional Statement, the plaintiff considers its case to rest mainly upon the following categories of evidence allegedly contained in the record (1) an exposition of the corporate structure of each defendant; (2) the general manner in which the major defendants' theatre holdings had been acquired, with an accurate description of their individual theatre holdings by name, location, and size; (3) the precise manner in which the major defendants jointly controlled, with each other and with other exhibitors, specific theatre operations; (4) the general forms of agreement used by all the defendants in licensing films and representative executed agreements by which they had licensed each other and their affiliated theatres; (5) tabulations of film rentals paid by their theatres to all distributors and received by the defendants as distributors from all theatres; (6) tabulations showing the pattern of distribution of feature films of all eight defendants among the principal theatres in the principal cities of the United States, and the restrictive provisions therein; and (7) arbitration and appeal board decisions (G. J. S., pp. 7-8).

The conclusions drawn in the Government's Jurisdictional Statement from the foregoing, upon which it founds its case against the non-theatre-owning defendants, were (1) that such defendants had "discriminated" in their licensing against small independent exhibitors, through doing the greater proportion of their business with affiliated exhibitors, by means of contracts allegedly containing certain more favorable provisions and (2) that the effect of the employment of "restrictive provisions" in licenses under copyright by such defendants was to maintain a uniform system of runs, clearances and admission prices in all areas, as had been fixed by the theatre-owning defendants acting in concert (G. J. S., pp. 7-8).

No exhibitor testified that he had been in any way injured by any of the activities of any of the defendants, much less by those of any of the three minor defendants.

The various defendants called as witnesses certain of their officers, agents and directors, together with officers and representatives of some of their subsidiaries. The only witness called by Universal was Scully, its Sales Manager. We believe that it can be fairly said that no evidence of any real consequence in support of the Government's case came in upon the defendants' cases.

The presiding judge at the trial, Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand, remarking upon what the Government had said in its opening about the three minor defendants, said: "It seems to me it is pretty slim" (R. 154). When the case was being summed up, he was still of this opinion, saying to Columbia counsel (R. 2725): "I never could see much of a case against you. I said so in the beginning, but in considering it further, I may yet be convinced that you are in it". In its opinion (R. 3517), after remarking that the control of distribution it had found closely resembled that appearing in Goldman Theatres v. Loew's, 150 Fed. 2nd 738 (C. C. A. 3rd, 1945), it said: "The defendants in the Goldman case were substantially the same as those here, except that Universal Corporation was there eliminated by agreement".

In U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., in this Court, 323 U. S. 173, in which the plaintiff proceeded against all eight distributors who are here, the lower court dismissed as against the major distributors because of the Government's undertakings in the Consent Decree, and as Mr. Justice Douglas in his opinion, at p. 176, said of the remaining three defendants: "The lower court found that only one had violated the Sherman Act", and that one was not Universal.* Nor was Universal involved in Bigelow, et al. v. R. K. O., 327 U. S. 251. In U. S. v. Schine Chain Theatres Inc., et al., 63 Fed. Supp. 229, now here on appeal, all of the distributors were dropped as defendants, and the Court said at p. 240: "We are not called upon in this suit to decide whether there were any violations by these defendants of the law as laid in the complaint. Paramount et al. are not parties here." Likewise in U. S. v. Griffith Amusement Company, et al., 68 Fed. Supp. 180, now here on appeal, all of the distributor defendants were dismissed prior to trial.

Finally it is important to note that reversal of the judgment as against Universal does not require a weighing of conflicting evidence bearing upon any of what we consider to be the evidentiary findings of fact, but only the determination of the proper ultimate legal conclusions to be drawn from such evidentiary facts. Thus the basic facts with respect to minimum admission price-fixing are undisputed.

---

*F.F. 148-163, which appear at pp. 1462-4 of the record in that case in this Court, discuss Universal's activities in detail, and find that they were either non-discriminatory against small independent exhibitors or favorable to them.

The five major defendants were dropped by reason of the Consent Decree. The three minor defendants, who did not consent, were presumably dropped in both these cases by reason of the fact that it was believed by the Government that the evidence was insufficient to justify asking a decree against them.

(F.F. 61, 62, 63, R. 3670). Only the ultimate legal conclusions drawn therefrom are contested (F.F. 64, 65, 66, 69, 70, 71, 72, R. 3670-3). So also as to clearances and runs the basic facts are undisputed, or there is no conflicting evidence with respect thereto. (F.F. 73, 74, 75, 76, 78, R. 3673-4). The ultimate legal conclusions properly to be arrived at therefrom are, however, in dispute (F.F. 81, 82, R. 3674). What are labelled findings with respect to franchises and master agreements (F.F. 88, 89, R. 3675) are clearly conclusions of law, the facts in this connection being uncontested (F.F. 92, R. 3676). The "block-booking" findings F.F. 93, 94, R. 3676), insofar as Universal is concerned, are supported by no evidence at all, as respects the critical element of conditioning. The "discrimination" findings (F.F. 110, 111, R. 3681-2) which resulted in no decretal provision, merely recite contractual provisions, and conclude as a matter of law that they unreasonably restrain trade. Lastly, there is an observation or argumentative conclusion, which is not a true finding of fact at all,* that the evils in the industry are attributable to non-competitive distribution practices and not to the ownership of theatres (F.F. 154, R. 3690). The findings contain many other such argumentative statements.

7. The salient facts relied upon as against Universal.

(a) Admission Prices.

In licensing feature motion pictures to an exhibitor the distributor makes a temporary bailment, for the period of the exhibition, of a positive print of the feature, to enable the exhibitor to exercise the intangible exhibition rights under copyright which are licensed to him (F.F. 61, R. 1460, G. X. 289-90).

*Obviously the government agrees with us here, because it states (br., p. 11) that it does not challenge "any of what we believe to be evidentiary findings," and thereafter strongly challenges this finding.

The better quality features are generally licensed for a royalty measured by a certain percentage of the exhibitor's gross receipts. This percentage may increase as the gross receipts go up, and there is frequently a guaranteed minimum to be paid. The poorer quality pictures are licensed for a flat rental. In fixing this flat rental, however, the distributor is generally, if not always, aware, through past experience, of what gross receipts have accrued to the particular theatre-owner in exhibitions of others of his pictures, and the flat rental, therefore, is necessarily based to a considerable extent upon what gross receipts are expected from the picture (R. 430-1, 570-2, 694-9, 1495, 1722-3, 1982-3, 725-7).

Exhibitors have found that it is impractical to vary their admission prices from day to day in accordance with their estimates of the comparative quality* of the pictures being shown. The public expects a consistent admission price, and would resent being asked on Wednesday to pay a higher price than on Monday, merely because the exhibitor believed that a better picture was being shown. Indeed,

---

*A few exceptional features which have cost exceptionally large amounts to produce, such as 'Gone With the Wind", "For Whom the Bell Tolls", "Song of Bernadette" and "Wilson", have been exhibited in recent years, prior to general release, at advanced prices, under what are known as "road-show" arrangements (R. 720-2). None of these pictures were distributed by Universal.

Admission prices in the evenings may differ from the daytime prices, or those on Saturdays, Sundays or holidays may differ from week-day prices, but the point is that prices for comparable playing time cannot, as a practical matter, be changed, depending upon what the exhibitor believes is the quality of the picture, or what distributor released it.

it is clear that the public might emphatically disagree with the exhibitor's judgments as to comparative quality (R. 722-3, 969, 1382-3).

From an exploitation standpoint, the conditions under which the first-run showing of any feature picture takes place are of great importance to its success in the first-runs and its future career in the subsequent-runs. In order to have the best conditions and to properly advertise the picture, the best theatres must be selected for the first-run showing, which theatres naturally charge the highest prices (pp. 5-7, ante).

Since the distributor, by reason of a continuing interest in the proper exploitation of his picture, upon which depends what film rental he gets in the aggregate for his picture, including subsequent-run licenses, is vitally interested in the maintenance of the exhibition conditions, and in the price differentials between runs, upon which he relies in the licensing of his pictures and in the granting of clearances, he generally requires a covenant from the exhibitor that the admission price shall not be reduced during the run of the particular picture licensed, so as to draw upon subsequent-run patronage, thereby depreciating, or perhaps destroying, the valuable opportunity reserved by the distributor of obtaining further reward from the making of subsequent-run licenses. In other words, a breach of such covenant results in the licensee's engaging in competition with the licensor, which the latter under its statutory monopoly has the right to prohibit (pp. 64-83, post).

The result of the foregoing practice, which is general among distributors, including all independent distributors (R. 544-5, 918), is that the minimum admission price specified is generally the same in the contracts of all distributors, it being the usual admission price currently charged by the exhibitor (F.F. 63, R. 433-4, 718, 968, 999, 1083-4).

(b) Clearance.

It is not customary in the motion picture business for distributors to exercise their full legal rights under their statutory copyright monopolies in order to give exhibitors exclusive licenses. Instead they license their feature pictures in a series of runs, with time intervals between the runs (R. 705-7, 418-23, 1895, 1908). Generally speaking, and up to a certain point at least, the longer the time interval between a prior and subsequent run, the more valuable the prior run is, and the more the prior licensee will have to pay for it in the way of film rental. Therefore, the prior licensee, who is interested only in his own run, wants the largest clearance he can obtain over subsequent runs, without paying too much for it. The licensor, however, is interested in the total aggregate revenue he can obtain from all runs. Under such circumstances it is obvious that a licensee must have an agreement from a licensor for clearance, since the film rental he pays is to a very considerable extent based on the amount of the clearance he gets (R. 422-3, 707-9, 712-13, 948, 150-2, 1376, 1707-9, 1895-1923).

Clearances given by the various distributors, including the so-called independent national distributors (R. 997, 1003, 1376), tend to be more or less uniform. The tendency toward uniformity is readily explicable without having to assume any illegal action among the major defendants, or on the part of large independent circuits, to employ their alleged monopolistic power in order to fix clearances which Universal would have no alternative but to adhere to. As has been heretofore pointed out, the amount of film rental paid by a prior-run exhibitor is a function of clearance, i.e., the longer and broader the clearance, the higher the film rental. The reward accruing to the prior-run exhibitor is correspondingly a function of clearance, because the longer and broader the clearance the more complete is his opportunity to induce all of the potential patronage, which is ready, willing and able to pay his admission price, to view the exhibition in his theatre. A clearance of definite length and breadth is therefore something of very concrete advantage to an exhibitor, which advantage is necessarily the same whatever distributor supplies the feature picture. On the other hand it is impossible for an exhibitor to buy feature pictures, from the various distributors, on a comparable price basis. Each feature picture is different from every other. Thus whereas standardized articles, for competitive reasons, tend to be sold at the same price, feature motion pictures, for the same reasons, tend to be sold on the same clearance, since one distributor, particularly a medium-sized one, anxious* to license a particular theatre cannot afford to offer less clearance than another thinks it fair to give.

It is also obvious that if a particular distributor gives a clearance longer than those of its competitors, it will be handicapped in licensing subsequent-runs in competition with such competitors, particularly as a difference in clear-

---

*As hereinafter pointed out (p. 102, post) theatres without competition, or having ineffective competition, which the Government claims is a very common situation (Gov. br., pp. 15-19), can virtually dictate their own terms to a distributor anxious to deal with the best outlet.

ances may interfere with an even flow of pictures to subsequent-runs* (R. 713-17, 948, 950-2, 1715, 1895-1908).

Likewise, each distributor is confronted with the same business factors and conditions in determining the clearance he desires to give (R. 423-4). With relatively few exceptions, therefore, the clearances granted by the different distributors to a particular theatre are uniform (R. 707-11, 977, 1003, 714-17, 1376, 1707-9, 1715).

That clearances ought to be uniform is an inarticulate major premise of the arbitration system set up by the District Court under the Consent Decree, and neither the arbitrators nor the Appeal Board ever prescribed different clearances for different distributors or for different pictures of one distributor (G. X. 1-5). They always prescribed one reasonable clearance, which thereupon appertained to the particular theatres involved. True, they prescribed it as the maximum allowable clearance, but they necessarily knew that it was inevitable that, as a practical matter, it be taken as the reasonable clearance, not only by the parties to the arbitration but by all other distributors (R. 712, 1447-9).

(c) Other Trade Practices.

Since Universal customarily produced from 45 to 50 feature pictures a year (R. 1456-7), and since there are 18,000 motion picture theatres in the United States, with a large percentage of which on the average Universal had dealings (R. 1468, 1457-8), many hundreds of thousands of transactions would have been involved had it licensed its feature pictures theatre by theatre and picture by picture. Instead of doing this, it offered its entire season's product at one time by title and description, prior to production, and, if unable to license its entire line of motion pictures to an exhibitor, obtained a commitment for as many thereof as possible from such exhibitor or some other exhibitor (R. 1468-73). It frequently contracted to license the same to exhibitors operating chains of theatres, and it is claimed that these wholesale buyers got better terms in some respects than small buyers. The arrangement under which a distributor commits its pictures to an exhibitor operating such a theatre chain is known as a "master agreement".* Prior to the Consent Decree the major defendants "block-booked" (R. 547-9). Columbia also "blocked-booked" (R. 1272), but United Artists did not, because its deals with independent producers required each producer's pictures to be sold separately. Independent exhibitors desire to purchase their pictures in large groups, as it gives them assurance of product (R. 427-8, 1257-9, 1272, 1275-7).

*This is particularly plain when a subsequent-run theatre, which must, of course, plan its programs in advance, double-features, showing, as is customary, a feature picture of two different distributors, such as Loew's and Universal. If the clearances were different, the pictures would not be available at the same time for complementary showing.

Many theatres and chains of theatres, particularly independents, wanted to be assured of Universal product over a period of years (R. 1469, 427-8). Universal, therefore, entered into franchise arrangements, and at the time of the trial had 727 of these with independent exhibitors, 43 with affiliated exhibitors (R. 1472-84). Very few of these franchises were over two or three years in length (Ex. U-2).

---

*This has to be supplemented by "deal sheets" containing the provisions governing the exhibition of particular feature pictures in each particular theatre.

(d) First-run Licensing

The Government directed much of its evidence to the licensing of first-run theatres in 92 cities in the United States having a population of 100,000 or over. In 38 of these cities there were no independent first-run theatres. In 4 there were no affiliated first-run theatres. In the remaining 50 cities Universal licensed nearly as many independent theatres as it did affiliated theatres (Ex. U-1).

8. The decree.

Sec. II of the Decree (R. 3695-8) deals with the sanctions imposed upon distributors. They are forbidden to require exhibitors to maintain current admission prices (sub-div. 1). They are forbidden to agree among themselves to maintain a "system of clearances". They are restrained from agreeing with exhibitors to maintain a "system of clearances", but it is not made clear what "system of clearances" means (sub-div. 2). Clearances between theatres not in substantial competition are banned (sub-div. 3). The test of the validity of a clearance granted to a theatre in substantial competition with another is stated to be whether it is "in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted" (sub-div. 4). The burden of proof of sustaining the legality of any clearance is placed upon the distributor (sub-div. 4).

Distributors are restrained from making or further performing franchises, formula deals and master agreements (sub-divs. 5 & 6). They are further restrained from making or further performing any license in which the right to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon the licensee taking one or more other features (sub-div. 7). In the event that any features have not been trade-shown prior to the granting of a license for more than one feature, the licensor is required to permit the licensee to reject 20% of such features (sub-div. 7).

The sole and exclusive method to be followed by all defendant distributors in licensing their features in the future is laid down in substance as follows (sub-div. 8):

(a) Every exhibitor is to have an opportunity to exhibit a feature picture upon some run, and the picture must be offered upon uniform terms to all who would exhibit it upon such run;

(b) Licenses shall be granted without discrimination in favor of old customers, affiliated theatres or others, and shall be granted solely "upon the merits". What "the merits" means is not defined, except as forth in the next sub-division;

(c) Where a distributor desires to offer his feature picture in accordance with the usual run system, he must ask for bids from all exhibitors in the competitive area. In asking for such bids, a distributor must state the flat rental acceptable to it for a specified playing time, the time when the exhibition is to commence, the availability, and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run. Exhibitors may bid in terms of flat rentals, percentage of gross receipts, or other form of rental, and shall specify the clearance and playing time desired. The distributor may reject all offers, but if he accepts any, must grant the license "to the highest responsible bidder,* having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor".

(d) Each license shall be taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture.

A distributor may not arbitrarily refuse to license a feature on a particular run to a particular exhibitor (subdiv. 9).

Questions Presented

1. Whether a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor of copyrighted feature motion pictures violates the Sherman Act by granting restrictive licenses to small exhibitors, which are exclusive for limited periods of time, and the exclusivity of which is protected by agreement not to license others during further limited periods of time, when the restriction is against a reduction in the current admission price of the exhibitor, upon the basis of which the license fee is negotiated, and is frequently measured, and reduction in which would depreciate or destroy the value of the unlicensed subsequent runs remaining in the hands of the licensor.

2. Whether such a licensor may, instead of exercising its full legal right to agree with licensees to grant them exclusive licenses limited only by the duration of the copy-

*In fact the identity of the "highest responsible bidder" cannot be determined until after the run-off of the picture, when any bid is in percentage terms. Thus a bid of $1,000 cannot be compared with a bid of 40% of the gross receipts. Nor is a bid of 50% of the gross receipts by theatre A necessarily higher than 40% by theatre B. The latter may have more seats, a better location, physical appointments and management. Moreover, through experience, the distributor may know that B is responsible and have no adequate knowledge as to A.

rights, agree with them for exclusive licenses for shorter terms, and, in the aid of the exclusivity of such licenses, further agree that it will not license others for given lengths of time thereafter.

3. Whether such a licensor may properly provide for royalties measured by a percentage of what the licensee charges the public to view the exhibition of the pictures under copyright.

4. Whether such a licensor, requiring well-established show-windows for its pictures, may commit itself to an exhibitor operating a number of theatres, and requiring a well-established source of supply for feature pictures, to grant such exclusive licenses for limited periods of time, protected by clearance periods, upon all its copyrighted pictures released during a given period of years, i.e., grant what are known as "franchises".

5. Whether the legality of a specific clearance depends upon its "reasonableness", and if so, whether the licensor ought to determine the "reasonableness" of a clearance in the light of the need of the licensee for protection against subsequent-runs, or in the light of the economic desires of the subsequent runs, and not in the light of the normal and reasonable relationship thereof to the right of the licensor to obtain pecuniary reward in exploiting his copyright monopoly.

6. Whether or not a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor of copyrighted feature motion pictures may legally offer the same in a group and license such pictures to the exhibitor among competing exhibitors who is willing to take the greatest number thereof.

7. Assuming that the major defendants, each of whom is interested in a large number of motion picture theatres, first-run and subsequent-run, located in various parts of the United States, and who in the aggregate distribute most of the best revenue-producing feature pictures, or large independent circuits, were engaged in combinations and conspiracies to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce, pursuant to which they were able to fix and determine priorities in run, and to fix and determine clearances and admission prices, not only for their own theatres but for substantially all the important motion picture theatres in the United States, did this compel a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor to choose between (1) refraining from licensing its feature pictures to such theatres in the manner heretofore described, or (2) becoming implicated in such alleged combinations and conspiracies.

8. Under the conditions assumed in the last preceding question, was a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor legally entitled to negotiate film rentals with chain theatres, on the basis of runs, clearances and admission prices fixed by them, and which it had no power to alter.

9. Under the conditions assumed in question No. 7, does the fact that the major defendants have obtained franchises from a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor, which franchises it is assumed were legally granted to secure firm outlets for the product of such distributor, but, it is further assumed, were made use of by the major defendants in the effectuation of a combination and conspiracy, mean that the injunction against enforcing such franchises must run against the licensor as well as against the licensee.

10. Is it proper to draw an inference of participation in such a combination and conspiracy against such a distributor, from the fact that the admission prices and clearances which it specifies in dealing with particular licensees are, by and large, similar to those specified by other distributors, when such similarity can be reasonably accounted for (1) by the business necessity which requires the licensee exhibitors to charge a consistent admission price from day to day, irrespective of what distributor's pictures are being shown, which admission price all the distributors require, in the exercise of their rights under copyright, shall not be reduced, and (2) by the business convenience or necessity which suggests or dictates to an exhibitor that he operate on the same clearance from all distributors, and the inability of such a distributor, desiring to license its feature pictures to a particular exhibitor, to refuse to grant as great a clearance as has proved acceptable to the other distributors.

11. Is a licensor of feature motion pictures, which has no theatres, and which distributes a very small proportion of the best-drawing pictures, employing legal licensing methods, properly to be implicated in an alleged conspiracy among the five largest companies in the industry, who collectively are interested in most of the best theatres and control most of the best-drawing pictures, by reason of the fact that such licensor does a high proportion of its business with such companies.

12. Does the Sherman Act and the Constitution authorize a court of equity, instead of confining itself to injunctive relief and/or ordering the dissolution of any existing monopolies, to impose a mandatory system of competitive bidding, regulating in detail the operations of non-theatre-owning distributors, who are not public utilities.

13. Assuming that some sort of decree should be made against the appellants, are the provisions of the decree entered by the Court below with respect to trade practices legally authorized.

Specification of Assigned Errors to be Urged

In their Assignments of Error the Universal appellants have specified in detail the respects in which they contend that the Court below erred in making its findings of fact (Assignments of Error, 1-28, R. 3789-93); in making its conclusions of law (Assignments of Error, 29-33, 92, 103, R. 3793-4, 3802-3); in framing its decree (Assignments of Error, 34-61, 93-99, 102, R. 3794-3797, 3802-3); in failing to make findings proposed by Universal which ought to have been made in order to arrive at proper conclusions of law (Assignments of Error, 62-91, R. 3797-3802); in failing to conclude that the Universal appellants did not participate in any combination and conspiracy, and that a decree of dismissal should be entered as to each of them (Assignments of Error, 104-105, R. 3804); and in failing to grant motions to dismiss the Petition and Amended and Supplemental Complaint made by the Universal appellants (Assignment of Error, 101, R. 3803).

Such assignments of error, all of which the Universal appellants regard as material to the issues presented in this brief, are discussed under appropriate headings herein.

Summary of Argument

A non-theatre-owning licensor of copyrighted feature motion pictures is entitled, by virtue of its statutory monopoly, to grant restrictive and/or exclusive licenses, in which the royalties payable are measured by a percentage of what the licensee charges the public to view the exhibiton under copyright. Such licenses, when granted to small independent exhibitors, admittedly not engaged in any combination or conspiracy to restrain or monopolize interstate commerce, certainly do not involve the licensor in any violation of the Sherman Act.

In such licenses, the licensor may forbid the licensee to compete with it except to a limited extent, and is not required to permit the licensee to compete with it to the fullest extent or not at all. Thus when a licensor exploits his statutory monopoly by a series of exclusive licenses which are limited in time, and which are protected in their exclusivity by agreements not to license others during further periods of time, and the value of the subsequent-run licenses remaining in the hands of the licensor, after the granting of a prior-run license, depends to a large extent on the differential between the admission price charged on the prior run and the admission prices charged by the subsequent-runs, the licensor may properly provide in the prior-run licenses against a reduction in the current admission price of the licensee, which reduction would depreciate or destroy the value of the unlicensed residue remaining in the hands of the licensor. The fact that film rental is to a large extent based on the admission price charged also justifies the restriction.

Such a licensor, in exploiting his statutory monopoly under copyright, is not limited to granting an exclusive license for the duration of the copyright. It may grant a series of exclusive licenses for limited times, and, in aid of the exclusivity of such licenses, further agree that it will not license others for given lengths of time thereafter. In so doing it is not exceeding its legal rights but is, on the contrary, refraining from fully exerting the right to exclude which belongs to it by virtue of its statutory monopoly.

Such a licensor, granting restrictive and exclusive licenses, may properly provide for royalties measured by a percentage of what the licensee charges the public to view the exhibition under copyright, this being a fair and customary method of measuring royalties.

Such a licensor may properly commit itself to an exhibitor, operating a number of theatres, to grant it restrictive and exclusive licenses under its copyrights, for limited times, protected by clearance periods, for all copyrighted pictures released during a given period of years, this amounting to no more than dealing on a wholesale basis with a customer as one finds him, and the obtaining of firm outlets for the distributor's pictures. If the licensee, by reason of the fact that it is involved in a combination and conspiracy to monopolize, is able to employ, and does employ, such franchises in effectuating its illegal aims, the franchises it has been granted should certainly be cancelled, but no injunction should issue against the licensor unless it has actually joined mind and hand with the licensee in its illegal activities.

Clearance is not a restriction upon the licensee, and hence its legality does not depend upon whether it is normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the licensor. In agreeing to grant exclusive licenses for limited periods separated by agreed-upon clearance periods, the licensor is refraining from exercising to the fullest extent the rights granted to him to exclude all others for the duration of his copyright, and he is not required to limit himself to what may be considered to be "reasonable" clearances in the light of the necessities of the licensee for protection against subsequent-runs, or in the light of the economic desires of the subsequent runs. Were it otherwise, there is nothing to show that Universal granted any "unreasonable" clearances.

The right of a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor of copyrighted feature motion pictures to grant restrictive and exclusive licenses on percentage terms is not diminished by the fact that theatre chains who are its licensees may be engaged in combination and conspiracies to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce, pursuant to which runs, clearances and admission prices, not only for their own theatres, but for substantially all the important motion picture theatres in the United States, have been fixed. To hold otherwise would mean that such a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor would be deprived of its best, if not its only available, markets, or at the least of the right to license its copyrighted feature motion pictures in such markets in accordance with its legal rights.

In thus licensing its pictures, the obvious fact that such a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor may have to negotiate film rentals on the basis of runs, clearances and admission prices it is unable to alter, does not change the situation. Nor is it any evidence of participation in any such assumed combination and conspiracy that such medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor receives a large proportion of its film rentals from theatres which are affiliated with the members of such an assumed combination and conspiracy. Obviously those who are assumed arguendo to dominate the exhibition business in particular localities will control the theatres which will afford the best, and sometimes the only, available markets, for the feature pictures of such a distributor.

If it be assumed that there were no such combinations and conspiracies, then it is obvious that the Universal appellants were not guilty of participation in any combination or conspiracy.

If such a distributor has the right, as we think it clear that it has, to require its licensees under copyright to maintain their admission prices, to protect its own interests, then the business necessity which requires an exhibitor to charge a consistent admission price from day to day, irrespective of what distributor's pictures are being shown, makes it inevitable that there be uniformity in the admission prices specified in the licenses of all distributors embodying such a legally permissible clause in their contracts.

Likewise the similarity of the clearances specified by Universal to those specified by other distributors, in licensing particular theatres, to the extent that it exists, is readily explained. Exhibitors, for reasons of business convenience and necessity in arranging their programs, do not want different clearances from the various distributors. Universal, if it desires to license its feature pictures at all to a particular exhibitor, cannot refuse to grant a clearance thus required by the exhibitor for practical operating reasons, and which has proved acceptable to the other distributors. As a matter of sheer competitive necessity it can do no less, the exhibitor being in a position to enforce its demands.

Such a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor of copyrighted feature motion pictures is not restricted to offering such pictures one at a time, but may legally offer all of the same in a group and license that exhibitor, among competing exhibitors, who is willing to take the greatest number thereof. Even if such a distributor did condition the licensing of one feature motion picture upon the licensee's willingness to accept others, of which there is no proof as against the Universal appellants, this would not be contrary to the Sherman Act, in view of the non-monopolistic situation of the licensor and the lack of any showing of unreasonably restrictive effects upon competition.

Assuming that a decree of some sort should issue against the Universal appellants, the imposition of a mandatory system of competitive bidding, regulating in detail the operations of a non-theatre-owning distributor which is not a public utility, is unauthorized by statute or the Constitution. The Court should confine itself to injunctive relief and/or ordering the dissolution of any existing monopolies, and not usurp legislative power by prescribing administrative regulations.

The various provisions of the decree with respect to minimum admission prices, clearances, franchises, master agreements and block-booking require revision in any event.

ARGUMENT

Part One

UNIVERSAL, IN LICENSING ITS FEATURE MOTION PICTURES UNDER COPYRIGHT TO INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS, NOT CLAIMED BY THE GOVERNMENT TO HAVE BEEN ENGAGED IN A COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY TO VIOLATE THE SHERMAN ACT, WAS ENTITLED TO GRANT RESTRICTIVE AND EXCLUSIVE LICENSES OF THE CHARACTER HERETOFORE DISCUSSED, WHICH PROHIBIT THE REDUCTION OF CURRENT ADMISSION PRICES, SPECIFY CLEARANCES, AND PROVIDE FOR ROYALTIES MEASURED BY A PERCENTAGE OF THE ADMISSION PRICE.

1. In General.

All of the feature motion pictures licensed by Universal are copyrighted (R. 658-9, 1460, 1723). When they are licensed for exhibition, no title passes to any physical thing, since the positive print which is furnished to the licensee to run through his projector, is temporarily bailed, and remains at all times the property of the licensor, who thereafter will furnish it successively to numerous subsequent-run licensees (G. X. 289-90, R. 1460). Such cases as Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U. S. 337 and Boston Store v. American Graphophone Co., 246 U. S. 8, condemning as illegal attempts by copyright-owners and patentees to fix the resale prices of articles to which title had passed are therefore entirely inapplicable.

Article I, Section 8, paragraph 8 of the United States Constitution reads as follows: "To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries". Patents and copyrights are thus dealt with pari passu.

Under the Copyright Act of March 4, 1909, 35 Stat. Part 1, pp. 1075-88, as amended August 24, 1912, 37 Stat. Part 1, pp. 488-90, the owner of a copyright of a motion picture is given the exclusive right, inter alia, to "publish" it, and "to exhibit, perform, represent, produce or reproduce, it in any manner or by any method whatsoever". (Emphasis ours.) In exhibiting the copyrighted feature picture the exhibitor also "performs" a drama and "reproduces" the original performance. Kalem Co. v. Harper Bros., 222 U. S. 55; Patterson v. Century Productions, 93 F. (2d) 489; M. G. M. v. Bijou Theatre Co., 3 Fed. Supp. 66.

The nature of the copyright monopoly is discussed by Chief Justice Holmes, speaking for an unanimous court, in Fox Film Corporation v. Doyal, 286 U. S. 123, at p. 127, where he says:

> "A copyright, like a patent, is 'at once the equivalent given by the public for benefits bestowed by the genius and meditations and skill of individuals and the incentive to further efforts for the same important objects' ". Kendall v. Winsor, 21 Howe, 327, p. 328; Grant v. Raymond, 6 Pet. 218, 241.

He further says at page 130:

> "Copyright is a right exercised by the owner during the term, at his pleasure, and exclusively for his own profit, and forms the basis for extensive and profitable business enterprises". (Emphasis ours.)

And at page 131:

> "Royalties from copyrights stand in the same position as royalties from the use of patent rights, > and what we have said as to the purposes of the Government in relation to copyrights applies as well mutatis mutandis to patents which are granted under the same constitutional authority to promote progress of science and useful arts".

In Interstate Circuit Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, pp. 227-8, this Court pointed out that "the owners of the copyright of a motion picture film acquire the right to exhibit the picture and to grant an exclusive or restrictive license to others to exhibit it." (Emphasis ours.)

Speaking, in a recent case, of the right of a patentee to grant limited or restrictive licenses, this Court said in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. U. S., 309 U. S. 436, p. 456:

> "He (the patentee) may grant licenses to make, use or vend, restricted in point of space or time, or with any other restriction upon the exercise of the granted privilege, save only that by attaching a condition to his license he may not enlarge his monopoly and thus acquire some other which the statute and the patent together did not give." (Emphasis ours).

2. The minimum admission price restriction.

The only restriction contained in Universal's licenses under copyright with respect to which the Government makes any serious contention is that relating to the minimum admission price to be charged by the exhibitor for viewing an exhibition of the copyrighted picture under the license.* The minimum admission price thus specified is invariably the current admission price usually charged by the exhibitor (F. F. 63, R. 433-4, 718, 968, 999, 1083-4). This admission price is the same, irrespective of what distributor's pictures are being shown, and must necessarily be, since public acceptance for varying admission prices cannot be obtained (pp. 25-26, ante). Universal, a medium-sized distributor, does not and cannot possibly set its own price, even in the case of a small independent exhibitor—much less in the case of a large theatre chain, and is therefore content to protect itself against change in an existing price on the faith of which it has accepted a film rental, frequently measures its film rental, and has granted clearance and run. No limitation is placed upon the exhibitor's right to charge more than this price, and thus to fix his own terms for any additional entertainment provided or other motion pictures shown (G. X. 289-290). There is thus no attempt whatsoever to extend the scope of the statutory monopoly.

*Clearance, as hereinafter explained, is not a restriction upon the licensee or upon anyone else who is entitled to complain about it. If it were, its legality would not be affected, since it is normally and reasonably related to the licensor's pecuniary reward.

If the exhibitor does reduce his admission price below the minimum, the distributor is given the right (a) to terminate the license; or (b) to reduce the amount of clearance; and (c) if no clearance has been granted, he may delay notice of availability for not more than a specified time, and any run which has been granted is deemed revoked. All that these provisions enable the licensor to do is to compensate for the changed situation, by withdrawing wholly or partially privileges granted on the faith of the admission price being charged.* If the distributor does not terminate the license, the exhibitor is required to account for all admissions on the basis of the minimum admission prices specified or any higher admission prices actually charged (G. X. 289-290). In other words, the royalty which he has to pay the distributor is measured by a percentage of the admission price charged at the time the license is made.

*A change in the admission price policy of an exhibitor "would not only affect the film rental in" the theatre making the change, "but it would also affect . . . the film rental in the subsequent theatres, because if the prior-run theatres reduce their admission prices, then the subsequent theatres could not continue to charge the admission prices that they have been charging" (R. 726).

The minimum admission price provision in Universal's licenses is, therefore, a covenant against change of position, and the remedy given to the distributor is not damages for breach of contract, but, at his election, the power to terminate the license, or to adjust its terms to what they would have been had the licensor been advised of the licensee's intention prior to the making of the license.

In exhibiting the copyrighted motion picture through the use of the positive print which has been bailed to him, the exhibitor performs the very acts he is licensed to perform. The restriction against reducing his regularly charged admission price is, therefore, in the strictest sense a limitation upon the grant.

In asserting that such limitation is wholly legal,* Universal relies upon Bement v. Harrow, 186 U. S. 70 (1902), U. S. v. General Electric, 272 U. S. 476, and the numerous cases which follow them, but in view of the fact that the licensor in those cases, unlike our case, was permitted to fix the price on articles to which the licensee at all times had title, in view of the further fact that Universal's licensees do not compete with it so long as they conform to the terms of their licenses, in view of the further fact that Universal merely provided against change in a price position already assumed by the licensee, and the still further fact that Universal's copyrights completely cover the feature picture licensed, Universal believes that its position is very much stronger. It is in fact merely exercising its right to license in such a way as to exclude competition from its licensees engaged in a separate branch of the business.

*It is important to note that despite the fact that the Consent Decree was intended to correct the licensing practices in the industry deemed by the Government to be forbidden by the Sherman Act, it contains no restriction whatsoever against the licensor's prescribing minimum admission prices (R. 3373 et seq.).

The Bement and General Electric cases involved patent licenses to make, use and vend. This Court held that it was legal for the patentee to forbid its licensee to undersell it, when disposing of articles it, the licensee, had itself made, and therefore at all times had title to. The rationale thereof was that the patentee might require of a licensee, even a competitor, that he stipulate not to compete with him, except to the extent authorized, e.g., that he would not compete in respect of price.

3. Clearance.

It is well settled that a patentee may transfer the "exclusive right" given to him by the statute, by assigning the same to another, or by licensing the exclusive exercise of the same to another. Bement v. National Harrow Company, 186 U. S. 70, 94; Virtue v. Creamery Package Company, 227 U. S. 8, 36-7; Independent Wireless Telegraph Company v. Radio Corporation of America, 269 U. S. 459, 469-73; United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, 489; Becton, Dickinson & Co. v. Eisele & Co., 86 F. (2d) 267 (C. C. A. 6th), certiorari denied 300 U. S. 667.

It has never been questioned, so far as we know, but that a copyright owner may do likewise, and, as heretofore pointed out, this Court has definitely approved the validity of an exclusive license under copyright in Interstate Circuit Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, pp. 227-8.

The exclusive license, whether under a patent or under a copyright, is an agreement with the licensee that no others will be licensed, and that he alone may exercise the rights licensed to him under the statutory monopoly. Overman Cushion Tire Co. v. Goodyear, 59 Fed. (2d) 998 (C. C. A. 2nd), certiorari denied Kelly-Springfield Tire Co. v. Overman, 287 U. S. 651.

It is likewise well settled that the owner of a patent or copyright monopoly may refrain from exercising his rights thereunder, or from licensing others to do so. Thus Chief Justice Holmes, speaking for an unanimous court in Fox Film Corporation v. Doyal, 286 U. S. 123, p. 127 said:

"The owner of the copyright, if he pleases, may refrain from vending or licensing and content himself with simply exercising the right to exclude others from using his property. Compare Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Eastern Bag Co., 210 U. S. 405, pp. 422, 424."

In Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386, this Court said:

> "A patent owner is not in the position of a quasi-trustee for the public or under any obligation to see that the public acquires the free right to use the invention. He has no obligation either to use it or to grant its use to others. If he discloses the invention in his application so that it will come into the public domain at the end of the 17 year period of exclusive right he has fulfilled the only obligation imposed by the statute. This has been settled doctrine since at least 1896. Congress has repeatedly been asked, and has refused, to change the statutory policy by imposing a forfeiture or by a provision for compulsory licensing if the patent is not used within a specified time. The governing rule is quoted in Chapman v. Wintroath, 252 U. S. 126, at 137, 64 L ed 491, 495, 40 S Ct 234:

'A party seeking a right under the patent statutes may avail himself of all their provisions, and the courts may not deny him the benefit of a single one. These are questions not of natural but of purely statutory right. Congress, instead of fixing seventeen, had the power to fix thirty years as the life of a patent. No court can disregard any statutory provisions in respect to these matters on the ground that in its judgment they are unwise or prejudicial to the interests of the public.' United States v American Bell Teleph. Co., 167 U. S. 224, 247 42 L ed 144, 156, 17 S Ct 809."

In licensing its copyrighted feature motion pictures in a series of exclusive runs, followed by clearance periods agreed upon with the licensee, in aid of the exclusivity, Universal was clearly within its legal rights, since such arrangements diminish the exclusivity it is legally entitled to give, i.e., exclusive rights for the duration of the copyright. If, by reason of its statutory monopoly, it can properly agree with its licensee that it will never license anyone else, it can certainly agree that following an exclusive right for a limited time, and in aid thereof, it will not license anyone else for a further limited period of time, particularly since it is, at no time, required to license anybody.

4. Royalties measured by a percentage of the licensee's selling price.

This was the method of measuring royalties employed by General Electric in its license to Westinghouse (15 F. (2d) 715, 718) which was approved by this Court in U. S. v. General Electric Company, 272 U. S. 476. It is a widely used method of measuring royalties, and is particularly appropriate to the motion picture business in view of the impossibility of estimating the public appeal of a feature picture. Likewise it is the fairest method for both the distributor and the exhibitor, since the royalty paid is in proportion to the success of the picture.

5. Long term agreements to grant exclusive licenses for limited periods on all Universal feature pictures made with exhibitors operating a number of theatres.

Exclusive licenses under patents and copyrights, which may include a number of patents or copyrights, frequently run for the duration of the statutory monopolies. In the case of an exclusive license, the licensor is thus committed to the licensee to exclude all others for a long period of years in respect of the patents or copyrights.

In licensing its copyrighted pictures, Universal frequently made agreements committing its numerous statutory monopolies, produced over a period of years, to the exclusive use of particular licensees, for relatively short periods of time in successive runs. There is, we submit, no logical basis for differentiating between the two situations. Restraint and legally permissible discrimination are the essence of both. U. S. v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U. S. 32, 57.

Likewise a patentee may legally license his patent or patents to a manufacturer who has numerous factories in which he proposes to manufacture the patented article, or even to such a one who completely dominates the business. Such manufacturer may have a great competitive advantage over other licensees who have only one factory, in being enabled to manufacture more cheaply, etc. It is submitted, however, that the patentee's action is perfectly legal, and that there is no logical basis for differentiating between it and the practice of Universal in licensing an exhibitor who operates a number of theatres.

6. Block-booking.

As defined by the court below "block-booking" includes the connotation of conditioning the licensing of one picture upon the acceptance of others (R. 3696, 3515, 3659-60). There is no evidence that Universal indulged in any such practice. It merely licensed that exhibitor who was willing to take the greatest part of its pictures at a satisfactory price (R. 1468-1473). Assuming the contrary, however, its action would be legal since it is a non-monopolistically situated distributor, and the practice was not shown to have any unreasonably restrictive effects. Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421, 428; Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corp., 57 F. (2d) 152 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1932).

I.

A LICENSOR OF COPYRIGHTED FEATURE MOTION PICTURES, INSTEAD OF EXERCISING HIS FULL LEGAL RIGHT TO GRANT AN EXCLUSIVE LICENSE UNDER COPYRIGHT, LIMITED ONLY BY THE DURATION OF THE COPYRIGHT, MAY LEGALLY GRANT AN EXCLUSIVE LICENSE FOR A LIMITED PERIOD OF TIME, AND AGREE, IN AID THEREOF, THAT IT WILL NOT GRANT ANY FURTHER LICENSE DURING A GIVEN PERIOD OF TIME THEREAFTER.

1. An agreement for clearance is legal.

Despite the contention of the Government to the contrary, the above stated proposition would appear to be axiomatic. The owner of a copyright monopoly is not confronted with an all or nothing option. He may, it is true, agree with a particular licensee that he shall have a completely exclusive license for the duration of the copyright monopoly, i.e., that he, as the licensor, will license no one else during the term of the copyright. Overman v. Goodyear, supra. This is the most he can give. On the other hand, the simplest logic dictates that the owner of a copyright monopoly may choose to exploit his statutory grant through a series of exclusive licenses, each limited in time, and separated by time intervals during which it is agreed, in aid thereof, that no one be licensed. The agreement with the licensee here is no different in character than in the case of a completely exclusive license. It is merely more limited.

That such arrangements are legal has been uniformly* held. Westway Theatre v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830 (D. Md. 1940), affirmed on opinion below in 113 F. (2d) 932 (C. C. A. 4th, 1940); Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, 180 F. (2d) 891 (C. C. A. 7th, 1941); White Bear Theatre Corp. v. State Theatre Corp., 129 F. (2d) 600; and Opinion below, R. 3531. The Government, moreover, agreed in Sec. VIII of the Consent Decree (R. 3380) that "It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures."

The Government apparently does not contend that the owner of a copyright to a motion picture cannot grant an exclusive license under his statutory monopoly, as is standard practice in the case of a patent. Approval of such practice, under Sec. 1 of the Copyright Act, is explicit in Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, pp. 227-8,

*The government's references (bf., pp. 84, 98) to clearance restrictions "prohibited" by the Interstate Circuit case (306 U. S. 208) find no support in that decision.

wherein it is said that "the owners of the copyright of a motion picture film acquire the right to exhibit the picture and to grant an exclusive or restrictive license to others to exhibit it." (Emphasis ours.)

If a copyright owner may grant an exclusive license, it is obvious that he may grant something less than such an exclusive license, to wit, an exclusive license for a limited time, with protection thereafter, in respect of licenses to others, for a limited time. In granting an exclusive license, either for the duration of his copyright or for a limited time, the licensor agrees with the licensee that he will not license the motion picture, under the copyright, during the duration of the license, to any competitor of the licensee. In the case of the exclusive license for a limited period of time, it is denied by the Government that the licensor may agree with the licensee that he will not license a competitor of the licensee until after the lapse of a given period of time after the end of the limited period of time for which the license is granted. Since, however, as above explained, the licensor may agree with the licensee never to license anyone else under the copyright, the logical absurdity of the Government's argument is evident. The agreement attacked as illegal is palpably less restrictive and discriminatory than the exclusive license agreement which, it must be admitted, is legal. As was said by this Court in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U. S. 32, 57:

> "Of course, there is restraint in a patent. Its strength is in the restraint, the right to exclude others from the use of the invention, absolutely or on the terms the patentee chooses to impose. This strength is the compensation which the law grants for the exercise of invention. Its exertion within the field covered by the patent law is not an offense against the Anti-Trust Act." (Emphasis ours.)

The owner of a copyright monopoly has a legal right to exploit it to the best advantage. Unlike the owner of a patent monopoly, who frequently makes use of exclusive licenses, the owners of copyright monopolies in feature motion pictures have found that the most advantageous way of exploiting their legal monopolies is through granting a succession of licenses for limited times, first to the higher-class theatres, then to the next best theatres, and so on down the line until the poorest theatres are reached, with agreed-upon time intervals in between each run to protect the exclusivity of the prior-run theatres.

Although the use of this method is to some extent dictated by consideration of the prohibitive expense,* running into the millions of dollars, which would be involved if thousands of positive prints (instead of the hundreds that are presently made) had to be made of each negative in order to service all of the many thousands of theatres which might desire to exhibit the picture at one time, if thus released, (R. 1895-9), the principal reason for licensing in a sequence of runs is proper exploitation of the picture to yield the most revenue.

The largest revenue-producing theatres are the first-run theatres, to which the highest admission prices can be charged. These theatres are the best appointed and most luxurious playhouses, and therefore cost the most to build and operate (pp. 5-6, ante). That a premium price is in order for the first opportunity to view a motion picture after release is evident (R. 418-9). For later exhibitions, a lesser price has to be charged in any event. No apology need be made for the obvious fact that the more people who can be induced to view a particular picture in the first-run theatres at the highest prices, the greater the revenue of both the distributor and the exhibitor. The exclusive right to show a motion picture immediately after release is a valuable right, and by virtue of the copyright monopoly a distributor is entitled to set up his licenses in such a way as to make his aggregate revenue from all showings of the picture as great as possible. He endeavors to do this by inducing as many patrons as possible to view the picture in first-run theatres, and clearance is one of the principal means employed (R. 422-3, 705-7, 1091, 1085-6, 2011, 1899-1923).

*The cost of each black and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800 (R. 670-1).

The advertising value of a first-run exhibition to subsequent-run exhibitors is very great. If a motion picture is a success in the leading first-run metropolitan theatres, its success is assured in the subsequent runs. The distributor and the first-run exhibitor, therefore, spare no effort and expense, through advertising and exploitation, to induce as many persons as possible to view the picture in the first-runs. This not only augments the revenue of the first-runs but greatly benefits the subsequent-runs, whose box-office receipts are increased by advertising and exploitation which costs them nothing (p. 10, ante).

The subsequent-run exhibitor, naturally enough, wants to pay as little as possible for his pictures, to benefit as much as possible from first-run advertising and exploitation before it is dissipated, and to draw as much as possible on the patronage counted upon by the first-runs. The shorter the clearance the more successful he will be. Hence it is apparent that his demand for "reasonable" clearance, about to be discussed, is based upon economic, not legal considerations.

2. Clearance, in conjunction with an exclusive license for a limited time, is a diminution of exclusiveness, and need not be "reasonable".

The Court below conceded the propriety of clearance agreements, overruling the contentions of the Government in this respect (F. F. 78, R. 3674). It held, however, that clearance must be "reasonable," although it did not indicate what criteria of reasonableness should be, except that the clearance granted "should not be in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted." (Decree II, 4, R. 3695-6). This concept of "reasonableness," as applied to clearance, contradicts the basic concept of the right to grant an exclusive license under copyright for the term of the copyright, and we believe it to be completely untenable. So far as we are aware, no other judicial decision gives credence to the idea that a clearance, viewed by itself and apart from the exclusive license for a limited time which it is granted to protect, must be reasonable, particularly that it must be reasonable in the light of the licensee's requirements, or those who expect to be licensed later on, not those of the owner of the copyright. In so holding, the Court below relied upon cases approving agreements under the general law, by vendors of income-producing property not to compete with the vendees for a given time within a given area, but not involving copyright or patent monopolies, such as Cincinnati Packet Company v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179. (Opinion below, R. 3530-1). Obviously a purchaser of property has much more limited rights in obtaining protection from his vendor against competition than the licensor under a statutory monopoly has to restrict his licensee from competing with him, since the last-named restriction may clearly be absolute.

Clearance, as heretofore pointed out, in conjunction with an exclusive license for a limited time, represents a diminution of the usual rights of the one who grants an exclusive licensee, not an expansion. Those subsequent-run exhibitors who protest against "unreasonably" long clearances have no standing to protest, because the only rights they have, or may have, emanate from the copyright owner, who can divide his statutory monopoly as he sees fit with whom he sees fit. Their protests arise out of economic considerations, and have no legal basis. Clearance is not a restriction upon the prior-run licensee, although it cuts down the rights which may be given him by an exclusive license. It is likewise not a restriction upon subsequent-run licensees, who always take subject to what has been given to the prior-run licensees. If, however, it was a restriction, the only judicial criterion of which we know to test its legality would be that all types of restrictions may be imposed under statutory monopolies which are "normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly," and clearance obviously is. General Talking Pictures Corporation v. Western Electric Co., 305 U. S. 124, p. 127, approving U. S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476. If the type of restriction is justified, we know of no limitations upon the degree to which it may be employed. The subsequent-run exhibitor is no more entitled to complain than any member of the public who may be refused a license under a patent or copyright. His complaint amounts to nothing more than that he thinks he has paid too much for the picture in view of the prior-run's clearance. He is asserting his belief that he ought to pay less or that the clearance should be less.

Nor, aside from the legalities of the situation, does the subsequent-run exhibitor have any justifiable complaint.

He gets precisely what he pays for. Instead of paying the large film rentals, often running into thousands of dollars, which the prior runs have to pay, he may pay as little at $10 to $15 flat rental, and generally pays very much less than the cost of striking a positive print of the picture (R. 1898, 671). At the same time he gets the benefit, without cost, of the extensive advertising and exploitation engaged in by the prior runs, and need therefore himself expend very little if anything on advertising.

3. The idea that clearances must be "reasonable" originated in a waiver of legal rights by the major defendants (but not Universal) in the Consent Decree.

This idea of the Court below concerning the required reasonableness of clearances evidently had its origin in the Consent Decree, one of the chief purposes of which was to settle the complaints of independent exhibitors. In summing up Government counsel contended that clearances were "principally in the hands of theatre operators rather than distributors" (R. 2574). While the Government contended that clearances had been fixed by combinations and conspiracies among such theatre-operators, both major and independent, which would, of course, be illegal, whether reasonable or unreasonable, the decision of the major defendants to settle the complaints by arbitration under the Consent Decree is otherwise readily explicable. These complaints were essentially economic, not legal, in nature. Having licensed a picture at a particular price the independent exhibitor naturally desired: (1) to cut in on the prior-run business as much as possible; and (2) to participate as much as possible in the benefits of the exploitation and advertising of the picture by the prior-runs before it became dissipated.

His complaints about "unreasonably" long clearance therefore really were nothing more than complaints that his bargain was not good enough.

This proceeding was instituted by the Government through the filing of a petition in 1938. In 1940 the five major defendants entered into a Consent Decree with the Government (R. 3373). Universal was not a party to these arrangements (R. 3373). This Consent Decree was, of course, a compromise between the contentions of the Government and those of the major defendants. In Sec. VIII thereof (R. 3379-80) provision was made for the settlement of clearance disputes between the major distributors and independent exhibitors. Clearance agreements were recognized as "essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures," but the parties to the Consent Decree agreed that clearances should be reasonable "as to time and area," and as to the factors to be taken into consideration in determining such reasonableness.

The Consent Decree set up an arbitration system under the supervision of the United States District Court with an Appeal Board. It was provided that when any clearance was questioned as unreasonable, the arbitrator should have the power to make findings as to whether or not it was unreasonable, and if found to be such, to make an award fixing the maximum clearance between the theatres involved.

Among the factors to be considered by the arbitrators in the determination of reasonable clearances (R. 3380) were (1) the historical development of clearances in the particular area wherein the theatres involved are located; (2) the admission prices of the theatres involved; (3) character, location and operating policy of the theatres involved; (4) the status of the theatres involved as revenue-producers to the distributors; (5) extent of competition between the theatres; and (6) all other business considerations except affiliation with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres.

The Decree appealed from does not lay down any such criteria for the determination of reasonable clearance. Indeed, it lays down as its sole criterion (R. 3695-6) the requirements of the licensee for protection (a matter which would appear to be inadmissible as the exclusive guide for a distributor under the holding of this Court in Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208), and not normal and reasonable adaptation to the securing of reward by the copyright owner.

In the Petition which it filed in 1938, and in the Amended and Supplemental Complaint (R. 3137) the Government claimed, inter alia, that the major defendants were monopolizing the exhibition of motion pictures, and were dominating the motion picture industry through concertedly imposing unreasonable restrictions of interstate commerce upon independent exhibitors and the public. Among such restrictions claimed to have been illegally imposed through concerted action were clearances. The Consent Decree provisions respecting clearance represent, therefore, a compromise between the Government and the major defendants. What is incorporated in the Consent Decree with respect to clearance has, therefore, no necessary relation at all to what the law actually is. The major defendants were willing, for reasons best known to themselves, perhaps no more than to get the very numerous independent exhibitors off their necks, to consent to the determination by arbitrators of "reasonable" clearances, thus waiving the right each had under copyright to independently fix, in negotiations with exhibitors, such clearances as it might see fit.

The Consent Decree, therefore, by agreement between the major defendants and the Government, established an arbitration tribunal to function in much the same manner as the Interstate Commerce Commission, through Congressional edict, functions in the determination of reasonable rates. The principal function of the Interstate Commerce Commission is to determine what is reasonable in the way of rates, taking into consideration the varying interests of the railroads, the shippers and the public. The arbitration tribunals set up under the Consent Decree, considering the various factors specified therein, determined what, in their opinion, was reasonable in the way of clearance, in respect of the varying interests of the distributor, exhibitor and public. Their powers were solely derived from the agreement between the Government and the five major defendants, embodied in the Consent Decree, and cannot, we submit, be applied by the Court, without Congressional sanction, to a non-consenting defendant.

Under Article V of the Decree issued by the Court after trial, which abandons the arbitration system (R. 3700), no impartial tribunal can function to determine the reasonableness of clearance as among the distributor, exhibitor and public. Thus, even assuming that it were the law that a distributor is limited to reasonable clearance, which we think it clearly is not, the concept is impossible of practical administration except by an administrative agency created by Congress. Under the Decree, as laid down by the Court, the distributor and exhibitor deal at arm's length. Neither can be expected to impartially consider the relative needs of the other, or of the public. The law is, we submit, that the distributor who possesses a statutory monopoly is required to consider only his own needs, provided he acts independently.

4. There is no proof that Universal granted any "unreasonable" clearances.

Only one exhibitor testified in the case, and he was called by a defendant. He did not complain of "unreasonable" clearance (R. 1379-1404).

The decisions of the Appeal Board in arbitrations, which reduced various clearances, and which were admitted in evidence with considerable hesitation against the major defendants, were not admitted against Universal, since it was not a party to the Consent Decree (R. 308).

Thus there is no evidence at all binding upon Universal that any Universal clearance was unreasonable, even in the opinion of some arbitrator or the Appeal Board, much less by admeasurement in accordance with legally prescribed criteria. Even as against the major defendants there is nothing more than the opinion of the members of the Appeal Board to that effect, employing criteria agreed upon between the Government and major defendants only, and not incorporated into the final decree.

The Decree (II, 4) requires that a distributor justify the "reasonableness" of any clearance attacked. Owing to the lack of prescribed standards, and the fact, as heretofore pointed out, that "reasonable clearance" is an economic, not a legal concept, such justification is, we submit, impossible,* aside from the fact that it would seem clear that Congress alone can relieve a plaintiff of the burden of proof which is ordinarily his.

*At the hearing upon the Government's motion for a temporary injunction the following colloquy took place between Judge Goddard and Government counsel:

> The Court: I wish one of the first things you would do is to define affirmatively what unreasonable clearance is.
>
> Mr. Wright: That is something that most of us have been struggling with for years without getting very satisfactory results (R. 3453).

II.

UNIVERSAL'S LICENSES UNDER COPYRIGHT TO INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS, NOT CLAIMED BY THE GOVERNMENT TO HAVE PARTICIPATED IN ANY CONSPIRACY TO MONOPOLIZE OR RESTRAIN INTERSTATE COMMERCE UNDER THE SHERMAN ACT, LEGALLY RESTRICTED THE GRANT IN REQUIRING THE LICENSEES TO REFRAIN FROM COMPETITION WITH THE LICENSOR WHICH WOULD RESULT IN DEPRECIATING OR DESTROYING THE VALUE OF THE LICENSOR'S RESIDUARY INTEREST IN MAKING SUBSEQUENT-RUN LICENSES.

1. While the decree recognizes the right of large distributors, who own theatres, to control the admission prices charged therein, it inconsistently prevents Universal, a medium-sized distributor without theatres, from protecting its revenue by a covenant against the lowering, during the run of a feature picture licensed by it, of admission prices fixed by exhibitors.

Paragraph IV of the Decree (R. 3700) reads as follows:

> "Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of each distributor-defendant to license, or in any way to arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which such distributor defendant has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this Decree, a proprietary interest of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries." (Emphasis ours.)

Under this provision of the Decree the major defendants as distributors, may license their pictures to their subsidiary exhibition companies for exhibition in any of the theatres which they own, and may freely specify the admission prices to be charged therefor to the public. The Decree, however, prohibits a non-integrated medium-sized distributor, such as Universal, from licensing its copyrighted pictures, even to an independent theatre not claimed to be implicated in any monopolizing, on condition that such theatre shall not reduce its current admission price during the run of the picture.

Thus Universal, a medium-sized distributor without theatres and no potentialities for monopolizing by itself, cannot, in contractual dealings with a small exhibitor, and in order to protect its revenue and to prevent the depreciation or total destruction of the value of its residuary interest in respect of the making of subsequent-run licenses, do the same things which the five largest distributors in the business, in their dealings with their controlled exhibition units, may freely do—and, absent conspiracy or monopolizing, should have the right to do. This despite the fact that neither the non-integrated distributor nor the small exhibitor, or both combined, can, by any conceivable stretch of the imagination, impose their will upon competition.

2. A licensor under copyright, having the right to exclude all others completely, may let down the bars and permit competition against himself to the extent he sees fit, and, in requiring the maintenance of current admission prices, Universal so acted.

In exploiting its copyrighted feature motion pictures, Universal elected, as it was entitled to do, to license the same in a series of runs, with agreed-upon time intervals in between runs, instead of granting simultaneous non-exclusive licenses to many theatres, or exclusive licenses for the duration of its copyrights to one or more theatres. The amount of revenue drawn to the box office in each of these runs, and consequently the film rental Universal receives, obviously depends upon the admission price charged and the number of people paying that admission price during the run. It is, of course, highly important to Universal that the showings of its feature pictures first-run should be successful, and it could therefore be expected to select the best-equipped and best-managed theatres for that run. These theatres were, of course, those which could successfully charge the highest admission prices. Universal would naturally give to these theatres clearance over succeeding runs, sufficient to permit them to recoup their film rentals and make a reasonable profit, at their regularly charged admission prices. The gross receipts at such first-run theatres being the greatest, it followed that Universal would obtain the largest film rentals therefrom. Such film rentals were necessarily based upon the expected revenue-producing capacity of such first-run theatres, at the admission prices which they had been charging prior to the making of the license, and, in the case of percentage contracts, upon the actual box-office receipts.

Following the first-run, Universal, of course, contemplated the licensing of second, third and fourth-run theatres, and other subsequent runs. In each successive run, as heretofore explained (pp. 5-7, ante), the quality of the theatres licensed would depreciate, and with such depreciation of quality, the admission price charged would decrease. Thus in licensing a first-run theatre, and in agreeing to accept a certain amount of film rental therefrom, Universal necessarily had in mind the licensing of many other theatres on many other runs.* Its first-run license, being limited in time, expressly reserved the right to grant subsequent-run licenses following the first-run, after the expiration of the clearance period (pp. 5-7, ante, G. X. 289-290).

*The income from such runs "may mean the difference between black or red ink on his ledgers." T. N. E. C. Monograph No. 43.

The first-run theatre had, in each instance, set its own admission price, which it believed to be appropriate, in view of its appointments, policy of operation, etc. (F. F. 63, R. 3670; 433, 718, 968, 999, 1382-3). Such admission price is necessarily always a very important factor in inducing any distributor to license a particular theatre first-run as against competing theatres, and properly so, in view of the distributor's clear legal right to exploit its statutory monopoly to the best advantage. Reduction of such admission price would mean instant depreciation of the value of the subsequent-run licenses remaining for disposition in Universal's hands, or even destruction thereof. This for the reason that the price differential existing between the admission prices of the first-run theatre and each of the subsequent-runs was of the greatest importance to such subsequent runs, for with any lessening in the disparity between such admission prices, the first or prior-run theatre would invade to a greater or less extent the lower-price patronage counted upon by the subsequent-run theatres (R. 726-7, 1984, 2112). It is to a considerable extent on the basis of such disparities that clearances are fixed (R. 1085-6, 1091).

It is, therefore, clear that when Universal required prior-run theatres to maintain their current admission prices as a minimum, during the run of the licensed picture, it was entitled, as a licensor under copyright, to do so, in order to prevent such licensees from competing with it pro tanto, and depreciating or destroying the value of the subsequent-run licenses it planned to make.*

As this Court pointed out in General Talking Pictures Co. v. Western Electric Co., 305 U. S. 124, p. 127, and as the Bement, General Electric, and multitudinous other cases cited later herein, show, a restrictive license is clearly legal, so long as the conditions upon which it is granted are not inconsistent with the scope of the monopoly. The restrictions here in question are palpably consistent therewith. The essential quality of any monopoly is the power to fix the price, which in a legal monopoly becomes the right to fix the price. When, therefore, a licensee is granted permission to share in the legal monopoly, it is plain that his participation can be limited pro tanto by a price restriction.

One who gives a license under a monopoly is not required to permit the licensee to compete with him to the fullest extent possible, but for the most obvious reasons may restrict the licensee's competition with him to any extent he pleases, just as he may elect to totally forbid all competition with him; or to relax such prohibition in respect of particular persons. It is foolish to contend that the prohibition against competition with the owner of the copyright may be relaxed in respect of particular persons and not as to others, but must be relaxed, if at all, in the case of a particular licensee, to the fullest extent. This is plainly not so.

---

*In Schine Chain Theatres Inc. v. U. S. (No. 10, Oct. Term, 1947), Government counsel conceded at the trial that "there is clearly no conflict with the Sherman Act" in licensing pictures with minimum admission prices, so long as the restraint is reasonable (Schine Record, R. 493-4).

In addition it is clear enough that the exhibitor's ability to pay the film rental bargained for may be seriously impaired by a reduction in his admission price, while at the same time the reputation of the picture being shown may be seriously injured.

The foregoing argument is directly supported by Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70 and U. S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, which 25 years after the decision in the Bement case unanimously approved it.

3. The licensor does not extend the scope of its monopoly because it does not interfere at all with the price charged for entertainment it does not supply.

The admission price fixed by the exhibitor, and required to be maintained by the distributor, is a minimum price. In other words, the distributor requires that at least as much as this be charged to view the exhibition of its copyrighted picture, irrespective of what other pictures are shown or entertainment provided. The exhibitor is entirely free to add to this minimum price any amount he sees fit to compensate him for the additional pictures or entertainment provided. The Government, however, treats the case as though a definite price had been fixed by the licensor for all the entertainment provided, which is clearly contrary to fact.*

4. Limited licenses under copyrights, the purpose of which is to restrict the licensee from competing in some specified manner with the licensor, are legal.

Licensing of this character under patents has been uniformly approved by the Courts, and never disapproved, so far as we know, in respect of copyrights. The controlling principles are obviously no different, as heretofore pointed out (p. 41-3 ante).

---

*In Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, 228, this Court said "we have no occasion now to pass upon these or related questions."

(a) IN GENERAL:

General Talking Pictures Corp. v. Western Electric Co., 305 U. S. 124, 127; Becton, Dickinson & Co. v. Eisele & Co., 86 F. (2d) 267, 268-270 (C. C. A. 6th), certiorari denied 300 U. S. 667; Owens Bottle Co. v. Libbey Glass Co., 9 F. (2d) 564, 565 (C. C. A. 6th); Innis, Speiden & Co. v. Food Machinery Co., 2 F. R. D. 261, 262-264 (D. Del.); Wilson v. Rousseau, 16 U. S. 225 (1845); Burr v. Duryee, Fed. Cas. No. 2190 (C. C. D. N. J., 1862); aff'd. 68 U. S. 531 (1863); Steam Cutter v. Sheldon, Fed. Cas. No. 13,331 (C. C. D. Vt., 1872); Dorsey v. Bradley, Fed. Cas. No. 4015 (C. C. N. D. Ill., 1886); American Refining Co. v. Gasoline Products Co., 294 S. W. 967 (Tex. Civ. App. 1927).

(b) DELIMITATION OF TERRITORY IN WHICH LICENSE IS OPERATIVE:

See Hobbie v. Jennison, 149 U. S. 355, 363-4; Cincinnati Siemens-Lungren Gas Illuminating Company v. Western Siemens-Lungren Company, 152 U. S. 200, 205; St. Louis Street Flushing Machine Co. v. Sanitary Street Flushing Machine Co., 178 Fed. 923, 926-927 (C. C. A. 8th).

(c) LIMITATION OF QUANTITY WHICH MAY BE MADE;

Mitchell v. Hawley, 16 Wall. 544, 546, 548-9; Aspinwall Manufacturing Co. v. Gill, 32 Fed. 697, 698 (C. C. D. N. J.); and Goshen Rubber Works v. Single Tube Automobile & Bicycle Tire Co., 166 Fed. 431, 432 et seq. (C. C. A. 7th).

(d) RESTRICTION TO ARTICLES OF PARTICULAR TYPE OR CHARACTER:

Bement v. National Harrow Company, 186 U. S. 70, 72-75, 90; Cinema Patents Co., Inc. v. Columbia Pictures Corporation, 62 F. (2d) 310, 311-312 (C. C. A. 9th); Pope Manufacturing Co. v. Owsley, 27 Fed. 100, 104 (C. C. N. D. Ill.); George Close Co. v. Ideal Wrapping Mach. Co., 29 F. (2d) 533, 534-535 (C. C. A. 1st); and Good Humor Corporation of America v. Popsicle Corporation of United States, 59 F. (2d) 344 (D. Del. 1932).

(e) RESTRICTION AS TO USE FOR WHICH ARTICLES MAY BE MANUFACTURED:

Rubber Company v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. 788, 799; Vulcan Mfg. Co. v. Maytag Co., 73 F. (2d) 136, 138-139 (C. C. A. 8th), appeal dismissed 294 U. S. 734; and Sinko Tool & Mfg. Co. v. Casco Products Corporation, 89 F. (2d) 916-918 (C. C. A. 7th).

(f) RESTRICTION TO PARTICULAR TYPES OF MARKETS:

See cases cited, supra, under (d) and (e), and also General Talking Pictures Corp. v. Western Electric Co., 304 U. S. 175, 179-182, and 305 U. S. 124, 127; Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Tri-City Radio Electric Supply Co., 23 F. (2d) 628, 630-631 (C. C. A. 8th); Libbey Glass Co. v. McKee Glass Co., 216 Fed. 172, 176 (W. D. Pa.), affd. 220 F. 672 (C. C. A. 3rd), certiorari denied 238 U. S. 624; and Radio Craft Co. v. Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co., 7 F. (2d) 432 (C. C. A. (3rd)).

(g) RESTRICTION OF SELLING PRICE OF ARTICLES MANUFACTURED UNDER LICENSE TO VEND, USE AND SELL:

Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70 (1902); U. S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476 (1926); Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., 154 Fed. 358 (C. C. A. 7th, 1907); Indiana Mfg. Co. v. J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co., 154 Fed. 365 (C. C. A. 7th, 1907); Goshen Rubber Works v. Single Tube A. & B. Tire Co., 166 Fed. 431 (C. C. A. 7th, 1908); Massie v. Asbestos Brake Co., 123 Atl. 155 (Ct. of Chancery, N. J., 1922); Casco Products Corp. v. Kenny, 24 U. S. P. Q. 171 (S. D. N. Y., 1935); Straight Side Basket Corp. v. Webster Basket, 82 F. (2d) 245 (C. C. A. 2nd, 1936); American Lead Pencil Co. v. Musgrave Pencil Co., Inc., 170 Tenn. 60; 91 S. W. (2d) 573 (1936); Ceramic Process Co. v. Cincinnati Advertising Prod. Co., 28 F. Supp. 794 (S. C. Ohio, 1939); appeal dismissed, 116 F. (2d) 497 (C. C. A. 6th, 1940); General Electric Co. v. Willey's Carbide Tool Co., 33 F. Supp. 969 (W. D. Mich., S. D., 1940); United States v. Wayne Pump Co., 44 F. Supp. 949 (N. D. Ill., 1942); appeal dismissed, 317 U S. 200 (1942); United States v. Line Material Co., 64 F. Supp. 970 (E. D. Wisc., 1946); United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 67 F. Supp. 397 (Statutory Court, D. C., 1946).

Nearly all of the foregoing cases involved plural licenses.* Particular reference is made to the U. S. Gypsum

*In its opinion (R. 3528) the Court below, while conceding that a single license of this kind might be legal, condemned the method of licensing because "other licensors and exhibitors are always in contemplation." Apparently it meant that Universal knew that other licensors were also employing the restriction, and that Universal was licensing many exhibitors. The legal significance of this, however, we are unable to understand, since Universal cannot prevent the former and cannot avoid the latter.

and Line Material cases. The well-settled rule is stated in the Restatement of the Law of Contracts by the American Law Institute as follows:

> "A, a proprietor of a patent, licenses C, D, and E to manufacture the patent article and to sell it for not less than a stated price. The condition of the license fixing the price is not illegal." (Illustration 12, Section 515).

5. The doctrine of the Bement and General Electric cases.

In Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70 (1902), a case decided after the enactment of the Sherman Act, this Court held in a unanimous decision that a patent licensor might legally prohibit his licensee from selling at a lower price than the licensor's.

At p. 88 this Court pointed out that the plaintiff was the absolute owner of a monopoly recognized by the Constitution and by the statutes of Congress, and that the Sherman Act clearly did not refer to that kind of restraint of interstate commerce which may arise from reasonable and legal conditions imposed upon a licensee of a patent by the owner thereof, restricting the terms upon which the article may be used and price to be demanded therefor (p. 92).

It held at p. 93 that the provision in regard to price was "an appropriate and reasonable condition", since the owner of the patented article might charge such price as he chose and could license another on condition that he sell at a specified price. (Emphasis ours.)

In 1926, in U. S. v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, the doctrine of the Bement case was attacked by the Government, and unanimously sustained.

In this case the General Electric Company, which owned three important improvement patents on the making of the modern tungsten incandescent lamp, licensed the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company to make, use and vend incandescent lamps under such patents. It restricted Westinghouse from selling such incandescent lamps, however, for more than it, the licensor, might charge. Westinghouse manufactured and sold incandescent lamps under this license, and the United States brought a proceeding to restrain General Electric and Westinghouse on the ground that they were violating the Sherman Act.

This Court held that the restriction contained in the license was valid, after pointing out that it was well settled that where a patentee makes the patented article and sells it, he can exercise no further control over what the purchaser may do with the article after his purchase. It noted, however, that the question before it was a different one "which arises when we consider what a patentee who grants a license to one to make and vend the patented article may do in limiting the licensee in exercising the right to sell". In this connection it said that if the licensor went further than to grant a license to make and use, and granted a license to make, use and sell, he might limit the selling price, because such a condition of sale would be "normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly" since "one of the valuable elements of the exclusive right of a patentee is to acquire profit by the price at which the article is sold. The higher the price, the greater the profit, unless it is prohibitory" (pp. 489-90).

Thus "when the patentee licenses another to make and vend, and retains the right to continue to make and vend on his own account, the price at which his licensee will sell will necessarily affect the price at which he can sell his own patented goods. It would seem entirely reasonable that he should say to the licensee, 'Yes, you may make and sell articles under my patent but not so as to destroy the profit that I wish to obtain by making them and selling them myself' " (p. 490).

It was claimed in the General Electric case that the Bement case had been in effect overruled. It was expressly held, however, that the overruling of Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 224 U. S. 1, by Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, and the disapproval of the so-called Button Fastener case* in the Motion Picture Patents case, did not carry with it the overruling of the Bement case, and said that "The price at which a patented article sells is certainly a circumstance having a more direct relation and is more germane to the rights of the patentee than the unpatented material with which the patented article may be used. Indeed, as already said, price-fixing is usually the essence of that which secures proper reward to the patentee" (pp. 491-4).

6. Subsequent decisions of this Court cast no doubt on the Bement and General Electric doctrine.

The unanimous decisions in Bement v. Harrow, and United States v. General Electric have not been limited or questioned by this court. The Bement case was referred to in Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U. S. 338, 345 (1908), but it was distinguished as not involving any question of resale prices; it was referred to with apparent approval in Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons Co., 220 U. S. 373,

---

*Heaton-Peninsular Button-Fastener Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co., 77 Fed. 288.

401 (1911); it was referred to with approval by Mr. Justice White in his dissenting opinion in Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 224 U. S. 1, 61 (1912); it was distinctly reaffirmed in Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 39-40 (1912); and its doctrine was applied in United States v. United Shoe Machinery Co., 247 U. S. 32, 58 (1918).

The General Electric case was cited with approval in Carbice v. American Patents Development Corp., 283 U. S. 27, 31 (1931), and it was expressly approved and applied in General Talking Pictures Corp. v. Western Electric Co., 305 U. S. 124, decided in 1938, where the Court stated at page 127:

> "That a restrictive license is legal seems clear. Mitchell v. Hawley, 16 Wall. 544. As was said in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, 489, the patentee may grant a license 'upon any condition the performance of which is reasonably within the reward which the patentee by the grant of the patent is entitled to secure.'"

It was also cited with apparent approval and distinguished in Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 228 (1939), and in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 456 (1940), where the Court again stated the well recognized rule as follows:

> "The patent law confers on the patentee a limited monopoly, the right or power to exclude all others from manufacturing, using or selling his invention. R. S. § 4884, 35 U. S. C. § 40, * * * He may grant licenses to make, use or vend, restricted in point of space or time, or with any other restriction upon the exercise of the granted privilege, save only that by > attaching a condition to his license he may not enlarge his monopoly and thus acquire some other which the statute and the patent together did not give."

In the Ethyl case the Court held that the effort to fix the resale price of jobbers was improper, but no question was raised as to the provision in the licenses to the refining companies by which the licensees were required to sell their ethyl gasoline "at a certain fixed price differential above the average net sales price of the licensees' best non-premium grade of gasoline" (309 U. S. at 448).

Similarly, in two recent cases involving situations which were held to amount to resale price maintenance, this Court was careful to distinguish such situations from the right of a licensor to fix the original sale prices of its licensees. Thus, in United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241, 252 (1942), the Court stated:

> "There is thus no occasion for our reconsideration, as the Government asks, of United States v. General Electric Co., supra, on which appellees rely. The Court in that case was at pains to point out that a patentee who manufactures the product protected by the patent and fails to retain his ownership in it cannot control the price at which it is sold by his distributors (272 U. S. at 489)."

And in United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 277, 278 (1942), the Court again said:

> "We do not have here any question as to the validity of a license to manufacture and sell, since none of the 'agents' exercised its option to acquire such a license from Masonite. Hence we need not reach the problems presented by Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, and that part of the > General Electric case which dealt with the license to Westinghouse Company. * * * As Chief Justice Taney said in Bloomer v. McQuewan, 14 How. 539, 549, when the patented product 'passes to the hands of the purchaser, it is no longer within the limits of the monopoly. It passes outside of it, and is no longer under the protection of the act of Congress.'"

Thus, it can be seen that this Court has carefully distinguished the Bement doctrine from the illegality found in such cases as the Carbice and Mercoid cases, in which unpatented devices, processes or materials were tied in to the use of the patented device or process, and from the cases above cited in which the control of the resale prices of patented articles was condemned, and from such situations as those involved in the Standard Sanitary case and the Masonite case, in which there was concerted action among competitors.

Since 1925, the Government has in a number of recent cases urged this Court to overrule the General Electric case; for example, in U. S. v. Univis, U. S. v. Masonite, and the Line Material case, supra, but so far without success. It has also unsuccessfully urged Congress on a number of occasions to abolish the right to grant limited licenses; for example (Senate Document No. 95, 76th Congress, July 17, 1939). The National Planning Commission in its report submitted to Congress by President Roosevelt on June 18, 1943, stated that the proposal to outlaw such limitations in patent licenses "would not be a beneficial innovation in our patent system." (House Document No. 239, 78th Congress, First Session; see page 9.)

It has sometimes been suggested that the doctrine of the General Electric case is to be restricted to a single license from the patent owner, since only a single license to Westinghouse from General Electric was involved in that case. Numerous cases, as above pointed out, hold this contention to be unsound. Yet it is apparently approved in the Decree of the Court below which forbids a defendant to engage in a system of clearances with exhibitors, it being admitted that the granting of clearance is valid.

It is also to be noted that in the Court's opinion (R. 3528), it declined to decide "whether a copyright owner might lawfully fix admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor for the exhibition of its film, if other licensors and exhibitors are not in contemplation." It seems to conclude that it is the making of many licenses which is illegal, but in its decree enjoins the fixing of any minimum admission price (R. 3695).

But Judge Stephens stated for the statutory court in U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., supra, at pages 431-2:

> "It can make no difference so far as the Sherman Act is concerned whether the patentee licenses no one, or licenses one, two, three, four, five, or six or a dozen, others. Putting this otherwise, if the patent laws, despite the Sherman Act, do not legitmatize a monopoly in the manufacture and sale of a patented product by a patentee-licensor and several licensees, they cannot legitimatize a monopoly by the patentee-licensor and one licensee or by the patentee alone, because in each instance the exclusion of the public from manufacture, use or sale within the field marked out by the patent is exactly the same, i.e., complete. Once it is recognized that a patentee may divide his monopoly, no limit can reasonably be put upon the number of persons he may see fit to license, provided always the terms and conditions of the licenses do not go beyond those which normally and reasonably secure the rewards of a patent monopoly. If in the General Electric case the Court had held that the patent laws do not permit any division of his monopoly by a patentee and had therefore stricken down the Westinghouse license (and the additional non-price-fixing licenses), General Electric itself would then have been in control of all of the manufacturing, using and selling of the electric lamps covered by the patents. Although but one price fixing license happened to be involved in the General Electric case, it would be an irrational fixation to construe the decision of the Court as limiting licensing under price fixing restrictions to one competitor, since the public is equally excluded and equally subjected to the patentee's price whether there is no license, one licensee or many. Cf. United States v. Line Material Company, 64 F. Supp. 970 (D. C. Wis. 1946); Laurence I. Wood, Patents and Anti-Trust Law (C. C. H. 1942) 182-3."

7. This is an a fortiori case.

In the Bement and General Electric cases the licensor was permitted to regulate the sales price of articles made by a licensee, and consequently at all times owned by it. In our case the licensee never owns anything. That which is regulated is the exercise per se of the intangible rights licensed under copyright.

In the Bement and General Electric cases the licensor enforced his own price. In our case all that the licensor does is to ban a change in the licensee's price, which transforms the licensee from a non-competitor into a competitor with the licensor.

Nor can any question arise in this case as to the price being fixed on an article not completely covered by the statutory monopoly, which was one of the points made by the Government in its argument in the Line Material case. 9

8. The arrangement would be lawful even if the feature pictures were not copyrighted.

In Oregon Steam Navigation Co. v. Winsor, 20 Wall. 64, this Court said:

> "In accordance with these principles it is well settled that a stipulation by a vendee of any trade, business, or establishment, that the vendor shall not exercise the same trade or business, or erect a similar establishment within a reasonable distance, so as to not to interfere with the value of the trade, business, or thing purchased, is reasonable and valid. In like manner a stipulation by the vendor of an article to be used in a business or trade in which he is himself engaged, that it shall not be used within a reasonable region or distance, so as not to interfere with his said business or trade, is also valid and binding."

The decisions in Fowle v. Park, 131 U. S. 88; U. S. v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 6th, 1898), decree modified and aff'd 175 U. S. 211, and Cincinnati Packet Co v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179, are of similar purport, and these principles apply with special force to dealings in feature motion pictures which are the originations of the licensor, and would not exist save for his efforts. That he temporarily bails a positive print of the picture in order to permit the exercise of the intangible exhibition rights, instead of selling the print, makes the case considerably stronger for the application of these principles, and the fact that the licensor grants exclusive licenses limited in time, thus reserving the right to make subsequent-run licenses, clinches the case, we submit, for the licensor's right to protect himself.

That the law is well-settled to the effect that he has such right clearly appears from Sec. 516 of the Restatement of the Law of Contracts of the American Law Institute, which provides that "The following bargains do not impose unreasonable restraint of trade unless effecting, or forming part of a plan to effect, a monopoly: * * * (b) a bargain by the buyer or lessee of property or of a business not to use it in competition with or to the injury of the seller or lessor."

III.

THE ROYALTY FOR A LICENSE UNDER COPYRIGHT IS PROPERLY MEASURED BY A PERCENTAGE OF THE GROSS RECEIPTS.

When an exhibitor pays a flat rental for a license under copyright to exhibit a feature picture which may or may not be a success in his theatre, he assumes a fixed charge which may exceed his overhead and expenses for additional entertainment for the period of exhibition. Percentage contracts relieve him from this danger. He pays in accordance with the picture's success. This is eminently fair both to the distributor and the exhibitor.

Such percentage contracts are frequently used in connection with the rental of store properties, and no method of measuring royalties would seem to be more equitable or appropriate than a specified percentage of the licensee's selling price. While it gives the licensor an interest in the success of the licensee's business, any royalty arrangement dependent upon the quantity of business done by the licensee would do likewise, e.g., a provision for the payment of some flat amount per unit of sales, which undoubtedly is one of the standard methods of measuring royalties under patents. Indeed, in view of the fact that the minimum admission price is pegged, that is what the percentage arrangements in our case amount to.

So obviously proper is this arrangement that the Government conceded the fact in the General Electric case, as shown by the following statement in the lower court's opinion (U. S. v. General Electric Co., 15 Fed. (2d) 715, 718):

> "The other provisions of the license are not unusual, except the exaction of 10 per cent. royalty on all sales above 15 per cent. of the total sales of electric lamps having tungsten filaments, and only of 2 per cent. royalty on a total business of 15 per cent. or less. As to this provision, government counsel conceded on the hearing that it is only reasonably necessary to the protection of the business of the owner of the patent."

Moreover the arrangement upheld in Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 283 U. S. 163, at pp. 172-175, would seem to make ours an a fortiori case. There it was held that it was legal for three of the largest integrated oil companies and a patent holding company, owning patents for the "cracking" of gasoline, but not dominating the production of the total supply of gasoline, to cross-license each other and to provide for the division of royalties accruing to each from their licensing of third parties.

IV.

IT IS CLEAR THAT UNIVERSAL, WHEN LICENSING UNDER COPYRIGHT TO INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS, NOT CLAIMED BY THE GOVERNMENT TO HAVE PARTICIPATED IN ANY COMBINATION OR CONSPIRACY TO MONOPOLIZE OR RESTRAIN INTERSTATE COMMERCE, WAS ENTITLED TO LICENSE AS MANY OF ITS PICTURES AT ONE TIME UNDER ONE CONTRACT, TO AN EXHIBITOR OPERATING ONE OR MORE THEATRES, AS A LICENSEE WAS WILLING TO TAKE; OR EVEN TO CONDITION THE LICENSING OF ONE PICTURE UPON THE ACCEPTANCE OF OTHERS (OF WHICH THERE WAS NO EVIDENCE AGAINST UNIVERSAL), AND WAS LIKEWISE ENTITLED TO COMMIT ITS PICTURES TO SUCH LICENSEES FOR A TERM OF YEARS.

We later herein discuss the legality of a non-monopolistically situated distributor's conditioning the licensing under copyright of one feature picture upon the licensee's willingness to take one or more other copyrighted feature pictures. Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421; Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. (2d) 152 (C. C. A. 2). Since it is our contention, and we believe it to be entirely clear, that there is no evidence in the record that Universal followed such a practice, we presently confine the discussion to the group-selling procedure actually followed by Universal, as shown by the evidence. This was to offer all of its pictures in a group, and to license that exhibitor among competing exhibitors, who, other things being equal, was willing to accept the greatest number thereof (R. 1468-73). Moreover lots of exhibitors obtain selective contracts, which means that they need only accept a certain specified number of the pictures in the group, and most exhibitors obtain the right to cancel a certain proportion of the pictures licensed (R. 1469).

1: It is mutually advantageous for non-integrated distributors and independent exhibitors to make wholesale deals in feature pictures.

As heretofore pointed out, the great majority of Universal's feature pictures have been in the medium and lower-quality brackets. The demand for such pictures is naturally greatest among the rank and file theatres, which are preponderantly independent. Such theatres are in competition with the theatres affiliated with the major defendants, and with theatres in the large independent chains possessing great buying power. The uncontradicted testimony is that the buying and selling of feature pictures in groups is advantageous alike to the distributor and the exhibitor who does not possess the buying power to command a wide choice of product.

Montague, Columbia's sales manager, testified (R. 1258-59): "It is my belief that it (group-selling) is the most satisfactory method of distribution to the exhibitor. By that means the exhibitor knows that he has a certain program that is his, he knows what price the pictures are coming to him at, and he feels that he is having some insurance as against his investment in brick and mortar. We are quite certain that the majority of the exhibitors in the United States desire to buy that way."

He further testified (R. 1275): "A lot of these exhibitors would like not only to buy 44 (feature pictures) but they would like to buy 84, if we have them, because they need the film. They are changing in these towns—some of them use as many as six, and some eight and 12 pictures a week, if they have a double bill. They need these pictures. If you try to take them away and give them to somebody else in that town, you see the squawk they put up, because they feel that is their measure of protection and they want it."

Rodgers, Loew's sales manager, testified (R. 427) as follows concerning the same subject: "Well, in the first place they seem to think, I believe, that they can buy them cheaper, No. 1; and secondly, and of equal importance, is that it permits them to have a sort of a sense of security; if they would have a year's product at one time it would relieve them of the necessity for buying each month or each two months."

Scully, Universal's sales manager, testified (R. 1470) that "the exhibitors like to be assured of a constant flow of pictures. Sometimes they cannot get all of the good pictures or buy all of the good pictures, and they like to buy as many pictures as they can, so if sometimes they didn't have a good picture they might play one that is not so good, and they generally like to buy as many as they can, and they generally contract for all your pictures, with the right to select what they think they can absolutely use."

There was no contradiction of any of this testimony.

Likewise group-selling is "absolutely vital and absolutely necessary" to distributors situated like Columbia and Universal. Montague testified in this connection (R. 1258), "If we were to change our method of distribution to the so-called small group-selling which is used under the consent decree,* we would find it absolutely necessary to change the whole financial base of our company. We would not have—we do not have enough money to keep pictures in inventory, such as we would have to do, for any period of time. We find it absolutely necessary to turn our pictures over as rapidly as possible, to send that money back to California, so California can again invest it in pictures."

*Not more than 5 feature pictures at a time (R. 3375).

2. Offering to license and licensing pictures in groups is entirely legal.

There is no evidence at all in this record that any exhibitor asked Universal for the privilege of licensing fewer pictures than it did license, and was refused. In response to questions from the Court, Government counsel in summation admitted that a distributor has the right to prefer a licensee who wants several pictures over a licensee who wants only one (R. 2755-7). He claimed that legality depended upon the method used in getting the particular customer to take more than one (R. 2756), but, in so far as Universal is concerned, had offered no evidence as to the method used, to wit that there was any conditioning. Moreover, as Judge Hand observed, when there is the right to reject a certain number of pictures "that is not really block-booking" (R. 2736).

The contention that conditioning is illegal was rested by Government counsel on the contention "that a copyright-owner in dealing with copyrights does not have the same freedom of contract that somebody dealing in uncopyrighted material would have," when Judge Bright suggested that his argument "would prohibit any merchant from selling to a big buyer on better terms than he does to a small buyer" (R. 2756).

It is certainly strange doctrine that a copyright owner, who possesses statutory monopolies is more limited in his rights than he would be without them. If he could not offer several copyright licenses at the same time, or even at different times not very far apart, without being charged with conditioning, he would be in a sorry fix indeed. The Federal Trade Commission, indeed, in the Paramount Famous-Lasky case, post, pp. 88-90, did not question the right to do this.

3. The conditioning of the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another is legal in the case of a non-monopolistically-situated distributor.

The Court below analogized this practice to that of tying in unpatented materials to the use of process and machine patents, and held it a violation of the Sherman Act on the authority of the Carbice, Morton Salt, Motion Picture Patents and Mercoid cases (R. 3543), without any showing that it substantially lessened competition or tended to create a monopoly.

This holding of the court below was in direct conflict with Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U. S. 421, 428 wherein the majority thought the practice so clearly lawful that it dismissed the Commission's complaint. Mr. Justice Brandeis, dissenting, however, held that the particular circumstances should be controlling, and noted that the most important fact would be the extent to which the seller dominated the market. Obviously Universal cannot dominate the market.

The ratio decidendi in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. (2d) 132, (C. C. A. 2) is the same, and this case absolved the defendant in connection with the precise practice complained of here, despite Paramount's far greater importance in the business than Universal's.*

In the Paramount Famous-Lasky case the only point at issue was the legality of "block-booking", and there was a carefully reasoned opinion concurred in by the whole Court.

---

*The Commission found that the Paramount corporation was "the largest and strongest competitor in the trade," and that its power was so great that all competitors followed its trade practices.

The Federal Trade Commission had taken a great deal of evidence on the practice, and the Court therefore had full and complete data on the exact nature of what was done and with respect to its effects upon exhibitors and the public. The record relating to this subject was 669 pages long. Many witnesses testified that they had been refused the right to buy less than all the pictures. Others testified that the prices of pictures wanted by them were increased 50, 75 or even 100% over the price en bloc. In contrast the subject received little or no attention in the evidence in our case, in which no witnesses testified that they were refused the right to buy only such pictures as they wanted.

Although the Court below states (R. 3542), "In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any", it gives no record references, and support in the record is definitely lacking as to Universal. All that appears is that Universal customarily offered its pictures in groups in the first instance. That it was frequently unsuccessful in selling the entire group is obvious, and Scully, Universal's sales manager, testified (R. 1469): "A lot of exhibitors buy half of our product and some buy a little more". He further testified that: "Quite a lot of exhibitors have selectivity. Most of the exhibitors insist upon right of cancellation of a certain group of our product".

That the offering of feature pictures in blocks does not necessarily by any means result in all of them being sold can also be seen from Montague's testimony (R. 1272): "We attempt to sell our entire product at one time, but it is only a small percentage of the theatres in the United States that we succeed in doing that. It usually ends up with the exhibitor having a selective contract".

Mochrie, RKO sales manager, testifying concerning his experience in selling blocks of five feature pictures under the Consent Decree, stated that he sold them all if he could and less if he could not, saying (R. 1691): "In the case of the best picture I was successful in selling 14,000 theatres. In the case of the poorest of that block I was successful in selling only 6,250 theatres. So there were many, many theatres that I did not sell that poor picture to".

All of this means that Universal sold as many pictures at one time as an exhibitor was willing to buy.

But even if it did more than this, of which there is no evidence, and conditioned the licensing of one picture upon the acceptance of others, reason, as well as authority, suggests that there is no extension of the statutory monopoly when no more is done with two or more copyrights than can be legally done by a non-monopolistically situated distributor with non-copyrighted articles. If this were not so, George Bernard Shaw could not legally sell a book containing more than one of his copyrighted plays.

The cases relied upon by the court below, in which patent monopolies were extended by requiring unpatented materials supplied by the patentee to be used in conjunction therewith, merely denied the patentee the right to sue others supplying like materials to the licensees, for contributory infringement. They leave open the question of whether under the particular circumstances of each case violation of the Sherman or Clayton Acts took place, by reason of a substantial lessening of competition or tendency toward monopoly. Clayton Act, Sec. 3 (15 U. S. C. A., Sec. 14). Pick Mfg. Co. v. General Motors Corp., 299 U. S. 3. Thus they did not at all justify the court below in concluding that the mere fact of the conditioning resulted in a violation of the Sherman Act. In International Salt Co. v. U. S., No. 46, October Term, 1947, decided November 10, 1947, this court found that the Sherman and Clayton Acts had been violated in the particular situation, in which the largest domestic manufacturer of salt required its licensees of salt-utilizing machines to use its salt only. The Court acted, however, only upon the express finding that there had been action to foreclose competitors from a substantial market, that the volume of business affected by the tie-in contracts was substantial, and that the tendency of the arrangement to the accomplishment of a monopoly was obvious.

Our case is totally different. Universal is by no means the largest producer and distributor in the industry. It does, on the contrary, only a small part of the business, and very little of that in the high-quality feature picture field. There has been no lack of run-of-the-mine pictures such as Universal has specialized in. Its business reasons for endeavoring to license its season's product as a block, before production, are obvious, since the licensing of run-of-the-mine pictures one by one, after production, would be exorbitantly expensive and highly speculative.* Equally obvious are the business reasons for its customers wanting to stock up for an entire season so that they will not run short of pictures.

No claim can be made that Universal "block-booked" in combination or conspiracy with any of the other defendants, and the Court's conclusion of law is expressly limited to concluding that Universal violated the Sherman Act by "inviddually conditioning the offer of a license for one or more copyrighted films upon the acceptance by the licensee of one or more other copyrighted films, * * *" [R. 3693]. "Block-booking" is not part of the combination and conspiracy found to fix minimum admission prices, runs and clearances.

---

*We can think of no other industry which produces articles costing hundreds of thousands of dollars each without orders in advance for the same. It would in fact be foolhardy to do so.

The major defendants, indeed, have been operating for years under the restrictions of the Consent Decree authorizing them to license in blocks of not more than five feature pictures. United Artists sells picture by picture. Hence Columbia is the only other defendant concerned in the charge of "block-booking." Certainly it will not be claimed that Universal conspired with Columbia in this connection. On the contrary, it is obvious that both of these companies by offering a season's product at one time enabled the small exhibitors to satisfy their requirements and more effectively compete with their larger rivals.

In the case of a patented machine or process, it is easy to see that its use may be so important, in respect of the saving of time and money, that processors cannot effectively compete without having a license to use the machine or process. The patentee, therefore, if permitted to require its licensees to use its unpatented materials as a condition of a license to use its patented process or machine, is in a strategic position to monopolize the sale of such unpatented materials. In the case of copyrighted feature pictures, however, the copyright owner has no such power. His statutory monopoly extends only to the particular productions which he has copyrighted. The number of such productions which may be created is unlimited. He is in the same position, therefore, as is an owner of particular chattels, who necessarily has a monopoly over the particular chattels, but not over the production and sale of any other chattels of like kind.

The Court below wrongly thought that conditioning in the case of copyrights differed from conditioning in the sale of chattels which it impliedly conceded to be legal, "because it extended a monopoly which the owner of chattels is not assumed to have" [R. 3545]. In fact, however, as heretofore pointed out, this is exactly what the owner of particular chattels does have. "All the Copyright Act does is to create a form of property in the literary or artistic production of the author or artist. The Act attaches to the product of his brain certain attributes of property. One of these is the right of exclusive use similar to that attaching to physical property. * * * The monopoly, so-called, amounted to nothing more than the attaching to the work of an author or composer or producer of motion pictures of the same rights as inhere in other property under the common law." Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208 at p. 236.

The Opinion below relies (R. 3545) upon a statement in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. U. S., 309 U. S. 436, at p. 459; but it is not in point. There the defendant made its only profit by selling to refiners a patented fluid for incorporation into gasoline, the treated gasoline being in turn sold by them to jobbers. It attempted to keep up the price obtained by it for the patented fluid by maintaining, primarily and directly for the benefit of the refiners, the resale price charged by the jobbers for treated gasoline which it had licensed the refiners to make and sell to licensed jobbers and the jobbers to sell under another of its patents. This was held to be illegal price-fixing in that the patentee, having reaped its reward by selling the patented fluid was attempting to augment it by restricting its licensees, who paid no royalties, in exercising dominion over treated motor fuel which they had lawfully made or acquired, not in its own interest but in that of the refiners.

It is sometimes contended that block-booking leads to the placing of bad pictures along with the good, and should be prohibited because thus constituting an injury to the public. No evidence was taken on this subject. All of the evidence was to the effect that the exhibitors wanted the pictures they licensed, undoubtedly for the reason that they were the kind of pictures their audiences wanted to see. We believe this Court ought not to and will not concern itself with esthetic, intellectual or cultural standards in the production of motion pictures, when considering a charge of Sherman Act violation. Nor is the claim by any means to be taken as necessarily true, for it is equally arguable that the licensing of pictures in groups makes it possible for producers, who have the means, to experiment with a certain number of pictures conforming to high cultural standards, which they would not otherwise do if their pictures had to be licensed one by one to exhibitors, who would judge each of them strictly in accordance with box-office possibilities.

4. Master contracts are legal.

Nor can there be anything illegal under the Sherman Act, insofar as Universal is concerned, in licensing its feature pictures to an exhibitor who operates a chain of theatres, which are not engaged in a combination and conspiracy to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce, any more than it is illegal to sell supplies to a corporation operating numerous factories in competition with corporations operating only one factory. Ability to buy at wholesale may, it is true, give certain advantages to the large theatre chain, but this cannot be something with which the law should concern itself, as far as the licensor is concerned. He is merely dealing with the market as he finds it, and obtaining for himself good outlets for his pictures for at least a few years. His situation, after making such contracts, is distinctly less favorable than that of the major distributors, who have permanent controlled outlets.

To hold otherwise would mean that any supplier or licensor in deciding whether or not to deal with a user would have to determine at his peril whether or not the user could possibly use the materials supplied or the copyrights licensed to the disadvantage of his competitors.

5. Franchises are legal.

When feature pictures are committed for more than one season to a licensee, the contract is known as a franchise. This differs only in degree from the licensing of a season's product. The vast majority of Universal's franchises are made with independent exhibitors, some 727 of such franchises being in existence at the time of the trial as against 43 franchises with affiliated exhibitors. (R. 1472-84, Ex. U-2.)

In attempting to place its feature pictures against the competition of five major distributors and five other national distributors, Universal is very often unable to obtain the representation it would like in particular places. (R. 1472-1483.) In situations in which a large theatre chain was dealing with its competitors and not with it, Universal encouraged competing exhibitors to expend moneys in improving their theatres to convert them from second or subsequent-runs to first-runs. Such theatres sought franchises from Universal in order that they might be assured of its product over a period of years, without which assurance their new investment could not have been justified (R. 1480, 1483). In granting such franchises, it is obvious that Universal's action was counter-monopolistic.

Even where no copyrights are involved, it is thoroughly established that long-term supply contracts, whether to dispose of the entire output of a producer, or to supply the entire requirements of a purchaser, or for the supplying of exclusive agents in particular territories, are not illegal, certainly not illegal per se, under the Sherman Act. Match Corpora- tion of America v. Acme Match Corporation, 285 Ill. App. 197, 1 N. E. 2nd 867; Twin City Pipe Line Co. v. Harding Glass Co., 283 U. S. 353; Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States, 288 U. S. 344 (1933);* Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568 (1923); Moon Motor Car Co. of N. Y. v. Moon Motor Car Co., 29 F. (2d) 3 (C. C. A. 2d, 1928); Kelly-Springfield Tire Co. v. Bobo, 4 F. (2d) 71 (C. C. A. 9th, 1925), cert. denied, 268 U. S. 694; Carter-Crume Co. v. Peurrung, 86 Fed. 439 (C. C. A. 6th, 1898); Great Western Distillery Products v. John A. Wathen Distillery Co., 10 Cal. (2d) 442, 74 P. (2d) 745 (1937); New York Bank Note Co. v. Kidder Press Co., 192 Mass. 391, 78 N. E. 463 (1906); Southwest Kansas Oil & Gas Co. v. Argus Pipe Line Co., 141 Kan. 287, 39 P. (2d) 906 (1935); American Sand & Gravel Co. v. Chicago Gravel Co., 184 Ill. App. 509 (1914); Heimbuecher v. Goff, Horner & Co., 119 Ill. App. 373 (1905); Over v. Byram Foundry Co., 37 Ind. App. 452, 77 N. E. 302 (1906); Excelsior Quilting Co. v. Creter, 36 Misc. 698, 74 N. Y. Supp. 361 (Sup. Ct. N. Y. Co. 1902); Blauner v. Williams Co., 36 Misc. 173, 73 N. Y. Supp. 165 (Sup. Ct. N. Y. Co. 1901); English Hop Growers v. Dering, (1928) 2 K. B. 174.

Indeed, exclusive agency arrangements are one of the leading categories of reasonable restraints of trade set forth in the Restatement of the Law of Contracts, Ch. 18, Sec. 516, and in Williston on Contracts, Sec. 1645. The reasons for considering such restraints to be reasonable are well stated by Judge Rifkind in U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 45 Fed. Supp. 387, at pp. 388-389, aff'd 321 U. S. 707.

---

*In this case 137 competing coal producers granted exclusive selling rights to a selling agency. Yet no illegality was found.

If a supplier may legally enter into a requirements contract with another, or contract to dispose of his entire output, or make an exclusive agency agreement with him, without violating the Sherman Act, even when no rights under a statutory monopoly are involved, it is obvious that a copyright owner may a fortiori enter into an exclusive licensing arrangement covering a term of years for its copyrighted feature pictures. Such an arrangement, indeed, is the regular practice in connection with patents when an exclusive license is entered into for the duration of the patent or a lesser term.

The Government contended throughout the case that small exhibitors were at a great disadvantage vis-a-vis the theatres in large circuits, whether affiliated or independent, and one of the principal objects of this proceeding was to remedy, to the extent possible, the patent inequalities existing between the bargaining positions of the circuit theatres and that of the small exhibitors. In extending the prohibition against future franchises to those with small exhibitors, the decree frustrates a principal objective of the Government's.

The Amended and Supplemental Complaint (hereinafter sometimes called the complaint) at the very out-set, paragraph 17 (R. 3144-5), draws a sharp distinction between a "circuit theatre" and an "independent theatre". The former is defined as a member of a "theatre circuit" which in turn is defined as "a group of more than five theatres, owned, controlled or managed by the same person, partnership or corporation; or a group of more than five theatres which combine with each other, through a common agent, in licensing film". An "independent theatre" is any theatre which is not a member of a "theatre circuit" as thus defined.

The issue presented by the Government in respect of the legality of franchises is solely with respect to franchises made by distributors with large "theatre circuits". It points to such franchises, indeed, as one of the outstanding methods by which discriminatory privileges have been obtained by the theatres in large theatre circuits to the prejudice of the small exhibitor.

The decree, nevertheless, condemns franchises of any length, however free of restrictive characteristics and irrespective of whether or not they are granted to the smallest exhibitor or the largest theatre circuit. This provision goes far to defeat the purposes of the Government in instituting this proceeding, since the small exhibitor urgently needs commitments of pictures if he is to have any hope of competing with circuit theatres. If the small exhibitor has to bid picture by picture in competition with circuit theatres, having much greater buying power, and, in the case of the affiliated chains, having assurance of a large amount of good product, he can, to say the least, have no assurance of product whatsoever with which to run his theatre. While we can see no reason at all why a distributor which owns theatres should not be permitted to license its pictures thereto, the privilege thereby accorded is nothing less than the right to grant a permanent franchise, and it is most unjust that a medium-sized distributor, without theatres, should not be able to franchise competitors of the major defendants, who, unlike them, have no assured source of product. Thus instead of bettering the competitive position of the small exhibitor, the broad provisions of the decree with respect to franchises greatly worsen it.

The issue presented by the Government on the legality of franchises is set forth in paragraphs 121, 122 and 123 of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint (R. 3176-7). These allegations deal exclusively with the abuse of franchises by the distributors "in their dealings with circuits", both affiliated and unaffiliated. It is alleged that "these franchises often discriminate against independent theatres whose buying power is small".

There is not a word of complaint about the granting of franchises of reasonable length to small exhibitors. The entire complaint concerns the prejudicing of small exhibitors by the granting of franchises to large circuits. It is thus plain that the Government does not complain about the franchise as an institution. In other words, what it really complains of is the ability of the large theatre circuits to obtain franchises from distributors by means of their great buying power.

Producers and distributors who have great financial resources can freely purchase and operate theatres in which to show their pictures. Producers and distributors with lesser resources must by and large achieve effective distribution of their pictures through contractual arrangements in the nature of franchises. In no other way can they be assured of the necessary "show-cases" for their pictures, and in no other way can the independent exhibitors be assured of the vitally necessary product with which to operate their theatres. Consider the position of a small business man who desires to borrow money from a bank to invest in an independent theatre. Could he possibly do so without some distributor's commitment of its pictures to him for a reasonable term of years? Would the bank be satisfied with his ability to get pictures bidding picture by picture against the members of the large theatre chains, with their great resources? We thing the answer is evident.

Part Two

ASSUMING ARGUENDO, THAT LARGE CIRCUITS OF THEATRES, AFFILIATED OR UNAFFILIATED WITH PRODUCER-DISTRIBUTORS, WERE ENGAGED IN COMBINATIONS AND CONSPIRACIES TO MONOPOLIZE AND RESTRAIN INTERSTATE COMMERCE, PURSUANT TO WHICH, BY VIRTUE OF THEIR DOMINANT POSITIONS, THEY WERE ABLE TO DETERMINE WHAT THEATRES SHOULD RECEIVE PRIOR RUNS, AND TO FIX CLEARANCES AND ADMISSION PRICES, NOT ONLY FOR THEIR OWN THEATRES BUT FOR SUBSTANTIALLY ALL OTHER IMPORTANT MOTION PICTURE THEATRES IN THE UNITED STATES, THIS DID NOT COMPEL UNIVERSAL TO CHOOSE BETWEEN (1) REFRAINING FROM OFFERING ITS FEATURE PICTURES TO SUCH THEATRES ON THE ONLY CLEARANCES AND AT THE ONLY ADMISSION PRICES POSSIBLE, AND, IN SO DOING, EXERCISING ITS ORDINARY RIGHTS UNDER COPYRIGHT AND THE GENERAL LAW, OR (2) BECOMING IMPLICATED IN SUCH ALLEGED COMBINATION AND CONSPIRACY.

In Part One of this brief we have dealt with the legality of Universal's licensing practices per se, and have therefore discussed these practices in connection with Universal's dealings with independent exhibitors, not alleged by the Government to have been engaged in any combination and conspiracy to monopolize or restrain interstate commerce, in order to disassociate the discussion of the legality of these transactions between a medium-sized non-theatre-owning distributor and small independent exhibitors, contracting parties not in competition with each other, from the consideration of what evidence there may be, if any, of the existence of a combination and conspiracy among such non-theatre-owning distributor and either the five major companies, who were engaged in production, distribution and exhibition, or the large independent theatre chains.

In this Part Two of the brief we consider the legal effect of Universal's employing such licensing practices, heretofore shown to be legal in and of themselves, in its dealings with exhibitors affiliated with the major defendants, and in its dealings with large independent theatre chains, and of its licensing its feature pictures to either the best available markets, or the only available markets.

As heretofore pointed out, the Government's case against Universal, aside from the claimed illegality of its licensing practices, rests upon the following foundations: (1) that Universal did a high proportion of its business with theatres operated by the major defendants, and the large independent theatre chains, who were allegedly engaged in combinations and conspiracies to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce, and had thus allegedly obtained control of the best and most successful theatres, in which they had allegedly fixed runs, clearances and admission prices; (2) that Universal's failure to forego the use of such licensing practices, even assuming their legality per se, resulted in uniformity of action among the distributors, and "maintained" the runs, clearances and admission prices fixed by the circuits, to the detriment of independent exhibitors (Gov. Juris. St., p. 8).

The basic contention made herein is that Universal cannot be deprived of its legal right to license its pictures in the best, or only available, markets, in accordance with its right under the copyright statutes to make restrictive licenses, granting exclusive rights for limited periods, protected by clearance agreements, and its right thereunder, and under the general law, to license all of its pictures for a term of years to exhibitors operating chains of theatres, by reason of the fact that such licensees may now be found to have been engaged in combinations and conspiracies to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce, pursuant to which they determined what theatres should have prior runs, and fixed clearances and admission prices in the domestic motion picture theatre market.*

The Court below found (F. F. 84, R. 3674) that "independent distributors", i.e., non-defendant distributors, "when attempting to bargain with the defendants, have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs and admission prices, to which they have been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs * * *". It did not explain why a non-theatre-owning defendant distributor such as Universal, differing from the "independent distributors" only in being somewhat larger, was in any different position, and we contend that it was not.

Even if it be assumed that Universal ought to have known that there was reason to believe, prior to this Court's so holding, that the major defendants, or large independent theatre chains, were engaged in combinations and conspiracies to violate the Sherman Act, it would not have become implicated in such combinations and conspiracies unless it "joined mind and hand" with the members thereof.

---

*In the nature of things even a single theatre, engaged in no conspiracy, can fix its own admission price and dictate clearance and priority of run to a distributor, if it be the only high-class theatre in the locality, or the best one, as is very frequently the case. (See claims made in Gov. Bf., pp. 15-19). The R. K. O. brief expressly recognizes this power in the exhibitor when it says (p. 27) "The affirmance of the absolute prohibition on expansion thus wuld be equivalent to a judicial notice to all exhibitors in every state where R. K. O. now is without theatres that they could boycott R. K. O.'s product unless it was licensed to them at any terms they might set, with complete confidence that R. K. O. could not protect itself by acquiring its own outlets, * * *".

Licensing its pictures to such members in accordance with its legal rights is not such cooperation. Virtue v. Creamery Package Co., 227 U. S. 8, 33-4; U. S. v. Falcone, 311 U. S. 205; Direct Sales Co. v. U. S., 319 U. S. 703, 709-713

To hold otherwise, Universal submits, would mean that the existence of such a combination and conspiracy, or combinations and conspiracies, concertedly fixing the runs, clearances and admission prices of substantially all the important motion picture theatres in the United States, would effectively deprive Universal of its legal right to license its pictures to the best, or only available markets, in accordance with its well-established statutory rights under copyright and the general law, or permit the exercise thereof only at the certain risk of being implicated in such violations of law.*

The foregoing being true, it is plain that any uniformity of action on the part of Universal vis a vis the major distributors lacks significance, for, even absent conspiracy the admission price clauses heretofore discussed, requiring

---

*How essential it is for Universal to deal with the affiliated theatres of the five major defendants, if the Government's claims are correct, appears from statements in the Government's brief. At page 47 it says:

> "No producer or distributor can succeed without access to a substantial number of the affiliated theatres of the five majors", and claims (p. 56) that from ⅓ to ½ of a feature film's total domestic gross comes from exhibitions, ⅔ of which occur in affiliated theatres.

At page 61 it says: "These major theatre circuits are so powerful, so concentrated in the larger cities and so distributed geographically that no distributor can succeed without access to the markets which they represent."

the maintenance of current admission prices, would automatically create uniformity in the specification of admission prices, while the programming requirements of exhibitors and forces of competition would inevitably tend to produce uniform clearance.

V.

UNIVERSAL WAS FREE TO GRANT EXCLUSIVE AND RESTRICTIVE LICENSES OF THE CHARACTER HERETOFORE DISCUSSED, TO EXHIBIT ITS COPYRIGHTED FEATURE PICTURES, TO EXHIBITORS AFFILIATED WITH THE MAJOR DEFENDANTS, OR TO EXHIBITORS OPERATING LARGE INDEPENDENT THEATRE CHAINS, ASSUMED ARGUENDO TO HAVE BEEN ENGAGED IN COMBINATIONS AND CONSPIRACIES TO MONOPOLIZE AND RESTRAIN INTERSTATE COMMERCE, AND WAS LEGALLY ENTITLED TO NEGOTIATE FILM RENTALS, ON THE BASIS OF RUNS, CLEARANCES, AND ADMISSION PRICES FIXED BY THE LICENSEES, AND WHICH IT WAS UNABLE TO ALTER.

1. The large theatre circuits were basically responsible for any fixed system of runs, clearances and admission prices which may have existed, and Universal's position relative thereto was no different than that of non-defendant "independent" distributors.

The Court below found (F. F. 84, R. 3674) that "independent distributors", i.e., non-defendant distributors "were obliged to conform to a fixed scale of runs, clearances and admission prices if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs", and definitely implied; if it did not hold, that they were not co-conspirators. It nevertheless held that Universal, a non-theatre-owning defendant distributor was a co-conspirator, although employing the same practices as the so-called "independent distributors" (R.

918, 544-5), and selling the same markets, the sole difference being that it did a larger gross business.

If in fact, runs, clearances and admission prices in the domestic motion picture exhibition field were fixed, it is obvious that the large circuits, affiliated or independent as the case may be, were basically responsible therefor. This the Court below concedes (F. F. 69, R. 3672).

It found (F. F. 66, R. 3671) that "All of the five major defendants have a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which they own theatres, and this interest they were safe-guarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing films to exhibitors in those areas".

It further found (F. F. 79, R. 3674) that "The major defendants have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances, and in numerous instances have obtained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents". It further found (F. F. 88, R. 3675) "Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent-run", thus again viewing the matter from the standpoint of the self-protection of those having exhibition interests.

The case is no different in respect of the determination of first-run status. In 38 out of the 92 cities in the United States, having a population of over 100,000, all of the first-run theatres were operated by one or more of the major defendants. In 4 of such cities there were no affiliated first-run theatres, and in 50 of such cities there was competition between first-run affiliated theatres and first-run independent theatres (Ex. L-13).

Rodgers, Loew's sales manager, defined first-run theatres upon cross-examination by Government counsel (R. 561) as "The theatres which played the best pictures on the first-run". No other witness disputed this definition, and it seems to be plainly the correct one. As we have heretofore pointed out, the distributors of the best pictures select as first-run theatres, for obvious reasons, those which are the best equipped, best managed, best located, having the most responsible operators, are most suitable for the exhibition of the best feature pictures, and therefore are able to charge the highest admission prices (pp. 5-7 ante).

It, therefore, inevitably follows that the determination as to the first-run status of a theatre is necessarily made by the joint or several decisions of those owning or operating the best theatres and controlling the distribution of the best pictures. Universal has no theatres at all, and distributes only a very small proportion of the quality pictures.* It is plain, therefore, that it cannot either make or materially influence such decisions.

It is, therefore, apparent from the foregoing that if, as asserted by the Government and denied by the defendants, runs were determined, and admission prices and clearances were fixed, in concert, the responsibility therefor is basically that of the large circuits, independent and affiliated. If such combinations and conspiracies existed, there was no necessity for bringing Universal into it, which in itself makes it highly unlikely that Universal was brought into it.

2. Universal was in no position to dictate admission prices to motion picture theatres.

Motion picture theatres require the product of several distributors upon which to operate (G. X. 428a, 432). As heretofore pointed out, it is not at all feasible as a practical matter for theatre operators to change their admission prices from day to day, since the public would resent anything but a consistent admission price policy (p. 25, ante). What distributors seek to guard against, and as we have heretofore shown they are entitled to guard against, is a reduction in admission price after the license is made. It is out of the question for a non-theatre-owning distributor such as Universal, whose feature pictures are in keen competition for desirable playing time in particular theatres with the feature pictures of the other distributors, to seek to dictate to a theatre what admission price it should charge, not only for Universal's pictures, but, in view of the necessity of a consistent admission price, for the pictures of all other distributors. Thus whether or not admission prices in the domestic motion picture theatre market were fixed pursuant to combinations and conspiracies among large circuit operators and/or their affiliated producer-distributors, it is idle to suggest that Universal, having no theatres and releasing but a very small proportion of the quality pictures, could have had any material influence in the determination of such admission prices.

*"The major defendants as distributors have collectively controlled and still control the major part of the first-class film supply." Gov. bf, in No. 79, p. 130.

On the other hand, if the admission prices in the domestic motion picture theatre market were fixed pursuant to a combination and conspiracy to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce among the major defendants having aggregate assets totaling 25 times those of Universal (pp. 15-21 ante) and proportionate power, or by powerful independent chains, it is a fortiori clear that if Universal was to license its pictures at all in the best, or only available, markets, it would have no option but to accept their current admission prices as minimums. This being so, it is clear, we submit, that Universal, in exercising its legal right to make a restrictive license under copyright, was entitled to exact a covenant from affiliated or independent chain theatres that the current admission price should not be reduced, to the injury or destruction of the value of the subsequent-run licenses it planned to make.

3. Uniform clearance is to be expected as a result of the programming requirements of exhibitors and competitive forces, and, to the extent it exists, furnishes no proof against Universal of participation in a combination and conspiracy.

We turn now to clearance. The licensed prior-run exhibitor has a vital interest in the extent of the clearance which the licensor grants to him, because it has a very direct bearing upon the number of people who will view the exhibition of the feature pictures in his theatre at the higher admission price he charges.

As heretofore pointed out, the distributor has the full legal right to grant under copyright a fully exclusive license for the duration of the copyright. In granting an exclusive license for a limited time, and in providing by agreement for a clearance period thereafter prior to the granting of a subsequent-run license, the distributor agrees to a much smaller degree of exclusivity than he is entitled to grant.

In deciding whether it is willing to grant a clearance requested by the exhibitor, the distributor naturally takes into consideration the fact that a long clearance will diminish the value to him of the subsequent-run licenses he plans to make, by delaying a prompt play-off and depriving the subsequent runs of some of their expected patronage. This is the same sort of thing that the distributor seeks to protect himself against when he exacts a covenant from the exhibitor not to reduce his current admission price.

It thus is evident that the only interest which the distributor has in the degree of clearance is in connection with the obtaining of the largest aggregate film rental from both prior and subsequent runs. This, of course, involves a question of judgment. Since, however, the distributor is legally entitled to grant a completely exclusive license for the duration of the copyright, his judgment as to what is best for his own interest is, we submit, not properly subject to attack.

The amount of clearance which a particular theatre requires over another theatre is influenced by a number of factors, such as their comparative admission prices, size, location, appointments, entertainment policy, extent of competion with each other, etc. These of course are the same whatever distributor it licenses from. Just as a theatre must, for practical reasons, maintain a consistent admission-price policy whatever distributor's pictures it is showing, there is an obvious practical reason why it should desire to buy its feature pictures on some uniform clearance basis from all distributors, to wit, the difficulty making up its programs if it did not.* In any event, since the prior run benefits by a larger clearance, it will certainly not willingly accept a shorter clearance from one distributor than another is willing to give. Likewise non-uniform clearance

*The Government itself recognizes the fact that the exhibitor wants uniform clearance for it says in the amended and supplemental complaint (paragraph 119 R. 3176):

> "The dominant circuits in every exhibition area, whether they be affiliated or unaffiliated, in purchasing products generally request and secure the same runs and the same protections from all distributors * * *". (Emphasis ours).

R. 1709.

would prejudice subsequent-run exhibitors against the pictures of those distributors granting clearances longer than their competitors against such exhibitors, and deprive them of an even flow of pictures. If therefore a distributor wants to license his pictures to a favorably situated theatre, as he invariably is anxious to do, he must necessarily meet his competition in respect of clearances.

It is, therefore, apparent that reasons quite apart from combination and conspiracy, to wit, ordinary business reasons and the necessities of competition, tend to induce uniformity in clearance, and it is settled law, of course, that combination and conspiracy ought not to be deduced from the mere fact of uniformity when the fact is fully explained by ordinary business considerations.*

The question of the inferences which may be drawn from evidence of uniformity in selling terms was first considered by this Court in U. S. v. U. S. Steel Corporation, 251 U. S. 417. The Government brought suit to dissolve the Steel Corporation and the various units whose stock it had acquired several years before, on the ground that they were "engaged in illegal restraint of trade and the exercise of monopoly". (ibid., p. 436). It appeared that the Steel Corporation upon its organization had acquired over 50% of the total domestic and foreign business in its field, and that it had been organized for the purpose of monopolizing and restraining trade, but that it had never, in fact, attained monopoly power, and that its percentage of the steel business at the time of suit was approximately 41% of the total volume (ibid., pp. 438-9, 442). It also appeared that "Competitors * * * followed the Corporation's prices because they made money by the imitation"* (ibid., p. 447).

*The Government offered no evidence to supplement the showing of uniformity, while top executives of the defendants testified that it was fully explained by ordinary business considerations (R. 422, 425, 710-11, 1708, 1715, 717, 1708-9, 723-5, F. F. 63, R. 3670).

Both opinions in the District Court (U. S. v. U. S. Steel Corporation, 223 Fed. 55, 160, 176 (D. N. J., 1915)) and the opinion in this Court found that these prices had been, since the formation of the Corporation in 1901, the subject of agreements between the Corporation and competitors by means of pools, associations, and finally, the celebrated "Gary Dinners" (251 U. S., pp. 444, 445).

The opinions also found that the last of these various types of agreements had ceased nine months before the Government brought the suit (223 Fed., pp. 161, 176; 251 U. S., p. 445). However, as pointed out by Mr. Justice McKenna, the District Court offered to retain the Government's bill so that if the illegal agreements were resumed they could be restrained.

It will thus be seen that both the District Court and this Court, in the absence of other evidence of price agreement, refused to infer an agreement from mere price uniformity. In this connection, this Court stated (at pp. 447-9):

> "* * * Competitors, it is said, followed the Corporation's prices because they made money by the imitation. Indeed the imitation is urged as an evidence of the Corporation's power. * * *
>
> "* * * the opinion of an editor of a trade journal is adduced, and that of an author and teacher of economics * * *. His deduction was that when prices

*Assuming arguendo that conspiracy to fix prices (or clearances) may be deduced as against those whose economic power is great enough to bring about the result, from mere uniformity, it is plain that such uniformity has no significance in the case of a relatively small company which must meet competition in order to survive.

> are constant through a definite period an artificial influence is indicated; if they vary during such a period it is a consequence of competitive conditions. It has become an aphorism that there is danger of deception in generalities, and in a case of this importance we should have something surer for judgment than speculation, something more than a deduction equivocal of itself even though the facts it rests on or asserts were not contradicted. If the phenomena of production and prices were as easily resolved as the witness implied, much discussion and much literature have been wasted, and some of the problems that are now distracting the world would be given composing solution."

Later that year in Frey & Son, Inc. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 256 U. S. 208, this Court was compelled to appraise with great precision the inference which might be drawn from circumstantial evidence, including (but not limited to) evidence of uniformity of conduct. The basic issue presented in that case was whether the defendant Packing Company had merely exercised its privilege of dealing only with customers who maintained resale prices recommended by it (see U. S. v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300), or had entered into an agreement or combination with its jobbers to maintain such resale prices. The Court's ruling appears from the following extract from its opinion:

> "Among other things the trial court charged:
>
> "'I can only say to you that if you shall find that the defendant indicated a sales plan to the wholesalers and jobbers, which plan fixed the price below which the wholesalers and jobbers were not to sell to retailers, and you find defendant called this particular feature of this plan to their attention on very many different occasions, and you find the great majority of them not only expressing no dissent > from such plan, but actually cooperating in carrying it out by themselves selling at the prices named, you may reasonably find from such fact that there was an agreement or combination forbidden by the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.'

>
> "The recited facts, standing alone, (there were other pregnant ones) did not suffice to establish an agreement or combination forbidden by the Sherman Act. * * *." (pp. 210-11).

Because of this error in the instruction given by the trial court, this Court affirmed the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, reversing the judgment for the plaintiff below.

In U. S. v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693, where the Government petitioned for dissolution of the Harvester Company (doing some 64% of the business in its field) under a consent decree giving the Government "the right to such further relief * * * as shall be necessary to restore * * * competitive conditions and to bring about a situation in harmony with law" (p. 697) in the harvester industry, it appeared that many of the competitors of the Harvester Company had "been accustomed, independently and as a matter of business expediency, to follow approximately the prices at which it has sold its harvesting machines" (p. 708). The Court held, nevertheless, "that competitive conditions have been established in the interstate trade in harvesting machinery bringing about 'a situation in harmony with law'" (p. 710). In so holding, Mr. Justice Sanford, speaking for a unanimous Court, stated (pp. 708-9):

> "* * * the fact that competitors may see proper, in the exercise of their own judgment, to follow the prices of another manufacturer, does not establish any suppression of competition or show any sinister domination."

In Cement Manufacturers Protective Association, et al. v. United States, 268 U. S. 588, the question was directly posed. There, it was charged that the members of a trade association had combined and conspired to restrain trade by controlling prices and production of cement, through the Association's activities. It appeared, inter alia, that, in accordance with its constitution, the Association gathered from its members and promptly reported thereto information with reference to production, price of cement in closed transactions, freight rates from chief points of production, and other matters. It further appeared that there was "a substantial uniformity of price of cement." Variations of price by one manufacturer were "usually promptly followed by like variation throughout the trade. * * * and uniformity * * * resulted not from maintaining the price at fixed levels, but from the prompt meeting of changes in prices by competing sellers" (p. 605). The Government did not charge that there was an agreement on prices among the defendants. Rather the Government contended that the necessary effect of that which defendants had agreed to do was to restrain trade by fixing prices. This was the equivalent, however, of argument that the defendants had entered into a tacit agreement.

This Court refused to so find, reversing the decision of the lower court and stating (per Mr. Justice Stone):

> "* * * this record wholly fails to establish, either directly or by inference, any concerted action other than that involved in the gathering and dissemination of pertinent information with respect to the sale and distribution of cement to which we have referred; and it fails to show any effect on price and production except such as would naturally flow from the dissemination of that information in the trade and its natural influence on individual action" (p. 606).

We respectfully submit, therefore, that the Cement case (where, in addition to uniformity of price, closely related concerted action was concededly involved) a fortiori establishes that the inference of agreement or understanding may not permissibly be drawn from mere proof that the same prices are charged by competitors.

Decisions of the lower Federal and State courts are in accord with the views expressed in the cases above.

In U. S. v. American Can Co., 230 Fed. 859 (D. Md., 1916), the facts were very similar to those in the Steel case, supra. The Government charged that the American Can Company had been formed and maintained in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act; that its influence in fixing the price of packers' cans was so great that it dominated the market, and asked that it be dissolved. In refusing the dissolution, the Court noted that, in the cases urged by the Government as precedents, the defendants "had, not long before proceedings against them were instituted, done things which evidenced their continued intent to dominate and restrain trade by the use of methods which interfered * * * with the reasonable freedom of their customers or their competitors" (p. 902). And, dissolution was refused by Judge Rose on the ground, inter alia, that "As has been shown, defendant for a number of years past has done nothing of the sort" (p. 902).

Considering the evidence of price similarity between the Can Company and its competitors, the Court said (p. 892):

> "* * * There is no question that since 1901 the defendant [American Can Company] has very largely > fixed the price at which packers' cans have been sold throughout the United States. It has competitors who now sell approximately one-half the cans which are sold in the country. There is no evidence of any price agreement between it and them. There is no reason to think that there is on this subject any understanding of any kind * * *. Nevertheless, the prices it fixes are the standard prices from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the gulf, * * * They [competitors] never name their prices for the year until the defendant's have been made public * * *".

So, too, in U. S. v. Standard Oil Co. of N. J., 47 F. (2d) 288 (E. D. Mo., 1931), the Court*—in dismissing the Government's petition to prevent a contemplated merger of the Standard Oil Company of New York (Socony) and Vacuum Oil Company (Vacuum), because, assertedly in violation of the old Standard Oil decree (221 U. S. 1), which forbade any of the defendants in that case, including Socony and Vacuum "from entering or performing any like combination or conspiracy * * * to restrain commerce * * *"—made the following statement concerning the Government's argument that all the other oil companies in the area in which Socony and Vacuum did most of their business followed the prices for gasoline set by Socony, thus evidencing Socony's power for evil:

> "* * * if the major companies follow the Socony prices in this area, they do so because they do not wish to engage in a price-cutting war which might entail losses to all concerned (including Socony) without any compensating benefits. Such a view has no sinister aspect, but is merely a matter of business judgment and prudence illustrated in every com> munity in the country by retail competitors in all lines. * * * Grocers, butchers and all other lines in the same markets generally sell the same things at the same prices, for the sound reasons that they wish to get all they can, that they cannot get more than the price at which the bulk of what is sold in their respective markets is selling, and that they do not think it wise to cut prices. * * *" (pp. 316-317).

*The opinion was rendered for a unanimous three-Judge Court by Judge Stone.

The cases dealing with uniformity of conduct in other matters than prices are to a like effect. When explained by similarity in the conditions with which businessmen are faced, no justifiable inference of concerted action is permissible.

Thus, in Anderson v. Shipowners' Association of the Pacific Coast, et al., 27 F. (2d) 163 (N. D. Cal., 1928), aff'd 31 F. (2d) 539 (C. C. A. 9th, 1929), cert. den. 279 U. S. 864, plaintiff, a seaman, sued to enjoin the defendant shipowners' associations, their members and agents, from maintaining an alleged combination in restraint of commerce, and to recover damages. It appeared that the two defendant associations had organized an employment bureau through which seamen might be hired for the members. Plaintiff charged, inter alia, that the associations fixed the wages paid to seamen employed by all the members, and in support of that contention apparently introduced evidence that all of the defendant shipowners paid similar wages. The District Court, in dismissing this charge, stated:

> "* * * Each member of defendants pays such wages as are necessary in the current economic situation. Similarity of wage scales is due to similarity of conditions, rather than to any agreement among defendants or their members. * * *" (27 F. (2d) 163, 165).

In affirming this conclusion the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit stated:

> "The allegation in the bill that 'the associations fix the wages which shall be paid the seamen', is wholly unsupported by the record." (31 F. (2d) 539, 542).

Nissen v. Andres, et al., 63 Pac. (2d) 47 (Okla., 1936) is a highly significant State court decision. There, plaintiff, a retail ice dealer, sued defendants, manufacturers and distributors of ice at wholesale and retail, from one of whom plaintiff had obtained ice for a number of years, for damages for alleged destruction of plaintiff's business by defendants pursuant to a conspiracy among them for that purpose. It appeared that the defendant, who had previously supplied plaintiff, became involved in a controversy with plaintiff over plaintiff's methods of competition in retailing ice. It further appeared that, thereafter, all defendants refused to sell ice to plaintiff at wholesale prices, the reasons for the refusals varying slightly but the gist of each being that plaintiff's methods of competition in the retailing of ice were not approved. Plaintiff sold ice at retail, in many instances, at lower prices than defendants. He predicated his claim of conspiracy on the above-mentioned similar refusals of defendants. A judgment for defendants on demurrer to plaintiff's evidence was affirmed, for the reason that (p. 51):

> "While the similarity of the refusals is consistent with a prior agreement to so act in concert, yet it is equally consistent with independent action, since each defendant had ample opportunity to know of the plaintiff's competitive methods, and it was to the interest of each to know and be advised thereof, and in the natural course of business each would ordinarily obtain and have such information without any kind of prior agreement between themselves."

To the same effect is Commonwealth v. Hatfield Coal Co., 193 Ky. 229.

These cases make it abundantly clear that mere proof of like or similar action among competitors does not establish a prima facie case of conspiracy or agreement.

4. Assuming arguendo that runs and clearances were fixed by the large theatre circuits and/or their affiliated producer-distributors, Universal's involuntary acquiescence therein did not implicate it in any such combination and conspiracy.

Let us assume, however, that, as found by the Court below, runs and clearances in the domestic motion picture market were fixed pursuant to combination and conspiracy to restrain interstate commerce among the five major defendants, possessing the best theatres and controlling the best pictures, which the Government claims was also a combination and conspiracy to monopolize, and the consummation of which is alleged to have resulted in actual monopolizing. Or let us assume that the large independent theatre circuits likewise violated the Sherman Act. Under such assumptions, it becomes a fortiori true that the clearances granted by Universal must be uniform with those thus fixed and determined by the assumed combinations and conspiracies, if it is to license its pictures at all.

Certainly the existence, as assumed, of combination and conspiracy pursuant to which clearances have been effectively fixed, beyond all power of Universal to change them, does not prevent Universal from exercising its legal right to grant licenses under copyright with a less degree of exclusivity than it is legally entitled to grant. If it has no choice as to this degree of exclusivity, if it is to license its pictures in the best or only available markets, that does not make illegal what is otherwise perfectly legal.

The same arguments which are applicable to the granting of clearances are applicable to the recognition of theatres as first-run theatres, assuming arguendo the existence of a combination and conspiracy among the major defendants or monopolizing by the large independent theatre circuits. As heretofore pointed out, Universal's influence in the designation of such theatres is necessarily negligible. The question is pre-determined for it. Once it is thus pre-determined, such theatres, which have been designated or agreed upon by others as first-run theatres, become, by virtue of that fact, the best, indeed the only first-run, markets for Universal's feature pictures. It either licenses them or not at all.

The governing principles in this connection have been laid down in this Court in Virtue v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co., 227 U. S. 8, 33-4; U. S. v. Falcone, 311 U. S. 205, and Direct Sales Corporation v. U. S., 319 U. S. 703. Stated in simple terms they are that one may deal with the members of a combination and conspiracy without becoming implicated therein, even though he knows of such combination and conspiracy, provided he does not join mind and hand therein and thus cooperate with the co-conspirators. To license one's feature pictures in the best or only available markets under the only conditions possible in respect of runs, clearances and admission prices, and to grant restrictive and less than exclusive licenses under copyright in connection therewith, which are legal per se, is not to join mind and hand in any combination and conspiracy which may be in existence among one's customers.

If, as assumed arguendo, a combination and conspiracy to monopolize* and restrain interstate commerce was being carried on by the major defendants, or large independent theatre chains, pursuant to which priority in runs, clearances and admission prices were fixed in the domestic motion picture theatre market, the Government's duty was to break up such combination and conspiracy, and to restore competitive conditions so that licensors under copyright would not be compelled to accede in respect of such matters as runs, clearances and admission prices, to conditions determined by the co-conspirators.

*The Government contends that there was a combination and conspiracy to monopolize, which resulted in actual monopolizing, as well as a combination and conspiracy to restrain trade, which the Court below found. While finding an attempt to monopolize it refused to find that there was a combination and conspiracy to monopolize or any actual monopolizing.

As heretofore pointed out, the sole contentions made by the Government, upon which it bases its conclusion that the non-theatre-owning defendants were implicated in such assumed combinations and conspiracies are (1) that they sold their feature pictures in the best or only available markets, which to a great extent were controlled by such large theatre circuits, and (2) that the provisions in their licenses, even if assumed to be legal, "maintained" the run, clearance and admission prices fixed by such large theatre circuits in the course of such combinations and conspiracies, and are more favorable to them in some other respects than licenses made with independent theatres having small buying power (Gov. Juris. St., p. 8).

For the reasons above set forth such non-theatre-owning defendants had the right to sell in the best or only available markets, and are not to be implicated in any combination and conspiracy or any monopolizing, carried on by others to dominate such markets, merely because they exercised their legal rights to make restrictive and less than exclusive licenses under copyright, which necessarily accepted the runs, clearances and admission prices assumed to have been fixed by such theatre chains. Nor because the great buying-power of such theatre chains may have obtained for them better terms in certain respects than were obtainable by the small independent theatre.

5. Supporting authorities.

In the last analysis the case against Universal (assuming the validity of its restrictive and exclusive licenses under copyright, which we believe we have clearly demonstrated), depends, as the Government admits (Gov. Juris. St., pp. 7-8), upon two contentions: (1) that it licensed its feature pictures to a greater extent* on prior runs to the large theatre circuits than to independent theatres, on the basis of the admission prices which they currently charged, and (2) that in order to successfully compete with the major and other distributors, it had to grant clearances as great as those granted by the major distributors, and thus to license on much the same clearance basis.

On the foregoing basis the Government seeks to put Universal in the same basket with the major defendants and large independent chains. It is plain, however, that Universal merely accepted the market as it found it, having no power to change it. Naturally, the theatres affiliated with the major defendants and large independent chains were on the whole the best, when not the only available, prior-run markets for its pictures (R. 1697-1700), if the Government's charge that these circuits dominated the industry is true. It is preposterous to suggest that Universal, a relatively small distributor without theatres, could alter their pre-determined admission prices. As respects clearance, it is in no different position from one who follows a price-leader which dominates an industry. That the competitive necessity which impels a smaller competitor to meet the terms of the dominant factor in the industry results in no combination and conspiracy on his part is excellently demonstrated in the recent decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Aetna Portland Cement Co. et al., v. Federal Trade Commission, 157 F. (2d) 553.

*According to GX 425 Universal received 42.1% of its feature film rentals from the five major defendants, 2.4% from the five independent theatre chains paying it the next highest rentals, and 55.5% from other theatres.

Clearances granted by distributors to independent theatres exhibited like uniformity.

In that case the Commission had found a combination and conspiracy among 74 cement companies, made effective by the employment of a multiple basing-point system of pricing, resulting in the quoting of an identical delivered price by all producers who sought business at a given destination.

In reversing the Commission's order, the Court spoke in part as follows (p. 564):

> "We would think that in all forms of industry, particularly those of great magnitude, irrespective of the pricing system employed, that there would be found price leaders and price followers. We would suppose further that the leaders are those who occupy a commanding position, perhaps because of their size and strength, and that the followers would be those of less vitality. It may be a fact, we suspect that it is, that a price follower does not become such of his own free choice but that he is forced into such a position by a larger and perhaps dominating competitor. And it may also be a fact, again we suspect that it is, that in many instances those who are capable of exercising price leadership impose upon their less fortunate competitors. If such be the case, however, we do not see how this could create any inference of conspiracy or concerted action between the two groups, and neither do we see how it has any bearing upon the pricing system under attack."

It likewise pointed out that when one cement mill had a freight advantage over another cement mill distantly located, as it would have in its adjacent territory, the more distantly located cement mill would have to absorb the difference in freight if it were to sell in its competitor's adjacent territory. On this subject it said (p. 557):

> "* * * Thus these two competing mills are faced with a simple business proposition which can be solved in one of two ways, as their individual judgment may dictate. Each can confine its sales to the territory in which it has an advantage or can extend its business into the territory of the other. If they follow the former course, as the Commission would require them to do by its order, each will have a monopoly in its own territory and competition will be at an end. On the other hand, if the other course is pursued and they go into the territory where they are at a disadvantage freightwise, they necessarily must meet the price which they find there in order to sell. To enable them to do this, they absorb an amount of freight necessary to enable them to meet the price which they find. The same necessity which impels them to do this requires a reduction in their mill net in an amount equivalent to the freight which has been absorbed.
>
> Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the old Cement case (see also Maple Flooring Mfrs. Assn. v. United States, 268 U. S. 563), this pricing method employed by Mills A and C is not in restraint of competition, even though it results in uniformity of price at each destination."

Referring to the old Cement case (Cement Manufacturer's Protective Association v. U. S., 268 U. S. 588), the Court quoted therefrom as follows, p. 598:

> "* * * When a manufacturer establishes his factory at a given point of production and sells his product in a territory which is contiguous freightwise to his factory, other mills established in the vicinity and serving the same territory, in order to compete in > that territory (italics ours) * * must sell at a mill price which will permit them to deliver cement at a price which will enable them to compete with the mill or mills located at the basing point * *."

The same considerations obviously apply with respect to the acceptance of clearances, which Universal, by reason of its position in the industry, can have no real influence in determining. It must meet competition or not do business.

Nor can it be properly argued that the large amount of business done by Universal with the theatres affiliated with the major defendants and with the large independent chains should be given any weight in determining whether Universal was implicated in any combinations or conspiracies engaged in by them.

In U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, 321 U. S. 707, an exclusive relationship, not merely a good-customer relationship, between a supplier and user, was held to be free from objection, by an equally divided vote of this Court. In that case the supplier, Bausch & Lomb, had agreed with the user, Soft-Lite, to an exclusive-dealing arrangement in respect of pink-tinted lenses for eyeglasses. Soft-Lite was found to have engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy with its wholesalers and retailers, and to have fixed the prices charged by them for such lenses.

The exclusive-dealing arrangement had been made in 1924, and the relations between Bausch & Lomb and Soft-Lite had been close and intimate for twenty years. As disclosed in the opinion, Bausch & Lomb, through stock control, dominated a number of the wholesalers who had participated in the combination and conspiracy with Soft-Lite. Bausch & Lomb thus profited in two ways from the Soft-Lite business, first from profits made by manufacturing and selling to Soft-Lite, and second by sharing through stock ownership in wholesale distributors of Soft-Lite's goods in the profits which lay between the Soft-Lite selling price and the consumer purchase price (pp. 711, 713-4).

Bausch & Lomb "concerned itself with prices charged to wholesalers by Soft-Lite, discussed each step of the price mark-up from Soft-Lite up to the consumer, insisted that reductions in its prices to Soft-Lite should be passed along the distribution line, and through its affiliated corporations cooperated in the price arrangements and the elimination of undesirable retailers" (p. 714).

Despite all this, Bausch & Lomb was exonerated, even though it was tied to Soft-Lite by an exclusive-dealing arrangement.

Universal's relationship to the major defendants and large circuits, on the other hand, is merely that of one of their many suppliers. They were its customers, nothing more.

VI.

IF THE MAJOR DEFENDANTS, OR LARGE CHAINS OF INDEPENDENT THEATRES, ALLEGED BY THE GOVERNMENT TO HAVE COMBINED AND CONSPIRED TO MONOPOLIZE AND RESTRAIN INTERSTATE COMMERCE, EMPLOYED LONG-TERM LICENSE CONTRACTS OBTAINED FROM A NON-INTEGRATED DISTRIBUTOR SUCH AS UNIVERSAL, FOR ALL ITS FEATURE PICTURES, TO BE SHOWN IN ALL THEIR THEATRES, TO EFFECTUATE SUCH COMBINATIONS AND CONSPIRACIES, THE REMEDY IS TO ENJOIN SUCH THEATRE CHAINS FROM ENFORCING SUCH CONTRACTS, NOT INJUNCTION AGAINST THE GRANTOR THEREOF, WHICH DID NOTHING MORE THAN DEAL WITH THE BEST OR ONLY AVAILABLE CUSTOMERS ON A WHOLESALE BASIS.

If this Court sustains the decree of the Court below enjoining Universal, the decree as affirmed will constitute prima facie evidence of violation of the Sherman Act in treble damage suits. (Title 15, U. S. C., Sec. 16, 38 Stat. 731.) Such treble damage suits by independent exhibitors already run into many millions of dollars, and an affirmance by this Court would undoubtedly multiply them many times.

Yet as heretofore shown, the case against Universal (aside from the legality of its licensing practices per se which we think to be clear) rests exclusively upon the fact that it unavoidably did a high proportion of its business with the prior-run theatres of the major defendants, and the large independent theatre circuits, which were its best, when not, as was very frequently the case, its only available markets, and the further fact that it necessarily had to deal with them on the basis of the admission prices and clearances determined by them, independently or in concert, if it were to license its feature pictures at all.

1. Franchises with theatre chains.

The Government claims that contracts, pursuant to which the feature pictures of a non-integrated distributor such as Universal are committed, sometimes for a term of years, to a major theatre chain, or to a large independent circuit, are per se in violation of the Sherman Act, because of their potentialities for abuse by the licensee.* For example, it is said that the film rental can be allocated among the various theatres of the licensee chain so as to permit its theatres in the weakest competitive position to more strongly compete with their competitors, i.e., by allocating relatively small film rentals to them and larger film rentals to those theatres in the chain which are in better competitive position. This, of course, is nothing but a matter of bookkeeping. It is also said that the licensee chain can distribute the feature pictures around among its theatres in the most advantageous way to meet the competition of independent theatres.

*Examination of such Universal contracts of this type as are in evidence discloses that they specify film rental terms, or provide for their specification, in each individual theatre situation, and do not contain that provision which the Government particularly objected to in U. S. v. Griffith Amusement Co., 68 F. Supp. 180, i.e. the privilege of playing features out of the order of release. G. X. 198, G. X. 259-263, G. X. 384, G. X. 470, G. X. 473.

The characterizations by the Government, in the index to its Appendix, of certain provisions of these contracts as "arbitrary", when lacking adequate explanation, are themselves arbitrary.

Since it is plain that such franchises to single independent theatres are legal (pp. 95-99, ante), the only objection thereto can be that they are made with exhibitors operating a great many theatres. But what such a licensee can do is nothing more than any large integrated business, with many operating units, can do, vis a vis small competitors, with operating assets supplied it under output, requirements or other long-term supply agreements by distributors. The fault is not with the suppliers, who have to do business in the markets as they exist, and thereby secure good outlets for their pictures for at least a brief term of years,* but plainly lies in the abuse of power by great business combinations making wrongful use of the operating assets supplied them. The supplier does not have to determine at its peril whether or not it is dealing with lawbreakers, i.e., monopolists. Virtue v. Creamery Package Co., 227 U. S. 8, 33-4, U. S. v. Falcone, 311 U. S. 205. He restrains noobody by dealing with them, for the only restraint is in the exclusivity of the franchise contracts, which, as we have shown, is analogous to the reasonable restraint inherent in exclusive-dealing contracts, and in any event is entirely proper in respect of licensing under copyrights.

*Cf. this with the permanent outlets possessed by the major defendants for their pictures.

If, as charged by the Government, the five major defendants, or large independent chains, were engaged in combinations and conspiracies to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce, and, in the course of effectuating such conspiracies, they made use of long-term contracts obtained from non-integrated distributors, such arrangements should be terminated by injunction against the conspiring licensees, but not against the licensors, unless they were in fact members of such combination and conspiracy, i.e., "joined mind and hand" therein. The mere making of such wholesale contracts, which were made with all types of licensees, by no means makes them such. They must take the market as they find it, even though they might well prefer to deal theatre by theatre, in that they might well obtain larger revenue in this way by dealing with licensees with less buying-power.

That there is not the slightest necessity to restrain the non-theatre-owning distributor, in order to abrogate illegally-used contracts, is to be seen from the decision of this Court in U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Company, 323 U. S. 173. In that case the complaint had charged a group of exhibitors who operated a chain or chains of theatres, together with the 8 largest distributors, with a combination and conspiracy to violate the Sherman Act. In the Court below the five major distributors were dismissed after the Consent Decree in this case was entered in 1940 (p. 176). Of the other three distributors the Court found that only one had violated the Sherman Act, and this was not Universal (p. 176). Only the exhibitors and three individual defendants appealed. The five major distributors who had been dismissed, and the distributor found to be implicated in the conspiracy, were necessarily treated by this Court as alleged co-conspirators, they having become non-defendants against whom no injunction could issue.

The use of franchises, i.e., long-term contracts, in competitive warfare against independent exhibitors by the combination of exhibitors was one of the principal elements in the case. After pointing out that the District Court found that some of the distributors (not including Universal) were co-conspirators on certain phases of the program (p. 183), this Court put that circumstance to one side, stating that it was immaterial whether or not the distributors technically were or were not members of the conspiracy, in view of the fact that it found a conspiracy to monopolize and restrain interstate commerce among the exhibitors. It was argued by the appellants that the injunction directed by the Court below against franchises should be directed against the distributors. This Court, however, upheld the injunction in respect of franchises against the exhibitors, and thus abrogated existing franchises, although it could not in the posture of the case issue any injunction against the non-defendant major distributors who had granted the franchises. It expressly conceded that franchises might be lawfully used (p. 188).

If, therefore, there was illegality in the manner in which the long-term contracts granted by Universal were employed by the major defendant licensees or large independent theatre chains, it was due to monopoly which the Government through inaction has suffered to exist, not to the normal every-day business action of Universal in making wholesale deals with such aggregations of theatres on the only basis open to it.

2. Alleged discriminations contained in such franchises.

A monopolistic combination is, of course, by reason of its power, in a position to secure more favorable contracts from distributors or suppliers than smaller businesses may be able to obtain. If, in order to license or sell their products, such distributors or suppliers have to give way before such superior bargaining power, to a certain extent, this does not make them participants in the illegal activities of the buyers or licensees. No such thing, we are confident, was held by this Court in the Interstate Circuit case, and in citing this case and the Crescent case for the general proposition that any "discriminating contract constitutes a conspiracy between the licensor and licensee" (R. 3550), the Court below went far afield. Indeed, since a licensor under copyright, in granting an exclusive license, very emphatically discriminates—and does so legally, it is difficult to understand how anything can be made out of far less important provisions which are allegedly discriminatory.

In dealing with great numbers of licensees, whose buying power greatly varies, and whose businesses are differently situated, it is certainly impossible to treat them all exactly alike in respect of each term of the contract. Their situations are different, and some insist upon privileges in which others may or may not be interested. In any event the superior bargaining power of a large unit can be expected to enable it to obtain favorable treatment.

Despite these rather obvious considerations, the court below in its Opinion (R. 3549-51) attached considerable importance to what it termed discriminatory provisions in the licenses made by Universal with the large theatre chains. Relying exclusively upon testimony (R. 1432-3) given by Lazarus, United Artists' sales-manager, concerning its practices, the Court improperly concluded, without any evidence to support it, that Universal's practices were the same. Even as to United Artists the testimony was not all to the effect stated by the Court. All Lazarus said was that generally speaking his company "wrote up" the deal on the standard form of agreement when dealing with small independents. The Court concluded from this that provisions, favorable to the large theatre chains, were written into the contracts with them because certain clauses were made part of such contracts. It overlooked the fact that the standard contract is always part of the contracts with the large theatre chains also, as the very exhibits it cites show (R. 3549-50). It further overlooked the fact that when a distributor "wrote up" a contract on its standard form, it could easily add by riders or interlineation any clause agreed upon between the parties, and this was in fact customary (R. 1471).

Thus there is no proof that Universal denied any of the privileges relied upon to any small independent. There is affirmative proof, on the contrary, that it granted those in which independents were interested. Indeed, the very standard contracts, upon which the Court relies as excluding them, actually grant a number of these privileges, to wit, the right to exclude foreigns, G. X. 289, clause Eighth (2)(b), the exclusion of pictures of outside independent producers, G. X. 290, clause Twentieth, and large privileges in the elimination of films, G. X. 289, clause Fifteenth; G. X. 290, clause Fourteenth. Moreover, Scully, Universal's sales-manager, testified that substantial selection and elimination privileges were granted alike to affiliated and independent theatres (R. 1469-71).

Of the exhibits cited by the Court only seven have to do with Universal (G. X. 259, 260, 262, 263, 384, 470, 473). None grant the right to change the bracket in which a picture has been placed by Universal. None grant "unlimited playing time". None grant "extended playing time", though a few appear to recognize its existence. "Extended playing time" simply means that when a picture has done well for the period originally licensed, the exhibitor is permitted to continue to exhibit it for an additional period on payment of an additional agreed film rental. It is wholly incorrect to suggest that this right is not freely granted to small independent exhibitors, formally or informally, as with film rental concessions (R. 1273).

There remain out of the "discriminations" found by the Court only a few which are of no interest to the small exhibitor. Permission to deduct for double-bills, as an examination of the exhibits cited by the Court will show, is granted only in respect of percentage deals. Dealings with small independents are almost always on a flat rental basis.

Universal's standard contract is drawn for use with 18,000 theatres, few of which can qualify as top houses suitable for road-shows at advanced admission prices. In any event Universal has released no road-shows. Hence the road-show priority clause proves nothing as to it.

The right to move over a picture from one theatre to another is of very limited application, inasmuch as few situations present the proper opportunity for a continued first-run in a smaller but suitable first-run theatre. Obviously only an exhibitor with more than one first-run theatre could avail itself of the opportunity, which, in any event, a distributor has the full right to grant to whomever it pleases. The right to make up in another theatre a deficiency in playing flat rental pictures by playing the pictures not played in the first theatre in some other theatre in the same Exchange area, likewise is of interest only to chains. The eight weeks' suspension clause is something which Universal insists on having to get its pictures free from a closed theatre.

Finally it is to be said that if in fact some licensees received more favorable terms in some respects than others who also wanted them did, of which there is no evidence, it does not appear that they were not paid for in increased film rental. It does appear, however, that the non-theatre-owning distributor is very liberal in making adjustments in film rental with the independent exhibitor, giving him much more leeway in this respect than is given to affiliated exhibitors (R. 1273). There is nothing to show that the independent exhibitor is not satisfied with such adjustments, or that he wants anything more.

In any event, it is no violation of the Sherman Law for a distributor to independently grant more favorable terms to one buyer than to another. Moore v. N. Y. Cotton Exchange, 270 U. S. 593, 605; Terminal Warehouse Co. v. Penn R. R. Co., 297 U. S. 500, 511, 515. The Robinson-Patman Act applies only to discrimination in price in the sale of commodities of like grade and quality, having a specified restrictive effect upon competition. (Title 15, Sec. 13 et seq., U. S. C. A.) A fortiori, a copyright proprietor does not have to treat all licensees alike.* Buck v. Hillsgrove, 17 Fed. Supp. 643 (D. Ct. R. I. 1937); Victor Talking Machine Co. v. The Fair, 123 Fed. 424 (C. C. A. 7, 1903); Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Platt, 142 Fed. 606 (N. D. Ill., 1906).

The Court below apparently came to this conclusion ultimately, for it did not enjoin what it had condemned in its conclusions of law (R. 3692, C. L. 8d). Moreover, it expressly found that the evidence was insufficient to justify a conclusion that there had been any discrimination in respect of film rentals, clearances or minimum admission prices, which as it pointed out were the alleged discriminations "especially" relied upon by the Government. (R. 3550-1).

*Especially is this true of motion picture theatres which differ greatly in their characteristics.

If the law were otherwise than as above argued, every supplier who made a wholesale or long-term exclusive-dealing contract with a large user would do so at the peril of being implicated in a violation of the Sherman Law, by reason of the potential or actual ability of the user to capitalize upon the contract to the disadvantage of its smaller competitors. Obviously this cannot be the law. Obviously the task of policing monopoly is the Government's, not the small business man's, since the latter, in order to live, must frequently deal with monopolies, if the Government permits them to exist.

Part Three

THE REMEDY PRESCRIBED BY THE DECREE DEPARTS IN A NUMBER OF RESPECTS FROM WELL-ESTABLISHED LEGAL PRINCIPLES, AND IN IMPOSING A MANDATORY SYSTEM OF COMPETITIVE BIDDING, REGULATING IN DETAIL THE OPERATIONS OF NON-THEATRE-OWNING DISTRIBUTORS WHO ARE NOT PUBLIC UTILITIES, IS UNAUTHORIZED BY STATUTE AND UNCONSTITUTIONAL, IN THAT IT CONSTITUTES A JUDICIAL USURPATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER.

Universal contends that on the whole of the evidence it is entitled to a decree of dismissal. It contends that the injunctive provisions of any decree to be entered herein should run only against those who are found upon adequate evidence to have joined mind and hand and cooperated in any combination and conspiracy to restrain interstate commerce which may have existed, and not extended to those who dealt therewith on the only terms possible. It further contends that under no circumstances, whatever its findings, was the Court below entitled to prescribe a system of competitive bidding, regulating in detail the operations of non-theatre-owning distributors which are not public utilities.

In imposing such a system of competitive bidding the Court does not act judicially but administratively, and thereby usurps the legislative power. It is authorized neither by statute nor, we submit, by the Constitution to act, so as to minutely regulate and in detail supervise the everyday business operations of a distributor, carried on in a lawful manner, and is moreover ill-equipped and unfitted to so act to supervise in perpetuo the detailed operations of a far-flung industry. Only an administrative body which can issue quasi-legislative rules and regulations can possibly possess the necessary personnel and expert familiarity with the industry to properly administer such a task, if anyone could. We know of no case in which anything like it has been attempted by a court.

Other less important provisions of the decree require revision, assuming that any injunctive provisions in respect of minimum admission prices, clearances, franchises, master agreements and block-booking are proper as against Universal, which Universal, of course, denies.

As to the minimum admission prices, although the opinion and findings of fact seemingly do not condemn the mere granting of a license in which minimum admission prices are specified, the decree does so (II, sub-div. 1, R. 3695). That which is apparently condemned by the Opinion and by the Findings of Fact is engaging in a system, pursuant to which minimum admission prices are fixed (F. F. 62-73, R. 3670-3).

Likewise in respect of clearance, although the findings of fact approve the institution of clearance (F. F. 78, R. 3674), Universal is forbidden "to maintain a system of clearances" with any exhibitors (II, sub-div. 2, R. 3695). If Universal grants more than one license, and it must necessarily grant thousands, it will certainly be accused under this provision of maintaining a "system of clearances" with exhibitors. Yet it is difficult to understand what illegality there would be therein, if the individual clearances are legal.

The burden of proof of sustaining the validity of any clearance provision, when attacked, is placed upon Universal. Yet the test of the validity of the clearance is whether it is "in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted", a matter which is exclusively the concern of theatre operators, and of which Universal obviously can have no direct knowledge (II, sub-div. 4, R. 3695-6). It is moreover absurd to place this burden upon a non-integrated distributor which has no power to do anything but deal with the market on the terms which the market is willing to accept.

Universal is enjoined from performing any existing franchises and from making any franchises in the future, even with small independent exhibitors (II, sub-div. 5, R. 3696). As heretofore pointed out, such franchises are not only legally unobjectionable, but are plainly anti-monopolistic. A "franchise", moreover, is defined without reference to the exclusivity of the arrangement. In other words, any commitment of Universal's pictures for more than one year, would, under this definition, be a "franchise", even if completely non-exclusive. This condemns any non-exclusive license for a term of years, an everyday institution in the patent law at least. Universal is thus deprived of the elementary right to maintain "show-windows" so necessary for the proper exploitation of its pictures, and freely permitted to the major defendants (Decree, V, R. 3700).

Likewise, in the case of master agreements, Universal is enjoined from making the same, even with small groups of independent exhibitors (II, sub-div. 6, R. 3696). It is further enjoined from making or further performing any formula deals, although the only findings of the Court relating to formula deals were in respect of RKO and Paramount (F. F. 86, R. 3675).

The provision of the decree relating to "block-booking" assumes that all deals in which a number of features are sold at the same time are infected with the vice of conditioning, which is obviously not a fact, and requires that in all such cases, in which features have not been "trade-shown" prior to the granting of the license, the licensee shall be given the right to reject 20% thereof. This in the face of the fact that Universal presently grants to its licensees the right to reject a considerable number of such features, whether or not there has been any conditioning (R. 1468-71).

VII.

THE IMPOSITION OF A SYSTEM OF COMPETITIVE BIDDING, REGULATING IN DETAIL THE OPERATIONS OF NON-THEATRE-OWNING DISTRIBUTORS, WHICH ARE NOT PUBLIC UTILITIES, IF NECESSARY IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST, IS A MATTER FOR CONGRESS, OR AN ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNAL CREATED THEREBY, NOT THE COURTS. THE RECOGNIZED JUDICIAL SANCTIONS TO RESTORE COMPETITIVE CONDITIONS IN A SHERMAN ACT CASE ARE TO ENJOIN UNREASONABLE RESTRAINTS OF TRADE AND TO DISSOLVE MONOPOLIES OR MONOPOLISTIC COMBINATIONS.

One of the Government's assignments of error—No. 10—reads as follows:

> "The Court erred in decreeing competitive bidding as appropriate relief in situations where the defendants' theatres were in competition with independent theatres."

This is a direct attack upon the legality of the competitive bidding relief granted in the decree, since it goes to the heart of the Government's basic contention in the case that affiliated theatres were favored by distributors over independent theatres.

If, as found by the Court below, prior runs, clearances and admission prices in the important domestic motion picture theatres were fixed by combination and conspiracy, the proper remedy was to restrain and prohibit the continuance thereof by appropriate means. Instead, the Court resorted to a hitherto unheard-of form of relief, when it imposed a mandatory system of competitive bidding to regulate in detail the operations of distributors who are not public utilities.

It seems to us plain that such a remedy, if appropriate at all in the circumstances, is exclusively for the determination of Congress, which, if it sees fit, can create an administrative agency to govern the industry through quasi-legislative rules and regulations. The judicial power, we think it is clear, does not extend to such manner of relief, through which the operations of a non-public utility industry are closely regulated in perpetuo without Congressional sanction.*

Instead of forbidding the defendants to continue the use of practices found to be illegal, and/or employing the remedy of dissolution, insofar as appropriate, the Court forbade the defendant-distributors to license their pictures (except in the case of a major defendant licensing its pictures to its own theatres), "in any manner except" as prescribed.

The gist of the prescription, as applied to Universal, is (1) that it must offer to license every theatre which

---

*In Hartford Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, this Court struck down the lower court's prohibition against dealing with patented machinery in any way but sale, and restored the right to license and lease. At page 409, after discussing the broad range of relief available to control Sherman Act violations, it said:

> "But, even so, the court may not create, as to the defendants, new duties, prescription of which is the function of Congress, or place the defendants, for the future, in a different class than other people."

desires to exhibit a feature picture distributed by it upon some run and upon uniform terms, and (2) that, when Universal desires to select a particular theatre for exclusive license on a particular run, it must award such license after competitive bidding conducted in accordance with certain detailed specifications in the Decree, and must base the award solely upon the considerations set forth in the Decree, to the exclusion of all other considerations, however important to the distributor.

The specific restrictions contained in the Decree as to the methods of licensing to be employed are as follows:

1. The distributor must offer to license for a flat rental as distinguished from a percentage of the gross receipts;

2. The distributor must specify, in advance, the number of days for the exhibition to be licensed, and the time when the exhibition is to commence;

3. The distributor must specify precisely when the picture will become available;

4. The distributor must specify the clearance, if any, which it is willing to grant; and

5. The exhibitor's counter-offer must specify: (a) the run he desires to have; (b) the rental he will pay, either as a flat rental, or a percentage of the gross receipts or both, or any other form of rental; (c) the clearance the exhibitor is willing to accept; (d) the playing time the exhibitor desires to have; and (e) any other offers which the exhibitor cares to make.

The distributor is permitted to reject all offers, but is required, in the event he accepts any, to grant the license upon the run bid for "to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor".

Under this prescribed system of competitive bidding, the primary duty of the distributor, after he has satisfied himself that a theatre is of the "size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return" to him, is to determine the highest responsible bidder. But under the system prescribed such distributor will necessarily be confronted with various bids having no common denominator, in that some may be flat bids, some percentage of gross receipts bids, some a combination of both, and some in other forms of rental. The distributor, therefore, must determine, on peril of being held in contempt, who is the "highest responsible bidder". Yet, it is plain that he will be unable to do so.

Even, however, were the bids such that the distributor could determine who was the highest responsible bidder, the objective considerations prescribed in the Decree fall far short of being adequate to protect the legitimate interests of a distributor.

In the Consent Decree negotiated between the Government and the five major defendants (Article X, R. 3384-5), an arbitrator, in adjudicating upon the propriety of a refusal to license, is required to take into consideration, among other things, the following factors, and to accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

> "The terms, if any, offered in respect of each of the two competing theatres; the seating capacity of each of said theatres; the capacity of each for producing revenue for the distributor; the character, appearance and condition of each, including its furnishings, equipment and conveniences; the location of each of said theatres; the character and extent of the area and population each serves; the competitive conditions in the area in which they are located; their comparative suitability for exhibition of the distributor's features on the run requested; the character and ability of the exhibitor operating each and his reputation generally in the industry and in the community for showmanship, honesty and fair dealing; the policy under which each of the theatres has been operated and the policy under which the complainant proposes to operate his said theatre if he obtains the run requested; the financial responsibility of the exhibitor operating each of said theatres; and the distributor's prior relations with each of the two theatres involved and with their owners and operators and any equities arising therefrom."

Among the very important factors omitted from the final Decree are:

1. Comparative suitability of the competing theatres for the exhibition of the distributor's features on the run requested;

2. Character and ability of the exhibitor operating each of the competing theatres, and their respective reputations generally in the industry and in the community for showmanship, honesty and fair dealing;

3. The policy under which each of the competing theatres has been operating, and the policy under which they respectively propose to operate if the run requested is obtained;

4. The distributor's prior relations with each of the competing theatres involved, and with their owners and operators, and any equities arising therefrom;

5. Competitive conditions in the area in which the competing theatres are located;

6. Character and extent of the area and population which each of the competing theatres serve.

In other respects the system decreed is unworkable. It is, for example, wholly impractical for either a distributor or exhibitor to determine, at the time of the licensing, exactly how long a picture shall be run without any leeway for extended runs. This for the reason that public demand determines the length of the run. Yet under the licensing system prestribed no leeway is possible, because competing bids must necessarily be compared on the basis of the same playing time. If bids should be made for different playing times, it would not be possible to compare them, since, as in the case of film rental, there would be no common denominator. For example, one bid might be for 5 successive weekdays, another might be for 3 successive week-days followed by Saturday and Sunday, and still a third might be for 4 week-days and a holiday. Since attendance is ordinarily far greater on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, any strict comparison of the bids would be impossible.

Nor is it possible, as a practical matter, for a distributor, when licensing a picture, to contract to make it available at a specified time. The exchanges of the defendant-distributors are and must be run like circulating libraries, in the operation of which it is impossible to determine just when an exhibitor will complete a run and return a print to the booking office. Everything depends upon public demand in particular theatres to see the picture.

The foregoing clearly indicates that a wholly unworkable system of administrative regulation is imposed upon Universal by the judicial arm of the Government, which we submit is not authorized to so act, either by statute or under the Constitution.

An equity decree in a Sherman Anti-Trust proceeding should be confined to its legitimate purpose, i.e., "to suppress the unlawful practices and to take such reasonable measures as will preclude their revival". Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. U. S., 309 U. S. 426, p. 461. The Sherman Act does not confer legislative or administrative powers on the Courts, but confers jurisdiction only to "prevent and restrain" violations of the Act. Under well-established law this includes the dissolution of monopolies or monopolistic combinations*—Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197; Standard Oil v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1; U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106; U. S. v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61; U. S. v. Reading Co., 253 U. S. 26; U. S. v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 254 U. S. 155; U. S. v. Southern Pacific Co., 259 U. S. 214. There is no authorization to impose a comprehensive regulatory system upon a non-public utility such as Universal, thereby putting it in a perpetual straight jacket. On the contrary the Act intended that decrees thereunder should be directed solely to the end of restoring free competition.

---

*The reasons are stated by Judge Learned Hand in U. S. v. Corn Products Refining Co., 234 Fed. 964, 1018.

"One of the fundamental purposes of the statute is to protect, not to destroy, rights of property". Standard Oil Co. v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, 78. Yet here we are stripped of our rights under copyright in a manner analogous to that which was disapproved by this Court in respect of patents in Hartford Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386.

The clearly legislative nature of such affirmative prescriptions has been pointed out in a number of cases reaching this Court, among them A. T. & S. Railroad v. D. & N. O. Railroad, 110 U. S. 667, 675, 686; U. S. v. New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange Inc., 263 U. S. 611, 621; and Daniels et al. v. Portland Gold Mining Co. et al., 202 Fed. 637, 639, 641, cert. den. 229 U. S. 611. In all of these cases it was expressly held that the prescription of rules and regulations to govern the carrying on of private businesses, in order to correct abuses therein, was the prerogative of the legislature under the police power, and not that of the courts in exercising equity powers.

More recently a relatively mild attempt to place a non-public utility industry in the straight-jacket of judicial regulation has been repulsed by this Court. U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707. In that case the Soft-Lite Lens Company Inc., had been found guilty of violating the Sherman Act, and an injunction had issued against it. Upon appeal the Government asked the inclusion of a requirement that Soft-Lite file with the District Court "a written instrument providing that it will sell its product, without discrimination, to any person offering to pay cash therefor". Pointing out that Soft-Lite deals in a specialty of a luxury or near-luxury character, and that the right to select its customers might well be the most essential factor in the maintenance of the highest standards of service, this Court refused the Government's request, saying at p. 728: "Congress has been liberal in enacting remedies to enforce the anti-monopoly statutes. But in no instance has it indicated an intention to interfere with ordinary commercial practices". Among the cases relied on by this Court was U. S. v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300, p. 307, wherein it was unanimously held that "The (Sherman) Act does not restrict the long recognized right of a trader or manufacturer engaged in an entirely private business, freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to the parties with whom he will deal". Yet here we are forbidden to deal with our oldest customers or others whom we may rightly regard as our best ones.*

If the right to select customers cannot be denied to one engaged in the business of selling lenses for eye glasses, it certainly ought not to be denied to one engaged in the business of licensing feature motion pictures, costing from hundreds of thousands up to millions of dollars to produce, wherein the relations between distributor and exhibitor are of the highest importance, in view of the peculiarly specialized nature of the business, and the great importance of proper exploitation.

CONCLUSION

A judgment dismissing the complaint as against each of the Universal appellants, should, we submit, be entered, or, in the alternative, the decree should be modified as to them in the respects herein suggested.

Respectfully submitted,

THOMAS TURNER COOKE,
CHARLES D. PRUTZMAN,
Counsel for the Universal Appellants.

ADOLPH SCHIMEL,
CYRIL S. LANDAU,
FRANK W. FORD,
Of Counsel.

---

*Other cases in this Court recognizing the inviolability of such rights are Federal Trade Commission v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565, 573; Same v. Beech-Nut Packing Co., 257 U. S. 441, 452-3; Same v. Sinclair Refining Co., 261 U. S. 463, 475-6; Same v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568, 582.

FILE-COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
MAY 8 1947
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1946
No. [redacted] 82

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION and COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC.,

Appellants,

against

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondents,

and

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., KEITH-ALBEE-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO PROCTOR CORPORATION, RKO MIDWEST CORPORATION, WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., and UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants.

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION SUBMITTED WITH PETITION FOR APPEAL

SCHWARTZ & FROHLICH,
Counsel for Appellants.

LOUIS D. FROHLICH,
of Counsel.

APPELLATE LAW PRINTERS, NEW YORK CITY

INDEX

PAGE

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION SUBMITTED WITH PETITION FOR APPEAL 1

JURISDICTION 2

STATUTES INVOLVED 3

THE ISSUES AND THE RULINGS BELOW 6

THE QUESTIONS ARE SUBSTANTIAL 13

APPENDIX "A"—OPINION 19

APPENDIX "B"—MEMORANDUM IN RE FINDINGS AND DECREE 91

APPENDIX "C"—MEMORANDA OPINIONS 93

Cases Cited

Black v. Henry G. Allen Company, 42 Fed. 618 18

Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount, 57 Fed. (2d) 152 13

Hartford-Empire Company v. U. S. 323 U. S. 386 17

Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208 2

Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation v. United States, 282 U. S. 30 2

Parton v. Prang, 3 Cliff. 535 18

PAGE

United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106 .. 2

United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707 2

United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 ..... 2, 14

U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 70 U. S. Pat. Q. 49 17

U. S. v. Pullman Company, 50 Fed. Supp. 123 18

United States v. Reading Company, 183 Fed. 459, aff'd and mod. 226 U. S. 324 ..... 2, 18

Westways Theatre, Inc. v. 20th Century Fox-Film, 30 Fed. Supp. 830, aff'd 113 Fed. (2) 932 14

Statutes

Constitution of the United States, Fifth Amendment 4

Copyright Act of March 4, 1909 (17 U. S. C. A.) 4-5

The Expediting Act of February 11, 1903 (15 U. S. C., Sect. 29) 2

Section 238 Judicial Code (28 U. S. C., Sect. 345) 2

Sherman Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209 (15 U. S. C., Sects. 1, 2) 3, 4

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1946

No.

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION and COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC.,

Appellants,

against

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondents,

and

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., KEITH-ALBEE-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO PROCTOR CORPORATION, RKO MIDWEST CORPORATION, WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., and UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants.

STATEMENT AS TO JURISDICTION SUBMITTED WITH PETITION FOR APPEAL

In Compliance with Rule 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of the United States as amended, defendants-appellants, Columbia Pictures Corporation and Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc., submit herewith their statement particularly disclosing the basis upon which the Supreme Court has jurisdiction on appeal to review the judgment of the District Court entered in this cause on December 31, 1946. A petition for appeal was filed in the District Court on February 6th, 1947, and was allowed by order of the same date.

Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review by direct appeal the judgment entered in this cause is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903; as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 58 Stat. 272, 15 U. S. C., § 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925 (43 Stat. 938, 28 U. S. C., § 345).

The following decisions sustain the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review the judgment on direct appeal in this case:

United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173;

United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707;

Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208;

Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation v. United States, 282 U. S. 30;

United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106;

United States v. Reading, 226 U. S. 324.

Statutes Involved

The Sherman Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended (15 U. S. C., §§ 1, 2):

"§ 1. Trust, etc. in restraint of trade illegal; exception of resale price agreements; penalty

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal: Provided, That nothing contained in sections 1-7 of this title shall render illegal, contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand, or name of the producer or distributor of such commodity and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced or distributed by others, when contracts or agreements of that description are lawful, as applied to intrastate transactions, under any statute, law, or public policy now or hereafter in effect in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which such resale is to be made, or to which the commodity is to be transported for such resale, and the making of such contracts or agreements shall not be an unfair method of competition under section 45, as amended and supplemented, of this title: Provided further, That the preceding proviso shall not make lawful any contract or agreement, providing for the establishment or maintenance of minimum resale prices on any commodity herein involved, between manufacturers, or between producers, or between wholesalers, or between brokers, or between factors, or between retailers, or between persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other. Every person who shall make any contract or engage in any combination or conspiracy declared by sections 1-7 of this title to be illegal shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

"§ 2. Monopolizing trade a misdemeanor; penalty

"Every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

Constitution of the United States—5th Amendment

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the Militia, when in actual service in time of War or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offence to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

The Copyright Act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L. Pt. 1, pp. 1075-1088), as amended August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L. Pt.

1, pp. 488-490), U. S. C. A. Title 17, and particularly that portion thereof which reads as follows:

"That any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this Act, shall have the exclusive right:

(a) To print, reprint, publish, copy, and vend the copyrighted work;

(b) To translate the copyrighted work into other languages or dialects, or make any other version thereof, if it be a literary work; to dramatize it if it be a nondramatic work; to convert it into a novel or other nondramatic work if it be a drama; to arrange or adapt it if it be a musical work; to complete, execute, and finish it if it be a model or design for a work of art;

(c) To deliver or authorize the delivery of the copyrighted work in public for profit if it be a lecture, sermon, address, or similar production;

(d) To perform or represent the copyrighted work publicly if it be a drama or, if it be a dramatic work and not reproduced in copies for sale, to vend any manuscript or any record whatsoever thereof; to make or to procure the making of any transcription or record thereof by or from which, in whole or in part, it may in any manner or by any method be exhibited, performed, represented, produced, or reproduced; and to exhibit, perform, represent, produce, or reproduce it in any manner or by any method whatsoever;

* * *

"Sec. 4. That the works for which copyright may be secured under this Act shall include all the writing of an author.

"Sec. 5. That the application for registration shall specify to which of the following classes the work in which copyright is claimed belongs:

* * *

(l) Motion picture photoplays;

(m) Motion pictures other than photoplays."

The Issues and the Rulings Below

The original complaint in this action was filed on or about the 20th day of July, 1938. An amended complaint was filed on November 14th, 1940. In these complaints the Government sued eight of the principal producers and distributors of motion pictures in the United States (including appellants), claiming a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act and charging the defendants with having combined and conspired with each other in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States. Five of the defendants, Paramount Pictures, Inc., RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and Loew's, Incorporated, are engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures—that is to say, in addition to producing and distributing motion pictures, they own and operate respectively chains of theatres and are occasionally referred to as "major" defendants.

The three other defendants (which include appellants), Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc. and United Artists Corporation, do not own or operate theatres.

Plaintiff alleged that the illegal restraints were brought about by reason of (1) franchise agreements, under which the defendants granted exhibitors the right to exhibit pictures of more than one season's product; (2) pooling arrangements, under which the major defendants pooled their theatres with each other or with third parties; (3) block booking, under which defendants sold a season's product in advance of production; (4) preferential run, by which defendants' theatres were favored with respect to first run exhibitions and obtained a monopoly of the playing time in the better theatres; (5) unreasonable clearance, by means of which defendants' theatres obtained more protection than was necessary in the exhibition of their pictures as a consequence of which independent theatres were relegated to an inferior and unprofitable run; (6) minimum admission prices, under which the defendants compelled independent exhibitors to keep up admission prices, thereby resulting in a favored position to the affiliated theatres. By their answer appellants denied each and every conclusory allegation of wrong-doing and each and every allegation of fact in support thereof.

While complaining of all of these practices in the industry and seeking injunction, the Government also demanded that the five major defendants be divested of their holdings in their theatres, and that they be compelled to confine themselves in the future only to the production and distribution of motion pictures.

The first trial of this case was commenced on June 3, 1940, and lasted a week. Before any testimony was taken, however, the parties got together at the suggestion of Judge Henry Goddard, who presided, and a consent decree was finally agreed upon between the five major defendants and the Government and was filed November 20, 1940. The three minor defendants (Columbia, United Artists and Universal) refused to be a party to such consent decree. Under that consent decree the consenting defendants agreed to trade-show their pictures, and to license them in blocks of no more than five. A system of arbitration was instituted under which exhibitors complaining of unreasonable clearance were given an opportunity to arbitrate that question. That decree was to be in effect for three years, after which the Government was at liberty to go on with the trial. Columbia and Universal continued to license their season's product in advance as heretofore. (United Artists, merely acting as an agency for independent producers, has never block-booked.)

At the expiration of the three year period the Government decided to continue with the trial. It asked for and obtained an order for an Expediting Court, and Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand together with District Judges Henry Goddard and John Bright, were appointed as such court and have acted as such ever since.

On October 8th, 1945, the trial of the case was resumed before the Expediting Court. It lasted until November 20, 1945. The Government abandoned any attempt to prove a monopoly in production of motion pictures. In attempting to prove the other allegations of its amended complaint the Government confined itself to the production of statistics, data, contracts and correspondence theretofore furnished to it for the most part by the defendants themselves pursuant to interrogatories. It called no witnesses whatever. There are approximately 400 exhibits in the case.

Appellants were not involved in the issue of divestiture. They were and are primarily concerned with block booking and with the freedom to license their pictures without restriction. In support of those two issues appellants produced their General Manager, Abe Montague, who testified at great length to the propriety of block booking and the manner in which it had originated; that it was an economic necessity for appellants to sell its pictures at the commencement of the season to each exhibitor in block, and, of course, long before they had been produced; that the exhibitors throughout the country required and demanded block booking as an economic necessity for maintaining an adequate supply of motion pictures for their theatres; that appellants in dealing with over 10,000 of the 18,000 theatres in the country for over twenty years had acquired good will and many old and satisfied customers, and that appellants indeed favored its customers even as against the theatres affiliated with the five major defendants; and appellants amply proved a long history of fair dealing and good business relations with its customers and with the independent exhibitors.

The trial having concluded on November 20, 1945, briefs were thereafter submitted by the parties in January, 1946.

On June 11, 1946, the District Court handed down its opinion, in which it found each and all of the defendants to have violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act. In effect it held that all of the usages and customs heretofore enumerated and of which the Government complained (including block-booking) were illegal and should be restrained. The Court, however, stated that it felt that divestiture was too drastic a remedy, and it refused the Government's plea in that respect. This opinion is annexed hereto as Appendix "A".

Thereafter appellants, the Government and the other defendants submitted proposed findings and decree. Appellants submitted thirty-four findings and two conclusions of law. Hearings were held by the Court on the proposed findings and decree, and on December 31, 1946, the Court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law and its decree. Concurrently with the filing of the Findings and Decree on December 31, 1946, the Court filed a supplementary opinion, a copy of which is hereto annexed as Appendix "B". The decree substantially follows the Court's June opinion (Exhibit "A"). Among other acts it prohibits the appellants and the other defendants from licensing their pictures in block at the commencement of the season by imposing such restrictions thereon that, as a practical matter each of appellants' pictures must be licensed one by one as and when it is produced. It compels appellants to disregard old customers. It sets up a method of regulation under which exhibitors in competitive areas have the right to bid against each other for each of appellants' pictures. Appellants are compelled to accept the highest bidder. These provisions are contained in Paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of Section II of the decree, and are the provisions which these appellants complain of on appeal and have assigned as error.

Under Section VII of the decree, Subdivisions 7 and 8 of Section II of the judgment were not to become effective until July 1, 1947. On January 10th, 1947, appellants filed a motion pursuant to Rule 52(b) of the Rules of Civil Procedure to grant an additional stay of Paragraphs 7 and 8 as well as of Paragraph 9 of Section II until ninety days after the coming down of a mandate from this Court. In that month the other defendants filed various motions to amend the findings and decree. On February 3rd, 1947, these motions were denied in part and granted in part, as appears by the short memoranda opinions handed down by the Court and hereto annexed as Appendix "C". Appellants' motion was denied in toto.

In their brief to the District Court, submitted prior to the hearings on the proposed findings and decree, the appellants pointed out that block booking as the term is known in the motion picture industry, is nothing more nor less than selling a season's product of motion pictures in advance; and that the testimony on the trial showed clearly that there was no tying-in of pictures or conditioning the licensing of one group of pictures upon the licensing of another; that the Government had signally failed to prove any such tie-up or conditioning; that a producer and distributor of motion pictures has as much right to sell his season's product as a manufacturer of shoes or soap; that economically it was necessary to appellants' existance to operate in that manner, because only by the sale of its product in advance could it be determined how many contracts there would be for each picture which was to be made and the potential license fees; and that such determination was necessary in order to obtain finances, particularly from banks, for budget production for the ensuing season; that this practice was similar to the practice of wholesalers and manufacturers generally, and that a prohibition against block booking would interfere with appellants' financial arrangements and cripple them in their business.

It was pointed out that in addition to the three minor defendants in this case there were three other distributors of motion pictures of substantial size, to wit: Monogram Pictures Corporation, Republic Pictures Corporation and Producers Releasing Corporation, each of which has been engaged in block booking. None of these companies were parties to this suit nor are they subject to this decree, and therefore are free of the regulation of this decree. Each of these companies is a substantial competitor of appellants and has thereby obtained an economic advantage over them.

Appellants also pointed out that in addition to this general interference with ordinary business procedure, the attempted regulation of the industry by means of a prohibition against block booking and the provisions for competitive buying and selling were an illegal interference with plaintiff's copyrights both past and prospective. Under the decree and findings, appellants' pictures must be put up on the auction block, singly and after production. Appellants are required to sell them to the highest bidder, disregarding their customers and the good will built up for over twenty years. It was pointed out particularly that this kind of auction selling was a hardship upon the three minor defendants, who owned no theatres, because the five major defendants owning their own theatres, would be permitted by the findings and decree to license the pictures produced by them to their own theatres without any restriction. This placed the three minor defendants, including appellants, at a terrific disadvantage. It furthermore destroyed the rights given to them by their copyrights. The appellants strongly emphasized that the proposed findings and decree were a destruction of copyrights under the guise of an enforcement of the Sherman Act, and that nothing in the Sherman Act warranted the District Court in exercising its jurisdiction in that manner; and the appellants directly questioned the jurisdiction of the District Court to make such decree.

Appellants' arguments were disregarded by the District Court, and the findings and decree as filed on December 31, 1946 have embodied those provisions which appellants deem error and to which they object and which they shall ask this Court to reverse.

The Questions Are Substantial

The questions raised by this appeal relate primarily to the propriety of the relief granted by the District Court and the want of jurisdiction of that Court. All the questions which are here stated to be substantial were properly raised before the District Court by appellants' request concerning findings of fact and conclusions of law as well as by briefs. All the points here stated to be substantial are fully covered by appellants' Assignment of Errors.

1. The first substantial question raised by this appeal concerns the prohibition against so-called block-booking. Although there was no evidence to support it, the Court made a finding of fact in which it purported to define block-booking as the practice of licensing or offering for license one feature or group of features upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period (Finding No. 1). That is not block-booking as known in the industry. Block-booking is the licensing of pictures in groups or blocks at the commencement of the season. There is no support in this record by any proof whatever for the definition which the Court has placed upon block-booking. In the brief submitted with their proposed findings, these appellants pointed out to the Court that block-booking as known in the industry and as practiced by the appellants and other distributors was an ancient custom going back over a quarter of a century, and that it had received the sanction of the courts as being a perfectly legal and proper method of selling pictures; and it called the District Court's attention to the case of Federal Trade Commission v. Para- mount, 57 Fed. (2d) 152, which was decided by the Second Circuit, of which Judge Augustus N. Hand was then a member and who sat in that case; and also Westways Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film, 30 Fed. Supp. 830, aff'd. 113 Fed. (2d) 932.

It also pointed out that in U. S. v. Crescent, 323 U. S. 173, in which the Government was successful, the practice of Columbia and Universal, who were defendants in that case and who were dismissed out of it, was to sell their pictures by block-booking, and that practice had been upheld by the Court and the Government in that case did not make an attack upon block-booking, as such.

Here there was not a scintilla of evidence in the case that the selling of pictures in block at the beginning of the season was injurious to anybody, that any exhibitor was harmed thereby or that block-booking in any way restrained interstate trade or commerce; and this method of selling had been encouraged by the courts themselves in the decisions mentioned.

2. The second substantial question raised on this appeal concerns the propriety of making regulations and restrictions with respect to the licensing of appellants' pictures on the broad principle that such provisions of the decree go beyond the jurisdiction of the Court under the Sherman Act; that under that Act the Court is empowered only to enjoin and restrain illegal conduct on the part of defendants which is contrary to the Sherman Act; that there is nothing in that Act which empowers the District Court to go beyond injunction and to lay down a system of policing and regulation which either directly or indirectly places a defendant in a strait-jacket and compels him to do business in the manner outlined by the Court or to get out of business. This regulatory system is set out in great detail in Paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of Section II of the decree. It is to be borne in mind that this system goes into effect concurrently with the injunction provisions of the decree under which appellants are no longer in combination and conspiracy but are acting singly in conformity with the other injunctive provisions, and are dealing with a single exhibitor at arm's length making a deal for the licensing of their pictures. Acting in this lawful manner they are told by the decree that they may only license their picture within the restrictions and limitations contained in Paragraph 8, and that for all purposes their pictures must be put upon the auction block, opened up to the highest bidder; that they cannot choose their customer; that they cannot even make their own terms for the licensing of their product. We believe this to be contrary to the jurisdiction of the District Court, contrary to the spirit, the letter and intent of the Sherman Act, and completely destructive of the principles of free enterprise and of the right of a producer to market his property in a lawful manner in any way that he sees fit, with whomever he sees fit, and upon such terms as he thinks desirable. This section is a complete attack upon every principle of free enterprise, and places it within the power of the District Court to take over and conduct business according to its own conceptions and lights.

The third substantial question involved in this appeal is whether appellants have been deprived of their property without due process of law in violation of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution. The decree virtually transforms appellants, as well as the other defendants in this action, into public utilities. There was no evidence in this case that any of these defendants, including appellants, were engaged in a business affected with a public interest, nor is there any finding to that effect. Yet the decree proceeds as if appellants were so engaged, and imposes a system of regulation which may only be imposed upon public utilities by legislation. Public utilities may be told to sell their property to anyone who applies for it, and the terms and conditions of the sale, the rates charged and the manner in which they are to be fixed and determined may be the subject of regulation by the Legislature. But there is no warrant for imposing those restrictions upon these appellants who are engaged in a business enterprise which is purely private and not affected with a public interest, and who are at liberty to dispose of their property in any manner they see fit and upon any terms satisfactory to them. This decree tells them that they must sell their property at public auction in the manner prescribed by the Court, or not at all. It does not permit appellants to choose their customers and to arrange their own terms, or otherwise engage in the lawful activities of a merchant who is exploiting his merchandise. In that respect appellants are deprived of their property without due process of law. It is a complete confiscation.

The District Court usurped powers which it did not possess. Even Congress or any other legislative body could not constitutionally impose the restrictions set forth in this decree on the business in which appellants are engaged. Even if Congress were to legislate with respect to a business affected with a public interest, it could only do so in the interest of the public at large, and not in the interest of any special or favored group. Under this decree the appellants have been turned into a public utility in the interest of the operators of 18,000 exhibitors of motion pictures in the country, and the lawful use of appellants' property has been improperly restricted for the benefit of that favored and special group, and not for the public at large. This we believe is a violation of appellants' constitutional rights as heretofore set forth.

3. The fourth substantial question involved in this appeal is whether the District Court, sitting to enforce the Sherman Act, has the right to impinge upon appellants' copyrights and the exclusive rights that are vested in them by such copyrights. The final decree undoubtedly restricts the copyrights already existing of which appellants are proprietors and all copyrights in motion pictures of which appellants may in the future become proprietors. It was pointed out below that the patent and copyright laws and the Sherman Act exist side by side, each being entitled to full recognition and application by the courts (U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 70 U. S. Pat. Q. 49), and that the monopoly inherent in patents and copyrights was not the monopoly condemned by the Sherman Act. We called attention to the recent decision of this Court in Hartford-Empire Company v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, in which provisions in a decree which had enjoined a violation of the Sherman Act were stricken therefrom because they amounted to a form of compulsory license of the patents involved or to a confiscation of the patents; and that this Court had held there that the District Court should have limited itself to enjoining the defendants from setting up illegal pools, but that it went far beyond that, and that the restrictive provisions in the Hartford-Empire case were similar to the restrictive provisions contained in the final decree in the instant case. We prayed that the District Court limit its relief to injunction only and not attempt a system of regulation which had been condemned by Judge Goodrich in U. S. v. Pullman Company, 50 Fed. Supp., 123, 136. (See also U. S. v. Reading Company, 183 Fed. 459, aff'd and mod. 226 U. S. 324.

We urged then and do here that appellants as copyright proprietors had the unqualified right to either part with their copyrights in any manner they saw fit (Parton v. Prang, 3 Cliff. 535), or that they had the right to license the use of their works upon any terms and to any one they saw fit. (Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618.) The District Court rejected that contention.

By Paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of the final decree it is quite clear that the vested exclusive rights in the copyrights owned by appellants may no longer be exercised in the unrestricted manner contemplated by the Copyright Act of 1909.

The extent to which the Court's findings and judgment rest on these erroneous rulings raises substantial questions which should be reviewed by this Court. Appellants are of the belief that all the questions here raised are substantial and respectfully petition this Court to pass on them after plenary hearing.

Respectfully submitted,

SCHWARTZ & FROHLICH,
Counsel for Appellants.

Dated, February 6th, 1947.

LOUIS D. FROHLICH,
of Counsel.

APPENDIX "A"

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Equity No. 87-273

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

against

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., KEITH-ALBEE-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO PROCTOR CORPORATION, RKO MIDWEST CORPORATION, WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., and UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants.

Opinion

Before:

AUGUSTUS N. HAND, Circuit Judge,

HENRY W. GODDARD and JOHN BRIGHT,
District Judges.

This is a suit to secure equitable relief against the alleged domination and control by the defendants and their affiliates of the motion picture industry in contravention of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Decree granting partial relief to plaintiff.

Appendix "A"—Opinion

Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General; Robert L. Wright, Philip Marcus, Elliott H. Meyer, and John R. Niesley, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; Frank W. Gaines, Jr., Gerald A. Herrick, Robert B. Hummel, Harold Lasser and Horace T. Morrison, Special Attorneys for United States of America.

Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, Attorneys for Paramount Defendants; Whitney North Seymour, Louis Phillips, Albert C. Bickford and Armand F. MacManus, Counsel.

Davis Polk Wardwell Sunderland & Kiendl; J. Robert Rubin, Attorneys for Defendant Loew's, Inc.; John W. Davis, J. Robert Rubin, C. Stanley Thompson, Benjamin Melniker and S. Hazard Gillespie, Jr., Counsel.

George S. Leisure, Ralstone R. Irvine, Granville Whittlesey, Jr., and Gordon E. Youngman, Attorneys for Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation and RKO Midwest Corporation; Roy W. McDonald, and Donovan Leisure Newton & Lumbard, Counsel.

Joseph M. Proskauer and Robert W. Perkins, Attorneys for the Warner Defendants; Joseph M. Proskauer, Robert W. Perkins, J. Alvin Van Bergh and Howard Levinson, Counsel.

Dwight, Harris, Koegel & Caskey, Attorneys for Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and National Theatres Corporation, Defendants; John F. Caskey and Frederick W. R. Pride, Counsel.

Schwartz & Frohlich, Attorneys for Defendant Columbia; Louis D. Frohlich, Arthur H. Schwartz, Irving Moross and Max H. Rose, Counsel.

Charles D. Prutzman, Attorney for the Universal Defendants.

O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, Attorneys for the Defendant United Artists Corporation; Edward C. Raftery, Arthur F. Driscoll, Chas. D. Prutzman, George A. Raftery and Adolph Schimel, Counsel.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND, Circuit Judge:

The United States brought suit under Section 4 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies", commonly known as the Sherman Act, in order to prevent alleged violations by the defendants of Sections 1 and 2 of that Act.

The following is a general description of the defendants:

1. (a) Paramount Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at 1501 Broadway, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Paramount Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1501 Broadway, New York, New York, and is engaged in the distribution branch of the industry.

2. Loew's, Incorporated, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 1540 Broadway, New York,

New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

3. (a) Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the production and distribution branch of the industry.

(c) Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. Approximately 99% of its common stock and 33% of its preferred stock are held by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation.

(d) RKO Proctor Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

(e) RKO Midwest Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

4. (a) Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, having its principal place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) Vitagraph, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

(c) Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and, among other things, acts as booking agent for the exhibition interests of the said Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

5. (a) Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, having its principal place of business at 444 West 56th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing, distributing, and exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) National Theatres Corporation is owned and controlled by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 2854 Hudson Boulevard, Jersey City, New Jersey, and is a holding company for the theatre interests of the said Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

6. (a) Columbia Pictures Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) Screen Gems, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Columbia Pictures Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, with a place of business at 700 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, California, and is engaged in the business of producing motion pictures.

(c) Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Columbia Pictures Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Louisiana, with a place of business at 150 South Liberty Street, New Orleans, Louisiana, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

7. (a) Universal Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

(b) Universal Pictures Company, Inc., a subsidiary controlled by Universal Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of producing motion pictures.

(c) Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

(d) Big U Film Exchange, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Corporation and Universal Pictures Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

8. United Artists Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in distribution of motion pictures in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

The five major defendants—Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and their subsidiaries—were charged in the amended and supplemental complaint with combining and conspiring unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and to monopolize such trade and commerce in violation of the Sherman Act. The three minor defendants—Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Corporation, and their subsidiaries, which are producers and distributors, and not exhibitors, and United Artists Corporation, which is a distributor only, were likewise charged with combining and conspiring with the five major defendants and with each other unreasonably to restrain and to monopolize trade and commerce in motion pictures. As it appeared upon the trial that there was no violation of the Sherman Act in respect to production of motion pictures and that there was on the contrary active competition in production, the charge in respect to production was formally abandoned by the plaintiff. The issues therefore are whether there have been illegal restraints or monopolization in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

The plaintiff contends that an illegal conspiracy and monopoly were effected by: (1) concertedly fixing the license terms before the licensees have had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films were completed or shown; (2) concertedly fixing the run, clearance, and minimum admission price terms on which an exhibitor may show pictures through license agreements covering periods of a year or more; (3) concertedly conditioning the licensing of one film or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films and by conditioning the licensing of films in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of films in other theatres or group of theatres; (4) concertedly discriminating with respect to the license terms granted to theatres in large circuits because such theatres are part of a circuit. The means of such discrimination are said to be the licensing for exhibition in theatres of the five defendant exhibitors of runs ahead of those granted to competing independent exhibitors, and the continuance of these prior runs from season to season to the prejudice of independent exhibitors. As a result independent exhibitors are systematically excluded from the opportunity to procure preferred runs of pictures distributed by the defendants in the localities in which defendants' theatres operate and at times refused any run at all in order to protect defendants' theatres from competition.

It is further charged by the plaintiff that the distributor-exhibitor defendants have combined with each other: (1) by conditioning the licensing of film distributed by one defendant in theatres operated by another upon the licensing of films distributed by the latter in the theatres operated by the former; (2) by excluding independently produced films from affiliated theatres and by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from competing with first run or other run theatres in cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located; (3) by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from operating theatres on the same run as affiliated exhibitors; (4) by using the first and early runs of affiliated theatres to control the film supply, runs, clearances and admission prices of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in cities and towns in which affiliated theatres are located; (5) by pooling or otherwise sharing with each other the profits of affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area and frequently by together operating on the same run in cases where they would be in competition with one another except for such pooling or profit sharing agreements; (6) by effecting a division of the territory of the entire United States among them for theatre operating purposes.

The amended and supplemental complaint prays: (1) That each of the contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, together with attempts to monopolize the same, be declared illegal; (2) that the defendants and their subsidiaries be perpetually enjoined from continuing to carry out attempts at monopolization and all restraints of trade in distribution and exhibition of motion pictures; (3) that a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals, or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper, be established in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained in the decree; (4) that the five major defendants and their subsidiaries be directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, in any theatres which the court shall find to have been used by one or more of them unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in motion pictures.

After the amended and supplemental complaint was filed, the plaintiff and the five major defendants and their subsidiary corporations that were parties to the suit, executed a written consent to the entry of a decree by the District Court, signed November 20, 1940. A decree was made in accordance with the consent reciting that no testimony had been taken, that no provision of the decree should be construed as an admission or adjudication that any of the plaintiff's charges were true, or that the consenting defendants had violated any law, or that the doing or the failure to do any of the acts or things enjoined or directed to be done would constitute a violation of law.

The decree enjoined the consenting defendants as follows:

(1) No distributor defendant shall license feature motion pictures for public exhibition within the United States at which an admission fee is to be charged until the feature has been trade shown within the exchange district in which the exhibition is to be held.

(2) No distributor defendant shall offer for license or shall license more than five features in a single group. The license of one group of features shall not be conditioned upon the licensing of another features or group of features, nor shall any distributor defendant require an exhibitor to license shorts, reissues, westerns, or foreigns as a condition of licensing other features. Disputes as to violation of these provisions shall be subject to arbitration. The power of the arbitrator shall be limited to a determination of whether the offer to license or the license was conditioned and, if found to be conditioned, to imposing a penalty against the distributor of not to exceed $500.

(3) No license for features to be exhibited in theatres located in one exchange district shall include theatres located in another exchange district.

(4) No distributor defendant shall refuse to license its pictures for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run to be designated by the distributor upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor, if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located. Controversies arising from a complaint by an exhibitor for violation of the foregoing provision shall be subject to arbitration under which an award based on a finding of violation shall direct the distributor to offer its pictures to the complainant on a run to be designated by the distributor, and upon terms fixed by the distributor, which are not calculated to defeat the purposes of this subdivision.

(5) Controversies arising from the complaint of an exhibitor that a feature licensed by a distributor defendant for exhibition in a particular theatre is generally offensive in the locality on moral, religious, or racial grounds shall be subject to arbitration, and, if the feature shall be found to be thus offensive, an award shall be made cancelling the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of the feature in that theatre.

(6) Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to arbitration. Reasonable clearance as to time and area was stipulated and held by the consent decree to be essential to the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures. In determining whether a clearance complained of is unreasonable the arbitrator should consider the historical development of clearance in the area, the admission price of the theatres involved; their character, location, and type of entertainment; the rental terms and license fees paid by them; the extent to which they compete for patronage, and all other business considerations except affiliation of the theatres with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres. If the clearance be found unreasonable, the award shall fix the maximum clearance between the theatres involved, which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by a distributor that is part to the arbitration. The award may also fix, subject to the provisions of Section XVII of the consent decree, such maximum clearance under any existing franchise, i.e., a licensing agreement, or a series of licensing agreements, covering more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by the distributor during the entire period of the agreement. Nothing contained in this subdivision, nor any award in arbitration, shall restrict the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which it is able to negotiate, nor shall restrict the distributor's right to license any run which it desires to grant, nor to license the exhibition of any special feature under a contract the terms of which, including provisions for clearance, are applicable only thereto.

(7) Controversies arising upon a complaint by an independent exhibitor that a distributor defendant has arbitrariiy refused to license its features for exhibition on the run requested by the exhibitor in one of the latter's theatres shall be subject to arbitration, but the making of any award is to be subject to certain specified conditions and no award made shall affect the license to exhibit any features then under license, but only future licenses.

(8) For three years after the entry of the decree, the consenting defendants are to notify the Department of Justice of any legally binding commitment for the acquisition of any theatre or theatres. During such period, each defendant is to report monthly the changes in its theatre position, together with a statement for the reason of such changes. For three years following the entry of the decree, no consenting defendant shall enter upon a general program of expanding its theatre holdings. Nothing shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purposes of its business.

(9) The decree shall not be construed to limit, impair or alter the right of a distributor to license the exhibition of motion pictures, subject to such terms as may be satisfactory to it, (a) in any theatre in which, or in the proceeds of which, it is directly or indirectly interested; (b) in any theatre an interest in which of not less than 50% is acquired after the date of the decree and which it owns at the time of such license, and (c) in any theatre of which a company in which the defendant owned not less than 42% of the common stock at the date of the decree and at the time of such license acquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license a financial interest of not less than 50%.

(10) Except as otherwise expressly and specifically provided in the decree, nothing therein shall be construed to limit the right of any distributor to select its own customers, bargain with them in accordance with law, or negotiate with or license to or accept any offer from any exhibitor to license its motion pictures or any number thereof, upon such terms and conditions as it deems advisable or to its best interests.

(11) For a period of three years after the entry of the consent decree the plaintiff shall not seek either in this or any other action against the consenting defendants to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition or to dissolve any defendant or any corporation in which it has directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest and which is engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures, or holds directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest in any corporation so engaged, or to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres of any such defendant or of any such corporation, or to require any such defendant, corporation or circuit to divest itself of its interests or any thereof in motion picture theatres in which it had an interest at the time of the entry of the decree.

(12) The method and conditions of and the procedure for the arbitration of controversies and the powers of an appeal board created by the court to entertain appeals from the arbitration tribunal are set forth in the decree.

(13) Jurisdiction is retained by the decree for the purpose of enabling any parties to apply to the court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry for any modification thereof.

The three minor defendants and their subsidiaries did not consent to the decree of November 20, 1940, presumably because of their opposition to the provisions requiring trade-showing and prohibiting block-booking of groups of more than five films. It was provided that if the plaintiff did not secure the entry of a decree against the three minor defendants before June 1, 1942, the consenting defendants were to be released from those provisions. Such a decree was in fact not entered by the specified date, and accordingly the sections of the decree regarding trade-showing and block-booking have lapsed. Nevertheless, according to the testimony, the consenting defendants have continued to comply with them.[1]

---

[1] The following are definitions of terms used in this opinion:

Block-booking—The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or group of features released by the distributor during a given period.

Clearance—The period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same picture within a particular area or in specified theatres.

Exchange District—An area in which an office is maintained by a distributor for the purpose of soliciting license agreements for the exhibition of its pictures in theatres situated throughout the territory served by the exchange and for the physical distribution of such films throughout this territory.

Feature—Any motion picture, regardless of topic, the length of of the film of which is in excess of 4000 feet.

Formula Deal—A licensing agreement with a circuit of theatres in which the rental price of a given film is measured for the circuit as a whole by a specified percentage of the picture's national gross.

Franchise—A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

Independent—A producer, distributor, or exhibitor, as the context requires, which is not a defendant in this action or a subsidiary or affiliate of a defendant.

Master Agreement—A licensing agreement, also known as a "blanket deal", covering the exhibition of films in a number of theatres, usually comprising a circuit.

Motion Picture Season—A one-year period beginning about September 1 of each year.

Road-show—A public exhibition of a motion picture in a limited number of theatres, in advance of its general release, at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in the areas where they are located.

Counsel for the five major defendants and their subsidiaries contend that the consent decree has, in some respects at least, the effect of a final judgment which may not be modified. But we cannot see how such a position is consistent with the language of Section XXIII (d), which permits "* * * any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of the decree for any modification thereof." That period has expired, and therefore everything relating to rights under and remedies for violation of the Sherman Act is, therefore, open for consideration, even as between consenting parties; and certainly nothing has hitherto been decided which affected the non-consenting parties. It would seem to follow that we cannot bind any parties to subject themselves to the arbitration system or the board of appeals set up in aid of it without their consent, even though we may regard it as desirable that such a system, in view of its demonstrated usefulness, should be continued in aid of the decree which we propose to direct.

The evidence has established various infractions of the Sherman Act on the part of each of the defendants which we shall proceed to discuss.

Price-fixing

The defendants who have granted moving picture licenses have fixed minimum admission prices which the exhibitor agrees to charge irrespective of whether it is to pay a flat rental or a percentage of the theatre receipts. It is said that these minimum admission prices are in general only those currently charged by the exhibitors and that they are placed in the licenses in order to assure the distributor of a minimum revenue when it licenses upon a percentage basis, and also to assure a continuation of the conditions which moved it to grant a given run to the exhibitor.[2] Whatever the reason, the various licensing defendants have agreed with their licensees to a system which determines minimum admission prices in all theatres where motion pictures licensed by them are exhibited. In this way are controlled the prices to be charged for most of the motion pictures exhibited either by the defendants, or by independents, within the United States. That the eight defendants distribute most of the features is evident from the record. For example, during the 1943-44 season the eight defendants distributed about 77.6% of all features nationally distributed except "westerns" and low cost productions, and even if the latter inferior and non-competitive pictures are included, they distributed 65.5%. See Plaintiff's Exh. 426; Record p. 2400. The control of distribution closely resembles that appearing in Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738, 744-5 (C.C.A. 3), where the court said:

---

Runs—The successive exhibitions of a motion picture in a given area, first-run being the first exhibition in that area, second-run being the next subsequent, and so on.

Trade-showing—A private exhibition of a film prior to its release for public exhibition, as required by Section III of the consent decree.

> "Defendants control the production and distribution of more than 80% of feature pictures in this country, and no exhibitor can successfully operate without access to defendants' product."[3]

---

[2] That the distributor-defendants have more than merely a passive interest, as they claim, in the maintenance of specified minimum prices is shown by their inclusion in the licenses of provisions for severe penalties if less than those prices are charged. Some licenses provide that if the schedule of minimum prices is violated, all existing licenses of the distributor for that theatre may be cancelled at the option of the distributor; other licenses provide that the particular license may be cancelled or that the exhibitor's clearance over subsequent runs be greatly reduced. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-290.

[3] The defendants in the Goldman case were substantially the same as those here, except that Universal Corporation was there eliminated by agreement.

The licenses are in effect price-fixing arrangements among all the distributor-defendants, as well as between such defendants individually and their various exhibitors. Such combinations we hold to be forbidden by the Sherman Act.

The exhibits submitted in this case contain numerous express agreements between the various distributing defendants and their licensees stating the minimum admission prices which licensees are required to maintain in showing the distributors' pictures in the areas concerned. The agreements are not only between the distributor-defendants and other defendants owning theatres, but also between the distributor-defendants and independent theatre owners. A correlation of these agreements shows that in many instances the minimum prices set forth in the license agreements by the various defendants are in substantial conformity. Indeed, it is conceded in the joint brief filed on behalf of Loew's, Paramount, Warner, RKO and Twentieth Century-Fox that the admission prices included in licenses of the various distributor-defendants are in general uniform, being the usual admission prices currently charged by the exhibitors. At pages 31-2 of the joint brief it is stated:

> "The testimony shows that it is the general practice of all the distributors, whether dealing with independent exhibitors or affiliated ones, to include a provision in the license agreement that the exhibitor shall not charge less than a specified minimum admission price during the exhibition of the particular picture or pictures licensed. * * * The minimum admission price included in the license is not one which the distributor dictates, but is the usual admission price currently charged by the exhibitor. (R. 433, 718, 968, 999, 1382-3). It is the practice of exhibitors to charge the same scale of admission prices over a period of time and not to change them according to whose pictures are being exhibited or according to any fluctuations in the type of picture."

A similar statement is made at page 18 of the brief of Columbia, and the brief of United Artists and Universal appears to argue on the same assumption at pages 24-39.

It does not seem important whether the distributor was the more controlling factor in determining the minimum admission prices. Whether it was such a factor or merely acceded to the customary prices of the exhibitors, in either event there was a general arrangement of fixing prices in which both distributors and exhibits were involved. But it is plain that the distributor did more than accede to existing price schedules.[4] The licenses required them to be maintained under severe penalties for infraction, and the evidence shows that the distributors in the case of exceptional features, where not satisfied with current prices, would re-

---

[4] Reagan, vice-president in charge of distribution and sales for Paramount, testified as follows:

"Q. Well, does that (the admission price) fix his right to a particular run or to clearance? A. It would have an influence upon the run and clearance, yes, sir."

* * * * * *

"Q. Why would you be interested in the minimum admission price or the admission price charged by the exhibitor in connection with determining what run you would negotiate for? A. Because the admission price that he charges determines the film rental that I can earn for my pictures." Record pp. 718-9.

See also testimony of Kupper in charge of distribution organization of RKO. Record p. 1084.

fuse to grant licenses unless the prices were raised.[5] Moreover, the distributors, when licensing on a percentage basis, were interested in the prices charged and even when licensing for a flat rental were interested in admission prices to be charged for subsequent runs which they might license on a percentage basis. Likewise all of the five major defendants had a definite interest in keeping up prices in any given territory in which they owned theatres, and this interest they were safeguarding by fixing minimum prices in their licenses when distributing their films to independent ex-

---

[5] Testimony of John J. Friedl, president of Minnesota Amusement Company—the stock of which is owned by Paramount, was as follows:

"Q. Are there occasional instances of special attractions where there is a negotiation as to a higher admission price with the distributor? A. That has come up on several occasions. In the case of the picture 'Woodrow Wilson', and several other pictures, they have been released by the distributors as road show attractions, and in those cases the distributors insisted upon road show prices, and it was the option of the purchaser, or the theatre, to buy or not to buy those pictures at those prices; but if he expected to play the picture at that time, he would have to charge such admission price.

"Q. And if he was not willing to advance his admission price to meet the distributor's terms, he had the opportunity to play this picture on regular run, is that right? A. At a later date, that is correct.

"Q. Is the provision for that minimum admission price included not only in license contracts for first-run exhibition but also for subsequent-run exhibition? A. Yes, I think it applies in all cases.

"Q. Is it included in license contracts for percentage pictures and also for flat rental pictures? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where the admission price is included for subsequent-run exhibition, does your answer with respect to who determines the admission price apply to that as well? A. That is correct. But, of course, it is reasonable to assume, to underhibitors in those areas. Even if the licenses were at a flat rate, a failure to require their licensees to maintain fixed prices would leave them free by lowering the current charge to decrease through competition the income in the licensors' own theatres in the neighborhood. The whole system presupposed a fixing of prices by all parties concerned in all competitive areas.

The similarity of specified minimum prices prescribed for the same theatres in the distributor-defendants' contracts of license is shown by the following table collated from exhibits in evidence.[6] The exhibits used to prepare the table contained answers of the defendants to plaintiff's interrogatories about the first block of five features licensed for the 1943-44 season by each of the five major distributor-defendants, and about the first five pictures licensed by each of the three minor defendants, and about that picture of each defendant which during the season received the most billings in the United States.

---

stand, that in setting our admission prices, we do not do that on an arbitrary basis because it is reasonable to expect that the larger theatres playing the first-runs would get the maximum price for the protection of the distributor and the producer. And in the secondary houses the prices are less.

"Q. That is, generally speaking, the first-run houses charge a higher price than subsequent-run, and then the prices step down among the runs? A. That is correct." Record p. 1000.

[6] This table is derived from Plaintiff's Exhibits 41, 42, 57 (1-49), 82, 94, 126, 127, 128, 139, 365, 369. In most of the exhibits there was no indication as to whether the admission price given included or excluded taxes. When this information was given in the exhibits, it is stated in the table as "tax incl.", or "tax excl." The word "none" is used to mean that though a license was in evidence, no admission price was specifically stated in the contract, either through inadvertence or on the understanding that the admission prices currently being charged or contained in previous licenses would be continued. Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1211. The symbol "x" is used to indicate that no license of that distributor for that particular theatre was in evidence.

Appendix "A"—Opinion

Theatre	City, State	Paramount	Loew's	Warner	RKO	Fox	Col.	U.A.	Univ.
Sneicer	Akron, Ohio	30¢ tax excl.	27¢	30¢	30¢	x	x	30¢	x
Bailey	Buffalo, N. Y.	30¢	x	30¢	none	27¢	29¢	none	x
Liberty	Covington, Ky.	28¢ tax excl.	x	33¢ tax incl.	none	x	x	x	x
Madison	Covington, Ky.	28¢ tax excl.	28¢	x	none	28¢	x	x	x
LaSalle	Niagara Falls	30¢ tax incl.	27¢	x	none	27¢	x	x	x
Paramount	Akron, Ohio	20¢ tax excl.	22¢	25¢	none	20¢	x	25¢	x
Capitol	Cleveland, Ohio	30¢ tax	27¢	30¢	x	30¢	x	x	x
Shaker	Cleveland, Ohio	35¢ tax excl.	x	35¢	x	35¢	x	35¢	x
Heights	Cleveland, Ohio	30¢ tax excl.	27¢ tax incl.	30¢	none	30¢	x	x	x
Senate	Detroit, Mich.	x	37¢	35¢	none	35¢	x	none	x
Ritz	Baltimore, Md.	x	25¢	28¢ tax incl.	none	25¢	x	none	25¢
Vilma	Baltimore, Md.	x	25¢	28¢	none	25¢	x	none	x
Centre	Baltimore, Md.	x	30¢	33¢ tax incl.	x	30¢	x	x	30¢
Hampden	Baltimore, Md.	x	x	x	x	27¢	x	27¢	25¢
Columbia	Baltimore, Md.	x	25¢	28¢	none	25¢	x	x	25¢
Broadway	Baltimore, Md.	x	27¢	x	x	27¢	x	27¢	25¢
Apollo	Baltimore, Md.	x	25¢	x	x	27¢	x	25¢	25¢
Irvington	Baltimore, Md.	x	x	28¢	25¢	25¢	x	x	25¢
Montevista	Cincinnati, Ohio	30¢	30¢	x	33¢	x	x	30¢	x
20th Century	Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	30¢	x	30¢	x	x	30¢	x
Jackson	Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	x	x	x	x	x	30¢	x
Esquire	Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	x	x	x	x	x	30¢	x
Sunset	Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	x	x	x	x	x	30¢	x
Westwood	Cincinnati, Ohio	29¢ tax excl.	x	x	x	x	x	30¢	x
Lawrence	New Haven, Conn.	27¢	27¢	33¢	27¢	27¢	x	25¢	x
Westville	New Haven, Conn.	30¢	30¢	33¢	none	30¢	x	30¢	x
Pequot	New Haven, Conn.	30¢	30¢	33¢	30¢	x	x	33¢	x

Appendix "A"—Opinion

Theatre	City, State	Paramount	Loew's	Warner	RKO	Fox	Col.	U.A.	Univ.
Whalley	New Haven, Conn.	30¢	30¢	33¢	none	30¢	x	30¢	x
Hamilton	Indianapolis, Ind.	35¢	x	35¢	35¢	35¢	x	x	x
Sunshine	Albuquerque, N. M.	none	40¢	x	42¢	40¢	30¢	x	x
Rio	Appelton, Wisc.	40¢	46¢	none	none	45¢ tax incl.	none	x	46¢ plus 9¢ tax
Rex	Beloit, Wisc.	36¢	27¢	40¢	35¢	36¢ tax incl.	35¢	x	42¢ plus 8¢ tax
Capitol	Charleston, W. Va.	x	40¢	x	40¢	x	x	x	x
Albee	Huntington, W. Va.	40¢	40¢	34¢	35¢	40¢	x	x	40¢
Reed	Alexandria, Va.	35¢	35¢	39¢ tax incl.	none	35¢	37¢	x	35¢
Rosna	Norfolk, Va.	27¢	27¢	x	x	x	x	x	x
Flynn	Burlington, Vt.	25¢	36¢	x	35¢	40¢	x	x	x
Gloria or Riviera	Charleston, S. C.	40¢	40¢	44¢	27¢	40¢	15¢	x	35¢
Stadium	Woonsocket,	40¢	40¢	x	none	x	x	x	x
Bijoux	R. I.	x	x	x	44¢	35¢	35¢	x	30¢

It is apparent from the foregoing that there was great similarity and in many cases identity in the minimum prices fixed for the same theatre in the licenses of all the defendants. Where there was a marked difference in price, as for example in the admissions specified by RKO, Columbia and Universal, in a theatre in Charleston, South Carolina, it is likely to have been due to the showing of a picture of a different class from the others, or upon a different run.

Such uniformity of action spells a deliberately unlawful system, the existence of which is not dispelled by the testimony of interested witnesses that one distributor does not know what another distributor is doing; and there can, in our opinion, be no reasonable inference that the defendants are not all planning to fix minimum prices to which their licensess must adhere. See Record p. 1322.

In addition, several of the exhibits disclose operating agreements between the five distributor-defendants who are also theatre owners, or between them and independnt theatre owners in which joint operation of the theatres covered by the agreements is provided and minimum admission prices to be charged are either stated therein, or are to be jointly determined by other means. Apparently those particular price-fixing agreements do not involve the three minor defendants or their subsidiaries. For example, in Plaintiff's Exh. 220 there are agreements between subsidiaries of Loew's and Warner, covering the period of May 5, 1938 to August 31, 1947, according to which the admission prices for three theatres in Pittsburg—two of Warner and one of Loew's—are to be fixed by a joint committee. In Plaintiff's Exh. 218, an agreement between Warner and Paramount provides that from March 1, 1936, to August 31, 1953, two theatres previously operated by Warner, and one theatre previously operated by Paramount in Hammond, Indiana, should be managed by Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation and the then present scale of admission prices maintained. By other agreements in Plaintiff's Exh. 219, RKO and Warner provided for joint operation from August 27, 1937, to August 31, 1950, of five theatres in Cleveland—three of RKO and two of Warner—for which minimum prices are to be determined by a joint operating committee. See also, e.g., Plaintiff's Exh. 229 (Warner and independent); Exh. 213 (Loew's and independents); Exh. 202 (RKO and independent); Exhs. 226, 226a (Paramount, Warner, and independent); Exh. 223 (Warner and independent); Exh. 386 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exhs. 238, 239 (Fox and independents); Exh. 387 (Paramount, RKO and independent); Exh. 206 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 221 (Warner and Paramount); Exh. 209 (RKO and Paramount); Exh. 205 (Paramount and independent). These agreements show the express intent of the major defendants to maintain prices at artificial levels.

As further evidence of a conspiracy among the distributors to fix prices, we find master agreements and franchises between various of the defendants in their capacities as distributors and various of the defendants in their capacities as exhibitors. These contracts stipulate minimum admission prices often for dozens of theatres owned by an exhibitor-defendant in a particular area of the United States. Loew's as distributor, for example, fixed minimum prices for nearly all of Paramount's 133 theatres in Florida in an agreement covering the 1943-44 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (11). In the Chicago area Loew's again as distributor specified prices in a single agreement for upwards of 50 theatres owned by a Paramount subsidiary, Balaban & Katz Corporation. Plaintiff's Exhs. 250, 173. United Artists as distributor also specified prices for the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago for the 1941-42 season. Plaintiff's Exh. 369 (6). Similarly, Loew's specified prices for the entire Warner circuit of theatres for the 1943-44 season, Plaintiff's Exh. 57 (8-10, 21-2, 30, 32, 35, 38, 48); for the same season United Artists specified prices for five RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 274; Paramount for seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 240; Loew's for the same seven RKO theatres in Cincinnati, Plaintiff's Exh. 248; Warner for forty or more RKO theatres in Greater New York, Plaintiff's Exh. 126; Loew's for six Fox theatres in Los Angeles County, Plaintiff's Exh. 249; Warner for subsequent run Paramount theatres in Detroit and Birmingham, Michigan, Plaintiff's Exh. 244.

A master agreement between United Artists as distributor and Fox as exhibitor for the season 1938-39 covered distribution of pictures of five independent producers in Fox theatre circuits in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Omaha, Denver, and other cities, all on a percentage basis. It contained the following clause:

> "Where pictures are licensed on a percentage rental basis the scale of admission prices to be not less than the scale of admission prices charged to view pictures of comparable quality exhibited by the exhibitor and distributed by distributors other than United Artists."

The foregoing quotation shows an acquiescence of United Artists in admission prices fixed by any other distributor and an adherence to those prices in its own licenses. Plaintiff's Exh. 199.

A franchise agreement between Universal Corporation as distributor and Interstate Theatres, Inc., and Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., for the seasons 1941-44 is similar. Plaintiff's Exh. 261. In each of the two latter companies Paramount had a 50% interest. The franchise covered pictures distributed by Universal to the theatres of the two licensees and contained the ordinary provisions for penalties if minimum admission prices were not maintained. See note 2 supra. While no minimum prices were specified in the agreements it is not really questioned that in such circumstances the current prices were implied as part of the contract. See Record pp. 433, 724, 782, 1082, 1210-11.

There is also in evidence a franchise agreement between Columbia Pictures Corporation as distributor and Marcus Loew Booking Agency, a Loew's subsidiary, for the seasons 1944-46 covering pictures distributed to Loew's metropolitan New York Circuit. Plaintiff's Exh. 471. Minimum admission prices were not specified, but, as in other cases, were implied.

Licenses granted by one defendant to another for exhibition in only one theatre, while less striking evidence of conspiracy than the above master agreements and franchises, disclose the same inter-relationship among the defendants. Each of the five major defendants as a theatre-owning exhibitor has been licensed by the other seven defendants as distributors to exhibit the pictures of the latter at specified minimum prices. RKO, for example, as a theatre-owner, has been granted licenses with price restrictions by the other defendant-distributors. In turn, RKO, being itself a distributor, has granted similar licenses to the other four exhibiting defendants. We think that RKO, Loew's, Warner, Paramount and Fox, in granting and accepting licenses with minimum prices specified, have among themselves engaged in a national system to fix prices, and that Columbia, Universal and United Artists, in requiring the maintenance of minimum prices in their licenses granted to these exhibitor-defendants, have participated in that system.

It is a reasonable inference from all the foregoing that the distributor-defendants have acquiesced in the establishment of a price-fixing system and have conspired with one another to maintain prices. Such a conspiracy is per se a violation of the Sherman Act. Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436; United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265.

Moreover, irrespective of the conspiracy among distributors to which we have referred, each distributor-defendant has illegally combined with its licensees, for in agreeing to maintain a stipulated minimum admission price, each exhibitor thereby consents to the minimum price level at which it will compete against other licensees of the same distributor whether they exhibit on the same run or not. The total effect is that through the separate contracts between the distributor and its licensees a price structure is erected which regulates the licensees' ability to compete against one another in admission prices. Each licensee knows from the general uniformity of admission price practices that other licensees having theatres suitable for exhibition of a distributor's picture in the particular competitive area will also be restricted as to maintenance of minimum prices, and this acquiescence of the exhibitors in the distributor's control of price competition renders the whole a conspiracy between each distributor and its licensees. An effective system of price control in which the distributor and its licensees knowingly take part by entering into price-restricting contracts is thereby created. That the combination is made up of a sum of separate licensing contracts, individually executed, does not affect its illegality, for tacit participation in a general scheme to control prices is as violative of the Sherman Act as an explicit agreement. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3).

This practice of stipulating minimum admission prices in the contracts of license is illegal in another respect. The differentials in price set by a distributor in licensing a particular picture in theatres exhibiting on different runs in the same competitive area are calculated to encourage as many patrons as possible to see the picture in the prior-run theatres where they will pay higher prices than in the subsequent runs. The reason for this is that if 10,000 people of a city's population are ultimately to see the picture—no matter on what run—the gross revenue to be realized from their patronage is increased relatively to the increase in numbers seeing it in the higher-priced prior-run theatres. In effect, the distributor, by the fixing of minimum prices, attempts to give the prior-run exhibitors as near a monopoly of the patronage as possible. This, we believe, to be in violation of §2 of the Sherman Act, at least when the distributor's own theatres are not exhibiting its picture on a prior-run and it is to theatres other than its own that it attempts to give a monopoly.

It is argued that the practice of minimum admission price-fixing is permitted under the Copyrighted Act. But that act has never been held to sanction a conspiracy among licensors and licensees artifically to maintain prices. We do not question that the Copyright Act permits the owner of a copyrighted picture to exhibit it in its own theatres upon such terms as it sees fit, nor need we now decide whether a copyright owner may lawfully fix admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor for the exhibition of its film; if other licensors and exhibitors are not in contemplation. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; cf. United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476. As other licensors and exhibitors are always in contemplation, so far as we can see, the question would appear academic.

This does not contravene the rule announced in United States v. General Electric Co., 272 U. S. 476, for there a license to only a single licensee—the Westinghouse Company—was involved, and, therefore, no conspiracy which sought to amplify the rights of the licensor under the Patent Act. The other question involved in that case was whether a patentee might lawfully require its bona fide agents to maintain minimum prices in selling the former's patented articles. The court held that it could. There is no claim here, however, that the exhibitors as licensees under the distributors' copyrights are agents in any sense, and we do not see that such a claim could be made. In any event, United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, involved facts closely analogous to those here and affords ample basis for our decision.

Some argument has been made that the defendants' fixing of minimum admission prices is exempted from operation of the Sherman Act by the Miller-Tydings Amendment to that act, 50 Stat. 693 (1937), 15 U.S.C.A. §1 (1940). The amendment pertains, however, only to "contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of a commodity", and the undisputed evidence is that the distributors merely grant licenses to the exhibitors for exhibition of their films and that title to none of their films at any time passes to the exhibitors. Furthermore, the distributor-defendants have engaged in a conspiracy, and the amendment explicitly states that despite its other provisions, contracts or agreements between "persons, firms, or corporations in competition with each other" to establish or maintain minimum prices remain illegal. United States v. Frankfort Distilleries, Inc., 324 U. S. 293; United States v. Bausch & Lomb Co., 321 U. S. 707; United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241.

The foregoing holding that the defendants have all engaged in unlawful price-fixing does not prevent the distributors from continuing their present methods of determining film rentals; they may measure their compensation by stated sums, by a given percentage of a particular theatre's receipts, by a combination of these two, or by any other appropriate means. What is held to be violative of the Sherman Act is not the distributors' devices for measuring rentals, but their fixing of minimum admission prices which automatically regulates the ability of one licensee to compete against another for the patron's dollar and tends to increase such prices as well as profits from exhibition.

If the exhibitors are not restrained by the distributors in the right to fix their own prices, there will be an opportunity for the exhibitors, whether they be affiliates or independents, to compete with one another. This is because one exhibitor by lowering admission prices will be able to compete with other exhibitors in obtaining patrons for his theatre—a competition which may well benefit both exhibitors and the public paying the admission fees.

Clearance and Run

Among provisions common to the licensing contracts of all the distributor-defendants are those by which the licensor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit a certain motion picture before a specified number of days after the last date of the exhibition therein licensed. This so-called period of "clearance" or "protection" is stated in the various licenses in differing ways: in terms of a given period between designated runs, as for example in the Chicago area, Plaintiff's Exh. 369, see Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946), and as in Washington and New York, Plaintiff's Exhibits 244, 471; in terms of admission prices charged by competing theatres, as "20 days over 30¢ theatres, 28 days over 25¢ theatres," Plaintiff's Exhibits 57, 173, 178, 189; in terms of a given period of clearance over specifically named theatres, Plaintiff's Exhibits 94, 181, 242, 253; 259; in terms of so many days' clearance over specified areas or towns, Plaintiff's Exhibits 126, 175, 182, 182A, 183, 194, 244, 250, 255, 470, 476; in terms of clearances as fixed by other distributors, Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 417; or in terms of combinations of these formulae.

It appears to be plaintiff's contention that clearance practices inherently operate to produce unreasonable restrictions of competition among theatres and are therefore per se violative of the Sherman Act. With this we do not agree, for it seems to us that a grant of clearance, when not accompanied by a fixing of minimum prices or not unduly extended as to area or duration, affords a fair protection to the interests of the licensee without unreasonably interfering with the interests of the public. At common law a vendor of income-producing property may validly covenant with his purchaser not to compete for a given time or within a given area so long as the restrictions are reasonably necessary to protect the value of the property purchased. Cincinnati, Portsmouth, Big Sandy and Pomeroy Packet Co. v. Bay, 200 U. S. 179; see Rogers v. Parry, 2 Cro. 326 (K. B. 1613); United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co., 85 Fed. 271 (C. C. A. 6). It is true that licenses of property rather than sales are here concerned and that the distributors covenant not only not to exhibit the films themselves, but also not to license them to others. Nevertheless, we believe these are not differences which affect the applicability of the common-law rule to the present case, for licenses between one distributor and one exhibitor with reasonable clearance provisions do not, in our opinion, involve anything unlawful. Such provisions are no more than safeguards against concurrent or subsequent licenses in the same area until the exhibitor whose theatre is involved has had a chance to exhibit the pictures licensed without invasion by a subsequent exhibitor at a lower price. It seems nothing more than an adoption of the common law rule to restrict subsequent exhibitions for a reasonable time within a reasonable area. While clearance may indirectly affect admission prices, it does not fix them and is, we believe, a reasonable restraint permitted by the Sherman Act. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106; Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830, affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4); see United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265; Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436.

The costs of each black and white print is from $150 to $300, and of a technicolor print is from $600 to $800. Many of the bookings are for less than the cost of the print so that exhibitions would be confined to the larger high-priced theatres unless a system of successive runs with a reasonable protection for the earlier runs is adopted in the way of clearance.

In Section VIII of the Consent Decree, moreover, there is the explicit statement to which all parties, including the plaintiff, consented.

> "It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures."

While, as previously stated, we do not deem ourselves bound by any provision of the consent decree, if we now find that it violates the Sherman Act, the forcefulness of the phrasing of this sentence indicates the proved utility of clearance practices in the movie industry and also their apparent necessity for a reasonable conduct of the business. Indeed, it is practically conceded that exhibitors would find extremely perilous the acceptance of licenses for the exhibition of films without assurance by the distributor that a nearby competitor would not be licensed to show the same film either at the same time or so soon thereafter that the exhibitor's expected income—perhaps on the basis of which he agreed to the specified rental—would be greatly diminished. Moreover, we understand the plaintiff to concede that the licensor may license its pictures for different successive dates. A reasonable clearance is in practical effect much the same. Either a license for successive dates, or one providing for clearance, permits the public to see the picture in a later-exhibiting theatre at lower than prior rates.

Several courts have previously considered the validity of clearances under the Sherman Act and have concluded that in the absence of an unconscionably long time or too extensive an area embraced by the clearance, or a conspiracy of distributors to fix clearances, there was nothing of itself illegal in their use. Westway Theatre, Inc. v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 30 F. Supp. 830 (D. Md.), affirmed on opinion below, 113 F. 2d 932 (C. C. A. 4), and unreported cases therein cited; Gary Theatre Co. v. Columbia Pictures Corp., 120 F. 2d 891 (C. C. A. 7). We find the reasoning of these cases persuasive.

It is true that in some instances large theatre circuits by use of their great film-buying power have been able to negotiate successfully with the distributor-defendants for grants of unreasonable clearances or unjustified prior runs for their theatres. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C. C. A. 7), affirmed 326 U. S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, 150 F. 2d 738 (C. C. A. 3); United States v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., 63 F. Supp. 229 (W. D. N. Y.). While we cannot find sufficient evidence to support an inference that the major defendants here, though controlling some of the largest circuits of theatres in the country and thus possessing potential weapons of great strength, have either collectively or severally entered upon a general policy of discriminating against independents in their grants of clearances, yet they have acquiesced in and forwarded a uniform system of clearances and in numerous instances have maintained unreasonable clearances to the prejudice of independents and perhaps even of affiliates. The decision of such controversies as may arise over clearances should be left to local suits in the area concerned, or, even more appropriately, to litigation before an Arbitration Board composed of men versed in the complexities of this industry.

In determining the reasonableness of the specific clearances which may come before these tribunals, they should consider whether the clearance has been set so as to favor affiliates or control the admission prices of the theatres involved. A distributor will naturally tend to grant a subsequent run to and clearance over a theatre for which the owner of his own volition sets a low admission price, for the distributor will be inclined to seek out the higher priced theatres first where the revenue is likely to be greater and consequently in case of licenses on a percentage basis where a percentage share will be higher. This, however, would seem the inevitable result of the competition for the distributor's films from theatres which are the larger or better equipped, and for which higher admission prices may therefore be charged by their operators. Such competition the lower priced theatres must be prepared to meet, or else be content with subsequent runs and grants of clearance over them. The temptations to the distributor to use clearance grants to force a theatre to raise its prices and thus to qualify for prior runs having less clearance over it, and more clearance over competitors are nevertheless obvious and the courts or arbitration board should guard that this is not done. Clearance should be granted on the basis of theatre conditions which the exhibitor creates, not the distributor. The line to be drawn is indeed indistinct, but its existence is no less real.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the following factors should be taken into consideration and accorded the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The admission prices, as set by the exhibitors, of the theatres involved;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The foregoing has been directed to the validity of clearance provisions resulting from separate negotiations between individual distributors and exhibitors in free and open competition with other distributors and exhibitors, and, as stated, we believe their reasonable use to be lawful. It is here claimed by plaintiff, however, that the distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they license their films and that the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system. This we find to be the case and hold to be in violation of the Sherman Act.

The following testimony warrants the inference that the defendants, as we found to be the case in the fixing of admission prices, have acted in concert in their grants of run and clearance. William F. Rodgers, general sales manager and vice-president of Loew's, testified that the field managers determine whether a theatre shall be licensed to exhibit on a first or on a subsequent run, that the clearance of a given theatre is more or less historical, except for that of new theatres, and that there has been very little change in clearance over a period of years. Record pp. 542-3. Prior to 1943-44 Loew's license agreements provided that the clearance granted therein should apply to any theatre thereafter opened. Record p. 556.

Charles M. Reagan, vice-president of Paramount in charge of sales, stated that once clearance is agreed upon, it remains the same unless either exhibitor or distributor wants to change it. Record pp. 710-11. There is a difference between a distributor's and an exhibitor's interest in the period of clearance granted. The distributor wants to get the most possible in film rental from all the runs, the exhibitor to get as much clearance over a succeeding run as possible, because he has no interest in any succeeding run. The distributor, however, has a definite interest. Record p. 710. Clearances as granted apply to all pictures regardless of their quality. Record p. 715.

Martin J. Mullen, vice-president of M & P Theatres, a managing corporation which operates a group of New England theatres affiliated with Paramount, said that clearance is generally negotiated each time a license contract is made, but is actually carried along from year to year and generally understood when once established; that originally, before his time, clearance was established as a result of individual negotiations and followed along the same lines as they were with some changes. Record p. 968. All defendants grant the same clearance to the same theatre. Record p. 977.

John J. Friedl, president and general manager of the Minnesota Amusement Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Paramount, said that he generally got from the various distributors the same clearance for the particular theatre for which he is negotiating; that while clearance is negotiated with each license, it generally remains the same, and the same clearance is granted by distributor-defendants and non-defendants alike, Record p. 1003; that clearance is pretty well established, and it is definitely followed in all cases. Record p. 1013.

Morton J. Thalheimer, an indepedent theatre exhibitor in Richmond, Virginia, called as a witness by Fox, testified that clearance was in effect in Richmond when he first went into business, and it seemed perfectly normal and natural that it should remain that way; that it protects his first-run against his own sub-runs and against his competitors' sub-runs. Record p. 1384. To his knowledge, the system of clearances had existed in Richmond for over nineteen years, during which time there had not been any change. Record p. 1401.

Harold J. Fitzgerald, president of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, Inc, operating sixty-six motion picture theatres in Wisconsin and Michigan, a wholly owned subsidiary of the defendant National Theatres Corporation, testified by affidavit that the situation with respect to the licensing of films, and the runs and clearances involved, were much the same in 1928 as they are today, Record p. 1973; that licensing arrangements were vital to distributor and exhibitor and that clearance obviously had a definite effect upon the capacity of his corporation to secure patronage at its top admission price. If Fox Wisconsin undertook to pay a distributor the film rental based upon a high percentage of gross, it would be interested in clearance over any neighborhood theatre which the distributor might license on a competing subsequent run. Generally negotiations as to clearance do not take place with respect to each block of pictures licensed because once a fair and reasonable clearance has been determined by the distributor and exhibitor it tends to become fixed, and ordinarily will be the same in a series of contracts in the absence of any unchanged circumstances and conditions. Record p. 1983.

Benjamin Kalmenson, sales manager of Warner Bros. Distributors Corporation, testified that clearances have been pretty well set through the country for a great many years, and are "acquiesced in by exhibitors, producers, independents, affiliates and everybody, until there has grown up a kind of system of clearance." Record p. 1506.

Robert Mochrie, general sales manager of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., stated upon his examination that RKO in determining the length of clearance between theatres, takes into consideration the amount of clearance which in its opinion will yield it the largest revenue, taking all theatres into account as a whole and subject to a clearance condition that has built itself up in the city over a period of time. In negotiating licenses, there is frequent occasion to give consideration to the existing clearance between theatres, but they do not consider it anew each time because the factors which determined it originally at some past time remain stable from year to year. He said there are no general or frequent instances in his practice of clearances different in some particular city from those granted by a co-defendant. He usually knows what clearances other distributors are granting. His customer usually tells him what clearance he wants, which is what he is getting from other distributors. He has no agreements with other distributors that he will adopt the same clearance, and his explanation as to why in some instances the clearances granted by RKO to a prior run theatre is the same as a clearance granted by one or more other distributors serving the same theatre is that clearance has been the outgrowth in time between those two theatres, and the exhibitor buys such products on such a clearance basis and offers the witness the same. Record pp. 1714-5.

Abraham Montague, general sales manager of Columbia, testified that in negotiating deals, the "clearance is something we usually find when we arrive there, and we usually negotiate our deal within the clearance we find"; that it would be impracticable and impossible to set up new clearance. Record p. 1268. His company keeps a record of clearances in the community. Record p. 1347. Where his company grants clearance to one theatre over another, it usually follows the pattern set by clearance that is given by other major distributors as well as those which are not majors. He usually does not make any independent determination of whether the clearance is reasonable or unreasonable. He takes it as he finds it, and finding it in most cases standardized, his company does not feel that it is strong enough to change it. Record pp. 1376-7.

Paul N. Lazarus, manager of the contract department of United Artists, testified that clearances are "generally understood, and they follow along their established custom." Record p. 1440. For testimony of other witnesses to the same effect as the foregoing, see Record pp. 2012, 2043, 2049, 2086, 2110-11.

The fixed character of clearances and the uniformity of the distributor-defendants' practice with reference thereto are shown by the exhibits, as well as the testimony. Many of the franchises, master agreements, and so-called "formula deals" which are in evidence provide that clearances shall be the same as those in effect on the date of the agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 419A (RKO and independent); 419B (RKO and Paramount); 241 (Paramount and Fox); 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 473 (RKO and Universal); 245 (Warner and Fox); 251 (Fox and Paramount); 254 (Fox and RKO). Some of the agreements establish clearances for more than a season. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 181 (3 years, Loew's and Warner); 187 (3 years, Loew's and Fox); 249 (9 years, Loew's and Fox); 259 (3 years, Warner and Universal). Others provide that the clearance is to be no less favorable to the exhibitor than that which had been granted by the distributor for the previous season or in the preceding agreement. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 265, 472 (Columbia and Fox); 190 (RKO and Fox); 199, 272A, 383 (United Artists and Fox).

In some of the agreements, the clearance therein stated was also to be granted to all theatres which the exhibitor-party to the contract might thereafter own, lease, control, manage, or operate. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 172 (Paramount and Loew's); 266, 266A (Columbia and Warner); 471 (Columbia and Loew's); 192 (Fox and Warner). Moreover, the license forms for 1936-7 of Paramount, Fox, Loew's, Warner, RKO, Columbia and Universal, and for 1943-44 of Paramount, Warner, Columbia and Universal, each contain a provision identical or similar to the following:

> "If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 275, 277, 279-81, 283-6, 289-90.

It is clear that the purpose of these two types of clearance agreements was to fix the run and clearance status of any theatre thereafter opened, not on the basis of its appointments, size, location, and other competitive factors normally entering into such a determination, but rather upon the sole basis of whether it were operated by the exhibitor-party to the agreement.

Much that has been said about clearances is applicable also to runs; the two are practically alike. Clearances are given to protect a particular run against a subsequent run, and the practice of clearance is so closely allied with that of run as to make comment on the one applicable to the other.

Rodgers, of Loew's testified that a run usually remains static for a given theatre, Record p. 421, and he determines what runs shall be "offered" to an exhibitor. Record p. 418. The size of the theatre does not necessarily determine whether it is satisfactory for operation on a first run, Record p. 566.

Reagan, of Paramount, said that negotiations with an exhibitor are "usually conducted on the basis of a particular run." In the case of a new theatre, the distributor usually considers whether it wants to do business on the run the theatre would like.[7] In the New York area, second runs are sold by him only to Loew's and RKO. Record pp. 815-16.

The evidence we have referred to shows that both independent distributors and exhibitors when attempting to bargain with the defendants have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs, and admission prices to which they have

---

[7] "Q. And some negotiations are conducted on the basis of a first-run of a product, some second, some subsequent? A. Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: You mean the particular run is established before the negotiation with the exhibitor?

The Witness: Sometimes it generally is established, although that has been the result of years of experience that we have had in negotiating with our customers.

Judge Bright: How about a new theatre or new exhibitor?

The Witness: There is nothing established there, and we consider all the factors there and make a decision on whether we want to do business with him on the run that we would like to have.

Q. Now, how is the matter of terms upon which Paramount films will be licensed, determined? A. Determined by negotiations based upon experience we have had with the particular theatre with whom we are negotiating." Record p. 693.

"Q. You do not mean that each time there is a negotiation the whole question of run is opened up again? A. No, it is not.

Q. The policy on which the theatre is operated has usually been established over a long period of time? A. Yes."

been obliged to conform if they wished to get their pictures shown upon satisfactory runs or were to compete in exhibition either with the defendants' theatres or with theatres to which the latter have licensed their pictures. Under the circumstances disclosed in the record there has been no fair chance for either the present or any future licensees to change a situation sanctioned by such effective control and general acquiescence as have obtained. See Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., 150 F. 2d 877 (C.C.A. 7), affirmed 326 U.S. (February 25, 1946); Goldman v. Loew's, Inc., 150 F. 2d 738 (C.C.A. 3); Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, 60 F. 2d 538 (D.C. Neb.). The only way competition may be introduced into the present system of fixed prices, clearances, and runs is to require a defendant when licensing its pictures to other exhibitors to make each picture available at a minimum fixed or percentage rental and (if clearance is desired) to grant a reasonable clearance and run. When so offered, the licensor shall grant the license for the desired run to the highest bidder if such bidder is responsible and has a theatre of a size, location, and equipment to present the picture to advantage. In other words, if two theatres are bidding and are fairly comparable the one offering the best terms shall receive the license. Thus price fixing among the licensors or between a licensor and its licensees as well as the non-competitive clearance system may be terminated, and the requirements of the Sherman Act, which the present system violates, will be adequately met. The administrative details involved in such changes will require further consideration. We are satisfied that existing arrangements are in derogation of the rights of independent distributors, exhibitors, and the public, and that the proposed changes will tend to benefit them all.

Formula Deals, Master Agreements, and Franchises

Formula deals, certain master agreements, and franchises have tended to restrain trade in the distribution and exhibition of motion picture features and in view of the history and relation to the moving picture business of the various parties to this action have exercised unreasonable restraints. In our opinion these restraints will be obviated or at least sufficiently mitigated by requiring a distributor wishing its pictures to be shown outside of its own theatres to offer to license each picture to all theatres desiring to show it on a particular run and, if the theatres are responsibly owned and otherwise adequate, to grant the desired run to the highest bidder.

Formula deals have been entered into by Paramount and by RKO with indepedent and affiliated circuits. By such agreements a particular circuit has been licensed to exhibit a certain feature in all its theatres at a specified percentage of the national gross receipts realized from that feature by all theatres in the United States. The circuit may allocate playing time and film rentals among the various theatres as it sees fit. See Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 419A, 419B. Arrangements whereby all the theatres of a circuit are included in a single agreement, and no opportunity is afforded for other theatre owners to bid for the picture in their several areas, seriously and as we hold unreasonably restrain competition. These formula deals have been negotiated without, so far as we are informed, any competition on the part of independent theatre owners who would labor under a great disadvantage in attempting severally to match or outbid the offers of a circuit that was making offers for all of its theatres.

Certain master agreements are open to the same objection as formula deals, for they cover exhibition in two or more theatres in a particular circuit and allow the exhibitor to allocate the film rental paid among the theatres as it sees fit and also to exhibit the features upon such playing time as it deems best, and leaves other terms to the circuit's discretion. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 196, 251, 267, 270, 270A, 273, 476. These are different from some other master agreements in which there are separate provisions covering the licensing of the picture for each particular theatre. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 182, 182A, 189, 190, 191, 248. These later agreements in effect only combine in one document a number of theatres with proper licenses for each. This may be done if there is an opportunity for exhibitors to bid for the same runs at an offered price.

Franchises which so far as the five major defendants are concerned were forbidden by the consent decree are also objectionable because they cover too long periods (more than one season) and also because they embrace all the pictures released by a given distributor. They necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture, theatre by theatre, to the highest bidder.

It is true that a prohibition of formula deals, master agreements and franchises will interfere with certain contracts which have been made in the past but their formation was a restraint upon trade which was unlawful at the time they were made, and therefore should not be continued. We see no reason to hold that the failure to bring in to this suit one of the contracting parties prevents the issue of an injunction forbidding one who is a party to the suit from continuing to carry out an arrangement which causes unlawful restraints. While our decision will not be res judicata as to those not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily and properly bound, and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the questions of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade and commerce.

In our opinion it follows from the foregoing that provisions in license agreements known as moveovers which give to a licensee the privilege of exhibiting a given picture in a second theatre as a continuation of a run in a first theatre are incompatible with the system we have prescribed of bidding for pictures and runs theatre by theatre. The same would seem to be true of so-called overage-and-underage provisions which are often inserted in licenses to permit an exhibitor owning a number of theatres to apply a deficit in the playing time in one or more others. Under such provisions it is not possible to determine the amount payable for the account of one theatre until the performances in the others have been completed, or practically to apply the bidding system we are establishing. But provisions in licenses for "extended" or "repeat" runs in the same theatre, though apparently criticized by the government, would not seem to be objectionable if reasonably limited in time when other exhibitors are given the opportunity to bid for similar licenses. Likewise, any other license provisions which may be called to our attention that would substantially interfere with the effectiveness of the bidding system would have to be revised and perhaps may have to be specially dealt with in the decree to follow this opinion.

Block-booking and Blind-selling

For many years the distributor-defendants licensed their films in "blocks", or indivisible groups, before they had been actually produced. In such cases the only knowledge prospective exhibitors had of the films which they had contracted for was from a description of each picture by title, plot and players. In many cases licenses for all the films had to be accepted in order to obtain any, though sometimes the exhibitor was given a right of subsequent cancellation for a certain number of pictures. Because of complaints of block-booking and blind-selling based upon the supposed unfairness of contracts which often included pictures—the inferior quality of which could not be known—Sections III and IV of the consent decree required the five consenting distributors to trade-show their films before offering them for license and limited the number which might be included in any contract to five. More than one block of five however could be licensed where the contents of any had been trade-shown. While this restriction in the consent decree has now ceased by time limitation, the consent distributors have continued to observe the restriction. The non-assenting distributors have retained up to the present time their previous methods of licensing in blocks, but have allowed their customers considerable freedom to cancel the license as to a percentage of the pictures contracted for.

The plaintiff argues that the Sherman Act forbids block-booking in toto. This is said to be because it is illegal to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another, and it therefore can make no difference whether the group of films involved in a license be two or forty. In our opinion this contention is sound, and any form of block-booking is illegal by which an exhibitor, in order to obtain a license for one or more films, must accept a license for one or more other films.

A patentee who has granted a license in consideration that the patented invention shall be used by the licensee only with unpatented material furnished by the licenser may not restrain as a contributory infringer one who sells to the licensee like materials for like use. Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680; Morton Salt Co. v. G. S. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488, 491; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502; Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Corp., 283 U. S. 27; Leitch

Mfg. Co. v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458. Moreover, as was said in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670, a decree for an injunction against a contributory infringer would sanction both "a misuse of the patent privilege and a violation of the anti-trust laws." The same rule would appear to apply to copyrights and prevent a suit for contributory infringement by a copyright owner who had licensed the printing of his book, only in connection with paper supplied by him, against a third party supplying paper to the licensee in violation of the agreement. See Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Straus v. Am. Publisher's Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222.

It is true that a copyrighted motion picture when united with another copyrighted picture by block-booking is not tied to an uncopyrighted article. Nevertheless the objections to conditioning the licensing of one picture upon the licensing of another are the same, for the result is to give the copyright owner not only the reward which is his due from the licensing of a single copyrighted film, but to extend his monopoly by requiring his licensee to accept one or more other films and to pay royalties therefor as an additional consideration. We cannot see that this differs in principle from requiring the licensee to purchase uncopyrighted articles in connection with the license of a copyright. In either case the copyright owner is obtaining something which the decisions have forbidden as beyond the grant of his limited monopoly. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 502, 519, argued persuasively that the right of the owner of a patent to keep his device out of use included the right to condition its use. Such a doctrine would contravene the rule we are laying down, but his views were rejected by the majority of the Supreme Court in that decision, as well as in Straus v. Victor Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490, and have proved to be contrary to a long line of subsequent decisions of that court—indeed to have been supplanted by the general trend of authority ever since the days of Henry v. Dick, 224 U. S. 1.

It may be argued that the common law gives a right to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another—that it is as though the owner of ordinary chattels refused to sell a lot to A unless the latter would purchase in a larger quantity than he desired. The question whether such a contract involving patents or copyrights was good at common law was apparently left open in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Mfg. Co., 243 U. S. 503, and Keeler v. Standard Folding Bed Co., 157 U. S. 659, and in Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152, the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit sustained contracts of block-booking.

Block-booking, when the license of any film is conditioned upon taking of other films, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single pictures on their individual merits and adds to the monopoly of a single copyrighted picture that of another copyrighted picture which must be taken and exhibited in order to secure the first. It differs from such a sale of chattels as we have mentioned because it extends a monopoly which the owner of the chattels is not assumed to have. We are not inclined to follow Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 F. 2d 152 (C.C.A. 2), for the reason we have given and particularly because of recent decisions of the Supreme Court. As Stone, C.J., said in Ethyl Gasoline Corp. v. United States, 309 U. S. 436, 459,—when dealing with the use of one patent to exploit another:

> "• • • It [Ethyl Gasoline Corporation] has chosen to exploit its patents by manufacturing the fluid covered by them and by selling that fluid to refiners for use in the manufacture of motor fuel. Such benefits as result from control over the marketing of the treated fuel by the jobbers accrue primarily to the refiners and indirectly to appellant, only in the enjoyment of its monopoly of the fluid secured under another patent. The licensing conditions are thus not used as a means of stimulating the commercial development and financial returns of the patented invention which is licensed, but for the commercial development of the business of the refiners and the exploitation of a second patent monopoly not embraced in the first. The patent monopoly of one invention may no more be enlarged for the exploitation of a monopoly of another, see Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, supra, than for the exploitation of an unpatented article, United Shoe Machinery Co. v. United States, supra; Carbice Corporation v. American Patents Corp., supra; Leitch Manufacturing Co. v. Barber Co., supra; American Lecithin Co. v. Warfield Co., 105 F. 2d 207, or for the exploitation or promation of a business not embraced within the patent. Interstate Circuit v. United States, supra, 228-230."

See also United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Hartford-Empire Co. v. United States, 323 U. S. 386, 415, 452-3; Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Investment Co., 320 U. S. 661, 670; Mercoid Corp. v. Minneapolis Honeywell Regulator Co., 320 U. S. 680, 684; United States v. Masonite Corp., 316 U. S. 265, 277-8; Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 227-230; Stokes & Smith Co. v. Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp., decided by Second Circuit Court of Appeals May 1, 1946.

We however declare illegal only that aspect of block-booking which makes the licensing of one copyright conditional upon an agreement to accept a license of one or more other copyrights. A distributor may license to an exhibitor at one time as many films as the latter wishes to receive, but the distributor may not constitute groups of pictures which it refuses to license separately. The distributor may of course not license his pictures at all, but if he does license them, he must do so severally and, in accordance with the bidding procedure previously indicated, must license them to the exhibitor or exhibitors who are qualified and offer the best terms for the various runs.

Blind-selling does not appear to be as inherently restrictive of competition as block-booking, although it is capable of some abuse. By this practise a distributor could promise a picture of good quality or of a certain type which when produced might prove to be of poor quality or of another type—a competing distributor meanwhile being unable to market its product and in the end losing its outlets for future pictures. The evidence indicates that trade-shows, which are designed to prevent such blind-selling, are poorly attended by exhibitors. Record pp. 1178-9. Accordingly, exhibitors who choose to obtain their films for exhibition in quantities, need to be protected against burdensome agreements by being given an option to reject a certain percentage of their blind-licensed pictures within a reasonable time after they shall have become available for inspection. Such right of rejection has been incorporated in numerous licenses given by the defendants and should be afforded whenever licenses of unproduced films and films not trade-shown are secured by an exhibitor who has made the best competitive bid for them.

The only group licensing we are prepared to sanction is licensing by which the group is not offered on condition that the licensee shall take all the pictures included in it, or none, but in which the pictures are separately priced, and each picture is to be sold to the highest duly qualified bidder. As we have already indicated in discussing formula deals, master agreements, and franchises, the offering of pictures should be theatre by theatre, and if more than one picture is included in a license agreement, it will be only because of business convenience and to the extent that each picture so included has received the best bid.

"Pooling" Agreements

It is claimed by plaintiff that the theatre-owning defendants have combined with each other and with independent theatre-owners by "pooling" their theatres through operating agreements, leases, joint stock ownership of theatre-operating corporations, or through joint ownership of theatres in fee. We are asked to determine the validity of these various means of joining interests.

By far the most numerous type of agreement in evidence is that by which given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition with each other, are operated as a unit or most of their business policies collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, and by which profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 100, 200, 206, 213, 218, 220-1, 223, 226, 226A, 232. Some of the agreements provide that the parties thereto may not acquire other theatres in the competitive vicinity without first offering them for inclusion in the "pool". See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 201, 205-6, 219.

These operating agreements we hold to be in clear conflict with the Sherman Act, for through them a defendant-exhibitor reduces to a minimum opposition between its own and other theatres in the "pool". Cooperation, rather than competition, characterizes their operation, and in view of the exhibitor-defendants' financial strength, control of first-class film distribution, ownership of concentrated numbers of first-run theatres, and especially their combination to reduce competition in exhibition through systems of price-fixing and clearances, such restraints as these agreements impose upon free commerce in motion pictures are far less than reasonable. The result is to eliminate competition pro tanto both in exhibition and in distribution of films which would flow almost automatically to the theatres in the earnings of which they have a joint interest.

Other forms of operating agreements are between major defendants and independent exhibitors rather than between major defendants, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 97, 118, 208, 238-9, 358, but we are not of the opinion that this renders them legal. The effect is to ally two or more theatres of different ownership into a coalition for the nullification of competition between them and for their more effective competition against theatres not members of the "pool". Even if the parties to such combinations were not major film producers and distributors, but were all wholly independent exhibitors, such agreements might often be regarded as beyond the reasonable limits of restraint allowance under the Sherman Act. This result is certain when some of the parties are of major statute in the movie industry and have in other ways imposed unlawful restraints upon it, as we have found to be the case upon the record before us.

In certain other cases the operating agreements are accomplished by leases of theatres, the rentals being determined by a stipulated percentage of profits earned by the "pooled" theatres, see, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 9, 106, 118, 204. This appears to be but another means of carrying out the illegal objection discussed above. While a theatre-owner may of course remove itself from the business of operating theatres by leasing them to anyone it deems fit upon a fixed rental basis, so long as a monopoly in exhibition is not thereby achieved by the lessee, any arrangement whereby one of the exhibitor-defendants in this case allies its theatres with those of a competing exhibitor, independent or affiliated, and yet itself remains in the trade of exhibiting motion pictures by retaining an interest in the profits earned by the allied theatres, is unlawful under the anti-trust acts.

Many theatres, or the corporations owning them, are held jointly by one or more of the exhibitor-defendants, in some cases in conjunction with independents. See, e.g., Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 46, 48, 62, 164, 355, 387; RKO's Exhibit 11. As these joint interests enable the major defendants to operate theatres collectively, rather than competitively, we find them illegal for the reasons above stated. Appropriate steps should be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant will own theatres (whether represented by fee, beneficial, or stock interests) jointly with other exhibitor-defendants, regardless of the size of interests involved. Appropriate steps should also be taken so that no exhibitor-defendant or defendants will jointly own a theatre or stock interest therein with any independent exhibitor, except when a defendant or an independent owns an interest of five per cent or less, which we deem de minimis and only to be treated as an inconsequential investment in exhibition. See infra p. 71. This result may be reached in situations like Florida, Texas, Minnesota and Michigan by a sale, purchase, or exchange of interests in jointly-owned theatres so long as the transaction sought to be achieved will not result in an unreasonable restraint of competition in exhibition within the particular competitive area. To this end the court will control the manner in which rearrangements of these joint interests are effected.

It seems impracticable to do more than lay down general rules as to the foregoing situations. If further details are required to cover specific provisions of the various pooling agreements, they should be set forth in the decree to be hereafter entered.

It should be added that in our opinion there can be no objection to operating booking, or film buying through agents, provided the agent is not also acting in respect to theatres owned by other exhibitors, independent or affiliated, and provided that in case the agent is buying films for its principal he does this through the bidding system, theatre by theatre.

Discrimination Among Licensees

The amended and supplemental complaint alleges that in licensing films each of the distributor-defendants has discriminated against small independent exhibitors and in favor of the large affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. Of the various contract provisions by which such discriminations are said to have been accomplished, plaintiff sets forth the following in its brief: suspending the terms of a given contract, if a circuit theatre remains closed for more than eight weeks, and reinstating it without liability upon re-opening. Plaintiff's Exhibits 188, 265-6, 383-4, 472-3; allowing large privileges in the selection and elimination of films. Plaintiff's Exhibits 172, 177, 192, 263-6, 383-4, 472; allowing deductions in film rentals if double bills are played, Plaintiff's Exhibits 183-4, 190, 199, 242, 245, 247, 258-9, 262, 264-6, 271-2a, 274, 382-3, 473; granting moveovers and extended runs, Plaintiff's Exhibits 182-2a, 199, 260, 262, 265, 267, 274, 383-4, 474, 476; granting roadshow privileges, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187-8, 199, 232, 265-6, 383-4, 472; allowing overage and undertage, Plaintiff's Exhibits 190-1, 194, 259, 265-6, 383; granting unlimited playing time, Plaintiff's Exhibits 241, 267, 269, 471; excluding foreign pictures and those of independent producers, Plaintiff's Exhibits 173-4, 181, 190-1, 194, 199, 262, 265-6, 272a, 383-4, 395, 470-2; granting rights to question the classification of features for rental purposes, Plaintiff's Exhibits 187, 232, 259, 265, 472-3; and especially, discriminating in film rentals, clearances, and minimum admission prices, see Plaintiff's Brief pp. 56-70, 75-85.

These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres. Record pp. 1432-3; Columbia's Exhibit 9a; Universal's Exhibit 2; Plaintiff's Exhibits 195, 198, 259, 261, 265-6a, 384, 396, 470-3. Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract, which do not include them. Record pp. 1432-3; Plaintiff's Exhibits 275-90. The competitive advantages of these provisions are so great that their inclusion in contracts with the larger circuits constitutes an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors in violation of the anti-trust laws. It seems unnecessary to decide whether the record before us justifies a reasonable inference that the distributor-defendants have conspired among themselves to discriminate among their licensees, for each discriminating contract constitutes a conspiracy between the licensee and licensor. Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208; United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173.

The defendants argue that these privileges granted to the circuits flow from their negotiations with the individual theatre-owners rather than from a standard policy of discrimination deliberately pursued by them. This is perhaps true, but the result is the same whether the bargaining power of the large exhibitors forces upon the distributors a discriminatory policy, or whether the latter voluntarily carry such a policy into effect. Acquiescence in an unreasonable restraint, as well as the creation of such a restraint, violates the Sherman Act. Under the bidding system we are requiring such discriminations would appear impossible. Those provisions which are not compatible with the operation of this system, or which are inherently unreasonable, such as a provision for clearance between theatres where there is no substantial competition, will no longer be includible in licenses, as mentioned elsewhere, but otherwise the bidders will compete for licensing contracts on a parity, in that the same offer will be made to all prospective exhibitors in a community.

The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor-defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices. They have perhaps done so, but we are without sufficient knowledge of the many factors entering into the determination of these provisions such as the character of specific communities, the nature of the different theatre appointments, of the patrons, operating policies, locations, and responsibility of operators. In the absence of such facts, we are unable to infer that the distributor-defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard, but any discriminations in the other ways noted above in favor of affiliated licensee or licensees connected with independent circuits as against individual independents must be enjoined, and we believe will not exist in future licenses under the bidding system for which we are providing.

Divestiture of Theatres

We cannot accede to the prayer of the plaintiff that the major defendants should be divested of their theatres in order that no distributor of motion pictures shall be an exhibitor. Undoubtedly such a step while not ipso facto preventing price-fixing agreements or unreasonable clearance would terminate the government's most urgent objections to the present methods of conducting the motion picture business, but it would also withdraw the defendant-distributors from competition in the exhibition field and at the same time would create a new set of theatre owners which would be quite unlikely for some years to give the public as good service as the exhibitors they would have supplanted in view of the latter's demonstrated experience and skill in operating what must be regarded as in general the largest and best equipped theatres. We think that the opportunity of independents to compete under the bidding system for pictures and runs renders such a harsh remedy as complete divestiture unnecessary, at least until the efficiency of that system has been tried and found wanting.

In the year 1945 there were about 18,076 motion picture theatres in the United States of which the five major defendants had interests in 3,137 or 17.35 per cent. Of the latter, Paramount or its subsidiaries owned independently of the other defendants 1395—a little less than half, or about 7.72 per cent; Warner 501, or about 2.77 per cent; Loew's 135, or about .74 per cent; Fox 636, or about 3.52 per cent, and RKO 109, or about .60 per cent. There were 361 theatres, or about 2.00 per cent, in which two or more of these defendants had joint interests, whether held directly or indirectly through stock ownership in the same corporation or through a lease or operating agreement. This tabulation excludes theatres connected with one or more of the defendants through film-buying or management contracts or through corporations in which a defendant owns an indirect minority stock interest. It includes all theatres in which each defendant otherwise owns a direct or indirect interest of any amount. See Loew's Exhibit 2; RKO's Exhibit 11; Plaintiff's Exhibits 8, 9, 12-3, 22, 47-8, 64, 87-8, 97, 100, 118-20, 156-64, 360.

It would seem unlikely that theatre owners having aggregate interests of little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States are exercising such a monopoly of the motion picture business that they should be subjected to the drastic remedy of complete divestiture in order to effect a proper degree of free competition. It is only in certain localities and not in general, that an ownership even of first-run theatres approximating monopoly exists. Under the proposed system, the only theatres the competition of which in exhibition even Paramount—the largest owner—would in anywise control are the 7.72 per cent which it now owns. Each of the other four major defendants would control a far smaller percentage of the theatres. Even in places like Philadelphia and Cincinnati, where Warner and RKO have owned all the first-run theatres, their theatre interest cannot properly be aggregated to establish a conspiracy in restraining exhibition, for in such localities there would seem to be nothing to prevent other persons from building theatres of a similar type if the market for the distribution of films should be opened to the highest bidder and the builder of a new theatre could compete with the other theatre owners in obtaining pictures for exhibition in the theatre he had built. The only pictures that the present sole exhibitors in such localities could control would be their own, which they can always exhibit freely in their own theatres.

In about 60 per cent of the 92 cities having populations of over 100,000 on which the government mainly relies to prove its case, there are independent first-run theatres in competition with those of the major defendants except so far as it may be restricted by the trade practices we have criticized.[8] In about 91 per cent of these cities there is competition in first runs between independents and some of the major defendants or among the major defendants themselves, except so far as it may be restricted by the above trade practices.[9] If the bidding system we propose to set up, minimum admission prices in licenses eliminated, and the other restrictive agreements which we have discussed terminated, it is our opinion that adequate competition would exist. Indeed in all of the 92 cities, even where there is no present competition in first runs there is always competition in some run.

[8] According to Loew's Exhibit 13 and RKO's Exhibit 11, there are independent first-run theatres in all but the following 38 cities: Albany, Bridgeport, Charlotte, Chattanooga, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dallas, Dayton, Des Moines, Elizabeth, Erie, Flint, Fort Worth, Grand Rapids, Houston, Jersey City, Kansas City, Mo., Knoxville, Lowell, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Newark, New Haven, Norfolk, Omaha, Paterson, Peoria, Rochester, San Antonio, Scranton, South Bend, Syracuse, Toledo, Wichita, Worcester, Yonkers.

Moreover, there is no substantial proof that any of the corporate defendants was organized or has been maintained for the purpose of achieving a national monopoly, as was the case in Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1; United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, and United States v. Aluminum Co. of America, 148 F. 2d 416 (C. C. A. 2). The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition. They can only be restrained from the unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block-booking, and other things we have criticized.

If in certain localities there is ownership by a single defendant of all the first-run theatres, there is no sufficient proof that it has been for the purpose of creating a monopoly and has not rather arisen from the inertness of competitors, their lack of financial ability to build theatres comparable to those of the defendants, or from the preference of the public for the best equipped houses and not from "inherent vice" on the part of these defendants. Each defendant had a right to build and to own theatres and to exhibit pictures in them, and it takes greater proof than that each of them possessed great financial strength, many theatres, and exhibited the greater number of first-runs to deprive it of the ordinary rights of ownership. Outside the limits of the trade practices and agreements which we have found to violate the anti-trust laws and which will under the final decree be abolished, there is general competition among all the defendants as well as between them and independent distributors for the exhibition of their various pictures. Record p. 1062.

[9] Upon the termination of "pooling" agreements a major defendant may control all of the first-run theatres in only the following 8 cities: Charlotte, Chattanooga, Cincinnati, Erie, Knoxville, Peoria, South Bend, Wichita. Loew's Exhibit 13; RKO's Exhibit 11.

As was said by the expediting court in United States v. The Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112 (E. D. Pa., 1945):

> "If there is only one store in a town at which every one trades, that fact does not itself constitute a monopoly in the legal sense. It is only when the merchant maintains his position by devices which compel everyone to trade with him exclusively that the situation becomes legally objectionable."

In the case at bar, as we have reiterated, many of the objections are to the trade practices we have alluded to, and not to the ownership of theatres either by the major defendants or by their wholly-owned subsidiaries. If those theatres were all owned by entirely independent corporations the distributing-producing defendants, if not in competition in the distribution of their films, would control competition in the exhibition business by in the aggregate controlling the distribution of most of the best pictures in the United States and imposing restrictions upon their use. The root of the difficulties we have discovered lies not in the ownership of many or most of the best theatres by the producer-distributors, but in price-fixing, non-competitive granting of runs and clearances, unreasonable clearances, formula deals, master agreements, franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements and certain discriminations among licensees between defendants and independents. These practices, if employed in the future, in favor of powerful independents would effect all of the undesirable results that have existed when the five major defendants and their subsidiaries have owned or controlled numerous theatres in which the defendants' pictures have been exhibited. That such would be the case seems amply demonstrated by the decisions where powerful independent circuits were involved. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173; Interstate Circuit Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208. If the objectionable trade practices were eliminated, the only difference between such an assumed situation in which the defendants owned no theatres and the present would be the inability of the major defendants to play their own pictures in their own theatres. The percentage of pictures on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatres would be relatively small and in nowise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition.[10]

---

[10] The following table is derived from Plaintiff's Exhibit 426 and Record pp. 2400-1:

FEATURE FILMS RELEASED DURING THE 1943-44 SEASON BY ALL DISTRIBUTORS.

	No. of Films	Percentages of Total
		With "Westerns" included:	With "Westerns" excluded:
Fox	33	8.31%	9.85%
Loew's	33	8.31%	9.85%
Paramount	31	7.81%	9.25%
RKO	38	9.57%	11.34%
Warner	19	4.79%	5.67%
Columbia	41	10.32%	12.24%
United Artists	16	4.04%	4.78%

There has however been restraint of competition in exhibition by the five major defendants through ownership of theatres jointly with one another or if their interests be more than five per cent even where jointly held with independents which, in our opinion, calls for a divestiture of such interests whether such partial interest is in fee or through stock ownership or otherwise.

There is no evidence that in a city such as Cincinnati, in which a major defendant owns all of the first-run theatres, other exhibitors, affiliated or unaffiliated, have been prevented from also owning theatres for exhibition on first-run and there consequently is no monopoly in the legal sense, see United States v. Pullman Company, 64 F. Supp. 108, 112, and no reason for directing a divestiture. But when theatres are jointly owned by a major defendant and another party, it is evident that both joint owners wish to participate and indeed are directly or indirectly participating in the business of exhibiting motion pictures. In such case their joining of interests is illegal under the anti-trust laws for the reason that the major defendant thereby eliminates put-

	No. of Films	Percentages of Total
		With "Westerns" included:	With "Westerns" excluded:
Universal	49	12.34%	14.63%
Republic	(29 features (30 "Westerns"	14.86%	8.66%
Monogram	(26 features (16 "Westerns"	10.58%	7.76%
PRC	(20 features (16 "Westerns"	9.07%	5.97%
Totals	397	100%	100%
	335 without "Westerns"

ative competition between itself and the other joint owner, who otherwise would be in a position to operate theatres independently. Such an elimination of competition is unreasonable in view of the defendant's being a powerful factor in the industry capable of exerting vast influence to its ends, and of the methods it has employed to restrain and control normal competition in distributing and exhibiting motion pictures through price-fixing, system of clearances, block-booking, pooling and the other practices we have alluded to.

We find such joint interests in a great number of theatres, a summary of which is set forth below,[11] and hold that they must be terminated by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the

---

[11] In so far as information could accurately be obtained from RKO's Exhibit 11, the numbers of theatres jointly owned by the defendants are approximately as follows:

THEATRES JOINTLY OWNED WITH INDEPENDENTS:

Paramount	993
Warner	20
Fox	66
RKO	187
Loew's	21

THEATRES JOINTLY OWNED BY TWO DEFENDANTS:

Paramount-Fox	6
Paramount-Loew's	14
Paramount-Warner	25
Paramount-RKO	150
Loew's-RKO	3
Loew's-Warner	5
Fox-RKO	1
Warner-RKO	10
Total	1,501 Theatres

other defendant-exhibitors. The decree or subsequent orders to be entered in conformity with this opinion will control sales or exchanges of such fractional interests for the purpose of restoring or creating a reasonable competition in the areas in question.

General Considerations

It may be said that such restrictions in commercial dealings as we would impose will interfere with the right of a copyright owner to choose his customers or contract for the disposition of his own property. The answer is that no such absolute right exists where its exercise will involve an extension of a copyright monopoly or an unreasonable interference with competition in the distribution and exhibition of moving pictures. A system of fixed admission prices, clearances and block-booking is so restrictive of competition in its tendency that it should be modified to comply with the terms of the Sherman Act. The modifications in practices we have indicated will relieve conditions that have grown up through the years. Indeed the practices are defended on the ground that business convenience and long usage ought to sanction them. But, in spite of their long continuance,

---

Of the above theatres jointly owned with independents, the following numbers will not be affected by the decree, since the defendant or co-owning independent owns less than a 5% interest:

Paramount	177
RKO	32
Total		209 Theatres
Total affected by the decree according to RKO's Exhibit 11		1,292 Theatres

we cannot escape the conclusion that in various ways the system stifles competition and violates the law and that business convenience and loyalty to former customers afford a lame excuse for depriving others of rights to compete and for perpetuating unreasonable restrictions. The remedy we are giving against the infractions is certainly no more drastic in effect than the one the Supreme Court granted in Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, nor more severe than the one it imposed in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173. The defendants have built up great business enterprises in a very popular field. Yet they have carried on practices we have found unduly restrictive of interstate commerce and even though we do not suggest that they any more than "those eighteen upon whom the tower in Siloam fell" have been "sinners above all men", yet measures should be taken to restore the moving picture business to a condition of competition that will benefit both competitors and the general public and to abate practices that are unlawful.

It is argued that the steps we have proposed would involve an interference with commercial practices that are generally acceptable and a hazardous attempt on the part of judges—unfamiliar with the details of business—to remodel its delicate adjustments which have hitherto provided the public with what is a new and great art. But we see nothing ruinous in the remedies proposed. Disputes which may arise under the bidding system are likely to relate to questions whether the bidder has a theatre adequate for the run for which he bids, whether the clearance requested is reasonable as regards his own theatre and those of others, and similar matters generally involved in comparing bids. If the defendants will consent to an arbitration system for the determination of such disputes of the kind that has worked so well under the consent decree, they will facilitate the adjustment of most of the differences that are likely to occur, with a large saving of time and money as compared with separate court actions.

A suit in the district court for violation of the Sherman Act is doubtless an awkward way to cure such ills as have arisen, but it is perhaps the best remedy now available to the government. There surely are evils in the existing system, and the Sherman Act provides a mode of correction which is lawfully invoked. At all events, that which is written is written, and is controlling on us.

It does not follow from the foregoing that we should wholly break up the exhibition business of each of the major defendants even though a "root and branch" decree might be legally possible. Such total divestiture would be injurious to the corporations concerned, and if we are right in our analysis of the situation, we should still have to give relief against price-fixing, systems of clearance, formula deals, master agreements and franchises, block-booking, pooling agreements, and other agreements we have held invalid. The relief proposed we believe should suffice, while total divestiture would be damaging to the public as well as to the defendants and not accomplish any useful purpose at the present time.

The Decree

A decree is granted in accordance with the views expressed in the foregoing opinion to be settled on ten days' notice. It should provide for the dismissal of all claims asserted by the plaintiff against any of the defendants which act only as producers of motion pictures and for the dismissal of claims against any other defendants based on their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others.

The granting of licenses by any of the defendant-distributors which fix minimum prices for admission to theatres either of the defendants or of any other exhibitor should be enjoined in which such minimum admission prices are fixed by the parties either in writing, or through a committee, or through arbitration, or upon the happening of any event, or in any other wise.

The defendants should be enjoined from concertedly agreeing to maintain a system of clearances as among themselves or with other exhibitors, and no clearances should be granted against theatres in substantial competition with the theatre receiving a license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. Existing clearances in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensees in the runs awarded to them shall be invalid pro tanto. In determining what is a reasonable clearance the following factors should be taken into consideration:

(1) The admission prices of the theatres involved, as set by the exhibitor;

(2) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(3) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut-rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(4) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor-defendant from such theatres;

(5) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage;

(6) The fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a defendant-distributor or with an independent circuit of theatres should be disregarded; and

(7) There should be no clearance between theatres not in substantial competition.

The further performance by any of the defendants of existing formula deals, master agreements to the extent that we have previously found them invalid, or franchises should be enjoined, and the defendants should also be enjoined from entering into or carrying out any similar agreements in the future.

Defendants owning a legal or equitable interest in theatres of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries may exhibit pictures of their own or of their wholly owned subsidiaries in such theatres upon such terms as to admission prices and clearances and on such runs as they see fit.

No defendant or its subsidiaries shall exhibit its films other than on its own behalf or through wholly owned subsidiaries, or subsidiaries in which it has an interest of at least ninety-five per cent, without offering the license at a minimum price for any run desired by the operators of each theatre within the competitive area. The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered. The license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or any person whatever. Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. No contracts for exhibition shall be entered into, or if already outstanding shall be performed, in which the license to exhibit one feature is conditioned upon an agreement of the licensee to take a license of one or more other features, but licenses to exhibit more than one feature may be included in a single instrument provided the licensee shall have had the opportunity to bid for each feature separately and shall have made the best bid for each picture so included. To the extent that any of the pictures have not been trade-shown prior to the granting of a license for more than a single picture, the licensee shall be given by the licensor the right to reject a percentage of such pictures not trade-shown prior to the granting of the license to be fixed by the decree. But that right to reject any picture must be exercised within ten days after there has been an opportunity afforded to the licensee to inspect it.

The defendants shall be enjoined from entering into or continuing to perform existing pooling agreements whereby given theatres of two or more exhibitors, normally in competition, are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies of such exhibitors are collectively determined by a joint committee, or by one of the exhibitors, or whereby profits of the "pooled" theatres are divided among the owners according to pre-agreed percentages. They shall also be enjoined from making or continuing to perform agreements that the parties may not acquire other theatres in the competitive area without first offering them for inclusion in the pool. The making or continuance of leases of theatres under which defendants lease any of their theatres to another defendant or to an independent operating a theatre in the competitive area in return for a share of the profits shall be enjoined.

Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership of an interest in any theatre, whether in fee or in stock or otherwise, in conjunction with another defendant-exhibitor. Each defendant shall cease and desist from ownership, jointly with an independent, of an interest in any theatre, greater than five per cent, unless such defendant's interest is ninety-five per cent or more; and where the interest of such defendant is more than five per cent and less than ninety-five per cent, such joint interests shall be dissolved either by a sale to, or by a purchase from, such co-owner or co-owners. Rearrangements of such joint interests with an independent, if by purchase, shall, however, be subject to the direction of this court so that their effectuation may promote competition in the exhibition of motion pictures. Where a defendant owns a ninety-five or greater per cent interest in any theatre, such theatre may be considered as its own so far as this opinion and the decree to be entered hereon are concerned. Each of the defendants shall be enjoined from expanding its theatre holdings except for the purpose of acquiring a co-owner's interest in jointly owned theatres, and this only in cases where the court shall permit such acquisition, instead of requiring an outright sale of the undivided interest of the defendant in question. The foregoing provision as to divestiture of partial interests in theatres shall apply both to interests held in fee and beneficially and to those represented by shares of stock. But it shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments, or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the later case, this court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor.

Each defendant shall be enjoined from operating, booking or film-buying through any agent who is also acting in such matters for any other exhibitor, independent or affiliated.

The decree shall also provide for arbitration of disputes as to bids, clearances, runs, and any other subjects appropriate for arbitration in respect to all parties who may consent to the creation of such tribunals for adjustment of such disputes. It shall also provide for an appeal board generally similar to the one created by the consent decree as to any parties consenting thereto. It shall make such disposition of the provisions of the existing consent decree signed November 30, 1940, as may be necessary in view of the foregoing opinion.

In order to secure compliance with the decree to be entered, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall on the written request of the Attorney General or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of anti-trust matters, and on reasonable notice to the defendant or defendants affected, be permitted reasonable access to all books and papers of the defendants and reasonable opportunity to interview their officers or employees, as provided in Section XVIII of the Consent Decree.

Proceedings under the decree to be entered shall be stayed pending appeal or for the purpose of enabling the parties to adjust their business without an unfair burden or as practice may require upon such terms as the decree shall provide.

Jurisdiction of this cause shall be retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the decree to apply to the court at any time for such orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the same, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof, or for other or further relief.

Findings should be proposed by the parties for the assistance of the court, but such proposed findings will form no part of the record.

Dated June 11, 1946.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND,
U. S. Circuit Judge.

HENRY W. GODDARD,
U. S. District Judge.

JOHN BRIGHT,
U. S. District Judge.

APPENDIX "B"

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

against

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., et al.,

Defendants.

Memorandum In Re Findings and Decree

In order to meet some of the objections raised at the hearing to the system of bidding for features described in the opinion of the court, we have modified the system there proposed so that competitive bidding will only be necessary within a competitive area and in such an area where it is desired by the exhibitors. In other words, the decree provides an opportunity to bid for any exhibitor in a competitive area who may desire to do so.

The arrangement for arbitration and an appeal board has been terminated except as to unfinished litigations and other matters referred to in the decree, because of the unwillingness of some of the parties to consent to their continuance. Nevertheless, as we have indicated in the opinion, these tribunals have dealt with trade disputes, particularly those as to clearances and runs, with rare efficiency, as both government counsel and counsel for other parties have conceded.

Indeed, the arbitration system set up under the consent decree of November 20, 1940, was created pursuant to the prayer of the amended and supplemental complaint by the United States filed November 14, 1940, in which, among other things, the plaintiff prayed that "a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein."

We strongly recommend that some such system be continued in order to avoid cumbersome and dilatory court litigation and to preserve the practical advantages of the tribunals created by the consent decree.

Dated: December 31, 1946.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND,
United States Circuit Judge.

HENRY W. GODDARD,
United States District Judge.

JOHN BRIGHT,
United States District Judge.

APPENDIX "C"

MOTION OF COLUMBIA DEFENDANTS

"Motion denied.
Feb. 3, 1947.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND U. S. C. J.
HENRY W. GODDARD D. J.
JOHN BRIGHT D. J."

MOTION OF UNITED ARTISTS

"Motion denied.
Feb. 3, 1947.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND U. S. C. J.
HENRY W. GODDARD D. J.
JOHN BRIGHT D. J."

MOTION OF UNIVERSAL DEFENDANTS

"The within motion is denied.
Feb. 3, 1947.

AUGUSTUS N. HAND U. S. C. J.
HENRY W. GODDARD D. J.
JOHN BRIGHT D. J."

MOTION OF PARAMOUNT, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX, LOEW, R. K. O. AND WARNER DEFENDANTS

"Motion denied as to 1, 3 and 4; granted as to 2 (a) and (b) by extending the time of dissolution and termination to July 1, 1947. To this end, Paragraph III (2) of this decree is modified by adding at the end the following:

"The Pooling agreements by one or more defendants with others not parties to this action which violate this provision shall be dissolved prior to July 1, 1947."

Paragraph III (4) of the decree is modified by adding at the end the following:

> "The leases referred to herein between a defendant and independents which violate this provision shall be terminated prior to July 1, 1947."

Settle order on Notice.

Feb. 3, 1947

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
FEB 6 1948
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1947
No. 82

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION AND COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC., Appellants,

against

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Respondents,

and

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., KEITH-ALBEE-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO PROCTOR CORPORATION, RKO MIDWEST CORPORATION, WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., AND UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants-Appellants.

REPLY BRIEF ON BEHALF OF APPELLANTS, COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION AND COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC., REFERRED TO AS COLUMBIA

SCHWARTZ & FROHLICH,
Attorneys for Appellants Columbia.

LOUIS D. FROHLICH,
ARTHUR H. SCHWARTZ,
of Counsel.
New York City, N. Y.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1947

No. 82

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION AND COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC.,

Appellants,

against

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondents,

and

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., KEITH-ALBEE-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO PROCTOR CORPORATION, RKO MIDWEST CORPORATION, WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., AND UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants-Appellants.

REPLY BRIEF ON BEHALF OF APPELLANTS, COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION AND COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC., REFERRED TO AS COLUMBIA

The Government in its Appellees' Brief (p. 39) attempts to sustain the District Court finding on block-booking by pretending that block-booking is tied up with franchise agreements; and since franchise agreements have been held illegal, block-booking must also be illegal.

This is merely an attempt by the Government to evade the issues presented on block-booking. Unable to find any proof in this record which would stamp block-booking as an illegal practice, the Government takes refuge in attempting to classify block-booking with franchise agreements, knowing of course that appellants are not questioning the decree with respect to franchise agreements.

At the time of the trial appellants had in force four franchise agreements, and reference was made to them in four of the Government exhibits as follows:

> Gov. Ex. 265—A three year agreement between Columbia and the Fox Theatres in Spokane, Washington.
>
> Gov. Exs. 266-266a—An agreement between Columbia and Warner's in Philadelphia, Pa.; this is a one year franchise with a two year renewal.
>
> Gov. Ex. 471—A three year agreement between Columbia and Loew's for the Metropolitan area in New York City.
>
> Gov. Ex. 472—A three year agreement between Columbia and Fox Inter-Mountain for certain of the Western States.

Columbia had never entered into any long term franchise agreements. It had a small number of four year agreements, but the great majority of its franchise agreements were for two or three years.

There is in evidence (Ex. C-9a) an available list of Columbia franchises from 1937 to date. This shows that in a ten-year period Columbia gave franchises to 46 affiliates and to 468 independents.

In its Appellees' Brief (p. 44), the Government, adding up the number of theatres which had been affected by Columbia franchise agreements, comes to a total of 829. But those theatres are only affiliated theatres. From the same exhibit it is disclosed that Columbia franchise agreements in the ten-year period also affected independent theatres to the number of 1,182. Taking these two figures together it is clear from the statistics alone that Columbia gave franchises more liberally to independents than it did to affiliates.

In any event, the District Court held that franchises were illegal. From that much of the decree appellants have not appealed.

The District Court defined a franchise agreement as follows (Finding No. 1, R. 3660):

> "Franchise—A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements, entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of features released by one distributor during the entire period of the agreement."

In other words, a franchise agreement was an undertaking to give the franchise holder the distributor's pictures for more than one season.

The restraint of trade as found by the Court could only be interpreted as a holding that the distributor by means of such an agreement prevented himself from selling his product to any other distributor after the expiration of the first season.

There was no intimation either in that finding, in the decree or in the opinion of the District Court that franchise agreements were tied up with block-booking. The proof is, and the fact is, that they are not so tied up. There could be franchise agreements without block-booking. What appellants object to is a decree which enjoins them from selling their pictures in block for one season.

Franchise agreements were stricken down by the District Court primarily because they tied up a substantial number of pictures for an unreasonable length of time. Finding No. 89 (R. 3675) indicates that clearly:

> "89. Franchises have been entered into by the distributor defendants, and unreasonably restrain trade, because they cover too long a period (more than one season), and also because they embrace all the features released by a given distributor."

The opinion of the District Court even makes that clearer (R. 3541):

> "Franchises which so far as the five major defendants are concerned were forbidden by the consent decree are also objectionable because they cover too long periods (more than one season) and also because they embrace all the pictures released by a given distributor. They necessarily contravene the plan of licensing each picture theatre by theatre, to the highest bidder."

It is manifest that the District Court primarily objected to franchises because they were for too long a period—for more than one season—and that it objected to all the pictures released by a given distributor for that period because that tied up all of the distributor's pictures for a long time—practically took them off the market for three or four or five years. From the limited holding the Government seeks to make the deduction that the distributor could not sell all of its pictures for a limited period of one season. The District Court did not so find. Its reason for holding block-booking illegal was based upon the tying-in or conditioning of pictures, as set forth in Finding No. 93 (R. 3676):

> "93. Block-booking, when the license of any feature is conditioned upon taking of other features, is a system which prevents competitors from bidding for single features on their individual merits."

And of course, the District Court had previously found block-booking to be a tying-in or conditioning of pictures (Finding No. 1 R. 3659-60).

To illustrate the difference: Columbia could give an exhibitor a franchise agreement for one Rita Hayworth picture a year for five years. That would involve no block-booking, but would tie up this kind of a picture and keep it away from other exhibitors for five years. It would be a pure franchise agreement and nothing more. Indeed many of the franchise agreements which were stricken down by the decree were for considerably less than the season's product of each distributor, or they gave the exhibitor the choice or selection of a number of pictures only for each season during the franchise period.

Gov. Ex. 472 is a franchise agreement between Columbia and Fox Inter-Mountain Amusement Corporation for a three year period. That document provides (Article X, Subdivision b):

> "In all theatres where the exhibitor has agreed to exhibit part of the product only, such commitments shall be selected by the exhibitor from the total product. * * *"

Columbia's franchise contract (Gov. Ex. 265), which was made with Evergreen Theatres Corporation for a three year period, likewise contains the identical language.

Gov. Ex. 259 is a franchise agreement between Universal and Warner Bros. for a three year period. In the Appendix to the Government's brief (pp. 103-104) the commitment of the exhibitor is shown to be a selection of 30 pictures out of 43.

In the same Appendix there is digested at pages 70-1-2 the franchise agreement for Loew pictures in the Warner theatres (Gov. Ex. 181). The digest states:

> "Right of selection as indicated in deal sheets" (p. 72).

Manifestly it was not the number of pictures involved which brought about the restraint. It was the time element—the keeping of pictures, whether one or all, off the market for an unreasonable period.

Appellants contend that they have a perfect right to sell a season's product in advance without showing the pictures. The Government assumes that this is a conditioning of product as well as a serious abuse of copyright license privilege, and keeps on distorting appellants' claim. For example, in its Appellees' Brief (p. 45), it says:

> "Columbia apparently insists that franchises are not agreements which are intended to tie a group of copyrights together for a trade restraining purpose. * * *"

That is not appellants' claim.

Let us make it as plain as we know how. Appellants insist that the injunction against franchises was granted to prevent any distributor's product, block-booking or no block-booking, from being tied up for more than one season. And that this has nothing to do with block-booking.

The Government has not pointed out any proof in this record which would justify the District Court in holding block-booking illegal. It hints (Appellees' Br., p. 46) that exhibitors were actually induced by this practice of block-booking to make licenses for films which they did not particularly desire as a means of securing more valuable films that they had to have for profitable operation. That is purely a figment of the Government's imagination. Where in this record is there the slightest proof of such a claim by exhibitors?

Respectfully submitted,

SCHWARTZ & FROHLICH,
Attorneys for Appellants Columbia.

LOUIS D. FROHLICH,
ARTHUR H. SCHWARTZ,
of Counsel.

FILE COPY

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
DEC 22 1947
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947

No. 82

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION and COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC.,

Appellants,

against

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondents,

and

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., KEITH-ALBEE-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO PROCTOR CORPORATION, RKO MIDWEST CORPORATION, WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., and UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants-Appellants.

BRIEF ON BEHALF OF APPELLANTS COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION AND COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC. (REFERRED TO AS "COLUMBIA")

SCHWARTZ & FROHLICH,
Attorneys for Appellants Columbia.

LOUIS D. FROHLICH,
ARTHUR H. SCHWARTZ,
of Counsel.
New York City, N. Y.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PAGE

REFERENCE TO OPINIONS BELOW 1

GROUNDS OF JURISDICTION 2

STATEMENT OF THE CASE:

1. Proceedings Below 3

2. Specification of Errors 11

ARGUMENT:

POINT I—Block-booking is a lawful practice, and does not violate the Sherman Act.

Findings Nos. 1, 93, 94, 97, 154 and 156, and Conclusions Nos. 8(g) and 11 are unsupported by proof 12

Block-Booking Has Had the Legal Sanction of the Courts 15

The Government's Failure to Make Proof on Block-Booking 16

There is Nothing Illegal per se About "Tying-in" or Conditioning the License of a Number of Copyrighted Works Upon the Taking of a License for Other Copyrighted Works 33

POINT II—The Court below was without jurisdiction to regulate or restrict the manner in which appellants may license their pictures for exhibition. For all practical purposes appellants are required to put their pictures upon the auction block. That is not the function, nor is it within the power, of an equity court sitting in a Sherman anti-trust suit 42

The Decree Here Involved Strikingly Resembles a Code for the Regulation of the Motion-Picture Industry 52

PAGE

Appellants Are Placed at a Competitive Disadvantage by this System 53

Appellants Have Built Up a Substantial Good Will Among Independent Exhibitors. This is Destroyed at One Blow ... 54

The Good Will of Appellants' Business is a Valuable Property Right 65

The exemptions granted to appellants' competitors 66

POINT III—The injunction against block-booking and the provisions for placing appellants' pictures upon the auction block destroy appellants' exclusive rights in their copyrights and violate a basic public policy 68

The Provisions of Paragraphs 8 and 9 of Section II of the Decree Amount to a Species of Compulsory License 77

The Decree Violates the Fifth Amendment of the Federal Constitution in That it Deprives Appellants of Their Property Without Due Process of Law. This property consists of copyrights and Good-will 81

CONCLUSION—The injunctive provisions against block-booking and the requirement for auction selling contained respectively in Paragraph 7 and Paragraphs 8 and 9 of Section II of the decree should be reversed and stricken from the decree.

Findings Nos. 1, 93, 94, 97, 154 and 156 and conclusions Nos. 8 and 11 should likewise be reversed and stricken for failure of proof and want of jurisdiction 86

Table of Cases

	PAGE
Albro J. Newton v. Erickson, 126 N. Y. Supp. 950	65
Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. U. S., 288 U. S. 344	34
A. T. & S. Railroad v. D. & N. O. R. R., 110 U. S. 667	46
Bauer v. O'Donnell, 229 U. S. 1	73
Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 618	70
Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291, 312	85
Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Strauss, 210 U. S. 339	74
Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 139 Fed. 155, 191	85
Buck v. Gibbs, 34 Fed. Supp. 510	72, 84
Buck v. Hillsgrove Country Club, Inc., 17 Fed. Supp. 643	71
Buck v. Swanson, 33 Fed. Supp. 377	72
Camfield Mfg. Co. v. McGraw Elec. Co., 70 Fed. Supp. 477	49
Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Corp., 283 U. S. 27	33
Daniels et al. v. Portland Gold Mining Co., et al., 202 Fed. 637	43
Danks v. Gordon, 272 Fed. 821	43
Davis v. Vories, 141 Missouri 234	70
Eastern States Lumber Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 614	50, 51
Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Shakespeare Co., 141 F. (2d) 916, 919	78
Ethyl Gas Corp. v. U. S., 309 U. S. 436, 459	34
Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 Fed. (2d) 152	15
Federal Trade Comm. v. Raymond, 263 U. S. 565, 573	50, 51
Florida East Coast Line v. U. S., 234 U. S. 167	26
Grant v. Raymond, 6 Peters 218	75
Grenada Lumber Co. v. Mississippi, 217 U. S. 433, 440	51

PAGE

Hartford-Empire Company v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386 . . 47, 78, 80
Heap v. Hartley (1889), 42 Ch. Div. 461, 470 73

Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208 . . . . . 2, 83, 84

Johnson v. J. H. Yost Lumber Co., 117 Fed. (2) 53, 61 32

Leitch v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458 33
Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. v. Sylvania, 64 Fed. Supp. 516, affd. 154 Fed. (2) 814 38

Matter of Brown, 242 N. Y. 1, 6 65
Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661 . . 33
Metropolitan Bank v. St. Louis Dispatch, 149 U. S. 436 66
Mid-Continent Investment Co. v. Mercoid Corp., 133 Fed. (2) 803, 810 76
Morton Salt Co. v. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488 . . . . . 33, 37
Motion Picture Patent Co. v. Universal, 243 U. S. 502 33
Moto Meter Co. Inc. v. National Gauge & Equipment Co., 31 Fed. (2), 994 73

Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation v. U. S., 282 U. S. 30 2
Parton v. Prang, 3 Cliff. 537 70
Parton v. Prang, 18 Fed. Cas. #1873 81

RCA Mfg. Co. Inc. v. Whiteman, 114 Fed. (2) 86, 88 68
Red Wing Malting Co. v. Willcuts, 15 Fed. (2) 626 66
Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., 154 Fed. 358 (C. C. A. 7) 75

Schechter Corp. v. U. S., 295 U. S. 495 52
Scott Paper Co. v. Mercalus Mfg. Co., 326 U. S. 249 75
Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1 34

PAGE

Societe Vinicole De Champagne v. Mumm, 10 Fed. Supp. 289 66
Standard Music Roll Company v. F. A. Mills, Inc., 241 Fed. 360, 363 78
Standard Oil v. United States, 221 U. S. 1 48
Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company v. U. S., 226 U. S. 20 34
Strauss v. American Pub. Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222 74
Swift v. United States, 196 U. S. 375 48
Swift & Co. v. U. S., 276 U. S. 311 2

Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp. v. Stokes & Smith, 91 Law Ed. 451 37
Transportation Co. v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691 .. 52

U. S. v. American Tobacco Company, 221 U. S. 106 2
U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707 .. 2, 51
U. S. v. California Co-operative Canneries, 279 U. S. 553 2
U. S. v. Colgate, 250 U. S. 300, 307 ..... 50, 51
U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173 .... 2, 16
U. S. v. Eastman Kodak, 255 U. S. 578 ..... 35fn.
U. S. v. General Elec. Co., 272 U. S. 476 77
U. S. v. Motion Picture Patents Co., 225 Fed. 800 .. 69
U. S. v. National Lead Company, 332 U. S. 319 ...2, 79, 80
U. S. v. N. Y. Coffee & Sugar Exchange, Inc., 263 U. S. 611 (1924) 45
U. S. v. Paramount, 66 Fed. Supp. 323 1
U. S. v. Parker Rustproof Co., 61 F. Supp. 805, 812 56
U. S. v. Pullman Company, 64 Fed. Supp. 108 49
U. S. v. Reading Company, 226 U. S. 324 ..... 2, 49
U. S. v. Schine, 31 Fed. Supp. 270, 274 51
U. S. v. Schrader's Son, Inc., 252 U. S. 85 85
U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Company, 67 Fed. Supp. 397 ..... 31, 68, 69

	PAGE
U. S. v. Vehicular Parking, 54 Fed. Supp. 828	57
U. S. v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218	2
Vitagraph, Inc. v. Perelman, 95 Fed. (2) 142	40
Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U. S. 252, 255	73
Western Elec. Co. v. Pacent Reproducer Corp., 42 Fed. (2) 116, 118	73
White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Appollo Company, 209 U. S. 1	77
Widenski v. Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., Inc., 147 Fed. (2) 909	73, 79

Statutes

Constitution of the United States, Art. 1, Sec. 8	68
Copyright Act of 1909 (U. S. C. A., Title 17):
Section 1	68, 73
Section 1(d)	73
Section 1-e	78
Section 41	74
Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 15 U. S. C. 29) Section 2	2
Judicial Code as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. 345) Section 238	2
Sherman Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended (15 U. S. C. A.):
Sections 1 & 2	2, 3
Section 4	42

Textbooks

	PAGE
Ball, Law of Copyright and Literary Property (1944), 530	73
Copinger, The Law of Copyright (7th Ed.)	73
38 C. J. S. 950	65
Curtis on Copyright	81
Drone on Copyright	82
MacGillivray, The Law of Copyright	73
Morgan on Literature (1875)	69
Nims on Unfair Competition (4th Edition)	65

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947

No. 82

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION and COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC.,

Appellants,

against

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondents,

and

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., PARAMOUNT FILM DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, LOEW'S INCORPORATED, RADIO-KEITH-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO RADIO PICTURES, INC., KEITH-ALBEE-ORPHEUM CORPORATION, RKO PROCTOR CORPORATION, RKO MIDWEST CORPORATION, WARNER BROS. PICTURES, INC., VITAGRAPH, INC., WARNER BROS. CIRCUIT MANAGEMENT CORPORATION, TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION, NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION, SCREEN GEMS, INC., UNIVERSAL CORPORATION, UNIVERSAL PICTURES COMPANY, INC., UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., BIG U FILM EXCHANGE, INC., and UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION, Defendants-Appellants.

BRIEF ON BEHALF OF APPELLANTS COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION AND COLUMBIA PICTURES OF LOUISIANA, INC. (Referred to as "COLUMBIA")

Reference to Opinions Below

The opinion of the District Court was handed down June 11, 1946. That opinion appears at pages 3504, et seq. of the Record, and is reported officially (U. S. v. Paramount, 66 Fed. Supp. 323). A supplementary opinion (unreported) was filed on December 31, 1946, and appears at page 3702 of the Record.

Grounds of Jurisdiction

This is an action in equity brought by the United States of America involving the Sherman Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, as amended (15 U. S. C., Sections 1 & 2). The jurisdiction of this Court to review by direct appeal the judgment entered below is conferred by Section 2 of the Expediting Act of February 11, 1903, as amended (32 Stat. 823; 36 Stat. 1167; 15 U. S. C. 29), and Section 238 of the Judicial Code, as amended (36 Stat. 1157; 38 Stat. 804; 43 Stat. 938; 28 U. S. C. 345).

The decree was entered on December 31, 1946 (R. p. 3694).

The following decisions sustain the jurisdiction of this Court to review the judgment below on direct appeal.

U. S. v. California Co-operative Canneries, 279 U. S. 553;
Swift & Co. v. U. S., 276 U. S. 311;
U. S. v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173;
U. S. v. Bousch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707;
Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208;
Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation v. U. S., 282 U. S. 30;
U. S. v. American Tobacco Company, 221 U. S. 106;
U. S. v. Reading Company, 226 U. S. 324;
U. S. v. National Lead Co., 332 U. S. 319;
U. S. v. Yellow Cab Co., 332 U. S. 218.

On February 6, 1947, appellants filed a petition for appeal, assignment of errors and prayer for reversal and citation, and the District Court made an order allowing the appeal upon filing of a bond for $2,000 for costs, which bond was filed.

On April 7, 1947, this Court made an order staying certain sections of the decree pending the determination of the appeal. On May 8th, 1947, the record was filed with the Clerk of this Court, and on May 13, 1947 appellants filed their statement of points relied on and designation of parts of the record necessary for the consideration thereof (R. p. 3830).

On June 23rd, 1947, this Court noted probable jurisdiction (R. p. 3840).

Statement of the Case

1.

Proceedings Below

This suit was commenced by the filing of a summons and complaint on July 30, 1938 against appellants and the remaining defendants, all of whom may be divided into eight groups, five of them being known as the Major defendants and their subsidiaries, which produce, distribute and exhibit pictures (i.e. Paramount, Loew, RKO, Warner, and Twentieth Century-Fox), and the remaining three being known as the Minor defendants and their subsidiaries, which either produce and distribute or merely distribute pictures but do not exhibit them or own any theatres (i.e. Columbia, United Artists, and Universal). These eight groups are the principal producers and distributors of motion pictures in the United States.

The Government claimed a violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, charging appellants and the other defendants with having combined and conspired with each other in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States. Upon the trial the charge of conspiracy with respect to production of pictures was withdrawn by the Government, leaving allegations of restraint only with respect to distribution and exhibition.

The Government alleged that the illegal restraint was brought about by means of:

(1) Franchise agreements, under which by a single contract the defendants granted exhibitors the right to exhibit more than one season's product of pictures;

(2) Pooling arrangements, under which the major defendants pooled their theatres with each other or with third parties;

(3) Block-booking, under which defendants sold all or a portion of a season's product in advance of production;

(4) Preferential run, under which major defendants' theatres were favored with first run exhibitions and obtained a monopoly of the better playing time in their own theatres;

(5) Unreasonable clearance under which the major defendants' theatres obtained more protection over subsequent run theatres than was necessary, as a consequence of which independent theatres were relegated to an inferior and unprofitable position; and

(6) Minimum admission prices under which the defendants compelled independent exhibitors to maintain admission prices, thereby resulting in a favored position to the affiliated theatres.

While complaining of all these practices in the industry and seeking injunctive relief, the plaintiff also demanded that the five major defendants be divested of their theatre holdings and that they be compelled to confine themselves in the future only to the production and distribution of motion pictures, or only to exhibition.

There were two trials of this case. The first trial was commenced on June 3, 1940, and lasted a week. Before any testimony was taken, however, the parties conferred at the suggestion of District Judge Henry W. Goddard, who presided, and a consent decree was agreed upon between the five Major defendants and the Government, which was filed on November 20, 1940. The three Minor defendants (Columbia, United Artists and Universal) refused to be a party to such consent decree.

Under that decree the consenting defendants agreed to trade-show their pictures and to license them in blocks of no more than five. A system of arbitration was instituted under which exhibitors, complaining of unreasonable clearance, and under certain circumstances, of run, were given an opportunity to arbitrate that question. The decree provided that after three years the Government could, if it so desired, be at liberty to proceed with the trial. Columbia and Universal continued to license their season's product in advance as heretofore. (United Artists, merely acting as an agency for independent producers, has never block-booked).

At the expiration of the three year period the Government decided to continue with the trial. It asked for and obtained an order for an Expediting Court, and Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand together with District Judges Henry W. Goddard and John Bright, were appointed as such Court and have acted as such ever since.

On October 8th, 1945, the trial of the case was resumed before the Expediting Court. It lasted until November 20, 1945. The Government abandoned any attempt to prove a monopoly in production of motion pictures. In attempting to prove the other allegations of its amended complaint the Government confined itself to the production of statistics, data, and contracts theretofore furnished to it for the most part by the defendants themselves pursuant to interrogatories. It called no witnesses whatever except two Government employes who compiled tabulations. There are approximately 400 exhibits in the case.

Appellants were not involved in the issue of divestiture. They were and are primarily concerned with block-booking and with the freedom to license their pictures without restriction.

On those two issues appellants produced their General Sales Manager, Abraham Montague, who testified at great length as to the propriety of block booking and the manner in which it had originated; that it was an economic necessity for appellants to sell their pictures at the commencement of the season to each exhibitor in block, and, of course, long before they had been produced; that the independent exhibitors throughout the country required and demanded block booking as an economic necessity for maintaining an adequate supply of motion pictures for their theatres; that appellants in dealing with over 10,000 of the 18,000 theatres in the country for over twenty years had acquired a good will and many old and satisfied customers, and that appellants indeed favored their independent customers even as against the theatres affiliated with the five major defendants. Appellants amply proved a long history of fair dealing and good business relations with their customers among both affiliated and independent exhibitors.

The trial having been concluded on November 20, 1945, briefs were thereafter submitted by the parties in January, 1946.

On June 11, 1946, the District Court handed down its opinion, in which it found each and all of the defendants to have violated the Sherman Act. In effect it held that all of the usages and customs heretofore enumerated and of which the Government complained (including block-booking), were illegal and should be restrained. The Court, however, stated that it felt that divestiture was too drastic a remedy, and refused the Government's plea in that respect. Its opinion is reported in 66 Fed. Supp. 323.

Thereafter appellants, the Government and the other defendants submitted proposed findings and decrees. Appellants submitted thirty-four findings and two conclusions of law (R. pp. 3641-8). Hearings were held by the Court on the proposed findings and decrees and on December 31, 1946, the Court made and filed its Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and its Decree. Concurrently with the filing of the Findings and Decree on December 31, 1946, the Court filed a supplementary opinion, a copy of which (unreported) appears at page 3702 of the Record.

The Decree substantially follows the Court's June 1946 opinion. Among other acts, it prohibits the appellants and the other defendants from licensing their pictures in block at the commencement of the season by imposing such restrictions thereon that, as a practical matter, each of appellants' pictures must be licensed one by one as and when it is produced. It compels appellants to disregard old customers. It sets up a method of regulation under which exhibitors in competitive areas have the right to bid against each other for each of appellants' pictures. Appellants are compelled to accept the highest bidder. These provisions are contained in Paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of Section II of the decree, and are the provisions which these appellants complain of on appeal and have assigned as error.

Both in its pleading and upon the trial the Government referred to the licensing of pictures in groups or wholesale as a pernicious form of activity. It sought to create an evil by definition alone—a new technique in the trial of cases. After weeks of this atmosphere the District Court fell into the trap, and it also began to speak of this method of selling with bated breath. But nobody thought it necessary to prove illegality, and that formality was entirely dispensed with. And so "block-booking" became another violation of the Sherman Act by the Government's ipse dixit.

The appellants claimed below that "block booking", as the term is known in the motion picture industry, is nothing more nor less than licensing all or part of a season's product of motion pictures in advance; and that the testimony on the trial showed clearly that there was no "tying-in" of pictures or conditioning the licensing of one picture or one group of pictures upon the licensing of another picture or another group of pictures; that the Government had signally failed to prove any such "tying-in" or conditioning, although a producer and distributor of motion pictures had as much right to sell all or part of his season's product in advance as a manufacturer of shoes or soap; that economically it was necessary to appellants' existence to operate in that manner, because only by the sale of its product in advance could it be determined how many contracts there would be for each picture to be made and the potential license fees; that such a determination was necessary in order to obtain finances, particularly from banks, for production for the ensuing season; that this practice was similar to the normal practice of wholesalers and manufacturers generally, and that a prohibition against block booking would interfere with appellants' ability to make financial arrangements and might cripple their business.

It was pointed out that in addition to the three minor defendants in this case there were three other distributors of motion pictures of substantial size, to wit: Monogram Pictures Corporation, Republic Pictures Corporation and Producers Releasing Corporation, each of which has been engaged in block-booking. These companies were not parties to this suit nor are they subject to this decree, and therefore they are free of the regulation of block-booking imposed by this decree. Each of these companies is a substantial competitor of appellants and would thereby obtain an economic advantage over appellants, because they would be free to license a season's product at one time, instead of offering pictures one at a time.

Appellants also contended that in addition to this general interference with ordinary business procedure, the attempted regulation of the industry by means of a prohibition against block-booking and the provisions for competitive buying and selling would constitute an illegal interference with plaintiff's copyrights both past and prospective and a taking of its property without due process.

Under the Decree and Findings, appellants' pictures must be put upon the auction block, singly and after production. Appellants are required to sell them to the highest bidder, disregarding their old customers and the good will built up for over twenty-seven years. It was pointed out particularly that this kind of auction selling was a hardship upon the three Minor defendants, who own no theatres, because the five Major defendants owning their own theatres were permitted by the Findings and Decree to license the pictures produced by them to their own theatres without any restriction whatsoever. This places the three Minor defendants, including appellants, at a terrific economic disadvantage. It furthermore destroys the rights given to them by their copyrights.

Appellants strongly emphasized that the Decree was a destruction of copyrights under the guise of an enforcement of the Sherman Act, and that nothing in the Sherman Act warranted the District Court in exercising its jurisdiction in that manner; and appellants directly questioned the jurisdiction of the District Court to make such Decree. (See Appellants' Memoranda at pages 3636 and 3650 of the Record.)

Appellants' arguments were disregarded by the District Court, and the Findings and Decree as filed on December 31, 1946 have embodied those provisions which appellants have assigned as error and to which they object and which they ask this Court to reverse.

2.

Specification of Errors

Specifically appellants assign error to Findings numbered 1, 93, 94, 97, 154, 156, and Conclusions numbered 8(g) and 11 (R. pp. 3659-3694). (Assignment of Errors 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9, at pp. 3752-3762 of the Record.)

The Decree in effect tears this industry apart, and holds illegal practically every custom and usage and every type of contract which has crystallized over a period of thirty years. Appellants have not appealed from the restraints upon pooling agreements, franchise agreements, minimum admission prices, etc., because they feel that they can successfully operate their business in spite of those injunctive provisions. They have appealed, however, from two things: (1) the injunction against block booking, and (2) the imposition of so-called competitive bidding, or as we prefer to call it, the provisions for auction selling. Those two provisions of the Decree, if sustained by this Court, would work incalculable injury upon appellants.

With respect to block booking, we contend that the evidence does not warrant any finding condemning this as an illegal practice. With respect to auction selling, we contend that the District Court has no jurisdiction to include such a provision in its Decree.

We confine ourselves solely to those provisions which are contained in Paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of Section II of the Decree, and we ask this Court to reverse the decree in that respect, and to strike such provisions from the Decree.

ARGUMENT

POINT I

Block-booking is a lawful practice, and does not violate the Sherman Act.

Findings Nos. 1, 93, 94, 97, 154 and 156, and Conclusions Nos. 8(g) and 11 are unsupported by proof.

[Assignment of Errors 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.]

The Government had imputed some sinister and conspiratorial motive to licensing motion pictures in a group or a season's output, and in its amended and supplemental complaint it alleged this to be a wholly illegal practice. (Amended Supplemental Complaint, pars. 145, 181, R. pp. 3185, 3198.)

When this action was brought all eight defendants as well as other distributors in the trade made it a practice to license their full season's product of pictures or a substantial part of it to exhibitors at the commencement of each licensing year (from June to September). This was usually done by each company by means of a single contract; the pictures were described by title or story or star or director (or all four items), and as and when the pictures were produced and made available for exhibition during the ensuing season they were furnished to the exhibitor. That practice prevailed in the industry for over twenty years and was an economical method of licensing pictures, not only giving an advantage to the distributor, in that he knew at the commencement of the season how many customers he could rely upon, how much he could budget his pictures for, how much capital he would require, or how much he would have to borrow from the banks, but also giving the exhibitor an assurance of product for the season and relieving him of the worry and labor of constantly seeking product and negotiating therefor. The simplicity of the method is of course obvious.

However, when the consent decree was negotiated between the Government and the five Major defendants in June, 1940, the Government exacted as one condition a provision that henceforth those five Major defendants would license their pictures only in blocks of five as and when they became available (R. p. 3375). This was of course a modified form of block booking. Instead of licensing pictures in a block of say forty pictures, at the commencement of the season, each Major defendant could license no more than five pictures at various times during the season. The Government by entering into the consent decree in November, 1940 obviously placed its stamp of approval upon this modified system of block booking. The difference was merely one of degree.

The appellants and Universal, as well as all other distributors who are not parties to this suit, continued to license their pictures at the beginning of each season in groups or a season's output. From 1940 on the five Major defendants have been licensing their pictures in blocks of five and the Minor defendants and other distributors have been licensing their pictures as theretofore. Upon this trial, however, the Government claimed that all methods of block booking were illegal. In view of this change of position it might have been expected that the Government would offer some proof of the alleged illegality of that practice.

But this the Government failed to do. It did not call a single exhibitor or any other witness, nor did it offer in evidence a single document among all of the hundreds of exhibits in this case, which would justify the District Court in making a Finding that block booking as practiced by these appellants and others violated the Sherman Act. There was no proof that any exhibitors had suffered any injury by this practice or that exhibitors were forced to deal in this manner against their will.

Indeed, the exhibitors generally seem to have operated their business with a large measure of success (R. pp. 1305, 1270-1).

To the Major distributors it is perhaps no hardship to market their pictures either singly or five at a time. It is different however with appellants. Economic necessity for licensing a season's product at one time finds its roots in the limited capital of the smaller companies like appellants. In its eagerness to secure a sweeping decree and to revolutionize the industry, the Government brushed aside this important economic consideration, and deliberately turned a deaf ear to the plea of the little fellow.

When we come to a consideration of the evidence on block booking which was offered by appellants and by Universal, we believe that the Court will be convinced that not only was the Government wrong in insisting upon the abolition of that practice, but that block booking was something which the exhibitors themselves wanted. At least "block-booking" has been a protection to them, because they receive an assurance of product and as a result of it know in advance of each season how much they will have to pay for their pictures. That consideration was likewise ignored by the Government.

Block-Booking Has Had the Legal Sanction of the Courts

Federal Trade Commission v. Paramount Famous-Lasky Corp., 57 Fed. (2d) 152.

The Federal Trade Commission at one time had found block booking to be an unfair method of competition, and had issued an order against defendant Paramount's predecessor to cease and desist from engaging in that practice. The Commission made an application by petition to enforce the order, and the respondent raised the point that it had not been guilty of any violation of law. The Circuit Court of Appeals (2nd Circuit) upheld the respondent and dismissed the petition. (Circuit Judge Augustus N. Hand who was a member of the Expediting District Court, sat on that case.) The court based its decision in part upon a finding that the exhibitor's freedom of choice had not been impaired. The Court found that selling in block did not constitute "tying in" one picture with another and it concluded its opinion with the following statement (p. 159):

> "* * * The means and methods employed in marketing its leases of films to prospective customers are matters within the business judgment of a private producer of films and carries with it the legal right to bargain and negotiate as the respondent did. The method of negotiation which has been condemned by the Commission does not disclose a dangerous tendency unlawfully to hinder competition, nor does it create a monopoly. * * *"

The block-booking contracts of Columbia and Universal were received in evidence in U. S. v. Crescent, 323 U. S. 173 (to which appellants were a party and dismissed out of the case), so that it was apparent in that case that Columbia's practice as well as the practice of Universal was to sell by block-booking. That practice was not condemned by the District Court or by this Court.

If block-booking was held legal all through these years, what suddenly made it illegal in this case? The record fails to show.

The Government's Failure to Make Proof on Block-Booking

In the early days of the industry the system of selling pictures had been by "state-righters" who were located in key cities in various territories throughout the country. Some had the distribution rights to one state, some to a number of adjacent states. The producer would sell his product to the "state-righter" for the particular territory in which the latter operated (R. pp. 1255-6), and he in turn would license the exhibitor for his own account.

That system proved unprofitable, and failed to give satisfactory revenue to the producer. Abraham Montague, General Sales Manager of Columbia, was himself an exhibitor and later a "state-righter" (R. pp. 1254-5). Speaking from his long experience he testified that Columbia could not operate under that system, and was compelled to open its own distribution exchanges just as the other defendants had been compelled to open their exchanges and distribute by direct contact with the exhibitor (R. pp. 1255-6).

The Government charged that block-booking was combined by Columbia with "blind selling", that invidious expression being intended to hold block-booking up as an evil practice. It sought to connote that the method fails to give the exhibitor a fair opportunity to ascertain what he is buying, and puts him at a disadvantage.

Nothing could be further from the truth. There is no such thing as "blind selling." That is another one of the Government's definitions which failed to stand up. Montague testified that before his campaign each season he contacted the exhibitors and described as accurately as he could the pictures that Columbia proposed to produce and distribute for the following season. He said that the exhibitors were familiar with his product (as they are no doubt with the product of other companies), and that on their past experience with Columbia they had no hesitation in entering into contracts for the season's product in advance. They were told what stars would appear in a picture, they knew the box office drawing power of the stars, and they were not misled nor kept in the dark as to the quality of the product which they were about to purchase (R. pp. 1257-8, 1274, 1314-6).

Other witnesses testified that pictures are still sold today as they have been for years—on the star, the story, the director and similar elements (R. pp. 1177-9).

Trade showing, which was incorporated into the consent decree, proved to be more or less of a farce. The exhibitors did not require it. The best proof of that is that they did not attend these trade showings; the witness Kupper, General Sales Manager for 20th Century-Fox, so testified. He said that he was greatly disappointed in the failure of exhibitors to attend these trade showings (R. pp. 1178-9).

Montague testified that his company needs block-booking because it has to have some assurance of a market in order to hazard its capital in producing many pictures at a substantial cost. Appellants own no theatres, and may not look to such source for their market (R. pp. 1258-9). At least, with these exhibition contracts in their possession they may venture spending substantial figures in production (in 1928-1929 they spent $1,632,300, which has been gradually increased, so that in 1944-1945 they were spending an estimated $16,689,700) (C-2).

If Columbia were not able to sell its season's product at one time it could not operate profitably.

Montague stated that block-booking was absolutely vital and necessary to Columbia for its very existence (R. pp. 1258-9):

> "Q. Please state why. A. If we were to change our method of distribution to the so-called small group selling, which is used under the consent decree, we would find it absolutely necessary to change the whole financial base of our company. We wouldn't have—we do not have enough money to keep pictures in inventory, such as we would have to do, for any period of time. We find it absolutely necessary to turn our pictures over as rapidly as possible, to send that money back to California so California can again invest it in pictures.
>
> "Q. Does the making of block contracts or bulk contracts insure a market for your product? A. We feel it does, sir.
>
> "Q. Does it give you something on which you can base the gamble that you take in making pictures? A. It makes more certain the gamble, sir."

Later Montague pointed out that to sell pictures in small groups or blocks would mean keeping pictures on the shelf, delaying their release, and freezing Columbia's capital; so that it would require more capital to operate, which Columbia could not readily obtain. He made that very clear (R. p. 1271):

> "Judge Hand: Why do you say block booking is so necessary for you? Is it because you do not own any theatres?
>
> The Witness: Well, it could be one of the reasons, sir, and it is necessary because our type of program is the type of program that runs from the most expensive pictures down to what we call the B grades, the commercial grades of film. We would find it most difficult because of the numbers and the type of quality, and so forth, to continuously go back. We sell so many of these pictures to the small villages and hamlets all throughout the United States who cannot come to the market as often as they would like to. Now, we could not get there fast enough unless we augmented our sales force considerably; we would not have the money to wait, to hold this inventory on the shelves, so-called inventory, meaning these pictures, on the shelves, while we are waiting to get in there. Our particular company's success has been on the rapid turnover of its pictures."

The effect of block-booking from the producer's standpoint is that it takes away some of the risk and hazard of production, and enables appellants to venture substantial capital on which at least some return is assured in advance (R. pp. 1258-9).

Appellants sell about 11,000 accounts domestically each year (R. pp. 1266-7). They have their annual sales convention in March or April (R. p. 1267). Montague testified that if appellants had to sell in small blocks he would have to go through with eight or nine campaigns a year at a tremendous increase in expense (R. pp. 1267-8). If compelled to sell picture by picture, there would practically be as many campaigns as pictures.

Manifestly, block-booking is both advantageous and necessary for appellants. However, it is also necessary from the viewpoint of the exhibitors. They want it. It gives them an assurance of product (R. pp. 1258, 1275, 1470). Montague testified that since the consent decree, exhibitors, both affiliated and independent, at conventions at which, he, Montague, was present, demanded the restoration of block-booking, and voiced great dissatisfaction with the sale of pictures in blocks of five or less (R. pp. 1275-7, 1297-9).

The witness Rodgers, General Sales Manager of Loew's Inc., testified that since 1940 he had had many bitter complaints from exhibitors because of the sale of pictures in blocks of five or less (R. p. 549).

Appellants' product is used as part of double feature programs, particularly in the larger cities (R. p. 1293). It is obvious that operating on a double feature policy as the great bulk of the exhibitors presently do in the United States, and having need for a large number of pictures, exhibitors are exceedingly anxious to provide themselves with an assured supply; that is one explanation of why the exhibitor desires to buy in large blocks rather than in groups of one, two or three pictures at a time.

The evidence fails to support the Government's allegation that the sale of pictures by so-called block-booking was a violation of the Sherman Act. It does not restrain trade or commerce. It is at least one practicable way in which pictures may be marketed to the mutual satisfaction of both producer and exhibitor. It is the outcome of many years of experiment, of trial and error, and had been working very satisfactorily even after the Government in its consent decree in 1940 insisted on its restriction to five pictures with respect to the Major defendants. The record clearly shows that the new method of selling under the consent decree did not work out to the exhibitors' advantage. The witness, Kupper, testified that he could go back to block-booking (R. p. 1178). The exhibitors seem to be in favor of it (R. pp. 1275-6).

With this proof in the record it can hardly be claimed that the Government proved that block-booking is a pernicious or illegal method of selling pictures, and should be abolished and enjoined. As a matter of fact, selling in blocks of five or selling in blocks of forty is still block-booking. Mere numbers do not change the system. If one is illegal, so is the other. Apparently the Government saw no illegality in block-booking when it signed the Consent Decree.

The instant Decree is tantamount to telling a manufacturer or producer that he may not sell his product wholesale or in quantities. It is an indirect method of regulating an industry, which is not the function of a Court sitting in a Sherman Anti-trust suit. From the viewpoint of the exhibitors, some of whom exhibit as many as 400 and 600 pictures a year (R. p. 1275) (and most exhibit at least 200 pictures a year), it means that each exhibitor is compelled to negotiate a new deal for every picture in his theatre. That would hardly seem to be to his advantage; and insofar as appellants are concerned it imposes a tremendously increased selling cost in sales organization without any corresponding benefit (R. pp. 1267-8, 1271).

A glance at the Government's Exhibit 409, which gives Columbia's net profits for the period from 1934 to 1944, shows how harmful the abolition of block-booking would be to Columbia. Any substantial increase in its selling cost must affect its profits. In 1938 the profits were $183,000; in 1939 the company just about broke even; in 1940 and 1941 the profits were approximately half a million each year. They went up in the three succeeding years because of the unusual war conditions. There is no assurance that they will remain anywhere near that high in the years to come. It is manifest that this company is operating on a modest scale, and cannot afford to be saddled with any extraordinary additional expenses. The abolition of block-booking and the compulsion to sell each picture separately would undoubtedly be a great financial hardship to this company.

As Montague testified, block-booking is still in use by the following companies (R. p. 1258):

Columbia
Universal
Monogram
Republic
Producers Releasing Corporation

Here are five producers with their own national distribution agencies, who sell their pictures in block. All undoubtedly have the same problems in this connection. To take away from these smaller non-theatre-owning companies the right to sell pictures in block places them at a competitive disadvantage with respect to the larger theatre-owning Majors, and might conceivably result in putting out of business an important portion of the moving picture producing industry, which the Government professes to protect and encourage.

As Montague testified, block-booking is not only a convenient method of selling the product, but at the same time the exhibitor's rights are protected. He is given a liberal right of selection—the right to reject a certain number of pictures (R. p. 1268).

The Government's charge in this respect was most sweeping. Paragraph 149 of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint (R. p. 3187) alleges, in part:

> "(f) SELECTIVITY OF DEALS
>
> "In contracting with such a circuit of theatres, each defendant distributor ordinarily gives it the right to select a certain number of the feature pictures released by it each season for exhibition at the circuit's theatres. In contracting with independent theatres, however, each such defendant has ordinarily refused to license any of its product unless the independent exhibitor contracts for all of the features pictures released by it. Or, in the event that independent exhibitors are granted selective privileges in licensing pictures, the selection granted to them has ordinarily not been as great as that granted to competing circuit theatres."

The Government failed to prove that charge.

It appears without contradiction, that Columbia gives exhibitors generally the right to reject a substantial part of the product. This is given both to independents as well as to affiliates (R. p. 1268). In fact, "the independent" said Montague "has a little edge on the affiliated." The affiliated run in the main more important pictures, and we try to be quite a bit more definite on those contracts". (R. p. 1268).

This practice (selectivity) protects the exhibitor against having poor pictures forced upon him. As Montague testified, the extent of the commitment made by the exhibitor is normally related to the amount of available playing time in his theatre. Exhibitors who need a large number of pictures generally commit themselves to a larger percentage of the program, and independent exhibitors who play on first or prior runs and who do not use a large number of pictures naturally have a greater degree of selection (R. pp. 1275-8).

Montague testified that Columbia gives less film rental adjustment to affiliates than to independents, and indeed gives the independents "all the breaks" (R. p. 1273). This is of particular importance in view of the fact that much of Columbia's product is sold to the great mass of theatres in the small towns (R. p. 1273).

In addition to this contractual protection, exhibitors invariably come around during the season for adjustments (R. p. 1273). They have either been disappointed in the receipts of this or that picture, have failed to make enough money, or feel that they have made too high a commitment financially for a particular picture. Montague testified that it is his policy to give such exhibitors an adjustment which satisfies and pleases them (R. pp. 1272-4, 1324-5). He said that this was good business for Columbia (R. p. 1273). In fact, this adjustment is almost in the nature of a discount (R. p. 1274); obviously Columbia wants the exhibitors to make money with its product.

Montague testified (R. p. 1272), that on an overall basis and all over the United States the average selectivity on all contracts made by appellants was 32 pictures out of 44.

With this uncontradicted testimony in the record, it is clear that the Government failed to prove Paragraph 149 (f) of its complaint. Yet the District Court proceeded on a contrary basis.

The District Court found (Finding No. 1, R. p. 3659):

> "Block booking—the practice of licensing or offering for license one feature or group of features upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license another feature or a group of features released by the distributor during a given period."

There is no proof whatever in this record to justify a finding that Columbia ever engaged in such practice.

There was no proof of "tying-in" or "conditioning" on the part of Columbia. Not a single exhibitor was called to the stand by the Government to give such evidence. Nor did the Government call any other witness for that purpose. Indeed, there wasn't a scintilla of proof that any exhibitor had ever suffered the slightest injury because of block-booking.

Since there was no such proof, we have the right to attack the Findings and Conclusions set out at the head of this Point.

> "The consideration of such a question involves not an issue of fact but one of law which it is the duty of the courts to examine and decide."

Chief Justice White in Florida East Coast Line v. U. S., 234 U. S. 167, 185.

The proof was that at the beginning of each season Montague tried to sell as many pictures as he could to each exhibitor.

Montague, appellants' sales manager, testified (R. p. 1239):

> "Q. Tell the Court, please, how large a block of pictures you sell each year, approximately. A. Well, for the last few years it has numbered between 40 and 44 pictures, that we call features; we also sell westerns; we also sell short subjects, and we have serials.
>
> Judge Bright: How many in a block?
>
> The Witness: We try to sell all of the pictures that we have to all exhibitors. It is either all or part thereof.
>
> Judge Goddard: That numbers some 40, you say?
>
> The Witness: So-called features, as we call them, there are between 40 and 44.
>
> Judge Bright: During what period?
>
> The Witness: Between the period of September and October 1st we expect to produce and release that number. Sometimes we fall a little short."

And again at pp. 1271-2:

"Q. Have you ever compelled an exhibitor to take your short pictures in order to obtain your features? A. No, sir.

Judge Goddard: I do not quite understand that. If you tell us that you sell your entire product at one time, that would include shorts and everything else, would it not?

The Witness: We attempt to sell our entire product at one time, but it is only a small percentage of the theatres in the United States that we suceed in doing that. It usually ends up with the exhibitor having a selective contract. He may or may not buy any shorts at all.

Judge Goddard: On an average how many pictures does the contract include, a block?

The Witness: Sir, on our feature program, meaning 44 pictures in that form, which excludes the Westerns, we average about 32 across the United States to an account.

Q. You do not condition the selling of features upon the taking of shorts, do you? A. No, sir.

Q. And if an exhibitor does not want your shorts you will sell him your features just the same? A. Yes, we will try to sell him the shorts; we will use all the salesmanship that we have, if he uses shorts.

Q. But you have never withheld your features from an exhibitor because he would not use your shorts, have you? A. We could not afford to do so, sir."

And at pp. 1274-7:

"Judge Bright: Where you sell a block of pictures to one exhibitor, that is at the beginning of your season, isn't it?

The Witness: Yes.

Judge Bright: They buy blind as to some of them?

The Witness: Yes, sir, we got only a few films produced, he can see. The rest of them are on description, and he really and truly buys on what we call past performance—what has Columbia's past performance been with that exhibitor over the period of years that we trade with him.

Judge Bright: Do you sell to these so-called majors, five majors, by block licenses?

The Witness: We sell them by block, sir.

Judge Hand: Right along?

The Witness: Right along. We have since our beginning and still do, sir.

Judge Goddard: Just the same, same as to the independents?

The Witness: I did not get your question.

Judge Goddard: Are blocks sold comparatively the same size as those sold to the independents?

The Witness: Comparatively. In some of their big theatres we cannot sell as many. In some of the smaller theatres we can sell more because they can use some of what we call our B-grade films. If the theatre is such it does not use B-grade films, of course, we cannot sell them or license the film—that would be a better expression.

Judge Hand: If I understand the thing at all, to sell to an exhibitor a lot of 40 plays would be a perfect gamble as far as he is concerned as to half of the plays submitted?

The Witness: Well, sir, from your seat I can understand that you could think so, but a lot of these exhibitors would like not only to buy 44 but they would like to buy 84, if we have them, because they need the film. They are changing in these towns—some of them use as many as six, and some eight and 12 pictures a week, if they have a double bill. They need these pictures. If you try to take them away and give them to somebody else in that town, you see the squawk they put up, because they feel that is their measure of protection and they want it.

Judge Hand: That is because, I suppose, then, that they have so many different theatres they can place them. Supposing, for example, Paramount or Loew or Fox or any of these defendants, had but one theatre, one big theatre. They certainly wouldn't do it then unless they went into an absolutely blind gamble, would they?

The Witness: They wouldn't do it unless they needed the films that I had to offer. If they only had one theatre in a situation and they played only 52 pictures a week, I wouldn't have a chance, sir, to get in my group of pictures.

Judge Goddard: 52 a year?

The Witness: 52 a year. Pardon me. Correction. Thank you.

Judge Bright: You mean these men that want the block buying most are those that change their program oftenest?

The Witness: Yes. I think they want them most, probably, but the larger exhibitor needs it just as bad as the small one. He wants to know, because of competition, what pictures he is getting. At least we find it so from our own distribution. We have no trouble at all in distributing through block selling. In fact, we have attended meetings back there sometime ago where the exhibitors as a whole were meeting from all over the country, trying to get all these companies to plead—to get away from this so-called small group selling. They wanted to buy all; they wanted to buy their season's product from all the companies. They called them the umpty (sic) meetings at the time. I have forgotten just what umpty stood for, but it was a whole series of meetings, whereby they actually made a very strenuous plea—

Judge Bright: Exhibitors?

The Witness: Yes, sir. (Continuing) —to do away with this consent decree form of selling.

Mr. Wright: I think he means independent exhibitors, is that right?

The Witness: Independent exhibitors were there, and also affiliated, Mr. Wright.

Judge Bright: That demand or suggestion, you say, comes from the small town exhibitor more than the large one?

The Witness: It would come from small towns, and it would come from large ones, depending on the need of the film to the exhibitor, whether he had a competitor, whether he had a double feature policy, whether he had a single feature policy, whether he run three shows a week, changed three times a week, or whether he changed seven times a week. There are so many things that come into the individual situation as to why that particular exhibitor wants to buy that particular way."

And on cross-examination he testified (at pp. 1313-4):

"Q. And I say in the course of those conversations and negotiations it is sometimes suggested to the exhibitor, is it not, either directly or indirectly, that if he wants to buy certain of the product it would be advisable for him to buy some of the other which may not appear to him to be so desirable, because he may not have such an acute need for it; is that right? A. That is quite true. The exhibitor may want to buy less and we may want to sell more. He may want to buy just two or three pictures of the top, and we may think he has room in his theatre and we are seeking representation for more.

Judge Goddard: Suppose he says he won't take more than three or four, do you turn him down altogether?

The Witness: In some cases, yes, sir. It would depend on whether we had opposition or not. If we had some place that we thought we could do better by going across the street or in the adjacent town, or some place, the chances are we would go and try to sell that one, or more of it to the other fellow. If we did not have any opposition we would still try to talk him up to take some more film than just the top, because we would not afford to sell him just the top film.

Judge Goddard: Suppose you had none who would take them, and he would not take more than seven, or four or five, would he get them or not?

The Witness: In rare cases, yes. In general cases I would say no, sir."

Montague's attempt to sell each exhibitor as many pictures as possible at the beginning of each season has now been tortured into a "tying-in" or conditioning.

In U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Company, 67 Fed. Supp. 397 (appeal argued in this Court November 13-14, 1947), Mr. Justice Stephens, in speaking for the District Court of the District of Columbia which dismissed a complaint of the Government in a Sherman anti-trust suit, said at pages 448-449:

"The basis for injunctive relief under Section 4 of the Sherman Act must be definitely and satisfactorily proved by the Government. * * * It has been repeatedly held in suits brought under this stat> ute that there must be a definite factual showing of illegality in the conspiracy, combination, or monopoly charged. (Citing cases.) We hold that this properly includes, in the instant case, the duty of proof, by the Government, of the allegations of paragraph 46 of the complaint as well as of all other allegations of the complaint which are in aid of said paragraph. * * *"

And at p. 451:

> "By substantial evidence is meant more than a mere scintilla; it must do more than create a suspicion of the existence of the fact to be established. It means such relevant evidence as a reasonable mind might accept as adequate to support a conclusion. (Citing cases.) In the Federal courts substantial evidence rather than a mere scintilla is necessary to support a judgment."

See also:

> Johnson v. J. H. Yost Lumber Co., 117 Fed. (2) 53, 61.

The record is barren of any proof to sustain Findings No. 1, 93, 94, 97, 154, 156 or Conclusions No. 8 and 11.

From the total lack of proof to support the District Court's aforesaid Findings and Conclusions it becomes clear that the Court's Findings on block-booking were made solely to enable it to provide for the auction selling method of licensing pictures.

The District Court could not make such a provision for auction selling and still leave block-booking as a lawful practice, because those two methods of selling are completely inconsistent. It was obviously mandatory to do away with block-booking, if pictures were to be sold on the auction block; and that explains the presence of these unsupported Findings and Conclusions.

The auction block method of selling and the system of regulation implicit therein were apparently the ultimate aim of the District Court. To reach that objective it brushed aside block-booking as an illegal practice without the slightest proof of illegality.

There is Nothing Illegal per se About "Tying-in" or Conditioning the License of a Number of Copyrighted Works Upon the Taking of a License for Other Copyrighted Works.

While there was no proof here that there was any "tying-in" or conditioning by appellants (and we claim that there was none), the District Court held that block-booking per se was an illegal practice because in essence it amounted to a "tying-in" or conditioning.

We challenge the existence or legality of any such doctrine.

The District Court manifestly relied on cases such as Morton Salt Company v. Suppiger, 314 U. S. 488; Carbice Corp. v. American Patents Corp., 283 U. S. 27; Leitch v. Barber Co., 302 U. S. 458; Motion Picture Patent Co. v. Universal, 243 U. S. 502; and Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Co., 320 U. S. 661 (Opinion, R. p. 3543). But those cases held that the owner of a patent could not exploit an unpatented article with his patented article because by doing so he was enlarging his monopoly. The District Court posed an imaginary situation where the copyright owner who had licensed the printing of his book only in connection with paper supplied by him, would come within those cases (R. p. 3543). That might be true. But it is non-existent here. We have no books and we have no paper.

The District Court, perhaps realizing that the aforementioned cases might have no application, proceeded to place great reliance upon a statement of the late Justice Stone in Ethyl Gas Corp. v. U. S., 309 U. S. 436, 459, and particularly that part of it reading as follows (Opinion, R. p. 3545):

> "The patent monopoly of one invention may no more be enlarged for the exploitation of a monopoly of another * * * than for the exploitation of an unpatented article."

It overlooked the important fact, however, that the groups of patents which were being licensed in the Ethyl Gas case and in Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company v. U. S., 226 U. S. 20 (cited therein), were being directly used in the exploitation of a monopoly and for the purpose of suppressing trade and commerce. It was the unity of those patents which there gave strength to the defendants and permitted them to accomplish a premeditated unlawful result.

In every sale of property there is of course an element of restraint of trade. In the licensing of one picture alone there is some restraint of trade. Chief Justice Hughes in Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. U. S., 288 U. S. 344, said (p. 360):

> "* * * Realities must dominate the judgment. The mere fact that the parties to an agreement eliminate > competition between themselves is not enough to condemn it. 'The legality of an agreement or regulation cannot be determined by so simple a test, as whether it restrains competition. Every agreement concerning trade, every regulation of trade, restrains.' "

But here we have appellants offering their separate copyrights in a season's product or less, when there is no conspiracy involved to restrain trade and commerce; where there is no monopoly or attempt to monopolize;* when they are acting alone, dealing at arm's length with each one of 11,000 licenses (as these appellants do); when it is simply done for convenience and economy, and even, if you please, for the purpose of helping the sales of their less important pictures. (In the eyes of the Government and the District Court that was a heinous crime.)

The argument may be advanced that it would be a great hardship to an exhibitor if appellants, for example, came to him and said, "You must take our entire season's product or nothing." The answer to that is that in this record there is no evidence of any such action on the part of appellants. Montague's testimony clearly shows that he tried

---

* In its opinion the District Court said (R. p. 3555):

> "The percentage of pictures on the market which any of the five major defendants could play in its own theatres would be relatively small and in no wise approximates a monopoly of film exhibition."

This of course applies as well to the pictures of the three minor defendants. Columbia, for example, produced 41 features and Westerns in the 1943-44 Season, or 10.32% of the total of such pictures produced by all eight defendants that year (R. p. 3555). On the question of monopoly this Court has held that the size and extent of a business may be considered. U. S. v. Eastman Kodak, 255 U. S. 578.

to sell as many of his pictures as he could; and if an exhibitor did not want all he could take less. There is no proof in this record that a single exhibitor in the United States ever suffered loss or damage by the manner in which appellants' licensed their product.

The District Court said that it may be argued that the common law gives a right to condition the licensing of one film upon the acceptance of another (Opinion, R. p. 3544). If that be so, then that common-law right may only be abrogated by a statute. (Second Employers Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1, 50), and there is nothing in the Copyright Law or any other statute which takes away that right. Moreover it seems to us that this right of conditioning is a right which is given to every owner of a chattel. For example a jobber of hosiery may decline to sell one dozen pair of hose to a retailer, and he may say, "You will have to take an entire gross. I will not break up my lot. You cannot pick the cream, and leave the less desirable hose on my hands." Every merchant has the right to tie-in and condition his merchandise and sell it as is most convenient and economical to him.

But that is exactly what this Decree has done. It has placed the owners of literary property upon a lower footing than the owners of merchandise and manufactured goods. Not only does this Decree destroy the monopoly given by the copyright statutes, but it reduces the literary property in appellants' films to a form far below that of a chattel. The very incidents of the ownership of property of all kinds—the right to sell, mortgage, transfer, and license, upon the owners terms—is taken away from these copyright proprietors by the arbitrary provisions of this Decree. Far from enjoying the statutory monopoly which the Copyright Act gives them, these proprietors may not even enjoy the very rudimentary and elementary incidents of ownership of property which is enjoyed by everyone else in the land in his own property, real or personal.

Since when does the creator of a literary work lose that right when he obtains a copyright? Is that one of the common-law incidents of ownership which he must give up to acquire the statutory monopoly? We have yet to find any precedent which holds that way.

It is that very reasoning, however, which motivated the District Court to hold that "tying-in" or conditioning of separate copyrights was illegal. But a different situation is presented here. This Court indeed has recognized the distinction and commented upon it only recently in Transparent-Wrap Machine Corp. v. Stokes & Smith, 91 Law. Ed. 451, which involved a patent on a machine for the packaging of candy, and a license agreement under which the Licensee undertook to assign improvement patents to the Licensor.

The Court held that the license agreement was not per se illegal, and that it did not come within the doctrine of the Morton Salt case and similar cases. At page 455:

> "An improvement patent, like the basic-patent to which it relates, is a legalized monopoly for a limited period. The law permits both to be bought and sold. One who uses one patent to acquire another is not extending his patent monopoly to articles governed by the general law and as respects which neither monopolies nor restraints of trade are sanctioned. He is indeed using one legalized monopoly to acquire another legalized monopoly."

Judge Bright, who was a member of the Expediting District Court, quite recently himself upheld the validity of transactions in which a patentee, both of the product and of the method, compelled a licensee who purchased the patented article to avail himself of the patented method; and he held that this was not an extension of the monopoly granted by the patent on the article. Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. v. Sylvania, 64 Fed. Supp. 516, affd. 154 Fed. (2d) 814. The following part of the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is significant (p. 815):

> "It has both product and method claims, covering a molding composition, or powder, made and sold by plaintiff, which, upon the application of heat and pressure according to the methods stated, may be shaped and hardened into plastic articles. Purchasers of the composition receive an implied license to use the process, while the grant of licenses under the method claim (of which two are now outstanding) is confined to those persons who purchase the composition. The legal claim is that this extends the monopoly of the method claim beyond its scope and to the products made by the process; and there is cited the well-known series of cases culminating in Mercoid Corp. v. Mid-Continent Inv. Co., 320 U. S. 661, 64 S. Ct. 268, 88 L. Ed. 376, that the monopoly of a patent cannot be pressed to include an unpatented article. But Judge Bright, below, following Judge Leibell in General Electric Co. v. Hygrade Sylvania Corp., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 61 F. Supp. 531, did not see how this doctrine could apply, because the product itself was patented and there was no extension of the patent beyond what the patent grants."

Licensing in bulk is an ancient and respected practice in the entire entertainment field with respect to copyrights. Following are a few examples:

(a) Somerset Maugham has written many short stories which appeared originally in various magazines, and on which separate copyrights were obtained. His publishers recently published a volume of those short stories. If we want to read one of the stories and are unable to obtain it because the old magazines are either out of print or unavailable, we must purchase the entire volume in which the particular story appears.

(b) Phonograph records usually contain two different copyrighted compositions, one on each side. The purchaser may only want the composition on one side of the record. He is nevertheless compelled to pay for the cost of the preparation of both compositions, including the compulsory license fee.

(c) The members of the original cast in "Oklahoma", a very successful dramatical musical work, gave their services to a record company and reproduced ten of the leading musical compositions in that play. These compositions appear on both sides of five records. If we desire to purchase a record containing one of those compositions as sung by the original member of the cast, we cannot do so because the record company sells those records only in an album of five records; we must pay for the full album in order to obtain that one composition.

(d) Music publishers for generations have published folios in which separate copyrighted compositions appeared, frequently the collected works of a single composer.

Many of those compositions have been out of print for years and are unobtainable in any form except through the purchase of the folio.

(e) Book publishers compile sets of famous authors' works. Because they are out of print, it is often impossible to buy single volumes of the novels of authors who have been dead for forty years or more but whose copyrights are still valid. (Twenty-eight years plus a renewal of twenty-eight years). If we want to buy a novel of Richard Harding Davis or Rudyard Kipling, in all likelihood we will have to buy the entire set in which such novel appears.

(f) Motion picture exhibitors themselves sell to the public in package and block. The great majority of theatres throughout the country have double features, and usually each picture is produced and copyrighted by a different company. In addition to this they have as a rule a news-reel and a "short," also owned and copyrighted by different companies. For each one of these pictures the exhibitor has to pay a rental. This expense is figured in the price of admission. But the public has to pay the admission price so figured, even though many of them might want to see only one of the pictures. Indeed, an attempted restriction on the right to show double-features has been held to be restraint of trade.

Vitagraph, Inc. v. Perelman, 95 Fed. (2) 142.

If the so-called "tying-in" or conditioning implicit in the District Court's definition of block-booking is illegal, then each and every one of the practices referred to in the illustrations given above is illegal.

The Copyright Act nowhere provides that the proprietor of the work must vend, arrange, publish, etc. his work singly. No restriction is placed upon him. Congress certainly must have contemplated that many copyrighted works would be created and owned by one man (an author) and that many copyrighted works would be acquired by one man, such as a publisher. With that in mind Congress could have made an attempt to forbid the exploitation of those works in bulk, or package deals, or in block. But it did not do so. The Congressional intent is to give to the copyright proprietor the utmost freedom in the exploitation of his works. Appellants therefore, if they wished, had a right to unite their separate copyrighted works and license them in bulk. As long as appellants exercised no monopoly, or made no attempt to restrain trade, they could "tie-in", or condition their pictures to their heart's content, that being one of the incidents of their respective copyright monopolies. They could condition the licensing of one picture or group of pictures upon the licensing of another picture or group of pictures.

> "He * * * may annex various conditions upon which the possession shall be held." (Curtis on Copyright, p. 5).

To deprive appellants of that right is to deprive them of their statutory and constitutional monopoly, as this Decree has done.

POINT II

The Court below was without jurisdiction to regulate or prescribe the manner in which appellants may license their pictures for exhibition. For all practical purposes appellants are required to put their pictures upon the auction block. That is not the function, nor is it within the power, of an equity court sitting in a Sherman anti-trust suit.

[Those provisions are contained in Paragraphs 8 and 9 of Section II of the Decree (R. pp. 3696-8).]

[Assignment of Errors 9.]

The Sherman Act does not provide for regulation of industry by imposing new and untried methods and devices for licensing copyrighted works.

The Act has a self-imposed limitation. (15 U. S. C.): (Italics ours)

> "§4. Jurisdiction of courts; duty of district attorneys; procedure:
>
> "The several district courts of the United States are invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of sections 1-7 and 15 of this title; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violation shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hear> ing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraing order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises. July 2, 1890, c. 647 § 4, 26 Stat. 209 Mar. 3, 1911, c. 231, § 291, 36 Stat. 1167."

Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction and have only such powers as are expressly conferred upon them by statute. There is no presumption of jurisdiction; on the contrary, it is lack of jurisdiction which is presumed. In Danks v. Gordon, 272 Fed. 821 (p. 823):

> "The jurisdiction and powers of federal courts are derived from the Constitution and the acts of Congress. They possess only such powers as have been conferred upon them. In an action in such courts it is presumed that the court is without jurisdiction until the contrary affirmatively appears."

The District Court, therefore, was strictly bound by the express limitations of Section 4 of the Sherman Act to "prevent" and "restrain".

The want of power of a court of equity to regulate business was ably commented upon in Daniels et al. v. Portland Gold Mining Co. et al., 202 Fed. 637 (1912; cert. den. 229 U. S. 611).

In that case suit was brought by three mining companies on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated, to enjoin a number of persons from operating assay offices and purchasing ore. The complaint alleged that gold ore was being systematically stolen in small quantities but of large aggregate from the neighboring mines and that this criminal practice was encouraged and facilitated by defendants, who conducted an assay office where they received and purchased the stolen property. Plaintiffs sought a decree enjoining defendants from conducting assay offices or from purchasing or receiving ore from any person in the mining district.

The trial court granted an injunction restraining defendants from purchasing ore from mines in the District without first notifying the superintendent of one of the three companies bringing the suit of the fact that the ore had been offered for sale, and giving the name of the person who offered it, the name of the mine from which it purported to come, the owner thereof, the number of pounds, and a statement that its original condition, when first offered, had not been altered. It further provided that if either of the superintendents of the mining companies should, within twenty-four hours after receipt of such notice, advise the person furnishing the same that the ore had been stolen, then that defendant must hold it for forty-eight hours before purchasing it or agreeing to do so, and defendants and each of them were enjoined from dealing in ore of any kind or description, except under the foregoing conditions and restrictions. On appeal this decree was reversed on the ground that it constituted a usurpation of legislative power. At page 639 Judge Hook said:

> "We think the injunction was an inadmissible exercise of the judicial power. Consistently with the fullest recognition of the progressive and flexible character of equity jurisprudence and its continuing adaptability to the increasing magnitude and complexity of modern affairs, care must nevertheless be taken not to transgress its fundamental limitations. Though the writ of injunction may be properly employed to protect rights of property, however great or small, complicated or simple, it should not be made a vehicle for invading the legitimate legislative province of government or a means of establishing a system of rules for the regulation of the business of a community."

Holding that it was not the function of a court of equity to regulate and supervise a business, Judge Hook further said at page 641:

"Ordinary business callings may be attended by conditions, or may offer temptations that threaten the public welfare or the lives, health, morals, or property of those who come in contact with them. There is a stage at which the state will take cognizance and prescribe rules and regulations to prevent or lessen the evil. If the evil is deemed greater than the good, the calling may be wholly prohibited; if less, regulated. But, whatever course is taken, it is the exercise of the police power of the state, of which a multitude of illustrations may be found in the statute books, and its expression as a rule of conduct is a legislative function. Thus in many states the business of bucket shops and ticket scalpers is prohibited, and in Colorado there is a statute regulating the business of assayers and designed to prevent the very practice complained of here. Legislative regulations may be inadequate, but a court in a suit between private parties must act within much narrower lines and cannot make others."

The case of United States v. New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, Inc., 263 U. S. 611 (1924), which is to a similar effect, arose under the Anti-Trust Laws. In that case the Government sought to enjoin the Exchange from engaging in certain practices alleged to be monopolistic. In affirming the decree dismissing the suit, Chief Justice Taft held that no infraction of the Anti-Trust Laws had been made out. Concluding his opinion, the Chief Justice pointed out that it was not a judicial function to impose rules and regulations for the conduct of a business, saying at page 621:

> "The Government in effect asks this Court to enforce rules and regulations for the conduct of the Sugar Exchange which shall prevent the future abuse of its lawful functions. This is legislative and beyond our power."

Likewise, in A. T. & S. Railroad v. D. & N. O. Railroad, 110 U. S. 667 (1884), the Court expressly held that it was the function of the legislature and not of the courts to regulate and supervise the conduct of business affairs. In that case the D. & N. O. Railroad brought a suit in equity to compel the A. T. & S. Railroad to unite with it in forming a through line of railroad transportation to and from Denver, with all the privileges which the A. T. & S. Railroad might grant to any other company owning and operating the railroad between Denver and Pueblo. The Circuit Court entered a decree requiring the A. T. & S. to stop all its passenger trains at the platform built by the D. & N. O. Railroad, where the two roads joined, and to remain there to take on and let off passengers and to receive and deliver express matter and mails. It also required the A. T. & S. to keep an agent there, to sell tickets, check baggage and bill freight. Freight trains were to be stopped at the same place whenever there was freight to be taken on or delivered. The A. T. & S. was required to carry freight and passengers going to or coming from the D. & N. O., at the same price it would receive if the passenger or freight were carried to or from the same point on a through ticket or through bill of lading issued by any competitor of the D. & N. O. In short, the decree established in detail rules and regulations for the working of the A. T. & S. and D. & N. O. roads.

In reversing the decree, Chief Justice Waite pointed out that the Court had made an arrangement for the business intercourse of the companies such as, in its opinion, they ought in law to have made for themselves (675). He further said at page 682:

> "A court of chancery is not, any more than is a court of law, clothed with legislative power. It may enforce, in its own appropriate way, the specific performance of an existing legal obligation arising out of contract, law, or usage, but it cannot create the obligation."

and added at page 686:

> "The real question in the case, as it now comes before us, is whether the relief required is legislative in its character or judicial. We think it is legislative, and that upon the existing facts a court of chancery can afford no remedy."

That the Court must restrict its relief to injunction has been repeatedly emphasized.

In Hartford-Empire Company v. U. S. 323 U. S. 386, this Court said (pp. 409-10):

> "But, even so, the court may not create, as to the defendants, new duties, prescription of which is the function of Congress, or place the defendants, for the future, 'in a different class than other people,' as the Government has suggested."

In a case where this Court sought to apply the most stringent remedies, it nevertheless realized the limitations of the Statute. (Standard Oil v. U. S., 221 U. S. 1, at p. 77):

> "* * * it may be conceded that ordinarily where it was found that acts had been done in violation of the statute, adequate measure of relief would result from restraining the doing of such acts in the future. Swift v. United States, 196 U. S. 375. But in a case like this, where the condition which has been brought about in violation of the statute, in and of itself, is not only a continued attempt to monopolize, but also a monopolization, the duty to enforce the statute requires the application of broader and more controlling remedies. As penalities which are not authorized by law may not be inflicted by judicial authority, it follows that to meet the situation with which we are confronted the application of remedies two-fold in character becomes essential: 1st. To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which we have found to have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute. 2nd. The exertion of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist in violation of the statute, and thus neutralize the extension and continually operating force which the possession of the power unlawfully obtained has brought and will continue to bring about."

But even there this Court did not grant relief other than by way of injunction and dissolution.

In U. S. v. Reading Co., 226 U. S. 324 (1912) the Court, by Mr. Justice Lurton stated (p. 369):

> "It is, of course, obvious that the law may not compel competition between these independent coal operators and the defendants, but it may at least remove illegal barriers resulting from illegal agreements which will make such competition impracticable."

In that same case (183 Fed. 427) Circuit Judge Gray in the District Court had stated (p. 459):

> "The injunction or restraining order specifically prayed for in the petition should be granted, so far as it will serve 'to prevent and restrain' the future or continuing violation of the act. This is the only jurisdiction conferred upon the court in such a proceeding as the one before us, and there can be no injunctive relief granted, unless it tends to restrain some specific future or continuing violation of the act."

In the language of Judge Goodrich in U. S. v. Pullman Company, 64 Fed. Supp. 108, at p. 110:

> "We take it that the judgment of a court under the Sherman law is not to substitute the judicial judgment for that of the proprietors of the country's business enterprises."

The instant Decree goes so far as to compel appellants to disregard their old customers, and thus wipe out their good will. (Sec. II, Paragraph 8(b), R. p. 3697). This is not the function of the Sherman Act. In Camfield Mfg. Co. v. McGraw Elec. Co., 70 Fed. Supp. 477, Judge Leahy holding insufficient in law allegations of boycott in a complaint said (p. 481):

> "The complaint simply is defendant will not do business with plaintiff's distributors. In general, it seems a necessary part of our business mores for a manufacturer to have free selection in dealing with its distributors. Upon the recognition of this fact, why may he not refuse to do business with one who deals in a closely competitive product? Looking at the reality of our economy, I have never seen a distributor of Ford automobiles, for example, also distribute a car of another competitor within the same price range, such as the Chevrolet; nor does McKesson & Robbins distribute the drug supplies of Park-Davis; etc. It has been said (under circumstances which have exceptions) the anti-trust laws do not restrict the right of a manufacturer freely to exercise its own judgment as to the parties with whom it shall deal. U. S. v. Colgate, 250 U. S. 300, 307; U. S. v. Parker Rustproof Co., 61 F. Supp. 805, 812." (Italics ours.)

This Court has frequently reiterated that doctrine. In Fed. Trade Comm. v. Raymond, 263 U. S. 565, 573:

> "It is the right, 'long-recognized', of a trader engaged in an entirely private business, 'freely to exercise his own independent discretion as to parties with whom he will deal.' (Citing cases.) Thus a retail dealer 'has the unquestioned right to stop dealing with a wholesaler for reasons sufficient to himself.' Eastern States Lumber Assn. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 614; United States v. Colgate & Co., supra, p. 307. He may lawfully make a fixed rule of conduct not to buy from a producer or manufacturer who sells to consumers in competition with himself. Grenada Lumber Co. v. Mississippi, 217 U. S. 433, 440. Or he may stop dealing with a wholesaler who he thinks is acting unfairly in trying to undermine his trade. Eastern States Lumber Assn. v. United States, supra, p. 614; United States v. Colgate & Co., supra, p. 307. Likewise a wholesale dealer has the right to stop dealing with a manufacturer 'for reasons sufficient to himself.' And he may do so because he thinks such manufacturer is undermining his trade by selling either to a competing wholesaler or to a retailer competing with his own customers. Such other wholesaler or retailer has the reciprocal right to stop dealing with the manufacturer. This each may do, in the exercise of free competition, leaving it to the manufacturer to determine which customer, in the exercise of his own judgment, he desires to retain."

In U. S. v. Bausch & Lomb Company, 321 U. S. 707, Mr. Justice Reed said, at p. 728:

"* * * In a business, such as Soft-Lite, which deals in a speciality of a luxury or near-luxury character, the right to select its customers may well be the most essential factor in the maintenance of the highest standards of service. We are, as the District Court apparently was, loath to deny to Soft-Lite this privilege of selection. United States v. Colgate & Co., 250 U. S. 300, 307; Federal Trade Comm'n v. Raymond Co., 263 U. S. 565, 573."

And only quite recently Judge Knight applied that rule in U. S. v. Schine, 31 Fed. Supp. 270, 274, where he found for the Government in an anti-trust suit.

The Decree Here Involved Strikingly Resembles a Code for the Regulation of the Motion Picture Industry.

Such regulation can only be accomplished through the Legislative branch of the government. If, as was held in Schechter Corp. v. United States, 295 U. S. 495, at pp. 537-538, the Legislature may not confer upon the Executive the power to regulate industry, certainly the Judiciary cannot usurp such power.

> "It is Congress, and not the Judicial Department, to which the Constitution has given power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. The courts can never take the initiative on this subject."
>
> Transportation Company v. Parkersburg, 107 U. S. 691, 701.

Perhaps mindful of this limitation, the Court below purports to decree the sale of pictures by the auction block plan in the form of an injunction. The Decree states in the opening paragraph of Section II (R. p. 3695).

> "Each of the defendant distributors • • • is hereby enjoined • • •"

Then follow nine paragraphs, the eighth of which reads as follows:

> "8. From licensing in the future any feature for exhibition in any theatre not its own in any manner except the following • • •"

then come the affirmative regulatory provisions contained in (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e), and in paragraph 9.

This is merely paying lip service to so-called injunctive relief. These are affirmative provisions for a specific and exclusive method of selling pictures—a method which has never been tried before. To argue that these provisions are merely an extension of the injunctive process of the Court is to play upon words.

Appellants Are Placed at a Competitive Disadvantage By This System

The practical aspects of competitive bidding may also be questioned. Who is to determine which of a group of bids represents the highest responsible one? No two ex-exhibitors are likely to make the same bid as to dates, clearance, method of fixing rental, etc. May bids containing such diverse factors be readily compared? May a flat rental bid be compared with a percentage bid? May the value of any percentage bid be determined unless the admission price is fixed by the license? If these decisions are left entirely to the distributor, the situation will be no different than at present.

Opposition of exhibitors to the bidding system has been unanimous. In order to assure product for continuous operation, the exhibitor will have to make bids on many more features than he needs. If he bids on just one film, and his competitor outbids him, he is without film. If he bids on two or three, and is successful in all, he has more film than he can use. Moreover, he will not be able to arrange his program to vary the type of entertainment offered. He will find it necessary to take what he can get.

There is a limit to what any theatre may bid for a feature without raising its admission price. Size, location, and present theatre-going habits will play a large part in determining what each theatre can afford. Exhibitors may find they must make the choice between raising prices in order to obtain a better position or accepting the later runs and poorer films. Neither possibility guarantees any advantage to the public.

Appellants Have Built Up a Substantial Good Will Among Independent Exhibitors. This is Destroyed at One Blow.

Appellants have been in business since 1920. They own no theatres. Their good will consists of 11,000 satisfied exhibitor-customers, a great many of whom are independents, having no affiliation whatever with the Major defendants.

The history of appellants' dealings is that they made it a practice to sell to these independent exhibitors and away from the affiliated exhibitors even at a substantial loss of rental. The Government's as well as appellant's exhibits, substantiate this statement. A brief analysis of both groups of exhibits follows:

The Government took the 92 cities in the United States which have a population of 100,000 or over, and presented data with respect to the period from 1936-37 (the year before this action was commenced) down to 1943-44 (the year before which this action was tried). With respect to the 1943-44 season, the Government put in evidence (Gov. Ex. 428) a master chart showing to whom each particular defendant licensed its pictures in those cities on first run, indicating also whether the pictures were licensed to an independent exhibitor or to an affiliated exhibitor, and if the exhibitor was affiliated, the particular defendant with which such affiliation was made.

A similar chart was put in evidence by the Government with respect to the approximately 300 cities with populations of 25,000 up to 100,000 (Gov. Ex. 432). That chart indicated, first, those cities in which all of the defendant's pictures were licensed on first run to independent theatres, and, secondly, those cities in which all of defendant's pictures were licensed on first run to affiliated theatres. Thirdly, in the remaining cities where the product was licensed in part to independents and in part to affiliates, the chart indicated which product was licensed to these respective groups of theatres.

Columbia put in evidence a comprehensive tabulation, which lists for each and every season beginning with the 1936-37 season up to and including the 1944-45 season, its regular first run accounts in each of the approximately 400 cities with populations of 25,000 or more (C-6).* Since this chart (C-6) reflects both the 92 cities over 100,000 in population and the remaining 300 odd cities over 25,000 population, it should be read in conjunction with C-7 and C-8 (the colored charts) which indicate the regular first run independent accounts and affiliated accounts in those two groups of cities respectively for that entire nine year period. What do these charts show, both Government and Columbia exhibits? We shall consider each group of cities separately, always bearing in mind that the affiliated theatres as a general rule are the largest, most modern and best located in their respective cities.

* Columbia exhibits are referred to as "C" followed by numbers.

The 92 Cities

Exhibit C-7 shows that during the above period Columbia sold its regular first run accounts to independent and affiliated exhibitors in the following proportions:

Season	Independents	Affiliated
1936-37	38½	53½
1937-38	37	55
1938-39	37	55
1939-40	37	55
1940-41	36½	55½
1941-42	37	55
1942-43	37	55
1943-44	36	56
1944-45	36	56

(The fraction indicates a split of the product.)

The foregoing is simply a numerical comparison of the number of independent first run accounts as compared with the number of affiliated first run accounts. The true significance of these figures, however, must be read in connection with the competitive situations in these 92 cities.

Government's Exhibit 428 indicates that one or more of the Major defendants in this case operate theatres on first run in 88 of these 92 cities. That chart also indicates that all of the first run theatres in 40 of these cities are operated by the Major defendants, and that all first run theatres in 4 other cities are operated by independent exhibitors. This means that out of the 92 cities, 48 contain theatres operated on first run both by affiliates and independents.

For the 1943-44 season (a comparison of the exhibits will indicate that said season is typical of other seasons) Columbia licensed its pictures in these 48 cities (where independents and affiliates operated) as follows:

30 cities to independents
16 cities to affiliates
2 cities split between the independent and the affiliates.

In other words, out of the 48 competitive situations Columbia licenses its products to 32 independents, or a percentage of 66⅔%.

And out of the entire 92 cities Columbia licenses its product to 36 independents, or a percentage of 39%.

Let us give a brief analysis of the theatre situations in those 32 cities where Columbia licenses its pictures to an independent who is in competition with an affiliate. The names of the Major defendant-owned exhibitors who operated first run theatres in competition with Columbia's independent accounts in each of these cities are as follows:

Affiliated Opposition in Cities Where Columbia Sells to Independents

City	Competing first-run theatres and their affiliated ownership
New York City	Loew's, Paramount, RKO, Warner, Fox
Pittsburgh	Loew's, Warner
San Francisco	Loew's, Fox, Paramount, RKO
Buffalo	Loew's, Paramount
Seattle	Fox
Oakland	Fox
Atlanta	Paramount, Loew's
Birmingham	Paramount
Oklahoma City	Paramount, Warner
San Diego	Fox
Richmond	Loew's
Miami	Paramount
Youngstown	Warner
Hartford	Warner, Paramount, Loew's
Long Beach	Fox
Springfield	Warner, Loew's, Paramount
Norfolk	Loew's
Reading	Warner, Loew's
Sacramento	Fox
Utica	Warner
Duluth	Paramount
Baltimore	Warner, Loew's
St. Louis	Loew's (50% split)
Toledo	Paramount, Loew's
Akron	Warner, Loew's
Kansas City, Kansas	Fox
Cambridge, Mass.	Paramount (50% split)
Gary, Ind.	Paramount
New Bedford	Paramount
Canton	Loew's
Somerville	Paramount
Erie	Warner

It is to be noted that not only does Columbia sell away from one affiliate in many of those cities, but in some cities it sells away from a number of affiliates.

Exhibit C-10 indicates that in three cities where Columbia previously sold to one affiliated exhibitor it now sells to another.

Not only that, but in twelve cities Columbia at one time or another left its first run affiliate account and switched to an independent for its first run account.

The foregoing changes as they appear on C-10 are listed below:

SWITCHING FROM ONE AFFILIATED EXHIBITOR TO ANOTHER AFFILIATED EXHIBITOR.

City	Previous Account	Present Account	Change
Chicago	RKO	B & K (Paramount)	1934-5
Houston	RKO	Interstate	1933-4
Syracuse	RKO	Loew's	1934-5

SWITCHING FROM AFFILIATED EXHIBITOR TO AN INDEPENDENT EXHIBITOR.

City	Previous Account (Affiliate)	Present Account (Independent)	Change
Akron	RKO	Chatkin & Feld	1933-4
Duluth	Paramount	S. J. Blackmore	1932-3
Erie, Pa.	Fox	Weschler	1934-5
Long Beach	Warner	Milton Arthur	1933-4
Miami	Par.	Wometco	about 1929

City	Previous Account (Affiliate)	Present Account (Independent)	Change
Oakland, Cal.	Fox	Blumenfeld	1935-6
Okla. City	Par.	Louis Dent	1936-7
Pittsburgh	Warner	J. Harris	1935-6
Sacramento	Fox	Blumenfeld	1935-6
Seattle	RKO	Von Herberg	1932-3
San Diego	Fox	Metzger	1934-5
San Francisco	RKO	Milton Arthur	1935-6

Here, as Ex. C-10 indicates, Columbia has sold away (changed accounts) from the affiliate to the independent in 12 out of these 92 cities and has never come back to the affiliates.

73 Cities

While the Government itself prepared a chart of the 92 cities (Gov. Ex. 428) it went behind those cities and reduced the number to 73, claiming that these 73 cities showed a complete monopoly of exhibition by the Major defendants.

In paragraph 165 of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint the 73 cities are set out in detail, together with a column which purports to enumerate the various individual Major defendants who have a monopoly in the respective cities (R. pp. 3194-5).*

In this smaller group of 73 large cities Columbia licenses its pictures on first run to independents in the following 22 cities (Ex. C-6):

---

*At first glance, this schedule would seem to indicate 92 cities. But what the government did was to eliminate from the chart (Gov. Ex. 428) those 19 cities which the government did not consider a complete monopoly; so that the list shown in Paragraph 165 of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint is, by actual count, only 73.

New York	Youngstown
San Francisco	Hartford
Buffalo	Long Beach, Calif.
Seattle	Springfield, Mass.
Atlanta	Norfolk
Oakland, Calif.	Erie
Birmingham, Ala.	Reading
Oklahoma City	Sacramento
San Diego	Duluth
Richmond	Pittsburgh
Miami	Utica

In this supposedly sacred circle of monopolized cities, Columbia sells its product to independents in 30% of the cities.

413 Cities

These are the cities of 25,000 inhabitants and over. (They, of course, include the 92 cities and the 73 cities above mentioned, as well.) Exhibit C-6, specifies each and every first run account which it has had in these cities from the seasons 1936-1937 down to and including 1944-1945. In conjunction with this exhibit we should like the Court to examine Exhibit C-8 (a colored chart), which specifies the number of cities in which Columbia sold to the independents and those in which it sold to the affiliates. Below is a summary of what these charts illustrate:

Season	Independents	Affiliated
1936-37	177	207
1937-38	177½	212½
1938-39	171½	216½
1939-40	172½	218½

Season	Independents	Affiliated
1940-41	171½	221½
1941-42	172	222
1942-43	171	221
1943-44	166½	226½
1944-45	167½	226½

(The fraction indicates a split of the product.)

The percentage of independent accounts sold by Columbia in these cities is approximately 42%.

The true significance of the number of independent accounts which Columbia has in these cities can best be understood in connection with an examination of Government's Exhibit 432 which is an analysis of how the product of all of the defendants is licensed on first run in each city with a population between 25,000 and 100,000. (In other words, in getting up the analysis the Government ignored the 92 cities which it had already dealt with in Government's Exhibit 428, and confined itself to the remaining cities in the 413 group.) This exhibit specifies first, those cities in which all of the pictures are licensed first run to independent theatres; secondly, the cities in which all of the pictures are licensed first run to affiliated theatres; and thirdly, the cities in which the product is licensed first run to both independent and affiliated theatres. It is important to examine those situations in which some product is licensed first run to independent theatres and other product is licensed first run to affiliated theatres. These may be deemed the competitive first run situations.

A computation of this Government Exhibit 432 shows that the total number of towns listed is 321, and that there are within this group 92 competitive situations. (This figure 92 has nothing to do with the chart of 92 cities in Gov. Ex. 428). The Government has entered information regarding Columbia on 87 of these competitive situations, showing that Columbia licenses its pictures to independents in 52 of these 87 competitive situations; and in the remaining 35 competitive situations to affiliates. Thus Columbia licenses to independent exhibitors in approximately 60% of these competitive cities in the 25,000 to 100,000 group.

On an overall basis the foregoing Exhibit 432 shows that in all of the 413 cities with populations of 25,000 or over, Columbia, out of a total of 137 competitive situations sells to the independent in 82, or approximately 65%.

Montague explained his reason for doing this (R. p. 1292):

> "Q. What is your general custom and practice throughout the country in respect to these affiliates and independents? Whom do you prefer to sell and to whom do you sell most of your pictures to? A. We prefer to sell the accounts that we think we can get the most out of for our overall program.
>
> Q. Who are these accounts? A. In many situations they are the independent; in others they are the affiliates."

And again (R. p. 1363):

> "A. We have a definite policy that at no time do we negotiate with two people. We find it absolutely necessary to have a continuity of releasing in a definite theatre, wherever we can possibly get it. That is not only for the benefit of Columbia but for the benefit of subsequent runs in that situation.

They too are interested in where you play your picture first-run. And what we have practiced over a period of years, and our records prove beyond a question of a doubt—and it is what we like, is to continue to play with the same accounts that we have played with over a period of years, if those accounts have been satisfactory to us. If they are responsible, and their responsibility has stood up over a period of years, we think that is good enough to go along with.

"Your Honors, in many cases we play in houses where we know we could get more money from an opposition, but because we have been playing in that house for a number of years, and we have sturdy friendship, we feel it is best to continue there, but we don't feel we have lost by that—maybe we do get a little less on a picture or two, but over all our program we feel that is much the better policy: And we change our accounts—so few accounts are changed, I would say, rather, in a period of years, it is hardly noticeable on our records, and our records will support that beyond a question of a doubt."

The proof is thus overwhelming and uncontradicted that Columbia had built up a good-will, particularly with independent exhibitors.

Since the Government at no time charged that COLUMBIA was in conspiracy with any of the independent exhibitors, it cannot be argued that its good-will was built up on a conspiracy. But this company, owning no theatres and relying upon its satisfied exhibitor-customers, is told by the Decree that it must throw these old customers overboard and thus give up all the good-will established in twenty-seven years of business (Decree, R. p. 3697).

"(b) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or otherwise."

The Good Will of Appellants' Business is a Valuable Property Right.

"There never was a time, in all likelihood, when good-will (which is only another name for favorable reputation, credit, honesty, fair name, reliability) has played a more important part in commercial life than it plays today. There never was a time when a good name was more to be desired, for purely business reasons, regardless of any other consideration, than today. There never was a time when the means and instruments designed for the creation of a good name for one's self were so highly developed as today. There never was a time when there were so many effective means available to the trade pirate to aid him to purloin the good-will of others to his own profit."

Nims on Unfair Competition (4th Ed. 1947), page 73, et seq. and cases cited.

"The relations of a dealer to his customers and to the trade generally is called good will, and is property which the law is bound to protect."

Albro J. Newton Co. v. Erickson, 126 N. Y. Supp., 950, 951.

"Men will pay for any privilege that gives reasonable expectancy of preference in the race of competition."

Cardozo J., Matter of Brown, 242 N. Y. 1, 6.

"Good will is property recognized and protected by law as such."

38 C. J. S. 950.

See also: Societe Vinicole De Champagne v. Mumm, 10 Fed. Supp., 289, 294; Metropolitan Bank v. St. Louis Dispatch, 149 U. S. 436, 446; Red Wing Malting Co. v. Willcuts, 15 Fed. (2d) 626, 629.

The Exemptions Granted to Appellants' Competitors

While purporting to regulate the licensing of pictures by means of competitive bidding (auction block) the Decree nevertheless provides in Section IV (R. p. 3700) as follows:

> "Nothing contained in this Decree shall be construed to limit, in any way whatsoever, the right of each distributor-defendant to license, or in any way to arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner, and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which such distributor-defendant has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this Decree, a proprietary interest of ninety-five per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries."

This simply means that a Major defendant may license its own pictures to its own theatres without any restrictions as to competitive bidding, and upon any terms it sees fit.

Let us see what that signifies. The affiliated theatres have access to the pictures of at least one distributor for each season. They have a definite source of supply. They do not have to scramble for pictures like the independent exhibitor. This leaves them in a powerful bargaining position for the balance of their product, and makes it difficult if not impossible for the independent theatres to compete with them for the better pictures.

It is obvious that the affiliated is in a position to take away from his independent competitor the cream of the good pictures of all the distributors, and leave the latter with the poorer product only available for his screen.

Columbia, unable to sell its better pictures to the independent because of this unfair competition, may only offer the independent its poorer pictures, which means that it destroys its good will and gradually loses its old independent customers. The result of this whole arrangement is discriminatory against both the independent exhibitors and Columbia, and works only to the advantage of the affiliated exhibitor and the five Major defendants.

At the same time appellants, who own no theatres and have no ready-made outlet, must compete with the five Major defendants for playing time. In that competition they are restrained by Section IV, as approximately three thousand of the best theatres are made independent of appellants' entire product, and need bid only for appellants' outstanding pictures (which they can do successfully as shown in the preceding paragraph) and appellants are forced to license the bulk of their product to independent theatres, still competing in that limited field with the pictures of the five Majors.

Moreover what is to prevent exhibitors in any competitive area from agreeing among themselves as to how high they will bid. Human nature being what it is, such things as collusive bidding have been known to happen. This Decree invites it. Must appellants, investing their capital in this hazardous enterprise, be left to the tender mercies of the exhibitors under a system by which the exhibitors alone fix the price of the commodity?

Far from opening up competition this Decree suppresses it, and restrains trade and commerce far worse than any of the contracts and practices which it enjoins.

POINT III

The injunction against block booking and the provisions for placing appellants' pictures upon the auction block destroy appellants' exclusive rights in their copyrights and violate a basic public policy.

[Assignment of Errors 4.]

1. Appellants have a monopoly in their copyrights which is given to them by the Constitution of the United States and by the Copyright Act. The Constitution provides in Article 1, Section 8:

> "The Congress shall have power: * * * To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries."

The consolidated Copyright Act of 1909 (U. S. C. Title 17) provides (Section 1):

> "Any person entitled thereto, upon complying with the provisions of this Act, shall have the exclusive right: * * *"

"Copyright in any form, whether statutory or at common-law, is a monopoly; * * *" Learned Hand, C. J. in RCA Mfg. Co. Inc. v. Whiteman, 114 Fed. (2) 86, 88. But it is a monopoly which is not condemned by law.

"The patent laws and the Sherman Act exist side by side, each being entitled to full recognition and application by the courts."

Stephens, J. in U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., 67 Fed. Supp. 397, 426.

For the monopoly recognized by the patent law is not the monopoly condemned by the Sherman Act.

U. S. v. Motion Picture Patents Co., 225 Fed. 800; U. S. v. U. S. Gypsum Co., supra.

Copyrighted works have all the benefits and incidents of personal property.

Defendants have the right, in licensing their copyrighted product, to impose any terms they see fit. That right is one of the incidents of ownership of property, including literary property.

In Morgan on Literature (1875) the author says (Vol. II, p. 624):

"Literary property can only be a source of profit to its author, according to his power of parting with it, either in whole or in part, for value, and of specifying the uses for which it is so alienated; and these rights the ownership of literary property, as of all other, involves. We have seen that in the eye of the law such property, either before or after copyright, is personal property, and subject to all the rules of personal property as to its alienation, transfer, and descent. In general, therefore, all contracts relating to such alienation or transfer will be governed by the familiar principles of the law of contracts. * * *" (Italics ours.)

Davis v. Vories, 141 Missouri 234, was an action on some promissory notes, the consideration for which was a contract with respect to the copyright in a published book. In discussing the extent and validity of that contract the Court considered the unlimited extent and manner in which the owner of the copyrighted book could confer a license. It said (p. 239):

> "Copyright in the United States is the 'exclusive right of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of a published literary work, and publishing and vending the same, with the right of preventing all others from doing so.' 4 Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, 147; R. S. U. S., sec. 4952. It is not disputed that Root was the owner of the copyright of the book in question. As such owner he had the exclusive right to sell his book in any manner anywhere in the United States. This right he could transfer to another, as to the whole or any particular part of the country. As was said by Clifford, J., in Parton v. Prang, 3 Cliff. 537: 'Sales may be absolute or conditional, and they may be with or without qualification, limitation and restriction, and the rules of law applicable in such case to other personal property must be applied in determining the real character of a sale of literary property.' The right was a valuable one, specially protected by the law of the land. R. S. U. S., sec. 4964. * * *
>
> "That the legal title to the copyright remains in the owner, and the instrument whereby he conveys a beneficial use therein is nothing more than a license, detracts nothing from the title or value of the beneficial interest conveyed. As was said in Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. Rep. 618, by Shipman, J.: 'Under section 4964, a license in writing, by instrument duly witnessed, may be given by the proprietor to any other person to the extent described in such license; and there is no restriction upon the power of the proprietor to assign or transfer in equity an exclusive right to use the copyrighted book in a particular manner or for particular purposes upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon." (Italics ours.)

In Buck v. Hillsgrove Country Club, Inc., 17 Fed. Supp. 643 the District Court stated (p. 645):

"It is clear that the rights under the copyright laws are exclusive. To permit this paragraph in respondent's answer to exercise its force and effect is to destroy the exclusiveness given by the Constitution and the laws thereunder to the petitioners' copyright.

"In the case entitled Fox Film Corp. v. Doyal, 286 U. S. 123, 52 S. Ct. 546, 547, 76 L. Ed. 1010, it is held that:

" 'The owner of the copyright, if he pleases, may refrain from vending or licensing and content himself with simply exercising the right to exclude others from using his property. * * * A copyright, like a patent, is 'at once the equivalent given by the public for benefits bestowed by the genius and meditations and skill of individuals, and the incentive to further efforts for the same important objects.' * * *

" 'Copyright is a right exercised by the owner during the term at his pleasure and exclusively for his own profit and forms the basis for extensive and profitable business enterprises. The advantage to the public is gained merely from the carrying out of the general policy in making such grants and not from any direct interest which the government has in the use of the property which is the subject of the grants.'

"In Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. Platt (C. C.) 142 F. 606, 610, the court said:

"'The right of a patentee, owner of a copyright, or owner of a secret process is merely the right of exclusion or debarment. The holder of such a property right, as said by the court in the Victor Talking Machine case [(C. C. A.) 123 F. 424], above cited, is a czar in his own domain. He may sell or not, as he chooses. He may fix such prices as he pleases. He may sell at one price to one person, and another to another person. He is not required to give reasons or deal fairly with purchasers.'"

In Buck v. Gibbs, 34 Fed. Supp. 510, modified on other grounds, 313 U. S. 387, Circuit Judge Hutcheson practically said the same (p. 517):

"A copyright owner has a right to sell or withhold from sale the matter of and the rights under the copyright. He cannot be made to sell his product unless he wishes to. He can make one price to one user and an entirely different price to another."

In Buck v. Swanson, 33 Fed. Supp. 377 (reversed on other grounds, 313 U. S. 406), the Court stated (p. 387):

"The owner of the copyright has the right to dispose of it on such terms as he may see fit, or he may decline to dispose of it on any terms."

It must be borne in mind that appellants are not selling their copyrights; they are merely licensing them for short periods.

The Copyright Act directly protects appellants in the story as it appears on the film, and the owner has all the nine exclusive rights given by Section 1 including the right of public performance [Sec. 1(d)]; the licenses issued by appellants to exhibitors are confined merely to that right of public performance. Obviously, all the other exclusive rights given to appellants under Section 1 (such as the right to multiply copies, vend, translate, adapt, etc., etc.) are retained by appellants; and since the one right to publicly perform is granted for a short period, this amounts to a license merely (Widenski v. Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., Inc., 147 Fed. [2] 909; Waterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U. S. 252, 255).

Of course there is a vast difference between a license and a sale. "* * * a license is only a personal permission to the grantee to infringe the grantor's right" (MacGillivray, The Law of Copyright, p. 81) equivalent to a bare covenant not to sue (Heap v. Hartley (1889), 42 Ch. Div. 461, 470) and is "merely the grant of a privilege which protects the licensee against a claim for infringement" (Ball, Law of Copyright and Literary Property (1944), 530); "a dispensation or licence properly passes no interest (Copinger, The Law of Copyright, 7th Ed. p. 107); and is nothing more than "a mere exemption from suit" (Moto Meter Co. Inc. v. National Gauge & Equipment Co., 31 Fed. (2) 994, 996); or "leave to do a thing which the licensor would otherwise have a right to prevent". (Western Elec. Co. v. Pacent Reproducer Corp., 42 Fed. (2) 116, 118).

There is no provision in appellants' license agreements which requires the licensee to use the physical film in any particular manner. He may put it on any projection machine that he has available; he is not limited to any particular make of machine; he may employ any one or more projectionists of his own choice; he may run the film as often as he pleases within the term of his license period; in fact he is free to do anything with that film which will enable him to project the successive scenes upon his theatre screen. While it is true that a copyright owner in contradistinction to a patent owner, may not restrict the use of his work (Bauer v. O'Donnell, 229 U. S. 1), there is no proof in this record that appellants ever attempted or threatened to restrict the use of their physical copyrighted films.

Section 41 of the Copyright Act (17 U. S. C.) makes a distinction between the physical work itself and the subject matter of the copyright.

If appellants had sold the films and then made an attempt to control the use of the physical films in some way they would have gone far beyond their copyrights just as the copyright owners did in Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Strauss, 210 U. S. 339 and in Strauss v. American Pub. Ass'n, 231 U. S. 222, where it was sought to control the price of books after they had been sold and had passed out of the hands of the copyright owners, and the statutory right to vend had been exhausted.

Consequently, licensing and not selling, appellants may license their works to licensees of their own choice and upon their own terms. That right has been taken away from them.

2. Moreover there is a public policy involved here.

Basically and fundamentally, copyright is given for the primary benefit of the public at large. The incidental protection given to the author is merely the inducement by which that objective is attained. Chief Justice Marshall pointed that out in Grant v. Raymond, 6 Peters 218, where he said (p. 243):

> "The great object and intention of the act is to secure to the public the advantages to be derived from the discoveries of individuals, and the means it employs are the compensations made to those individuals for the time and labour devoted to these discoveries, by the exclusive right to make, use and sell, the things discovered for a limited time."

And only recently, the late Chief Justice Stone re-stated that doctrine with approval in Scott Paper Co. v. Mercalus Mfg. Co., 326 U. S. 249.

In dealing with copyrights and patents the Courts make a marked distinction between the wide powers of the owners to license their works, and the limits imposed upon them when they come to sell their works.

In Rubber Tire Wheel Co. v. Milwaukee Rubber Works Co., 154 Fed. 358 (C. C. A. 7) [cert. granted 207 U. S. 589; Cert. den. by stipulation 210 U. S. 439], a licensee under certain patents who had been limited by his contract as to the price of the article, defended a suit for the license fee, alleging violation of the Sherman Act by the patent owners, the licensors. The Court reversed a judgment for the defendant in an opinion by Circuit Judge Baker and a concurring opinion by Circuit Judge Grosscup. Judge Baker said (p. 361):

> "Under its constitutional right to legislate for the promotion of the useful arts, Congress passed the patent statutes. The public policy thereby declared is this: Inventive minds may fail to produce many useful things that they would produce if stimulated by the promise of a substanial reward; what is produced is the property of the inventor; he and his heirs and assigns may hold it as a secret till the end of time; the public would be largely benefited by obtaining conveyances of these new properties; so the people through their representatives say to the inventor: Deed us your property, possession to be yielded at the end of 17 years, and in the meantime we will protect you absolutely in the right to exclude everyone from making, using, or vending the thing patented, without your permission (citing cases). Congress, put no limitations, excepting time, upon the monopoly. Courts can create none without legislating. The monopoly is of the invention, the mental concept as distinguished from the materials that are brought together to give it a body. Use of the materials as noted above, may be enjoined as injurious to the public; but that does not invade the monopoly. Use of the invention cannot be had except on the inventor's terms. Without paying or doing whatever he exacts, no one can be exempted from his right to exclude. Whatever the terms, courts will enforce them, provided only that the licensee is not thereby required to violate some law outside of the patent law, like the doing of murder or arson. * * *" (Italics ours.)

Circuit Judge Sparks said in Mid-Continent Investment Company v. Mercoid Corporation (133 Fed. [2] 803, 810):

"Congress by authority of our Constitution, has pledged the public faith to each patent owner to exclude others from practicing his invention for a limited time, and the anti-trust laws do not forbid contracts between the owners of patents and their licensees which are legitimate and within the scope of the patent. Bement v. National Harrow Co., 186 U. S. 70, 22 S. Ct. 747, 46 L. Ed. 1058."

And in U. S. v. Vehicular Parking, 54 Fed. Supp., 828, the Court pointed out that the restraints of trade arise from the combination of patent owners and not from the exercise of the right granted by the patent to exclude others (p. 837).

See also:

U. S. v. General Elec. Co., 272 U. S. 476.

The Decree therefore, takes away from appellants their exclusive rights in their copyrights, prevents them from licensing their works to licensees of their own choice singly or in combination with other copyrighted works, compels them to accept license fees fixed by the users, and in many respects destroys and nullifies the monopoly of appellants' copyrights.

It thereby discourages the creation and publication of copyrighted works, and thus violates a settled public policy that goes back to Colonial days.

The Provisions of Paragraphs 8 and 9 of Section II of the Decree Amount to a Species of Compulsory License.

The Copyright Act of 1909 has a compulsory license feature in Section 1-e with respect to the manufacture of phonograph records. That was a compromise provision put in by reason of the fact that in 1908 this Court had decided in White-Smith Music Pub. Co. v. Appollo Company, 209 U. S. 1, that a piano-roll or other mechanical record was not a writing and therefore its unauthorized manufacture and sale did not infringe the copyright. In order to give authors some relief and yet encourage the industry to manufacture piano rolls and phonograph records, it was provided in Section 1-e of the Act of 1909 that if the owner licensed one recording company to make a mechanical reproduction of his musical composition, any other mechanical company had an equal right to do so upon the payment of a two cent royalty. By this method no one company may build up a monopoly of records.

Standard Music Roll Company v. F. A. Mills, Inc., 241 Fed. 360, 363.

There is no other compulsory license provision in the Copyright Act, and none whatever in the Patent Statutes.

This Court pointed out in Hartford-Empire Co. v. U. S., 323 U. S. 386, at pp. 412-8, that certain provisions of the decree there involved should be modified. The Court held that a patent was protected against appropriation either by individuals or by the Government, and that in enjoining violations of the Sherman Act the Court refrained invariably from action which amounted to a forfeiture of the patents, (p. 415). It also analyzed the various attempts that had been made by Congress from 1877 down to adopt a system of compulsory licensing of patents, and it showed that Congress had never taken such action. It was our understanding of the Hartford-Empire case that the Court had rejected those provisions of the decree which provided for the compulsory licensing of defendants' patents free of royalties, although it did provide for a compulsory license upon reasonable royalties.

A provision for compulsory license upon payment of reasonable royalties was again arrived at and upheld in the more recent case of U. S. v. National Lead Company, 332 U. S. 319. There the Court seemed to base its decision largely upon the rule that in patent infringement suits the Court frequently grants the patent owner damage by way of an established or reasonable royalty. While that rule is true in a patent case, it has never been applied to a copyright case, for the simple reason that the provisions of the patent statutes governing damages provide only for actual damage or an account of profits, whereas the copyright statutes provide for actual damage, an account of profits and also for statutory damage. Giving a successful plaintiff a reasonable royalty in a patent infringement suit is simply a device to give him something where he is unable to prove either damages or profits. That distinction has been clearly recognized and commented on, particularly in the case of Widenski v. Shapiro, Bernstein & Company, Inc., 147 Fed. (2d) 909, where Judge Woodbury said (p. 911):

> "It is indicated in the case last cited and established in Enterprise Mfg. Co. v. Shakespeare Co., 141 F. (2d) 916, 919, and the cases cited therein, that proof of either established or reasonable royalties may be resorted to in patent cases only when the patentee is unable to make satisfactory proof of his actual damage and the actual profits of the infringer. That is to say, a plaintiff in a patent case, if he prevails on the issue of infringement, may recover upon the basis of an established or reasonable royalty only after he has failed to prove satisfactorily his own loss and the infringer's profits. Thus the royalty rule provides successful plaintiffs in patent suits who have been harmed but cannot prove either their actual damages or the defendant's actual profits with a means to escape the hollow victory of an award of purely nominal damages. But the Copyright Act itself makes provisions for similiarly situated plaintiffs in copyright cases in the 'in lieu' clause of § 25 (b), a provision not found in the corresponding section of the Patent Law, (35 U. S. C. A. § 70) and from this we conclude that is a substitute for the established or reasonable royalty rule applied in patent cases."

Since there is no rule of damages by way of reasonable royalty in a copyright infringement suit, the basis for compulsory licensing which existed in the National Lead case does not exist in respect of a Sherman anti-trust suit affecting copyrights.

Consequently there is no basis for a compulsory license of appellant's copyrights, whether such license is to be upon the price offered by the highest bidder or any other price.

In that respect the Decree likewise violates appellants' exclusive rights in their copyrights, both in those existing, and those that will be acquired in the future.

The Decree makes no distinction between copyrights that existed up to the time of the trial and copyrights that would be created or acquired in the future.

Even the Hartford-Empire case and the National Lead case confined themselves solely to patents which were in existence at the time of the suit and which were the subject of the suit. The Court did not attempt to impose a reasonable license fee upon patents which might be obtained in the future. This Decree does that very thing.

In short, the Decree penalizes appellants in property which they would acquire in the future for acts committed in the past. It is the severest form of penalty conceivable, and so far as we know has never been invoked before.

The Decree Violates the Fifth Amendment of the Federal Constitution in That it Deprives Appellants of Their Property Without Due Process of Law. This Property Consists of Copyrights and Good-will.

In Curtis on Copyright, the author says (p. 5):

> "In the second place, all property possesses two uses, or qualities. First, it implies the right of possession and use, which constitutes a part of the ownership, or appropriation of the individual. This right of possession and use is full and exclusive. The object may be enjoyed by the individual in any mode consistent with the general welfare; a limitation which does not arise from any inherent defect in the right itself, but is imposed upon it from without. Secondly, property implies the faculty of transmission, by exchange, or sale, or gift. Transmission, is unrestrained, carries with it the full and exclusive right of possession and use of the original owner, indefinitely, so that the object remains forever separated from a community of goods. But, as the original owner may grant the whole unrestricted right of possession and use, so it follows that he may grant a less right than he himself enjoyed, by restricting or qualifying the use. He may thus specify the uses for which he does or does not grant the possession, and may annex various conditions upon which the possession shall be held."

See also, Parton v. Prang, 18 Fed. Cas. #1873, at p. 1278.

To destroy appellants' right to license their literary property upon their own terms is to deprive them of the aforementioned incidence of ownership. As Drone said in his famous work on Copyright (p. 6):

> "The very meaning of the word 'property' in its legal sense is 'that which is peculiar or proper to any person; that which belongs exclusively to one.' The first meaning of the word from which it is derived—proprius—is 'one's own'."

And further on, the author (p. 13), says:

> "* * * The exclusive right of using and transferring property is a necessary consequence of the recognition of the right of property itself."

Pointing out that there should be no distinction in that right between literary property and other kinds of property, the author said as far back as 1879 (pp. 52-3):

> "The progress of legislation and jurisprudence is constantly uprooting bad laws. The light of to-day shows the mistakes of yesterday. The errors of to-day will be exposed by the enlightenment of to-morrow. Progress is fatal to wrong. Time alone will show whether the grand principles governing literary property so well expounded by Lord Mansfield and other great jurists will again prevail; whether the judgment proclaimed by the Court of King's Bench in 1769 will again be recognized as the true law; whether the truth will again become clear to all, as it was to Mr. Justice Thompson when he said, 'Every principle of justice, equity, morality, fitness, and sound policy, concurs in protecting the literary labors of men to the same extent that property acquired by manual labor is protected; and as it was to Mr. Justice Baldwin when he maintained, that 'to place the proprietors of literary property on a worse footing in courts of equity than the owners of other property would not only be subversive of all principles of justice, but in direct repugnance to the spirit of the Constitution and laws.' But, until these things shall come to pass, an inviolable right will be denied to men of letters."

Mr. Justice Roberts in his dissenting opinion in Interstate Circuit v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208, said, at p. 236:

"* * * The exhibition of a photoplay, were it not for the copyright law, would amount to a public disclosure and the use of the material would thereafter be open to the public. All the Copyright Act does is to create a form of property in the literary or artistic production of the author or artist. The Act attaches to the product of his brain certain attributes of property. One of these is the right of exclusive use similar to that attaching to physical property; another is the right to sell the production with consequent exclusive enjoyment in the vendee; another is the right to license others to use the product as one might lease or bail real or personal property. The monopoly, so called, amounts to no more than the attachment to the work of an author or composer or producer of motion pictures of the same rights as in here in other property under the common law. Therefore, the standing of the distributor defendants toward their customers, as respects the productions proposed to be licensed, differs in no way from that of the owner of any other property toward those to whom he leases or licenses its use or sale."

And at page 239:

"Once the property rights conferred by the Copyright law are recognized it must follow that the principles governing the right to use, sell, or turn to account other forms of property are equally applicable here."

We believe that in that respect the Court did not differ with Mr. Justice Roberts.

In Buck v. Gibbs, 34 Fed. Supp. 510 (modified on other grounds, 313 U. S. 387) Circuit Judge Hutcheson, referred to a statute which required copyright owners to furnish schedules giving the prices of the compositions so licensed and permitting anyone desiring to do so to perform any piece at the price so fixed. He said:

> "This is a taking of plaintiffs' property in its copyright without due process."

The instant Decree treats the appellants as if they were a public utility, indeed, a public utility in the interest of 18,000 motion picture exhibitors, that being the "public". We know of no decision which has ever held that the motion-picture business is affected with a public interest to the extent that gas, electricity or railroads are affected with such interest.

Even were Congress to attempt such a regulation of this business, it would be unconstitutional.

Not only do appellants suffer the loss of their copyright monopoly, but the Decree deprives them as well of their valuable good-will in violation of the Fifth Amendment.

The Decree has enjoined the furtherance of a conspiracy. Whatever may be said of their conduct heretofore, each of the defendants, including the appellants, is now bound under penalty of contempt to act alone and not in unison with others. Acting in this way and not in combination, this Court had said (Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291, 312):

> "It is doubtless true that each of the distributors, acting separately, could have refused to furnish films to the exhibitor without becoming amenable to the provisions of the act, but here it is alleged that they combined and conspired together to prevent him from leasing from any of them. The illegality consists, not in the separate action of each, but in the conspiracy and combination of all to prevent any of them from dealing with the exhibitor. See United States v. Schrader's Son, Inc., 252 U. S. 85, 99; Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 139 Fed. 155, 191."

So that in the instant case we have a taking of property which is not being used in the furtherance of a conspiracy, as was the case in Interstate Circuit Inc. v. U. S., 306 U. S. 208 or in the Binderup case supra.

Those portions of the instant Decree which relate to "clearance" and "run" amply protect the exhibitors against any illegal action by appellants; exhibitors do not require paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of Section II as a safeguard. Not only are those provisions illegal, but they are unnecessary.

CONCLUSION

The injunctive provisions against block-booking and the requirement for auction selling contained respectively in Paragraph 7 and Paragraphs 8 and 9 of Section II of the decree should be reversed and stricken from the decree.

Findings Nos. 1, 93, 94, 97, 154 and 156 and conclusions Nos. 8 and 11 should likewise be reversed and stricken for failure of proof and want of jurisdiction.

The decree should be modified in the above respects.

Respectfully submitted,

SCHWARTZ & FROHLICH,
Attorneys for Appellants Columbia.

LOUIS D. FROHLICH,
ARTHUR H. SCHWARTZ,
of Counsel.

156

No. 79

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
DEC 16 1947
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

79431
Lyn 5

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant,

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., ET AL., Appellees.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

PETITION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE IN BEHALF OF THE CONFERENCE OF INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATIONS.

ABRAM F. MYERS,
Counsel for the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations,
729 Fifteenth Street, N.W.,
Washington 5, D. C.

PRESS OF BYRON S. ADAMS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

CONTENTS.

	Page
I. Description of the Petitioner	2
II. Reasons for Granting Petition	3
III. Service of Petition and Brief and Attitude of Counsel	5
Attachment A. List of Associations Comprising the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations	7
Attachment B. List of Counsel upon whom Copies of This Petition and the Brief Were Served	9

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947.

No. 79.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,[1] Appellant,

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., ET AL., Appellees.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

PETITION FOR LEAVE TO FILE A BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE IN BEHALF OF THE CONFERENCE OF INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATIONS.

To the Honorable,
The Supreme Court of the United States:

Comes now the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations, by its counsel, and respectfully petitions the Supreme Court of the United States for leave to file a brief

[1] The proffered brief has a bearing on all of the several appeals from the decree of the District Court, namely, Nos. 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85 and 86 and copies of this petition and of the brief have been sent to counsel for all parties. Because the several appeals are to be heard together, and constitute one case, it was deemed sufficient to entitle the petition and brief only in No. 79, the Government's appeal.

as amicus curiae in the above-entitled cause; and in support of its petition it informs the Court as follows:

I. DESCRIPTION OF THE PETITIONER.

1. The Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations, for the purposes of this petition, represents 26 national and regional associations, with a combined membership of upwards of 4,000 independent motion picture theatres; that is to say, motion picture theatres which are not owned, controlled or operated by, or affiliated with, any producer or distributor of motion picture films.[2]

2. The Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations was formed primarily to represent the interests of the exhibitor members of its constituent associations in this litigation. The need for such action arises from the fact that those constituent associations constitute all or nearly all of the exhibitor associations which are exclusively composed of independent motion picture exhibitors, or which are exclusively under independent management or control.

3. All other exhibitor associations including those involved in Nos. 85 and 86, which are seeking to intervene, include among their officers and members affiliated exhibitors (i.e., theatre operators employed by or in partnership with one or more of the producer-distributors) and affiliated theatres (i.e., theatres owned or controlled by the producer-distributors). (Stenographer's minutes, Oct. 21, 1946, pp. 2873-2874.) Should the petitions of these putative intervenors be allowed, and there is an alignment according to interest, their affiliated members would necessarily be joined as parties defendant. The independent exhibitors cannot entrust their interests to such representation.

---

[2] The national and regional associations comprising the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations are set forth in Attachment A, infra p. 7.

II. REASONS FOR GRANTING PETITION.

4. Although the Government in its original complaint sought to divest the appellees (hereinafter called "defendants") of their theatre holdings and to enjoin certain monopolistic practices, all of which would have been beneficial to the independent exhibitors, the lower court saw fit to ignore those traditional Sherman Act remedies and to substitute therefor a burdensome, complicated and unworkable system of judicial regulation for which there is no authority in law and which bears more heavily upon the independent exhibitors than it does upon the defendant producer-distributors and their affiliated theatre chains.

5. An extraordinary feature of the regulatory system imposed by the District Court is that it applies not only to situations where defendants' theatres compete with one another for films, or to situations where defendants' theatres compete with independent theatres, but actually extends to competitions between independent theatres which theatres are not parties to the suit or implicated in the charges of wrongdoing.

6. The independent exhibitors thus stand in the position of innocent bystanders. The Government has charged them with no wrong-doing and they are not implicated as willing participants in any of the unlawful actions denounced by the lower court. Yet under the lower court's decree the defendants' theatre monopoly, against which the Government complained, has been left virtually intact and there has been saddled upon the independent exhibitors a high degree of regulation which is not only burdensome in itself but will actually handicap them in their efforts to compete with the producer-owned chains.

7. In tendering its brief the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations acts in subordination to the Attorney General who is charged by law with the duty of enforcing the Sherman Act. Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, Sec. 4; 15 U.S.C.A., Ch. 1, Sec. 4. The Conference by formal action has approved and now supports the purpose of the Attorney General to secure the principal relief prayed for, namely, the complete, permanent and effectual separation of the production and exhibition branches of the motion picture industry. Such relief, in the opinion of the Conference, will open the screens of the great first-run affiliated theatres to new producers and distributors and thus restore competition in the motion picture industry; and will end the incentive to discriminate and thus halt the discrimination practiced by the defendants in favor of their own theatres and those of one another and against the independent theatres.

8. The pressing need for the submission of a brief in behalf of the independent exhibitors is not merely to support the Government's case—that is in competent hands—but to point out to the Court the impractical and unworkable features of the lower court's decree and how they adversely and unfairly affect the independent exhibitors. This need is emphasized by the fact that the Government rested its case upon documentary evidence and called no independent exhibitors as witnesses, the only oral testimony being that presented by the defendants in behalf of themselves and their affiliated chains. Thus while the record is teeming with testimony giving the defendants' version of industry conditions as revealed by the Government's exhibits, there are no interpretations or explanations to show affirmatively how those conditions affect the independent exhibitors.

9. More important than that is the fact that this Court is called upon to review a decree which sets up an elaborate system for regulating the entire motion picture industry, including the independent exhibitors. The production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures is a complicated and peculiar business quite unlike any other. Films are leased (not sold) to different classes of theatres, for staggered runs, with varying time lapses between runs and upon a wide variety of terms and conditions, especially as to the amount and methods of computing film rentals. Only the independent exhibitors, acting through their own associations and their own counsel, have the requisite experience and stimulus to point out to the Court wherein the lower court's decree bears unfairly and unjustly upon them.

10. Finally, in the event that this Court should decide that some measure of regulation similar to that provided by the lower court is justified as interim relief or otherwise, the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations desires to offer concrete suggestions for making the decree as workable from a practical standpoint, and as little burdensome upon the innocent independent exhibitors, as possible.

III. SERVICE OF PETITION AND BRIEF AND ATTITUDE OF COUNSEL.

11. On December 10, 1947 a copy of the proffered brief was sent by registered mail to counsel in all eight appeals with the request that they consent to the filing thereof. Such counsel are listed in Attachment B, page 9 of this petition.

(a) Those Consenting.

Hon. Philip B. Perlman, Solicitor General of the United States, has consented in writing to the filing of the brief.

Hon. Thurman Arnold, counsel for the appellants in No. 85, advises that he has no objection to the filing of the brief and that he will so notify the Clerk.

(b) Those Not Consenting.

Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, Esqrs., counsel for Paramount Pictures, Inc., appellant in No. 81, advise that their client is not willing to consent to the filing of the brief.

No word has been received from other counsel. Since counsel for the producer-distributor defendants opposed the filing of a brief in behalf of the independent exhibitors in the District Court, it is presumed that they will also oppose the filing of such a brief in this Court.

A copy of this petition has been sent by registered mail to each counsel listed in Attachment B with notice that the petition and brief have been filed with the Clerk for presentation to the Court.

Respectfully submitted,

ABRAM F. MYERS,
Counsel for the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations,
729 Fifteenth Street, N.W.,
Washington 5, D. C.

ATTACHMENT A.

List of Associations Constituting the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations.

---

1. Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, 729 15th St., N.W., Washington, D. C., a federation of independent exhibitor associations, with the following constituent bodies:

(a) Independent Exhibitors, Inc. (of New England), 36 Melrose St., Boston, Mass., with members in Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island.

(b) Allied Theatres of Connecticut, Inc., 902 Chapel Street, New Haven, Conn.

(c) Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, Inc., 234 W. 44th Street, New York, N. Y.

(d) Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Eastern Pennsylvania, Inc., 219 N. Broad St., Philadelphia, Pa.

(e) Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Maryland, Inc., 531 N. Howard St., Baltimore, Md.

(f) Allied Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, Inc., 84 Van Braam Street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

(g) West Virginia Theatre Managers' Association, 1632 Central Parkway, Cincinnati, Ohio.

(h) Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio, 55 E. State St., Columbus, Ohio.

(i) Allied Theatres of Michigan, Inc., Fox Theatre Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(j) Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, Inc., 444 N. Illinois St., Indianapolis, Indiana, with members in Indiana and Kentucky.

(k) Allied Theatres of Illinois, Inc., 1325 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

(l) Independent Theatre Owners of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, 709 N. 11th Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

(m) North Central Allied Independent Theatre Owners, Inc., 253 Loeb Arcade, Minneapolis, Minn., with members in Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota.

(n) Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa-Nebraska, Inc., Eldora, Iowa.

(o) Allied Rocky Mountain Independent Theatres, 921 21st St., Denver, Colorado, with members in Colorado and Wyoming.

(p) Allied Theatre Owners of the Gulf States, 223 S. Liberty St., New Orleans, La., with members in Louisiana, Alabama, Florida and Mississippi.

(q) Allied Theatre Owners of Texas, 2011½ Jackson Street, Dallas, Texas.

2. Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners, 1914 S. Vermont Avenue, Los Angeles, Cal., a federation of independent exhibitor associations, including the following:

(a) Independent Theatre Owners of Southern California and Arizona, 1914 S. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.

(b) Independent Theatre Owners of Northern California and Nevada, 369 Turk Street, San Francisco, Cal.

(c) Independent Theatre Owners of Washington, Northern Idaho and Alaska, 101 Battery St., Seattle, Wash.

(d) Independent Theatre Owners of Oregon, 1931 N.W. Kearney St., Portland, Ore.

(e) Montana Theatre Owners Association, Wolf Point, Mont.

(f) Independent Theatre Owners of Utah and Southern Idaho, Salt Lake City, Utah.

3. Unaffiliated Independent Exhibitors (of New York City), 625 Eighth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

ATTACHMENT B.

List of Counsel to Whom Copies of This Petition and the Proffered Brief Were Mailed.

1. Philip B. Perlman, Esq., Solicitor General, Department of Justice, Washington, D. C., for the United States of America.
2. John W. Davis, Esq., 15 Broad Street, New York, N. Y., for Loew's, Inc.
3. Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett, Esqrs., 120 Broadway, New York, N. Y., for Paramount.
4. Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Lombard, Esqrs., 2 Wall Street, New York, N. Y., for R-K-O.
5. Joseph M. Proskauer, Esq., 11 Broadway, New York, N. Y., for Warner Bros.
6. Dwight, Harris, Koegel & Caskey, Esqrs., 100 Broadway, New York, N. Y., for 20th Century-Fox.
7. O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, Esqrs., 152 W. 42d St., New York, N. Y., for United Artists.
8. Schwartz & Frolich, Esqrs., 1450 Broadway, New York, N. Y., for Columbia.
9. Charles D. Prutzman, Esq., and Adolph Schimmel, Esq., 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, N. Y., for Universal.
10. Thurman Arnold, Esq., Bowen Building, Washington, D. C., for American Theatres Association.
11. Paul Williams, Esq., 1914 S. Vermont Ave., Los Angeles, Cal., for Southern California Theatre Owners Association.
12. Robert T. Barton, Mutual Building, Richmond, Va., for Allred and others.

FILE COPY

No. 79

Office - Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
DEC 22 1947
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant,

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC. ET AL., Appellees.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE.

SUBMITTED IN BEHALF OF THE CONFERENCE OF INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATIONS.

ABRAM F. MYERS,
Counsel for the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations,
729 Fifteenth Street, N. W.,
Washington 5, D. C.

PRESS OF BYRON S. ADAMS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	Page
I. Independent Exhibitors Have a Vital Interest in the Outcome of the Case	1
1. Their vulnerable position	1
2. Impact of defendants' theatre monopoly	3
3. Impact of defendants' film monopoly	5
4. Impact of the lower court's decree	8
5. The independent exhibitors are rendering a valuable public service and should be protected	11
II. The Competitive Bidding System Prescribed by the District Court is Unauthorized, Unworkable, Ineffective and Mischievous	13
1. It is unauthorized by the Sherman Act	13
2. It is utterly unworkable	17
3. It is wholly ineffective	19
4. It will be mischievous in its effects	21
III. The Competitive Bidding Plan if Retained for Any Purpose or Any Length of Time Should Be Fortified by Additional Remedies and Made More Workable by Amendments	23
1. If the plan has any value, it is only as interim partial relief pending divestiture	23
2. In order to make immediately available the benefits of divestiture, the bidding system should be accompanied by a ban on cross-licensing	24
3. Competitive bidding to be comparable must be on a flat rental basis	25
4. Bidding on a flat rental basis will eliminate the evil incidents of percentage playing	26
5. Additional amendments are required to make the system workable	28
IV. Defendants Deal with the Independent Exhibitors Only Upon Long, Complicated and Well-nigh Uniform Contract Forms, Devised in Their Own Interest and Almost Wholly Lacking in Mutuality	29

Page

1. Defendants' license agreements taken together and in their entirety constitute a uniform method of doing business 29

2. Defendants' license agreements are uniform and non-competitive in virtually all particulars 31

3. The continuing conspiracy among the defendants is shown by substantially uniform revisions of the contract forms 36

V. Outline of an Effective Final Decree, Consistent with the Sherman Act, Respectfully Submitted for Consideration in Framing the Mandate to the District Court 38

1. "The extension of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist" 38

(a) Divestiture 38

(b) The remedy is not extreme 39

(c) The defendants possess and have exercised the power to dictate runs, clearances, admission prices and other details of theatre operation, and that power has been exercised to the detriment of the public and the injury of the independent exhibitors 41

(d) All connections between the producer-distributors and their theatres should be terminated and the future independence of the theatres assured 44

(e) Defendants should be required to dispose of their holdings in jointly-owned theatres and should not be permitted to buy out their co-owners 45

(f) Pending disposition of defendants' theatre interests provision should be made for adequate interim relief in the form of a ban on cross-licensing. 46

Page

2. "To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute". 46

(a) An injunction against the practice of discrimination in the licensing of films should be included 47

(b) All injunctive provisions of the lower court's decree except Sec. II (8) and Sec. III (5) are appropriate and should be affirmed 47

3. The burden of enforcing compliance with the decree should not be cast upon the independent exhibitors by arbitration or otherwise 48

CASES CITED.

American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 106, 55 Law Ed. 662 21

Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures et al. (C. C. A. 7th) 150 Fed. 2d. 877 4

Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures et al., 327 U. S. 251, 90 Law Ed. 652 ..... 4, 10

Continental Insurance Co. v. United States et al., 259 U. S. 156, 56 Law Ed. 871 40

Continental Insurance Co. v. United States et al., Order for re-argument, 257 U. S. 622, 56 Law Ed. 402 .. 40

Federal Trade Commission v. Klesner, 274 U. S. 145, 71 Law Ed. 972 13

Goldman v. Loew's, Inc. et al., (D. C. En. Pa.) 54 Fed. Supp. 1101 4

Goldman v. Loew's, Inc. et al. (C. C. A. 3d) 150 Fed. 2d 738 ..... 4, 6

International Salt Company v. United States, No. 46, decided Nov. 10, 1947, Adv. Ops. Law Ed. Vol. 92, No. 2, p. 55 47

Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 83 Law Ed. 610 37-38

Klein v. Board of Tax Supervisors, 282 U. S. 19, 75 Law Ed. 140 9

Page

Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. et al. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30, 75 Law Ed. 145 ..... 5, 6, 29, 41-42
RKO Radio Pictures et al. v. Bigelow (C. C. A. 7th) 162 Fed. 2d (Adv.) 520 ..... 4, 10
RKO Radio Pictures et al. v. Bigelow, Certiorari denied, Nov. 10, 1947, Law Ed. Adv., Vol. 92, No. 2, p. 79 10
Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al. v. Langer, Attorney General, 23 Fed. Supp. 890 43-44
Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al. v. Langer, Attorney General, Order of reversal for lack of actuality, 306 U. S. 619, 83 Law Ed. 1025 43
Schenley Distillers Corp. v. United States, 326 U. S. 432, 90 Law Ed. 181 9-10
Standard Oil Company et al. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 55 Law Ed. 619 ..... 14, 21, 38, 46
United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 89 Law Ed. 160 ..... 4, 11
United States v. First National Pictures, Inc. et al., 282 U. S. 44, 75 Law Ed. 151 ..... 30, 33
United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693, 71 Law Ed. 1302 21-
United States v. National Lead Company, No. 89, Oct. Term, 1946, Order entered Oct. 17, 1947, Adv. Ops. Law Ed. Vol. 92, No. 1, p. 26 38-39
United States v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. et al. (D. C. Sn. N. Y.) 34 Fed. 2d 984 ..... 29, 35
United States v. Paramount Pictures, Inc. et al. (this case below) 70 Fed. Supp. 53 ..... 5, 6, 23
United States v. Reading Company et al., 253 U. S. 26, 64 Law Ed. 760 ..... 39-41, 44
United States v. Schine Chain Theatres et al. (D. C. Wn. N. Y.) 63 Fed. Supp. 229 4
United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S. 290, 41 Law Ed. 1007 ..... 12-13, 21
United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 61, 57 Law Ed. 124 45
United States v. Union Pacific R. R. Co., 226 U. S. 670, 57 Law Ed. 306, Order on form of mandate 45
United States v. United States Steel Corp., 251 U. S. 417, 64 Law Ed. 343 21

Page

OTHER CITATIONS.

Constitution, Art. I, Sec. 8 13
Report of Senate Interstate Commerce Committee on Neely Anti-Block Booking Bill, June 15, 1938, S. Rep. 2378, 74th Cong. 2d Sess. 11
Temporary National Economic Committee, Monograph No. 21, "Competition and Monopoly in American Industry" 48-49
Temporary National Economic Committee, Monograph No. 26, "Economic Power and Political Pressure" 49
Temporary National Economic Committee, Monograph No. 43, "The Motion Picture Industry, a Pattern of Control" 49

STATUTE.

Sherman Anti-Trust Act, Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. A. Ch. 1 13

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1947.

No. 79.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appellant,

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC. ET AL., Appellees.

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

BRIEF AS AMICUS CURIAE.

SUBMITTED IN BEHALF OF THE CONFERENCE OF INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATIONS.[1]

I.

INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS HAVE A VITAL INTEREST IN THE OUTCOME OF THIS CASE.

1. Their vulnerable position. The independent motion picture exhibitors (i.e. independent of producer-distributor ownership, operation or influence) have a stake in this litigation second to none.

[1] The Conference consists of 26 national and regional associations of independent motion picture exhibitors. It was formed primarily to represent the independent exhibitors in this litigation. The constituent associations are listed in the petition for leave to file this brief.

It is not going too far to say that whether or not they remain in the motion picture business depends largely upon the outcome of this case and the nature of the final decree to be entered.

While large in number, the independent exhibitors nevertheless occupy a vulnerable position. They are dependent upon the eight major producer-distributors—the defendants herein—for necessary supplies of quality films with which to operate their theatres. To the extent that they operate in the same competitive areas with the affiliated theatres,[2] they are competitors as well as customers of the theatre-owning producer-distributors and are treated as such. And even where the independents do not now compete with the affiliated chains, they must live in dread that their areas may be invaded. Moreover, the pattern of conduct of all the defendants, whether or not they now operate theatres, is to discriminate in favor of the affiliated theatres and against the independents, as revealed by the opinion and findings of the lower court.

To fully appreciate the precarious position of the independent exhibitors, it is necessary to distinguish between the methods by which the motion picture business is conducted and those which prevail in other industries. Each film is copyrighted, it can be obtained only from the distributor releasing it, it cannot be duplicated elsewhere. An independent exhibitor cannot walk into one of the defendants' film exchanges, select the films he wants and exhibit them at his pleasure. Whether he may have a film for exhibition on first, second, third, or fourth run in a competitive area, the amount of time that shall elapse between the preceding run and the one granted him, and many other details including when and how he may advertise and how much he shall charge, rest in the discretion of the distributor. And the distributor is under no compulsion to license a film to the exhibitor on any run or on any terms, unless it is so minded.

[2] Theatres owned, controlled or operated by one or more of the five theatre-owning defendants, or in which they have an interest.

2. Impact of defendants' theatre monopoly. Under these conditions the five theatre-owning defendants (Paramount, Loew's, 20th Century-Fox, Warner Bros. and RKO) have been able to acquire and maintain a virtual monopoly of the large city first-run theatres, and to acquire and maintain a virtual monopoly of all classes of theatres in certain areas. As an illustration, we cite the situation in Washington with which the Court may possibly be familiar. There are six downtown theatres which exhibit major company feature length films on a first run policy. Of these the ~~Capitol,~~ Palace and Columbia[3] are operated by defendant Loew's, Inc.; the Warner (formerly Earle) and Metropolitan[3] are operated by defendant Warner Bros.; and RKO Keith's is operated by defendant RKO. In addition, Warner Bros. operates 20 neighborhood theatres in Washington and its environs.[4]

The lower court sought to minimize this monopoly condition by comparing the total number of affiliated theatres with the total number of independent theatres. This indicated that the defendants together control only about 17.35 per cent of the motion picture theatres in the United States. But such a comparison can have relevancy only upon the theory that every theatre in the United States competes with every other theatre—a patent absurdity. The court passed over lightly the numerous territorial monopolies re-

[3] The Columbia and Metropolitan are sometimes used for move-overs. A move-over is an extended first-run, the film being transferred from the first-run to the move-over theatre without any intervening time lapse. (Rodgers, Steno. Minutes, Oct. 23, 1945, pp. 553-555.)

[4] Ambassador, Apollo, Avalon, Avenue Grand, Beverley, Calvert, Central, Colony, Home, Kennedy, McArthur, Penn, Savoy, Seco, Sheridan, Silver, Takoma, Tivoli, Uptown and York. (Warner Bros. Theatres' advertisement regularly appearing in the Washington Post and the Washington Evening Star.)

vealed by the Government's proof and which are illustrated by the decisions in Goldman v. Loew's, Inc. et al. (D. C. En. Pa.), 54 Fed. Supp. 1101, (C. C. A. 3d) 150 Fed. 2d 738; and Bigelow v. RKO Radio Pictures et al. (C. C. A. 7th), 150 Fed. 2d 877, 162 Fed. 2d (Adv.) 520, (U. S. Sup. Ct.) 327 U. S. 251, 90 Law Ed. 652. And it failed to apply to defendants' territorial monopolies the principles of United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. 173, 89 Law Ed. 160 and United States v. Schine Chain Theatres et al. (D. C. Wn. N. Y.), 63 Fed. Supp. 229.

Moreover, the lower court in shrugging off defendants' theatre monopoly gave no weight to the superior size, importance, influence and earning power of the prior-run affiliated theatres in contrast to most independent theatres. All first-class films must filter through the prior-runs to the subsequent-run theatres. If there is delay in exhibiting the pictures on first-run, the subsequent-runs must wait for the product. Thus when a dispute arose between Paramount as a distributor and Loew's as an exhibitor in New York City, Paramount's releases were withheld from the subsequent-runs in that area for a period of eight months while the difficulty was being adjusted. (Reagan, Sten. Min. Oct. 24, 1945, pp. 776-777.) Hence, the subsequent-runs in a very real sense operate by sufferance of the prior-runs.

Finally, the lower court in holding that it is "unlikely that theatre owners having aggregate interests of little more than one-sixth of all the theatres in the United States are exercising such a monopoly . . . that they should be subjected to the drastic remedy of complete divestiture," overlooked one of its most important findings of fact. Defendants' theatres by reason of their size, location, priority of run, high admission prices and other advantages, provide almost one-half of the total film revenue derived from the domestic market. Finding No. 126 reads, in part, as follows:

The 17.35 per cent of theatres which comprise the five circuits of the major defendants[5] pay from 35 to 54 per cent of the total domestic film rental respectively received by the eight distributor defendants and 45 per cent of the total domestic film rental received by all of said distributor defendants.

It is against these powerful circuits that the widely scattered and individually weak independent exhibitors must bid for films, runs and clearance if the Government's plea for divestiture is denied and the lower court's regulatory system is affirmed. Moreover, new producers and distributors without the stimulus of free access to this tremendous prior-run revenue cannot be expected to enter the field in competition with the eight major producer-distributors.

The continuance in business of the independent exhibitors can be assured, and the way opened for new sources of product, only by the complete separation of production and distribution from exhibition.

3. Impact of defendants' film monopoly. In Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30, 75 Law Ed. 145, decided by this Court in 1930, the finding was that the ten companies there involved were "producers and distributors throughout the Union of 60 per cent of the films used for displaying motion pictures by some twenty-five thousand theatre owners" (p. 36).[6]

The opinion of the lower court in the present case shows that "during the 1943-1944 season the eight defendants distributed about 77.6 per cent of all features nationally distributed except 'westerns' and low cost productions, and even if the latter inferior and non-competitive pictures are included, they distributed 65.5 per cent." The court further said that "The control of distribution closely resembles that appearing in Goldman Theatres, Inc. v. Loew's Inc. (C. C. A. 3d), 150 Fed. 2d 738," and quoted the following from the opinion in that case:

---

[5] In the lower court the five theatre-owning defendants became known as the "majors" and the other three defendants as the "minors." This is at variance with the parlance of the trade in which the defendants are all known as major companies and are sometimes called the "Big Eight." The terms "minor" and "independent" are reserved for such small organizations as Monogram and Republic.

[6] These companies were Paramount, First National, M-G-M (Loew's), Universal, United Artists, Fox, Pathe, FBO, Vitagraph, Educational.

> Defendants control the production and distribution of more than 80% of feature pictures in the country, and no exhibitor can successfully operate without access to defendants' product.[7]

The lower court's findings do not account for the shrinkage in the total number of major distributors since 1930. Notwithstanding the accession to the ranks of the majors of Columbia (which was not involved in the Paramount Famous Lasky Case), the total has shrunk from 10 to 8. However, Findings Nos. 35 to 37, inclusive, show that defendant Warner Bros. acquired First National Pictures, Inc. and Finding No. 38 shows that Vitagraph is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the same defendant. Finding No. 19 shows that defendant RKO absorbed FBO Productions, Inc. and we do not believe it will be disputed that RKO also absorbed Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Neither do the findings reflect the gradual reduction in the number of feature films annually released by the defendants. Finding No. 99 shows that during the 1943-1944 season the eight defendants together released 260 feature films, exclusive of "westerns." The affiliated first-run and key neighborhood theatres by reason of extended runs (a "smash hit" will sometimes be held over for three or four weeks) and move-overs, do not require as many feature pictures as the independent subsequent-run and small town theatres. Theatres of the latter class commonly change their programs two or three times a week, thus requiring from 104 to 156 features a year. Most of them are compelled by competitive conditions or custom to show double features; that is two feature pictures on every program. And in many instances the exhibitor must split the available product with a competitor having the same run.

---

[7] Actually the Goldman Case involved only seven of the eight major distributors, Universal having been eliminated by agreement.

It is apparent, therefore, that so far as the independent subsequent-run and small town theatres are concerned, there is a serious product shortage. This has the effect largely to destroy the bargaining power of the independent exhibitors in licensing film from the defendants. If an independent exhibitor does not like the terms demanded and conditions imposed by one of the defendant distributors for its products, he is in no position to reject the offer and apply to another distributor in hopes of securing a better bargain. That is why the defendants have been able to foist upon the independent exhibitors their onerous, one-sided and well-nigh uniform contract forms, to insist upon percentage deals which make the distributors partners in the theatre for the duration of the engagement, and to fix the admission prices to be charged, check the box office receipts and generally to exercise dominion over the independent theatres.[8]

With their own theatres adequately supplied with films, the theatre-owning defendants have no incentive to produce more in order to strengthen the position of the independent exhibitors. The non-theatre-owning defendants, which derive so large a part of their total film rentals from the affiliated theatres, are reluctant to jeopardize that revenue by catering to the independents. With approximately 50 per cent of their domestic film rental assured by their affiliated accounts, all defendants can out-last the independent exhibitors whenever a stalemate is reached in bargaining for films.

---

[8]Defendants' uniform contracts and forced percentage playing will be dealt with elsewhere in this brief.

The establishment of an elaborate system of competitive bidding for films, as proposed by the lower court, will not relieve but will aggravate the impact of the film monopoly upon the independent exhibitors. The true remedy is theatre-divorcement, thereby opening the screens of the affiliated theatres to new producers and new distributors, with new ideas, skills and talents to enter into competition with the Big Eight. The requirement of the Sherman Law and the function of the courts, we submit, is to restore competitive conditions and permit free enterprise to have its sway; not to erect complicated machinery for the regulation of competition.

4. Impact of the lower court's decree. The court below did not find the ownership and operation of theatres by the defendant producer-distributors to be inherently wrong or illegal. But it did find it illegal for the defendants to own or operate theatres jointly with one another or with others. And thus it arrived at the extraordinary conclusion that greater evil resides in the partial ownership of theatres than in total ownership. Accordingly, the court ordered that such joint ownerships be terminated in all cases where defendants' interest is more than 5 per cent and less than 95 per cent, leaving a 5 per cent tolerance at each end.

Had the requirement been that the defendants dispose of all such joint interests to third parties or to the independent interests involved, it would have been moderately impressive. But the order merely was that the relationships be terminated "by a sale to, or purchase from the co-owner or co-owners, or by a sale to a party not one of the defendants." (Decree, Sec. III, Par. (5), italics ours.) As hereinafter explained, such dispositions are to be made pursuant to the direction of the court.

And so the decree in conformity with the opinion is directed not at the ownership and operation of theatres per se, but is merely aimed at joint ownership.

Even if we indulge the assumption that the District Court, despite the sentiments expressed in its opinion, will take a strong stand against permitting the defendants to buy out their independent partners, the defendants nevertheless will retain a majority of their present theatres including most, if not all, of their metropolitan first-runs, which are "wholly-owned."

By Sec. IV of the decree it is provided that the defendants shall have the unlimited right "to license, or in any way arrange or provide for, the exhibition of any or all the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute, in such manner and upon such terms, and subject to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, in any theatre in which such distributor defendant has or may acquire pursuant to the terms of this Decree, a proprietary interest of 95 per cent or more either directly or through subsidiaries."

If the defendants owned their theatres in fee and operated them directly, thereby assuming all the hazards of theatre operation, there might be some justification for the District Court's ruling that they are entitled to play their own films in their own theatres on whatever terms they please. But the defendants rarely, if ever, own or operate theatres directly; that is done through subsidiary corporations. Sec. IV of the decree, above-quoted, nullifies the doctrine of separate corporate identity—not to give effect to a clear legislative purpose, but to defeat the will of Congress as expressed in the Sherman Act. "It leads nowhere to call a corporation a fiction", said Mr. Justice Holmes in Klein v. Board of Tax Supervisors, 282 U. S., 19, 24, 75 Law Ed. 140, 143. And he continued:

> If it is a fiction, it is a fiction created by law with intent that it should be acted on as true. The corporation is a person, and its ownership is a non-conductor that makes it impossible to attribute an interest in its property to its members.

The law on this subject was summed up in the Per Curiam opinion in Schenley Distillers Corp. v. United States, 326 U. S. 432, 436-437, 90 Law Ed. 181, 184:

> While corporate entities may be disregarded where they are made the implement for avoiding a clear legislative purpose; they will not be disregarded where those in control have deliberately adopted the corporate form in order to secure its advantages and where no violence to the legislative purpose is done by treating the corporate entity as a separate legal person. One who has created a corporate arrangement, chosen as a means of carrying out his business purposes, does not have the choice of disregarding the corporate entity in order to avoid the obligations which the state lays upon it for the protection of the public.

It is noteworthy that the decree entered by the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois in the Bigelow Case subsequent to the decision of this Court (327 U. S. 251, 90 Law Ed. 652), which decree was affirmed by the Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit (162 Fed. 2d (Adv.) 520, and which this Court declined to review on certiorari by an order entered November 10, 1947 (Law Ed. Adv. Vol. 92, No. 2, p. 79), contained, inter alia, a provision restricting the run of pictures in the distributors' downtown first-run theatres to two weeks, and made no exception as regards the playing of their own pictures in their own theatres.

As a substitute for the obviously effective remedy of complete divestiture,[9] and as a judicial cure-all for the evils set forth in its opinion and findings, the court provided that all theatres, whether distributor-owned or independent, shall bid competitively for films, theatre by theatre and picture by picture, in all competitive areas. (Decree Sec. II, Par. (8).)

The utter unworkability of the bidding system as blue printed by the District Court will be dealt with under a subsequent heading. For the time being it will suffice to point out that it would pit the lone independent exhibitor

---

[9] The lower court in its opinion conceded that "Undoubtedly such a step (divestiture) while not ipso facto preventing price-fixing agreements or unreasonable clearance, would terminate the Government's most urgent objections to the present methods of conducting the motion picture business."

against the marshaled strength of the distributor-owned chains, with their backlogs of parent company products, in bidding for films; that while this would enable the independent to bid for runs and clearances now enjoyed by the affiliated chains, it also would invite those chains to bid away the favorable runs and clearances which a few independents now receive from non-theatre-owning distributors; that the final and inevitable result would be to run up the price of film, if not, indeed, to enlarge the defendants' theatre monopoly.

5. The independent exhibitors are rendering a valuable public service and should be protected. Under the conditions outlined under the four preceding subheads, the independent exhibitors, with a few exceptions, have been relegated to neighborhood and suburban subsequent-runs in the large cities and to the small towns and rural communities.[10] Even so, they are rendering an important service, catering to the "family trade" and especially to child theatre-goers. They bring entertainment and relaxation to those who need it most, through a medium that combines drama, literature, music and scenic beauty, and at a price they can afford to pay.

In selecting pictures—to the extent that selectivity is vouchsafed to him—the independent exhibitor, as a member of the community in which he operates, is best qualified to know and meet the needs and preferences of his patrons. "Community preference" in motion picture entertainment which is the goal of numerous public groups interested in prohibiting the block-booking and blind-selling of films, can best be achieved through the local independent exhibitors.[11]

---

[10] This excludes the large so-called independent circuits such as Crescent, Schine and Griffith, whose power and business practices are not unlike those of the affiliated chains. This Court already has ruled upon Crescent (323 U. S. 173) and cases involving Griffith and Schine are now pending before it.

[11] Report of Senate Interstate Commerce Committee on Neely Anti-Block-Booking and Blind-Selling Bill, dated June 15, 1938, S. Rep. No. 2378, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. "The logical and only readily available point of contact between the motion picture industry and the community is the exhibitor."

That ideal is impossible of attainment through chain operated theatres, where the ultimate responsibility for film buying and other operating policies affecting the public is vested in home office executives often far removed from the communities served.

The Government did not see fit to offer oral testimony to dramatize the effects of the defendants' business policies and practices upon the independent exhibitors. The record is silent as to how many independent exhibitors sold out voluntarily to the affiliated chains or how many sold out reluctantly because the favored runs, clearance protection and many other advantages were being conferred upon the affiliated theatres and they realized that they could not compete under those conditions. Nevertheless, the lower court in its opinion found that "both independent distributors and independent exhibitors when attempting to bargain with the defendants have been met by a fixed scale of clearances, runs and admission prices to which they have been obliged to conform . . . ." And under the heading "Discrimination Among Licensees" it found that the competitive advantages conferred upon the affiliated theatres constituted "an unreasonable discrimination against small competitors in violation of the anti-trust laws."

These findings are amply justified by the proof and establish that defendants have the power to exclude independent distributors and independent exhibitors from the more lucrative runs and ultimately from the business. They also show that defendants' policies and practices are adapted to bring about such exclusion. It is only a question of degree; possibly a matter of time. In the meantime, the growth of existing independents is stunted and there is little encouragement for new ones to come in. Such conditions, we submit, are contrary to the purpose and ideals of the Sherman Act. In Mr. Justice Peckham's philosophical opinion in United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 166 U. S. 290, 41 Law Ed. 1007, written when the statute was fresh upon the books, we find a passage which, despite its age, is peculiarly appropriate to the circumstances of this case. Speaking of combinations having the power to eliminate competitors through the medium of price control, he said (p. 324):

> In this light it is not material that the price of an article may be lower. It is in the power of the combination to raise it, and the result in any event is unfortunate for the country by depriving it of the services of a large number of small but independent dealers who were familiar with the business and who had spent their lives in it, and who supported themselves and their families from the small profits realized therein. Whether they be able to find other avennes to earn their livelihood is not so material, because it is not for the real prosperity of any country that such changes should occur which result in transfering an independent business man, the head of his establishment, small though it might be, into a mere servant or agent of a corporation for selling the commodities which he once manufactured or dealt in, having no voice in shaping the business policy of the company and bound to obey orders issued by others.

II.

THE COMPETITIVE BIDDING SYSTEM PRESCRIBED BY THE DISTRICT COURT IS UNAUTHORIZED, UNWORKABLE, INEFFECTIVE AND MISCHIEVOUS.

1. It is unauthorized by the Sherman Act. One utterance of the late Justice McReynolds in which all may join is that "judicial legislation is a hateful thing."[12] The decree in this case presents a glaring example of usurpation of the power of Congress. The constitutional grant of power to regulate commerce among the several states was to Congress, not to the courts.[13] Enactment of the Sherman Act[14]

[12] Separate opinion in Federal Trade Commission v. Klesner, 274 U. S. 145, 71 Law Ed. 972.

[13] Constitution, Art. I, Sec. 8.

[14] Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. 209, 15 U. S. C. A. Ch. I.

was an exercise by Congress of the power thus vested in it. By Sec. 4 Congress conferred upon the Federal Courts "jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this Act." That marks the extent of the Court's authority to remedy violations of the law in civil actions brought by the Government.

Of course, jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations implies the exercise of discretion in the choice of an appropriate remedy. But the remedies chosen must be found within the boundaries of the judicial function and must be consistent with the language and purposes of the statute. This Court in Standard Oil Company v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 77, 55 Law Ed. 619, 652, delimited the appropriate measures of relief in civil actions by the Government under the Sherman Act, as follows:

> . . . the application of remedies two-fold in character, becomes essential:
>
> 1st. To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute.
>
> 2d. The extension of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist . . .

The express provisions of the act, the foregoing precepts and a due regard for constitutional limitations called for a decree divesting the defendants of their theatres and enjoining them from further employing the unfair, restrictive and discriminatory practices which the District Court had denounced. Instead, that Court, sua sponte, conceived and prescribed a plan requiring all exhibitors in all competitive areas, independent and affiliated alike, to bid competitively for films desired for exhibition on any particular run. The defendants were enjoined from hereafter licensing any feature film for exhibition in any theatre not its own, otherwise than in accordance with that plan. Operation of this provision of the decree was suspended by Mr. Justice Reed pending disposition of these appeals.

The plan is set forth in Sec. II, Par. 8 of the decree of the District Court. It is difficult to grasp without a background of experience in the motion picture business. The following outline, for purposes of clarity, is broken down into short paragraphs the designations of which, however, do not correspond to those of sub-paragraphs of the decree.

(a) A license to exhibit each feature released by a defendant for public exhibition in any competitive area shall be offered to the operator of each theatre in the area who desires to exhibit it on some run[15] selected by such operator and upon uniform terms.[16]

(b) Where a run is desired or is to be offered upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, the distributor shall notify the exhibitors in the area not less than 30 days in advance of the date when bids will be received, offering to license the features on one or more runs,[17] and in such offer shall state the amount of a flat rental as the minimum for such license for a specified number of days of exhibition, the time when the exhibition is to commence and the availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each such run.

(c) Within 15 days after receiving such notice, any exhibitor in the area may bid for such license, and in his bid

---

[15] Except, of course, a run pre-empted by the distributor for its own "wholly owned" theatre.

[16] This paragraph apparently contemplates simultaneous exhibition by all theatres in the area, without distinction as to run.

[17] The following definitions are from Finding No. 1 of the District Court:

Runs—The successive exhibitions of a feature in a given area, first run being the first exhibition in that area, second run being the next subsequent, and so on and shall include also successive exhibitions in different theatres, even though such theatres may be under a common control and management.

Clearance—The period of time, usually stipulated in license contracts, which must elapse between runs of the same feature within a particular area or in specified theatres.

shall state what run he desires and what he is willing to pay for such feature, "which statement may specify a flat rental, or a percentage of gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental, and shall also specify what clearance such exhibitor is willing to accept, the time and days when such exhibitor desires to exhibit it, and any other offers which such exhibitor may care to make." (Italics ours.)

(d) "The distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature, but in the event of the acceptance of any, the distributor shall grant such license upon the run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor." (Italics ours.)

(e) Each license shall be granted solely upon the merits without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers, or others.

(f) Each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture.

By Section II, Par. 9 of the decree the defendants were enjoined from arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor who is in competition with another theatre (not owned by defendant, or its affiliate or subsidiary), dispatched by registered mail, to license a feature to him for exhibition on the run selected by him, instead of licensing it to the competing exhibitor on such run. Presumably if an exhibitor believes he has been arbitrarily refused a picture on the requested run, and the distributor accords him no satisfaction, he can complain to the Attorney General in the hope that the latter will initiate a contempt proceeding.

While the plan is couched in the language of an injunction, and the defendants are enjoined from doing business in competitive areas except in accordance with it, the plan manifestly is not an appropriate Sherman Act remedy but is a regulatory system applicable to the guilty and innocent alike, which, under our form of government, only Congress is empowered to impose. Had the Congress intended that the motion picture industry should be regulated in this way, it would have so provided by special legislation, and it doubtless would have provided for the administration of such legislation by an appropriate agency such as the Federal Trade Commission. No such legislative intent can be gleaned from the Sherman Act.

2. It is utterly unworkable. The slogan of the entertainment business is, "The show must go on." As applied to the movies this means that the theatres must be assured of a steady flow of films, they must be booked well in advance of their opening dates, advertising trailers must be run while preceding attractions are shown and newspaper and other advertising must be arranged for in advance. Exhibitors, like publishers, are governed by deadlines. The "hurry, hurry, hurry" of the old tent show barker is the rule of life of the modern exhibitor.

Prior to the abortive and now lapsed provisions of the consent decree, the defendants other than United Artists[18] offered their films, with a few exceptions, in yearly "blocks." Under this block-booking system the exhibitor was required to license the distributor's output for a year, sight unseen. These practices were known as compulsory block-booking and blind-selling. Under the consent decree, the five consenting defendants[19] were required to license their features in blocks of not more than five. That provision was in effect only for the 1941-1942 season. But since then those defendants, for the most part, have continued to hold trade shows and to follow the five-picture plan.[20] Columbia and Universal have continued to sell on a yearly basis.[21] Under the lower court's competitive bidding plan all defendants will have to offer their products, in competitive areas, "theatre by theatre and picture by picture."

[18] This is purely a distributing organization and it did not usually link together the productions of different producers. It sometimes "blocked" the productions of the same producer. Lazarus, Sten. Min. Nov. 1, 1945, pp. 1410-1414.

[19] Paramount, Loew's, 20th Century, Warner Bros. and RKO.

[20] Rodgers, Sten. Min. Oct. 23, 1945, pp. 550-552.

Charles M. Reagan, Vice-President in Charge of Sales for defendant Paramount, testified that subsequent-run theatres sometimes make two or three changes a week, and use double bills, requiring 156 to 204 pictures a year.[22] Under the lower court's plan, the offers to receive bids must go out 30 days in advance of the bidding, and the award must be made within 15 days thereafter; so that the harrassed exhibitor would have to bid for pictures anywhere from 156 to 204 times a year and would endure in each instance a "sweating out" period of 45 days in which he would not know whether he was going to get the picture or not. Thus would the normal operations of the industry be completely bound up in red tape.

If the plan would, as the lower court believes, eliminate discrimination and the other evils revealed by the proof, it is probable that the exhibitors would endeavor with hearty good will try it out. But the plan is as full of holes as a yard of mosquito netting. In the first place, it permits exhibitors to bid in terms of "a flat rental, or a percentage of the gross receipts, or both, or any other form of rental . . . and any other offers such exhibitor may care to make." It is obvious that the affiliated chain theatres will take advantage of the latitude thus given them to offer bids which could not possibly be compared with others in the amount of revenue to be derived and thus open the way for the perpetuation of the very discriminations which the plan is designed to cure. There are too many speculative factors to permit of an exact comparison of bids.

---

[21] Montague, Sten. Min. Oct. 31, 1945, pp. 1257-1259; 1312-1320. Sometimes for more than a year. Scully, Do., pp. 1458-1459; sometimes for two or three seasons p. 1485.

[22] Reagan, Oct. 25, 1945, p. 820. Even first-runs sometimes use 52 or more a year (id.).

For example, there are numerous complicated combinations of percentage playing, but for present purposes we may take the relatively simple case of a straight percentage deal. Theatre A might offer to pay 35 per cent of the gross receipts, Theatre B 40 per cent, for the same picture; but there would be no assurance that Theatre B's bid would yield a larger film rental than A's. The size and location of the respective houses, the admission prices charged, the extent to which the theatre advertised the picture, the caliber of the exhibitor's showmanship, and the suitability of the picture for the theatre's type of audience—these and many other factors would enter into the equation.

In any case, the amount of the film rental to be paid could not be ascertained until after the run of the picture. The plan makes no provision for post mortems. Even if it did, such investigation could not heal the hurt that had been done the disappointed bidder.

Other unworkable aspects of the plan will be considered under the next succeeding heading.

3. It is wholly ineffective. The District Court apparently recognized the weakness in its plan discussed under the preceding heading and sought to remedy it by reserving wide discretionary powers to the defendants. Thus the distributor, with respect to any picture, may make the award to the "highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return to the licensor." All this is to be decided by the distributor in the exercise of its uncontrolled discretion, except as the remedy implied by Sec. II, Par. 9 of the decree may be invoked. In that event, the court would be called upon to pass upon these conditions while the film remained unplayed in the area, while public interest in it languished and it became outmoded due to style changes or otherwise.

The defendants at the trial contended that the theatres now enjoying the preferred runs are the largest, best located and equipped and yield the highest revenue and their operators are responsible.[22] Since such testimony was necessary to minimize as far as possible the charges of discrimination, it is not surprising that it was forthcoming and, to a certain extent, it undoubtedly was accurate. But the point is that the defendants are committed to the idea that the affiliated theatres to which they have heretofore accorded the preferred runs meet all the tests of the lower court's selling plan—that they are the only ones which meet those tests—and, consequently, all questions would necessarily be resolved in their favor and against the independents in a contest for films on a preferred run.

Although the defendants are required to specify in their offers a minimum flat rental, there is no requirement that a bid of such minimum flat rental, or any bid for that matter, shall be accepted. The provision is that "the distributor may reject all offers made for any such feature." Thus the specification of a "minimum" or "upset" price is made meaningless, except as it may enable the defendants to start the bidding at a high figure in the hope that it will reach the stratosphere. Not only is the way left open for continued discrimination in favor of the great theatre circuits, but in competitions for film between independent exhibitors, the distributors by rejecting all bids offered, over and over again if they choose, can run up the price of pictures beyond anything ever before dreamed of in the fabulously opulent film industry.

But even if these loopholes were to be closed and the system patched up so that it would be workable, it still would be ineffective to accomplish its declared purpose.

---

[22] Rodgers, Sten. Min. Oct. 22, 1945, pp. 420-421, 443, 453, 457, 461, 476. Characteristic of Rodgers' testimony is the following:

Q. How does your theatre compare with all the others you have named?

A. I think it is the best theatre there. I think they are all the best theatres, generally speaking, except when I say there are some of them that are on a par.

Judge Bright: Even then you are being modest.

The Witness: Slightly, yes, sir. (P. 474.)

In situations in which one of the defendants owns all of the theatres which can reasonably aspire to a particular run, the situation would be unchanged. In situations where two or more of the defendants own all the theatres eligible for a particular run, it cannot be expected that they will suddenly depart from their long-continued behavior pattern and begin to compete with one another for product and runs. In situations where there are independents which might wish to bid against the distributor-owned theatres for a run, the latter, fortified by their back-logs of parent company products, will be in such a strong position that the independents cannot cope with them. The distributor-owned chains, if threatened with independent competition, will be able to over-bid for films and the losses so incurred can be recouped at points where they enjoy a monopoly. Such losses also can be offset by the simple expedient of jacking up the price of films to the independent exhibitors.

4. It will be mischievous in its effects. The most serious vice of the competitive bidding plan is that as an abortive cure-all for the evil practices of the defendants, it will have the effect to immunize their underlying monopoly and remove the legal clouds from the titles to their theatres. It should be borne in mind, although since the decision in the Steel Case[24] it appears to have been forgotten, that corporate combinations, not mere trade agreements, were the primary target of the Sherman Act.[25] The ineffectiveness of the decrees in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Cases[26] plus the rebuff in the Steel Case evidently discouraged further attacks on such combinations and caused attention to be [24] United States v. U. S. Steel Corp., 251 U. S. 417, 64 Law Ed. 343; followed in United States v. International Harvester Co., 274 U. S. 693, 71 Law Ed. 1302.

[25] See brief reference to legislative history in Trans-Missouri Case, 166 U. S. 290, 319, 41 Law Ed. 1007, 1020.

[26] United States v. Standard Oil Company, 221 U. S. 1, 55 Law Ed. 619; American Tobacco Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 106, 55 Law Ed. 662.

centered upon loose combinations through trade associations, patent and copyright licenses and other forms of trade agreements.

The present case affords an excellent opportunity to get back to first principles. The motion picture trust is a shining example of the kind of combination at which the Sherman Act was aimed. The District Court's attempted differentiation between total ownership and joint ownership of theatres carries to a ridiculous extreme the notion that the law applies to loose combinations and not to compact corporate combinations. It seems to imply that while the sands may be scattered the monolith is impregnable. Actually the disintegrating processes of the Sherman Act can be applied to the motion picture trust without doing violence to the bases of the decision in the Steel Case, because defendants' theatre chains were not forged by normal processes of integration in order to lower costs and reduce prices. By their discriminatory and monopolistic practices the defendants have made their theatres the very instruments of monopoly. The theatres have been used by defendants to reserve to themselves the playing time on the lucrative prior-runs and thus to gain a commanding advantage over all others in the production and distribution of films. By the same tactics defendants have used their theatres to stunt the growth of and to exclude independent exhibitors from such runs.

If the District Court's competitive bidding system is approved as a substitute for the traditional Sherman Act remedies of dissolution, divestiture and injunction, then defendants' distribution and theatre monopolies will be given an effective judicial immunity bath. Their retention of their "wholly-owned" theatres will bear the stamp of judicial approval. To the extent that the District Court approves the purchase by defendants of the interests of their co-owners, existing unlawful combinations will be sanctified by court action. The decree of the District Court and its subsequent approval of purchases by the defendants will constitute defendants' muniments of title.

In that event the future Bigelows, Goldmans and other independent exhibitors seeking redress for injuries inflicted upon them will find the defendants safely ensconced behind the decree. Their only remedy will be the dubious one conferred by Sec. II, Par. 9 of the decree, for arbitrary action in refusing to license a picture on the desired run; and in view of the latitude conferred upon the defendants in making awards, such arbitrary action will be difficult if not impossible to prove. And even the Government will be estopped from launching a basic attack against defendants' regional monopolies of wholly-owned theatres, whatever their future conduct may be.

III.

THE COMPETITIVE BIDDING PLAN IF RETAINED FOR ANY PURPOSE OR ANY LENGTH OF TIME SHOULD BE FORTIFIED BY ADDITIONAL REMEDIES AND MADE MORE WORKABLE BY AMENDMENTS.

1. If the plan has any value, it is only as interim partial relief pending divestiture. We have no means of knowing, at this stage, what position the Government will take in this Court with respect to the competitive bidding plan. In the District Court it filed a memorandum in which it said:

> A divorcement judgment would, in our view, make unnecessary most of the provisions of the judgment with respect to the manner in which films should be licensed, except as interim relief to be in effect pending complete execution of a divorcement plan.[27]

In this view we heartily concur. The competitive bidding system should not be saddled upon the motion picture industry as a perpetual regulation. But even if continued during the period of divestiture, the system should be buttressed by additional measures and so amended that it will be as workable as possible.

[27] Government's Memorandum in Support of Plaintiff's Proposed Supplemental and Amended Findings.

2. In order to make immediately available the benefits of divestiture, the bidding system should be accompanied by a ban on cross-licensing. "Plaintiff's Proposed Judgment" submitted by the Government to the District Court contained a paragraph looking to immediate effective relief. The proposal, however, was rejected by that Court. It asked that the five theatre-owning defendants be enjoined—

> (8) From licensing for exhibition in any theatre owned or controlled by it films distributed or produced by another defendant named in this section which is not affiliated with it, for a period commencing one year after the entry of this decree and continuing for a period of not less than ten years. At the conclusion of said period, any party may move to modify this provision in any manner which the facts then appearing to the Court may warrant.

This would effectually prevent the theatre-owning defendants from monopolizing the available products on the runs which they now enjoy. At the same time it would reserve to the theatres of each the products of the parent company plus an open field in which to compete for the products of the three non-theatre-owning defendants and existing independent and minor company products and the products of new companies which may enter the field. It would pave the way for new sources of product and would allow a more equitable distribution among all classes of exhibitors of the products presently available.

The Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations respectfully submits that an injunction against the cross-licensing of films, similar to that above quoted, is a necessary concomitant of any competitive bidding system. Without it, the competitive market envisioned by the District Court as a result of the bidding system can never be attained. Only by such measure can the great disparity in strength of the affiliated chains and the independent exhibitors be equalized for bidding purposes.

More important than this from the standpoint of the public interest, a ban on cross-licensing would open the screens of the prior-run theatres to new producers and distributors and provide the incentive for them to engage in the business. A major fallacy of the District Court is the implicit assumption that a product shortage is the normal state of the motion picture industry—that exhibitors must always engage in a life and death struggle for the limited supply. The normal state of any healthy industry is that the supply is equal to the demand. The Sherman Act fosters competition among producers and sellers as well as among buyers. The purpose and value of such competition is that it serves to improve the quality of the products and to hold down prices.

A ban on cross-licensing for a period of ten years would provide substantial relief even though imposed as a substitute for complete divestiture. Any claim by the theatre-owning defendants that they cannot operate their theatres without cross-licensing one another must stand as an admission (a) of the magnitude of their distribution monopoly and (b) the feebleness of the competition of the independent prior-runs in the metropolitan areas which rarely have more than one of the Big Five products and often have none.

3. Competitive bidding to be comparable must be on a flat rental basis. The District Court, in its opinion, held that its ruling against price-fixing "does not prevent the distributors from continuing their present methods of determining film rentals; they may measure their compensation by stated sums, by a given percentage of a particular theatre's receipts, by a combination of these two, or by any other appropriate means." And, as we have already seen, an exhibitor in bidding for films may specify whatever pricing formula he sees fit. Under Chapter II, Section 2 of this brief, supra, pp. 18-19, we have demonstrated the utter impossibility of comparing bids on a percentage basis in order to ascertain which is highest.

The District Court unwittingly admitted this fatal defect in its competitive bidding plan. In explanation of its failure to find discrimination on the part of the defendants with respect to film rentals, clearances or minimum admission prices, the Court said: "They have perhaps done so, but we are without sufficient knowledge of the many factors entering into the determination of these provisions, such as the character of specific communities, the nature of the different theatre appointments, of the patrons, operating policies, locations, and responsibility of the operators." At another point, the Court declared against so-called "overages" and "underages" in the adjustment of film rentals between the defendants and the affiliated theatres because "under such provisions it is not possible to determine the amount payable for the account of one theatre until the performances in the others have been completed"—overlooking for the nonce the patent fact that the amount payable under a percentage engagement cannot be determined until the completion of the run.

Without yielding any of the positions heretofore taken in this brief, and against the contingency that the bidding system might be put into operation, the Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Associations respectfully requests that the words of Sec. II, Par. 8 (c) of the decree permitting bidding in terms of percentages be stricken and that there be included in that paragraph the following sentence:

> Each bid considered and each license granted shall be for a flat sum and not upon a percentage basis.

4. Bidding on a flat rental basis will eliminate the evil incidents of percentage playing. Inclusion of the above-suggested provision in the decree will render unnecessary certain provisions of the bidding plan which are pertinent only to percentage deals. Since flat rentals are payable on the barrel head no fiduciary relationship is created and there is no occasion to weigh the "responsibility" of the bidders. Also it is a matter of no consequence whether the highest bidder has a theatre "adequate to show the picture on such run." The injection of such considerations almost certainly will serve as a cloak for the perpetuation of defendants' discriminatory practices.

While the lower Court condemned and ordered terminated the joint ownership of theatres between the theatre-owning defendants and other exhibitors, it took no notice of the forced partnerships with independent exhibitors resulting from defendants' insistence upon percentage playing. This practice is not confined to the theatre-owning defendants, it is engaged in by all. Elimination of percentage playing would make really effective the provisions against joint ownerships by terminating defendants' other theatre partnerships which are secured and enjoyed without any investment in the theatres and without sharing the hazards of the venture. The exhibitor, not the distributor, must carry the overhead on percentage engagements.

In addition, adoption of the foregoing suggestion would eliminate from the business a number of monopolistic and vexatious practices which the defendants have imposed upon the independent exhibitors as adjuncts of the percentage system. The extent of the control over the independent theatres which the defendants enjoy as the result of percentage playing are set forth in the well-nigh uniform provisions of the license agreements (exhibition contracts) of the defendants, numerous copies of which were received in evidence. Among these are the fixing of admission prices, the checking of box office receipts, the auditing of exhibitors' accounts and records, and the designation of the day or days of the week on which the pictures shall be played.

Defendants' general sales managers were frank in stating their reasons for preferring percentage arrangements to flat rental deals. It enables them to get higher film rentals and affords them an insight into the exhibitors' business.[28] Motion picture films admittedly are not priced so as to recoup production and distribution costs and earn a reasonable profit. It is a question of what the traffic will bear, and the checking of receipts and auditing of accounts tell the defendants all they need to know to accomplish their purpose. It must be remembered that the independent theatres over whose business such strict surveillance is maintained quite frequently are in competition with defendants' theatres. This lends point to a fact brought out during the cross-examination of the witness Montague: That five of the defendant distributors—Columbia, RKO, Paramount, Universal and United Artists—have formed and now employ a jointly owned agency, called Confidential Reports, Inc., for checking the exhibitors' box office receipts.[29]

5. Additional amendments are required to make the system workable. Again without yielding our position, we respectfully propose the following amendments to the bidding plan with a view to enhancing its workability against the day that it might possibly go into effect.

(a) Time and manner of bidding. To prevent uncertainty and manipulation, the bids should be submitted within 10 days after the offer has been made. They should be opened at 2 p. m. on the 11th day thereafter (excluding Sundays and holidays) and made available to the inspection of the bidders on that day. This will reduce the "sweating out" period and conduce to a freer flow of product.

(b) National release date. In order to overcome territorial discriminations and otherwise to add definiteness to

---

[28] Reagan, Sten. Min. Oct. 23, 1945, pp. 698-699; Kupper, Sten. Min. Oct. 29, 1945, pp. 1082-1083; Montague, Sten. Min. Oct. 31, 1945, pp. 1321-1322; Mochrie, Sten. Min. Nov. 2, 1945, pp. 1722-1723.

[29] Montague, Sten. Min. Oct. 31, 1945, p. 1322. We do not think it will be disputed that since that time 20th Century and Warner Bros. have joined in the arrangement.

the system, it is respectfully suggested that the distributors be required to announce a national release date for each picture they intend to license and to offer the picture in all territories within a definite uniform time thereafter.

(c) Successive licensing of runs. Unless successive runs are licensed successively, a subsequent-run exhibitor who is the unsuccessful bidder for a prior-run may be deprived of the opportunity to bid on that picture for his customary run. The alternative to offering the runs successively would be to permit an exhibitor to submit alternate bids; but this might result in clogging the system with infirm bids or, worse yet, saddling upon an exhibitor binding contracts for two or more runs for the same picture.

IV.

DEFENDANTS DEAL WITH THE INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS ONLY UPON LONG, COMPLICATED AND WELL-NIGH UNIFORM CONTRACT FORMS, DEVISED IN THEIR OWN INTEREST AND ALMOST WHOLLY LACKING IN MUTUALITY.

1. Defendants' license agreements taken together and in their entirety constitute a uniform method of doing business. Between May 1, 1928 and the date of the final decree in Paramount Famous Lasky Corp. v. United States, 282 U. S. 30, 75 Law Ed. 145 the major motion picture distributors (enumerated in a footnote on p. 5 of this brief) used a standard form of license agreement. The history of that standard form is set forth in the opinion of District Judge Thacher in that case. United States v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corp., 34 Fed. (2d) 984. For present purposes it will not be necessary to search out the genesis of the standard exhibition contract. It will suffice to quote the following from the decision of this Court:

> The record discloses that ten competitors in interstate commerce, controlling 60 per cent of the entire film business, have agreed to restrict their liberty of > action by refusing to contract for display of pictures except upon a standard form which provides for compulsory joint action by them in respect of dealings with one who fails to observe such a contract with any distributor, all with the manifest purpose to coerce the exhibitor and limit the freedom of trade. (P. 41.)

However, that case turned upon the compulsory arbitration clause of the standard agreement and the uniform rules of arbitration, and the result was merely to eliminate from the standard form the arbitration clause. A companion case, United States v. First National Pictures, Inc. et al., 282 U. S. 44, 75 Law Ed. 151, condemned only a system adopted by the major distributors for enforcing the observance of contracts by the purchaser of a theatre; i.e. the assumption of his predecessors' obligations. And the District Court in the present case merely held illegal the price-fixing clauses of the exhibition contracts (now called license agreements) and made no finding or ruling in reference to the numerous uniform and restrictive provisions of the forms now in use. Under "Discrimination Among Licensees" the lower court did, however, enumerate the many preferences and advantages granted by the defendants to the affiliated theatres and withheld from the independents, and said:

> These provisions are found most frequently in franchises and master agreements, which are made with the larger circuits of affiliated and unaffiliated theatres . . . Small independents are usually licensed, however, upon the standard forms of contract which do not include them.

While defendants deny that they today use a standard license agreement, the resolution of the question depends not upon their protestations but upon a comparison of their contract forms. These were offered in evidence but were not reprinted in the record, presumably because of their great bulk. While admittedly a laborious task, we strongly feel that the Court cannot adequately grasp the full extent and effect of defendants uniform tactics in dealing with the independent exhibitors without, first, a comparison of the contract forms used by the several defendants in licensing their pictures to the independents, and second, a comparison of the form used by each for the 1936-1937 season with the form used by it for the 1943-1944 season.

These contract forms are identified as follows:

Defendant	Form No.	Season	Received	Gov't. Ex. No.
20th Century	La. 838	1936-1937	Vol. I, p. 273	275
20th Century	E. 901	1943-1944	Vol. I, p. 273	276
Loew's	851-D	1936-1937	Vol. I, p. 273	277
Loew's	1177	1943-1944	Vol. I, p. 273	278
Paramount	3640-D-5-36	1936-1937	Vol. I, p. 273	279
Paramount	A340 A3	1943-1944	Vol. I, p. 273	280
RKO	5352 B	1936-1937	Vol. I, p. 273	281
RKO	5456 Rev.	1943-1944	Vol. I, p. 274	282
Warner	90 WF 36-37	1936-1937	Vol. I, p. 274	283
Warner	90 CDT	1943-1944	Vol. I, p. 274	284
Columbia	S-14-A	1936-1937	Vol. I, p. 274	285
Columbia	S-14-F	1943-1944	Vol. I, p. 274	286
United Artists	220 B-1-37-U	1936-1937	Vol. I, p. 274	287
United Artists	220 B-3-44	1943-1944	Vol. I, p. 274	288
Universal	E-5	1936-1937	Vol. I, p. 324	289
Universal	E-5	1943-1944	Vol. I, p. 274	290

2. Defendants' license agreements are uniform and non-competitive in virtually all particulars.

The license agreements consist of (a) a schedule, which is a series of blank spaces in which are entered the terms of the particular deal—the film rental, the number of days of the engagement, the run and clearance and the admission prices to be charged; and (b) the printed terms and conditions which are not subject to negotiation. It is with these printed terms and conditions that we are now concerned.

(a) The license covers only the theatre named therein—no blanket licensing as in the case of the affiliated circuits.

(b) Without exception the forms require that all fixed sums (i. e., flat rentals) payable to the distributor shall be paid at least three days in advance of delivery of the film, unless otherwise specially agreed upon.

(c) With respect to percentage engagements it is provided that payment shall be made immediately after the last exhibition date, or at the end of each day if requested by the distributor.

(d) Prior to the consent decree all defendants except United Artists sold a full season's output on a single contract form; that is, all pictures "generally released" during the season. However, roadshows, try-outs, previews and releases are declared not to constitute a "general release" and, hence, do not entitle the exhibitor to the picture.

(e) There are elaborate uniform provisions with respect to roadshows.

(f) Exhibitors are required to play pictures in the order of release unless they make special arrangements for playing all the pictures under contract with the same distributor or pay the license fees therefor in advance.

(g) No matter what promises in the way of pictures to be delivered or other inducements may have been made to the exhibitor, they are of no avail to him in case of a dispute, because each license recites either in identical language or in substance that "This license agreement is complete and all promises, representations, understandings and agreements in reference thereto have been expressed herein."

(h) Transportation charges on the reels and containers, both coming and going, must be paid by the exhibitor.

(i) Exhibitors are liable for the loss or damage to prints unless they can prove that the loss or damage occurred in transit.

(j) There are uniform provisions in reference to selecting playdates and rigid rules governing exhibitors in that regard.

(k) There is a uniform general provision in reference to clearance and run; and elaborate uniform provisions defining the respective rights of 1st-run, 2d-run and subsequent run exhibitors.

(l) A circuit dealing directly with the general sales manager or other company official (Rodgers, Sten. Min. I, 414-415, 417-418, 421-422; Mullin, II, 965; Kupper, III, 1187; Montague, III, 1311) knows when the negotiations are concluded that he has a firm contract. The forms show that the deal negotiated by the independent exhibitor with the film salesman or subordinate official is a mere "application for a license" subject to acceptance or rejection by the distributor's home office.

(m) The distributors shove onto the exhibitors the burden of all taxes imposed or based upon the delivery or exhibition of the films; and if the taxes are levied upon the distributor, the exhibitor must hold him harmless.

(n) The exhibitor remains liable on his contracts after the sale or transfer of his theatre even though his successor assumes the same, unless released by the distributor in writing.[30]

(o) A subsequent-run exhibitor may not advertise a picture before or during its first run or during the immediately preceding run.

(p) There is a clause forbidding an exhibitor to cut or alter a print of any picture except a newsreel.

(q) Advertising accessories must be leased from and returned to the distributor, and newspaper advertising must feature the name of the distributor.

(r) An exhibitor may not start his show at mid-night on the first day for which the picture is licensed but must wait until 6 a. m. for the first show.

---

[30] Formerly this burden was saddled upon the successor and had to be assumed in order to license additional films. United States v. First National Pictures, Inc., 282 U. S. 44, 75 Law Ed. 151.

(s) Distributors have protected themselves with ample remedies in case of a breach or default by the exhibitor, including special remedies in case an exhibitor reduces his admission price below the minimum fixed by the agreement.

(t) In some forms (but not all) it is provided that a default by the exhibitor with a particular distributor on one contract may be treated by the latter as a default on all existing contracts between it and the exhibitor.

(u) Most distributors retain the right in case of a default to deliver pictures with a C.O.D. order for all sums due. Thus an exhibitor may be compelled to yield in an honest dispute over a sum due or miss out on a booked and advertised attraction.

(v) Some require the exhibitor to hold the distributor's share on percentage engagements "in trust," segregated from other moneys.

(w) Distributors reserve the right to "designate" or "allocate" pictures to the different price brackets contained in the contract, after the contract has been signed and, usually, after the returns from the first runs have come in. This practice is known in the parlance of the trade as "blind pricing."

Of course, some of the provisions noted are merely routine and are not objectionable in themselves. As regards the provisions fixing the time within which exhibitors shall book pictures, or within which applications may be approved, or otherwise requiring the attention of the exhibitors and film exchange bookers, mere uniformity is not a vice. These substantially uniform provisions, both routine and harsh, are cited to show that defendants pursue unified tactics in dealing with the independent exhibitors; and to refute the defendants' claims that the contracts are not standardized—that there is no cooperation or understanding among them with respect to contracts. Also—and mainly—to show the harsh terms imposed upon the independent exhibitors, the lack of mutuality in their dealings with that class of exhibitors, as contrasted with the treatment accorded the affiliated theatres under the master contracts, franchises and formula deals described by the District Court.

3. The continuing conspiracy among the defendants is shown by substantially uniform revisions of the contract forms. Of course, there could be no stronger evidence of the conspiracy among the defendants to confer monopoly privileges upon the affiliated theatres and to discriminate against the independent theatres than the master contracts, franchises and formula deals by which they license films to the affiliated theatres. These plus defendants' theatre pools were the very foundation of the decision and findings of the District Court and constitute conclusive proof of the conspiracy to monopolize the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures by granting exclusive rights and special privileges to their own theatres and the theatres of one another. But the conspiracy also is shown by the initial collusion among the defendants and others in drafting the standard license agreement[31] and by their carefully synchronized action in amending the contract forms from time to time.

Independent exhibitors in common with the affiliated circuits (See Goldenson, Sten. Min. II, 842-843) do not relish having the intimate details of their business operations broadcast to the public. The distributors, all of them, have provisions in their contracts permitting them to station representatives in the theatres to check the box office receipts on percentage engagements. The employment of local checkers (i.e. persons residing in the same community as the exhibitors) was a sore spot with the exhibitors, and at the so-called 5-5-5-Conference[32] the distributors agreed to insert a clause in their contracts which would eliminate [31] United States v. Paramount Famous Lasky, 34 Fed. (2d) 984.

[32] See Keough, II, 929-930. It consisted of 5 distributors, 5 affiliated exhibitors and 5 independent exhibitors.

local checkers unless they were regularly employed by the distributors or were engaged as accountants. This provision will be found in the 1936-1937 forms of Columbia, 20th Century, Loew's, Paramount, RKO, Universal and Warner Bros.

Since the records available to us do not show the contracts for the intervening years, it is not possible to place the exact year in which that clause was dropped by the defendants, except as we may infer it from a circumstance heretofore mentioned, namely, the formation of Confidential Reports, Inc. as a joint checking agency. Suffice it to say that the clause is missing from the 1943-1944 contracts of all the defendants.

Again, in the 1936-1937 forms the defendants reserved the right to examine the exhibitors' books and records on percentage engagement for only a limited time after completion of the engagement—usually four months. (See 1936-1937 forms of Columbia, 20th Century, Loew's, Paramount, RKO (60 days), United Artists (one year), Universal, Warner). In the 1943-1944 forms this limitation is omitted, and the right is reserved to make an audit "at any time" after the conclusion of the engagement in the forms used by Columbia, 20th Century, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Universal.

The 1936-1937 forms of all except Columbia contained the so-called "Confidential Clause," which was highly regarded by exhibitors. It provided that any information obtained by the distributor in the checking or auditing of percentage engagements shall be treated as confidential "excepting in any arbitration proceeding or litigation in respect to this license." The clause is missing from the 1943-1944 forms used by Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner.

In addition, provisions detrimental to the exhibitors have been added. The forms have long carried this clause: "If hereunder it is provided that the exhibitor make certain expenditures and/or deductions, the distributor shall have the right to examine all entries relating to such expenditures and/or deductions." (1936-1937 forms of Columbia, 20th Century, Loew's, Paramount, RKO, Universal, Warner.) In the 1943-1944 forms of certain of the defendants (20th Century, Loew's, Paramount, RKO, Universal) this provision has been added to as follows (using 20th Century as an example):

> It is further agreed that in computing Exhibitor's operating expenses any and all income (such as amounts payable to Exhibitor from renting or sub-renting space in the building where the Exhibitor's theatre is located and for screen advertising of any kind on the screen, in the theatre, etc.) during the period of the engagement of any motion picture on a participating basis shall be deducted from the Exhibitor's operating expenses.

We have heretofore shown that the distributors shove onto the exhibitors the burden of all taxes imposed or based upon the delivery or the exhibition of the films, no matter on which party the taxes are levied. A comparison of these clauses in the 1936-1937 forms with those in the 1943-1944 forms will disclose how the distributors have enlarged the same to cover new forms of taxation such as sales, gross income, storage, use, consumption, gross receipts, license, privilege, excise and compensating taxes.

The inference is irresistible that the defendants, or most of them, in eliminating from the contracts clauses favorable to the exhibitors and adding clauses favorable to themselves, were acting in concert and agreement. This uniform course of action could not have been mere coincidence —it was planned that way. It sometimes happens that two horses run a dead heat; but if from five to eight horses should come in nose-to-nose, we would suspect dirty work among the jockeys. It taxes the credulity that the defendants could so manipulate their contract forms, making uniform additions and deletions from time to time, without collusion among them.

The situation is not unlike that dealt with by this Court in Interstate Circuit, Inc. v. United States, 306 U. S. 208, 83

Law Ed. 610, which involved a demand by an affiliated circuit of a number of distributors that they refuse to license pictures to the circuit's subsequent-run competitors except upon the condition that the latter charge a fixed minimum admission price. The same written demand was sent to all companies, and all that sold subsequent-run theatres in the cities affected complied with the demand, but there was no proof of conspiracy among the distributors except such as could be inferred from their uniform conduct. This Court held that this was sufficient, saying:

> It takes credulity to believe that the several distributors would, in the circumstances, have accepted and put into operation with substantial unanimity such far-reaching changes in their business methods without some understanding that all were to join, and we reject as beyond the range of probability that it was the result of mere chance. (P. 223.)

V.

OUTLINE OF AN EFFECTIVE FINAL DECREE, CONSISTENT WITH THE SHERMAN ACT, RESPECTFULLY SUBMITTED FOR CONSIDERATION IN FRAMING THE MANDATE TO THE DISTRICT COURT.

1. "The extension of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist."[33]

(a) Divestiture. Dissolution of the combination, we respectfully repeat, can only be accomplished by an order requiring the five theatre-owning defendants—Paramount, Loew's, 20th Century-Fox, Warner Bros. and RKO—to dispose of all their theatre holdings. The only precedent or passage that could be cited against complete divestiture was removed when this Court, on October 17, 1947, entered an order deleting from its opinion in United States v. Na- tional Lead Company et al., No. 89, October Term, 1946, the following passage:

[33] From the Standard Oil Case, 221 U. S. 1, 77, 55 Law Ed. 619, 652, supra, p. 14.

> Existing precedents of divestiture provide examples of the restoration of a pre-existing separate status to companies or properties which have been unlawfully combined rather than to the fission of units which never have been separated . . . (Order, Adv. Ops., Law Ed., Vol. 92, No. 1, p. 26.)

This passage might have militated against an order of divestiture including such theatres as the defendants may have built, although it had no bearing on the defendants' many acquired theatres. With its deletion, the way is open for an order of complete divestiture without the necessity for distinguishing or overruling the seeming authority.

(b) The remedy is not extreme. Divestiture is not punitive, as the defendants argued in the District Court. It is the traditional Sherman Act remedy which has been applied to numerous other industries. Conceding, arguendo, that a forced sale of defendants' properties within a short space of time might inflict considerable financial loss, that is but a straw man contention, since the precedents and the experience in dissolution proceedings are against such drastic action. The practice is to allow ample time, usually stated in terms of years, in which to dispose of properties, and to make way for competition and protect the public in the meantime by appropriate injunctive provisions.

While the defendants urge their arguments of inconvenience and loss upon the Court, it will be well to bear in mind the lengths to which the courts have gone in order to insure the effective dissolution of other combinations, and to consider whether there is anything in the record in this and the numerous other cases coming before this Court involving the major motion picture producer-distributor-exhibitors which warrants unprecedented leniency toward them.

As an example, we cite United States v. Reading Company et al., 253 U. S. 26, 64 Law Ed. 760, in which the District Court ordered certain restrictive clauses in mining leases to be terminated and also that the combination between the Reading Coal Co. and the Wilkes-Barre Coal Company be dissolved. Upon appeal, this Court greatly enlarged the relief to be granted and by its mandate ordered the District Court (pp. 64-65)—

> . . . to enter a decree in conformity with this opinion dissolving the combination of the Reading Company, the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, and the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, existing and maintained through Reading Company, with such provision for the disposition of the shares of stock and bonds and other properties of the various companies, held by the Reading Company, as may be necessary to establish the entire independence from that company and from each other, of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company, the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, and the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, and also that such disposition shall be made by the decree of the stocks and bonds of the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company held by the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, as may be necessary to establish entire independence between these two companies, to the end that the affairs of all these new combined companies may be conducted in harmony with the law.

One might suppose that this sweeping order was sufficiently drastic, but in the proceedings in the District Court pursuant to mandate, a controversy arose between the different classes of stockholders of Reading Company and that dispute was carried to this Court. Continental Insurance Company et al. v. United States et al., 259 U. S. 156, 56 Law Ed. 871. Upon the first argument a question arose as to whether the decree was a sufficient compliance with the opinion of this Court and the case was set for re-argument on that question and the Attorney General's attention was directed to the order. 257 U. S. 622-623, 56 Law Ed. 402.

This court found that while proper disposition had been made for divesting Reading Company of its stock interest in the several companies named, and for separating the Reading and Jersey Central railroads, and separating the Jersey Central from the Lehigh & Wilkes-Barre Coal Company, no provision had been made for breaking up the Reading Company's general mortgage which was a lien on the Reading properties, both rail and mine, and it ordered that the mortgage be broken up. Thus this Court in its zeal to insure an effective dissolution treated the general mortgage bondholders not as mere creditors, but as a cementitious element in binding the combination together.

Certainly nothing is now proposed in reference to the defendants in the present case that is nearly so drastic as was imposed by this Court, of its own motion, in the Reading Case.

(c) The defendants possess and have exercised the power to dictate runs, clearances, admission prices and other details of theatre operation, and that power has been exercised to the detriment of the public and the injury of the independent exhibitors. The opinion and findings of the lower court abundantly show that the defendants possess and exercise the power to dictate runs, clearances and admission prices. The well-nigh uniform exhibition contracts, to which reference already has been made, show that this control extends to virtually all theatre operating policies. It is not going too far to say that, on the basis of the evidence, defendants' entire method of doing business is illegal. In the circumstances, it is unnecessary to argue that the organization of the five theatre-owning defendants, and the business methods of all defendants, are contrary to the public interest. Detriment to the public is inherent in monopoly and monopolistic practices.

In Paramount Famous Lasky v. United States, 282 U. S. 30, 42-43, 75 Law Ed. 145, 150, this Court made this plain in a series of propositions, most of them being quotations from earlier decisions. Omitting the quotation marks and citations, and stating each proposition in a separate paragraph, that decision gives effective answer to the plea of the defendants in the present case that their organization and operations are not harmful to the public—that the public will not be benefited by the application of an effective remedy.

> 1. Founded upon broad conceptions of public policy, the prohibitions of the statute (Sherman Act) were enacted to prevent not mere injury to an individual which would arise from the doing of the prohibited acts, but the harm to the general public . . .
>
> 2. The purpose of the Sherman Act is to prohibit monopolies, contracts and combinations which probably would unduly interfere with the free exercise of their rights by those engaged, or who wish to engage, in trade and commerce; in a word, to preserve the right of freedom in trade.
>
> 3. The fundamental purpose of the Sherman Act was to secure equality of opportunity and to protect the public against evils commonly incident to monopolies and those abnormal contracts and combinations which tend directly to suppress the conflict for advantages called competition—the play of the contending forces ordinarily engendered by an honest desire for gain.
>
> 4. The fact that the standard exhibition contract and rules of arbitration were evolved after six years of discussion and experimentation does not show that they were either normal or reasonable regulations.
>
> 5. . . . Congress has so legislated as to prevent resort to practices which unduly restrain competition or unduly obstruct the free flow of such commerce, and private choice of means must yield to the national authority thus exerted. (Pp. 42-43.)

In the present case no exhibitor witnesses were called and consequently the complaints and views of the independent exhibitors are not represented in the testimony. But in the Paramount Famous Lasky Case, supra, this court rejected the distributors' contention that "the manner in which the contract and rules have worker out in practice, and the significant absence of complaints, reflect their reasonable character"; hence the omission is by no means fatal. In this connection, the attention of the Court is respectfully invited to the decision of the United States District Court for North Dakota, consisting of Circuit Judges Sanborn and Thomas and District Judge Sullivan in Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al. v. Langer, Attorney General, et al., 23 Fed. Supp. 890, in which the position of the independent exhibitors is accurately set forth. That case involved the constitutionality of a State statute making it unlawful for any producer or distributor of motion pictures to own, operate or control theatres in North Dakota. The statutory District Court, in a unanimous decision, upheld the legislation. While the case was pending in this Court on appeal, and before it could be heard, the statute was repealed. The case then being moot, and following the routine procedure, a motion was granted to reverse the judgment and to remand the case with instructions to dismiss the complaint without prejudice (306 U. S. 619, 83 Law Ed. 1025).

This development deprived the District Court's judgment of validity as between the parties but did not impair the standing of the opinion and findings as the expressions of a distinguished court in a proceeding that was very much alive at the time they were handed down. The court had held a lengthy hearing and had heard the testimony of the independent exhibitors as well as the denials of the theatre-owning producer-distributors. In its opinion the court said:

> The independent exhibitors have resented and protested against the entry of the producers into the exhibition field, and have regarded their acquisition of theatres as unfair and unjust competition. The independent exhibitors believe that the acquisition and operation of motion picture theatres by the major producers has created a situation which, if permitted to continue, may eventually destroy the independent theatre operators, and leave the theatres affiliated with producers in virtually complete possession of the field of exhibition. The defendants introduced evidence showing the extent and nature of the controversy which has existed between the independent exhibitors and the producer-distributors owning theatres, which tends to prove that the independent theatre owner is at a disadvantage in competition with affiliated theatres. The producers, on the other hand, deny that they have been guilty of any unfair practices in the distribution of their films, or of any attempts to acquire a monopoly in the business of exhibition either in North Dakota or elsewhere; and their evidence tends to sustain their contentions in that regard.

And as regards the extent of the power held by the theatre-owning producer-distributors and their exercise of that power, the court said:

> A producer having affiliated theatres has the power to grant to its theatres the right to exhibit first run all pictures produced by it. It has the power to grant to its theatres greater clearance than to their competitors. Its bargaining power for the pictures of other producers which have affiliated theatres is greater than that of a competing independent exhibitor, because producers operating theatres must purchase pictures from each other, and each of such producers owns many theatres. A producer which owns theatres has the power to make it impossible for the independent exhibitor to procure films from it, and difficult to procure them from other major producers in case the producer-exhibitor desires those films for itself. There is evidence tending to show that producers with affiliated theatres have exercised the powers possessed by them for their own advantage and to the detriment of their independent competitors.

(d) All connection between the producer-distributors and their theatres should be terminated and the future independence of the theatres assured. While this Court in the Reading Case adopted extreme measures to insure the complete separation and future independence of the combined properties, this was in reality a logical outgrowth of the dissatisfaction with the abortive decree in the Standard Oil Case, which dissatisfaction was first judicially expressed by this Court in rejecting the proposed decree in United States v. Union Pacific Railroad Company. This Court ordered the combination brought about by Union Pacific's acquisition of stock in the Southern Pacific dissolved. 226 U. S. 61, 57 Law Ed. 124. The Attorney General then offered a motion as to the form of the mandate to insure that there would be no attempted dissolution by merely distributing the stocks of the subsidiary among the stockholders of the parent company, thus leaving both corporations under the control of the same individuals. 226 U. S. 670, 57 Law Ed. 306. This Court upheld the Attorney General, saying:

> We are of opinion, however, and now hold, that the proposed plan of disposition of the entire stock holding of the Union Pacific Company in the Southern Pacific Company by transfer to the stockholders of the Union Pacific Company will not so effectually end the combination as to comply with the decree heretofore ordered by this Court to be entered.

Therefore, it is respectfully suggested that the mandate to the District Court in this case should emphasize that the divestiture shall be total and complete and that the future independence of the now affiliated theatres shall be assured. It is possible that the proceedings on mandate in the District Court may disclose that the defendants are dominated by a comparatively few powerful personages, some closely connected by consanguinity or affinity, some engaged in production and distribution and others in operating theatres. This condition, if developed, will call for the exercise of the greatest care in formulating an effective decree.

(e) Defendants should be required to dispose of their holdings in jointly-owned theatres and should not be permitted to buy out their co-owners. Section III, par. 5, will be unnecessary and inappropriate if complete divestiture is granted. However, if total divorcement is not granted, and this provision is retained, then it surely should be amended by striking out the language which would allow a defendant, with the approval of the District Court to terminate a joint ownership by buying out its co-owner.

The notion that a violation of the Sherman Act resulting from the joint ownership of property by a member of the trust and an independent can be cured permitting the trust to buy out the independent surpasseth understanding. It cannot be the purpose of the Sherman Act to require that the partial ownership of property by a violator shall be transformed into total ownership by judicial order. In offering this proposal, we disclaim any purpose to attribute bias to the District Court (notwithstanding its rather warm defense of theatre ownership) or to predict that it would permit the defendants to buy out their independent co-owners in any considerable number of cases. We merely wish to point out (a) that the order is contrary to the theory and purpose of the Sherman Act and (b) that the District Court, in passing upon the defendants' applications to buy out their partners, would be deciding upon the merits of each separate situation standing alone and not on the acquisition in its relation to the general combination.

(f) Pending disposition of defendants' theatre interests provision should be made for adequate interim relief in the form of a ban on cross-licensing. This point already has been developed on pages 23-25 and is mentioned under the present general heading because a ban on cross-licensing is necessary to bring immediately into play the forces of competition and hence to provide effective relief during the time required to effect divestiture. It is an essential part of any effective order in the present case.

2. "To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute."[34]

---

[34] From the Standard Oil Case, supra, p. 14.

(a) An injunction against the practice of discrimination in the licensing of films should be included. The District Court's findings are adequate to support a sweeping injunction against discrimination in the licensing of film. Such an injunction is the simple, direct, effective solution of the problem created by defendants' favoritism toward the affiliated theatres and other large buyers and their discrimination against the independent exhibitors. The inclusion in the decree of such an injunction would make unnecessary the elaborate competitive bidding plan put forward by the District Court. Ample precedent for an injunction of this kind is found in the recent decision of this Court in International Salt Company v. United States, No. 46, decided November 10, 1947, Adv. Ops., Law Ed., Vol. 92, No. 2, p. 55, more especially the passages dealing with Par. VI of the decree there involved. A similar provision, fashioned to conform to the peculiarities of the motion picture business, would cure the more flagrant violations set forth in the District Court's opinion and findings without saddling upon the entire industry, guilty and innocent alike, a burdensome, unworkable and ineffective competitive bidding system.[35]

(b) All injunctive provisions of the lower court's decree except Sec. II 8 and Sec. III 5 are appropriate and should be affirmed. Sec. II 8, relating to competitive bidding should be stricken for reasons hereinbefore set forth; and Sec. III (5), if retained, should be amended in the manner proposed on pages [illegible]. All other injunctions contained in the decree are appropriate, will be effective and should be affirmed. Certain of the injunctions provided in Sec. III, especially Paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (6) and (7) will be-

[35] For example, a paraphrase of Par. VI of the Salt Decree would read as follows: "Each distributor defendant is directed to offer for license any feature motion picture which is then being or about to be offered by such defendant in the United States to any exhibitor applying therefor on non-discriminatory terms and conditions." The provisos to Par. VI are inapplicable to the licensing of films.

come academic once complete divestiture is accomplished. However, they should be in effect during the process of divestiture. This is especially true of Par. (6), enjoining the defendants from expanding their theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever (except as permitted by the District Court under Sec. III (5)). In the absence of total divestiture, this provision is vital to the protection of the independent exhibitors.

3. The burden of enforcing compliance with the decree should not be cast upon the independent exhibitors by arbitration or otherwise. The improvident consent decree entered in the District Court on November 20, 1940, gave the independent exhibitors a limited right to institute arbitration proceedings for the redress of certain grievances. The provisions were so restricted and inadequate that the system was practically useless except in clearance cases; and even here, under the rulings of the Appeal Board, the remedy was doubtful and uncertain. But we do not deem it appropriate to enter into a discussion of the several arbitrable provisions of the consent decree or to analyze the decisions of the Appeal Board. Such arbitration system could not be imposed by the Court without the consent of the parties to the suit, and in the District Court the Government withdrew its consent.

Arbitration as provided by the consent decree is dead, and we earnestly hope it will remain that way.

Nevertheless, the District Court insisted to the end that the arbitration system be retained by consent of the parties. It is our hope that this Court will not be influenced by the lower court's views on this point. Wholly aside from the inadequacy of the system to afford relief, and without reference to the rulings in arbitration cases, we feel that the final decree should be enforced (if enforcement is necessary) by the Attorney General and the Courts, not by the independent exhibitors.

The Temporary National Economic Committee, in its Investigation of Concentration of Economic Power issued a series of Monographs dealing with the motion picture monopoly. In Monograph No. 21 "Competition and Monopoly in American Industry," pp. 172-173 there is a passage dealing with motion pictures and in Monograph No. 26, "Economic Power and Political Pressures," pp. 182-183 there is another. Monograph No. 43, "The Motion Picture Industry—A Pattern of Control" is entirely devoted to motion pictures.[36]

Appendix III to Monograph 43 treats of the Consent Decree in this case and says, in part:

